Tattva-sandarbha

shrikrsno jayati /
Krishna reigns supreme!

- 1) krishnavarnam tvisakrishnam sangopangastraparsadam /
yajnair sankirtanaprayair yajanti hi sumedhasah //

"The wise worship Krishna Chaitanya, whose complexion is golden and who is accompanied by his 'limbs', 'ornaments', 'weapons', and attendants, through sacrifices consisting chiefly of congregational chanting of names and glories of the Lord."(Bh. P.11/5/32)

- 2) antahkrishnam bahirgauram darsitangadivaibhavam kalau sankirtanadyaih smah krishnachaitanyam ashritah

"We take refuge in Krishna Chaitanya in the kali Yuga by means of sankirtana etc.- in Him who is dark (Krishna) within and fair (Gaura) without, who revealed the opulence of His limbs and expansions etc. To people."

- 3) jayatam mathurabhuma shrilarupasanatanau
yau vilekhayatas tattvam jnapakau pustikam imam

"May Rupa and Sanatana reign supreme in the land of Mathura, the two preceptors of the highest truth, at whose behest this book is being written."

- 4) ko'pi tadbandhavo bhatto daksinadvijavamsajah vivicya vyalikhad grantham likhitad vrddhavaishnavaih

"A certain friend of theirs, a Bhatta born in the line of South Indian brahmanas, has written a book after studying the writings of the eminent Vaishnavas."

- 5) tasyadyam granthanalekham krantavyutkrantakhanditam paryalocyatha paryayam krtva likhati jivakah

"Now, Jiva, having noticed that while some portions of this text were in proper order, others were not, and still others were missing completely, will now write it out in proper sequence."

- 6) yat shrikrishnapadambhojabhajanaikabhilasavan

"May this book be studied by him alone whose chief desire is to worship the lotus feet of Krishna. All others are debarred."

- 7) atha natva mantragurum gurun bhagavatharthadan shribhagavatasandarbhah sandarbham vasmi lekhitum

"Now, having paid homage to the Mantra-guru, the preceptors who elucidated the meaning of the Bhagavata, I wish to write this treatise, the Bhagavatasandarbhā."

"May Krishna Whose form as consciousness without any manifest qualities is designated Brahman in certain Sruti texts, a portion of whom manifests as His own partial incarnations and rules over Maya as the Purusa, and Who in one of His principal forms, goes by the name , Narayana, and sports in Paramavyoman may that Krishna, bhagavat Himself, bestow the boon of Preman on those in this world who worship His feet."

"Now, in order to determine the meaning of those topics just alluded to, namely: the sambandha, or relationship between the topic under discussion, i.e. Krishna, and the medium through which it is expressed; the abhidheya, or means, which is the whorship of Krishna, taught in the form of scriptural injunction; and the prayojana , or goal, which is characterized by love of Krishna, the standard of valid knowledge will be duly decided.

Since even most learned people are subject to four kinds of defects, confusion, etc., and more importantly, since they are incapable of grasping the essentially supernatural and inconceivable reality, their means of acquiring knowledge by sense-perception etc. will prove unreliable in this realm."

"Therefore, realizing that these (pratyaksa etc.) cannot serve as proper means for proper knowledge, let us turn to the Vedas themselves as we seek to comprehend that reality which transcends all and yet is the substratum of all, whose nature is inconceivable and wondrous-to the Vedas, whose utterances have no earthly origin, being the source of all knowledge, both material and spiritual, and having been handed down in an unbroken line of succession from time immemorial."

"This is confirmed by the following scriptural statements: Brahmasutra 2/1/11 ("If it be argued that since mere reason provides no solid ground on which to base our position, then we will find some other means of inference on which to base our position, we reply 'no, you will end up in the same difficulty'."); Mahabharata, Bhismaparvan 5/12 ("One should not apply reason to those realities which are inconceivable; for it is the essence of the inconceivable to be distinct from the things of nature."); Brahmasutra 1/1/3 ("Since the scriptures are the source [of the knowledge of brahman]."); Brahmasutra 2/1/27 ("This is verified by Sruti, since scriptures are the source [of the knowledge of brahman]."); and Bhagavata Purana 11/20/4 ("O Lord, this Veda of yours is the supreme 'eye', by virtue of which the devas, pitris, and mortal apprehend those things beyond the range of perception, regarding even the highest goal and the means of attainment.").

"And here, since the Vedas are at present difficult to go through completely (due to unavailability of complete text and decrease in human memory) and hard to comprehend-for even the sages who sought to ascertain their meaning contradict one another-we will examine sabda in the form of Itihasa and Puranas alone, both of which partake of the nature of Vedas, and serve to ascertain the meaning of the Vedas. Furthermore, those portions of the Vedas which are not known on their own can only be inferred by examining Itihasa and Puranas. For these reasons, it is evident that in the present age, Itihasa and Puranas are alone capable of generating true knowledge.

Thus we find in the Mahabharata and Manu Smriti, "One should supplement the Vedas with Itihasa and Puranas" (M.Bh.,Adiparvan 1/267); and elsewhere, "Purana'is so called because it completes (purana)." For just as a chipped gold bracelet cannot be filled with lead, so also the Vedas cannot be supplemented by something non-vedic.

But then, if we accept Itihasa and Purana as Vedas, won't we have to look for a seperate book called Purana. Otherwise, Itihasa and Puranas will be considered identical with the Vedas.

To this we reply, even though this cluster of verses (Vedas, Puranas & Itihasas), all of which propound the same specific view, admits of no distinction, insofar as all the verses have emnated from Lord, still a distinction can be made in terms of word order and accent. The identity if Itihasa and Puranas with the Rgveda etc., with respect to their transcendental origin, is expressed in the Madhyandina Sruti itself: "...in the same way, my dear, what is know as the Rigveda, Yajurveda, Samaveda, Atharvaveda, Itihasa, Purana...has been breathed forth from that Supreme Lord" (Br.U. 2/4/10)".

"Therefore, it is stated in the Prabhasa Khanda of the Skanda Purana; "In ancient times, Brahma, the grandsire of the demigods, practiced severe austerities. As a result, the Vedas became manifest along with the six auxiliary branches and the pada and krama texts. Then the entire Purana, the embodiment of all the scriptures, unchanging, composed of the eternal sabda, sacred, and consisting of a hundred crores (of verses) issued forth from Brahma's mouth. Listen to the different divisions of that (Purana): the Brahma Purana is first..." (Sk.P. 2/3-5) The figure "a hundred crores" is mentioned here since that is known to be the number (of verses) which exist in Brahmaloaka. And in the third skandha (of the Bhagavata): "He manifested the four Vedas, known as Rk, Yajus, Saman, and Atharvan, one after the other, from his four mouths, beginning with the one facing east." (Bh. P. 3/12/37) And in the same context: "Then, the all-seeing Lord manifested Itihasa and Puranas, the fifth Veda, from all of his mouths." (Bh. P.3/12/39) And here, the actual word "Veda" is used with reference to Itihasa and Puranas. Elsewhere we find: "The Purana is the fifth Veda;" "Itihasa and Puranas are said to be the fifth Veda;" (Bh. P.1/4/20) "He taught the vedas, with the Mahabharata as the fifth" (M.Bh., Moksadharma 340/11) etc.

If it were not the case (that Itihasa and Puranas are Vedic in nature), then the characterization of then as the "fifth" in the preceding verses would be unwarranted, since only things of the same kind can be combined to form a single sum. It is stated in the Bhavisiya Purana: "That which is known as the Mahabharata is Krishna Dvaipayana's (i.e. Vyasa's) fifth Veda" We also find in the Chandogya Upanisad of the Kauthumiya Sakha: "Sir, I have learned the Rgveda, the Yajurveda, the Samaveda, and the fourth, or Atharvaveda, as well as Itihasa and Purana, the fifth Veda among the Vedas" (Ch. U.7/1/2) Thus is refuted the well-known to be deleted belief that the terms, Itihasa and Purana, occurring in Br.U.2/4/10 refer merely to be deleted portions of the four Vedas themselves. Therefore it is stated, "The Brahma Purana is first..."

"Suta's statement from the Vayu Purana explains why Itihasa and Puranas are considered the fifth Veda:
 "The almighty Lord, Bhagavan (Vyasa) appointed me to be the authoritative expounder of Itihasa and Puranas. (At first) the Yajurveda alone existed; he arranged that into four parts. The four hotrs (priests) arose within; thereby did he create yajna (sacrifice). Along with the Yajurveda came the office of the Adhvaryu priest; with the Rgveda, that of the Hotr priest; with the Samaveda, that of the Udgatr priest; and with the Atharvaveda, that of the Braman priest." (Va. P. 60/16-18) "(Then) O Best of the Twice-born, (Vyasa), skilled in the meaning of Puranas, assembled the Puranas (and Itihasa) by (gathering together) akhyanas, upakhyanas, and gathas. This remaining portion also falls within that (original) Yajurveda: this is the conclusion of the sacred scriptures." (Va.P. 60/21-22).

Moreover, in the formal study of the scriptures, known as brahmajajna, the use of Itihasa and Puranas is indicated by the words "the Brahmanas, Itihasa and Purana". This would also not be possible were Itihasa and Puranas not Vedic in nature.

Therefore Supreme Lord declares in the Matsya Purana: "O Best of the Twice-born, realizing that, in course of time, men become unable to comprehend the (original) Purana, I assume the form of Vyasa, in every age, and summarize that Purana." (Ma. P.53/8-9) That is, "For easy comprehension (of people), I take the already existent Purana and arrange it in a concise form." Following this it is stated: "In every Dvapara Yuga, the Purana, consisting of four laks (of verses), is divided into eighteen parts and manifested in the world of mortals. Even today, the (verses) number a hundred crores in the world of the devas. The four laks found here represent a condensed version of that (original Purana)." (Ma. P.53/9-11)

And the fact that Suta said "This remaining portion also falls within that original Yajurveda" shows that the four laks of verses which represent the most significant portion of that (original Purana), having found their way into the world of mortals as a concise summary of the essential parts of that Purana, do not represent a separate composition.

The same idea is demonstrated in the Vayaviya Samhita of the Siva Purana by discussing the Puranas alongside of the Vedas: "The Lord (Vyasa) summarized the four Vedas and divided them into their four sections. Since he divided the Vedas (vyastaveda), he is remembered by posterity as 'Vedavyasa'. The Purana was also condensed into four laks (of verses). Even today, (the verses) number a hundred crores in the world of the devas." (Si.P. 1/33- 34) Here, the word "condensed" means "condensed by him (i.e. by Vyasa)". And the names "Skanda", "Agneya", etc. (by which the various Puranas are known) refer either to those who first declared them, as is the case with the Kathaka etc, or to those who arranged them. Therefore, if one sometimes hears (the Puranas) spoken of as non-eternal, it is merely with reference to the fact that they are sometimes manifest and sometimes unmanifest. Thus, the Vedic nature of Itihasa and Puranas is proved.

Nevertheless, sutas and others are allowed access to the Puranas as they have the right to chant the name of Krishna, which represents, the choicest fruits of the creeper of all the Vedas". As declared in the Prabhasa Khanda (of the Skanda Purana): "O Best of the Bhrgus, the name of Krishna is the sweetest of the sweet, the most auspicious of the auspicious, the choicest fruit of the creeper of all the Vedas, of the nature of pure consciousness. If sung but once, whether with devotion or with contempt, the name of Krishna will transport a mere mortal to the other shore." As stated in the Vishnu Dharma: "He who utter the two- syllabled 'Hari' reaps the fruits of the study of the Rgveda, Yajurveda, Samaveda, and Atharvaveda." And the ability (of Itihasa and Puranas) to determine the meaning of the Vedas is mentioned in the Vishnu Purana: "On the pretext of describing the events of the Mahabharata, he has illustrated the meaning of the Vedas. The Vedas all find a firm resting place in the Puranas- about this there is no doubt."

Moreover, even if (Itihasa and Puranas) are considered to belong to the class of sastras which illumine the meaning of the Vedas, still, they excel all others due to the eminence of their expounder (Vyasa). As stated in the Padma Purana, "Vyasa knows what even Brahma and the others know not. He knows all that is known, while what is known to him is beyond the reach of others"

16) As stated in the Skanda Purana: " Others have borrowed bits and pieces from the ethereal realm of Vyasa's mind for their own use, just as one would remove objects from a house and use them.

The same idea is found in the Vishnu Purana, in the words of Vyasa's father, Parasara: "Then, in this twenty-eighth Manvantara, my son, the Lord Vyasa, took the one Veda, consisting of four parts, and divided it into four. All the other 'Vyasas', and myself as well; also arrange the Vedas just as the wise Vedavyasa had arranged them. Therefore, know for certain that the different branches of the 'Vyasas' in the four yugas were created for this reason alone. O Maitreya, know that Krishnadvapayana (Vyasa) is the Lord Narayana Himself; for who on earth but He could have composed the Mabharata?" (Vi. P. 3/4/2-5)

And in the Skanda Purana: "In the Kṛta Yuga, the knowledge which had issued forth from Narayana remained intact. It became somewhat distorted in the Treta Yuga, and completely so in the Dvapara Yuga. When, due to the curse of the sage Gautama, knowledge turned into ignorance, the bewildered demigods led by Brahma and Rudra, sought shelter with the benignant, refuge-giving Narayana, and informed Bhagavan Purusottama of their purpose in coming. And the great Yogin, the Lord Hari Himself, descended, taking birth as the son of Satyavati and Parasara, and rescued the fallen Vedas." The word "Vedas" in the preceding verse indicates both Itihasa and Puranas as well. It is thus established that the study of Itihasa and Puranas alone leads to the highest good. And of these, it is the importance of Puranas alone which is seen; for it is stated in the Narada Purana: "O Fair One (Parvati), I consider the significance of the Puranas to outweigh that even of the Vedas. The Vedas all find a firm resting place in the Puranas-about this there is no doubt. He who looks down on the Puranas will take birth in the womb of an animal, and even if well-behaved and peaceful, will find no refuge anywhere."

17) As stated in the Prabhasa Khanda of the Skanda Purana: "O Best of the Twice-born, I consider the significance of the Puranas to be unchanging, like that of the Vedas. The Vedas all find a firm resting place in the Puranas-about this there is no doubt. The Veda is afraid of those of little knowledge, thinking 'They will twist my meaning'; and so the meaning of the Veda was fixed in ancient times by means of Itihasa and Puranas. For what is not found in the Vedas, O Twice-born, is found in Smrti; and what is not found in either, is related in the Puranas. He who know the four Vedas, together with the Vedangas and Upanisads, without knowing the Puranas, is not to be thought of as wise." (Sk.P.2/90-93)

But now, even though the authoritative nature of Puranas has been thus established, the same doubt still remains i-e. Since the Puranas are also not available in their entirety, and since they are chiefly concerned with establishing the superiority of various deities, their meaning is also difficult to comprehend for modern man of meagre intelligence. As stated in the Matsya Purana:"A Purana should consist of five parts, as apposed to an Akhyana. The glory of Hari is greater in sattvika scripture; the glory of Brahma is greater in rajasika scriptures; and that of Agni and Siva greater in tamasika scriptures. In mixed scriptures the glory of Sarasvati and the pitrs is said to be greater." (Ma.P. 190/13-14)

The name "Agni" in the preceding verse refers to the various yajnas which are offered in the different fires. The conjunction ca in the phrase sivasya ca indicates that Siva's consort, Parvati is also meant. The term "mixed kalpas" refers to the many scriptures composed of sattva, rajas, and tamas. "Sarasvati" refers to various deities indicated by Sarasvati, who is the embodiment of various words. And the pitrs refers to the sacrificial acts which lead to the attainment of the world of the forefathers, as declared in Sruti : "Through karman one attains Pitrloka." (Br.U.1/5/16)

18) This being the case, the categories into which the various well-known Puranas fall are described in the Matsya Purana itself, based solely on stories concerning the different kalpas; but what means can be adopted by which the relative importance of these Puranas can be determined ? If we base our decision on the relative importance of the three gunas, sattva,rajas and tamas, then, on the strength of such statements as "From sattva comes knowledge" (Bh. G. 14/17) and "Sattva is the basis for the realization of brahman", we will have to conclude that only sattvika Puranas etc. are capable of leading us to the highest truth.

But then (it might be asked), how can you reconcile the divergent views which are propounded by means of various specious arguments with regard even to the highest truth? If you propose that the entire significance can be determined merely by studying the Brahmasutra, composed by the Lord Vyasa himself in order to fix the meaning of all the Vedas and Puranas, the followers of the other sages who wrote sutra texts will not accept your proposal. Furthermore, someone might interpret the significance of these cryptic and terse sutras in a distorted manner; how then can one know which one represents the correct interpretation? This issue could be settled once and for all if only you could point to one among the many scriptures, which exhibits the characteristics of a Purana, is divinely composed, represents the essence of all the Vedas, Itihasa, and Puranas, is based on the Brahmasutra, and is available throughout the land in its complete form.

Well said! (we reply), for you have just described the very Bhagavata Purana which we consider to be the sovereign ruler of all pramanas.

19) Even after manifesting the complete body of Puranas, and composing the Brahmasutra, Bhagavan Vyasa was still not content, and so gave form to that which serves as a natural commentary on his own Brahmasutra, which was revealed to him in samadhi (see pp.63,64), and which alone illustrates the common significance of all the scriptures, as seen in the fact that it begins by referring to the Gayatri, characterized as a concise statement of the significance of all the Vedas. For its true nature has thus been described in the Matsya Purana: "That is to known as the Bhagavata, which, basing itself on the Gayatri, describes dharma in all its fullness, and which narrates the slaying of the asura Vrtra. Whosoever will make a copy of this Bhagavata and offer it away, mounted on a throne of gold on the full moon day of Bhadra month, will attain the supreme goal. This Purana is said to contain eighteen thousand (verses)." (Ma.P.53/20,22)

The word gayatri in the preceding verse refers to the word 'dhimahi', which is always found in gayatri and thus serves as an indicator of gayatri, and the complete meaning of gayatri; for an outright quotation of this mantra, which is the prototype of all mantras, would not have been proper. The fact that the Bhagavata has the same significance as that of the Gayatri is seen in the phrases janmadyasya yatah ("from whom comes the origin etc. of the universe") and tene brahma hrda ("who revealed the Veda [to the creator Brahma] through his heart') (Bh.P.1/1/1), which form identical explanations regarding the substratum of the entire universe and the ability to inspire the workings of the intellect, with those of the Gayatri. The word dharma in the phrase dharmavistarah signifies the "supreme dharma", for it is declared in the Bhagavata itself: "The supreme dharma, devoid of all ulterior motives, is found in this Bhagavata." (Bh.P.1/1/2/) And it will be made clear in a subsequent section that dharma is characterized only by such practices as contemplation etc. of Personality of Godhead.

20) Thus, we also find in the Skanda Purana, Prabhasa Khanda: "That is to be known as the Bhagavata which, basing itself on the Gayatri, describes dharma in all its fullness, and which narrates the slaying of the asura Vrtra. And that is known in the world as the Bhagavata which has its origin in tales concerning the gods and men who live in the Sarasvata Kalpa. Whosoever will make a copy of this Bhagavata and offer it away, mounted on a throne of gold on the full moon day of Bhadra month, will attain the supreme goal. This Purana is said to contain eighteen thousand (verses)." (Sk.P.2/39-42) And these same lines are found in the Agni Purana as well.

And in another Purana cited by the commentator (Shridhara): "That is known as the Bhagavata which contains descriptions of the Brahmavidya of Hayagriva and accounts of the slaying of Vrtra, which opens with reference to the Gayatri, and which consist of twelve skandhas and eighteen thousand (verses)." And the fact that the term "Hayagrivabrahmavidya" from the preceding verse occurs alongside of the phrase "the slaying of Vrtra" shows that the reference is to "Narayanavarman" (the armor of Narayana). The name "Hayagriva" in this verse refers to the horseheaded Dadhici, who inaugurated the knowledge of brahman known as "Narayanavarman". The fact that he bore the head of a horse is established in the sixth skandha (Bh.P.6/9/52) with the phrase "having the name 'Asvasiras' ('Horse-headed')"; and the fact that "Narayanavarman" signifies "Brahmavidya" is indicated in the verse cited by Shridhara in his commentary on Bh.P.6/9/52: "Hearing this, Dadhici, the son of Atharvan, having been respectfully received by the twin Asvins, instructed them in the Pravargya ceremony and the Brahmavidya, fearful of breaking his promise to them."

Since the Bhagavata is dear to the Lord, and cherished by his devotees, it is the most sattvika (of Puranas). As stated in Gautama's question to Ambarisa in the Padma Purana: "O King, do you recite the Bhagavata in front of Hari, containing accounts of the King of Daityas (Hiranyakasipu) and (his son) Prahlada?" (Pa.P., Uttara Khanda 22/115)

In the same section, Gautama instrcts Ambarisa in the greatness of the Vyanjuli vow: "One should remain awake throughout the night (of the 'Vyanjuli Mahadvadasi) and listen to compositions concerning Vishnu: the Bhagavadgita, the Thousand Names of Vishnu, and the Purana taught by Suka (the Bhagavata). These bring contentment to Hari, and should be recited with great care."

Elsewhere in the same section; "O Ambarisa, if you wish to put an end to the cycle of birth and death, listen daily to the Bhagavata taught by Suka, and recide it also with your own lips."

And in the Dvarakamahatmya from the Prahlada Samhita of the Skanda Purana: "He who remains aweke (on the 'Harivasara'), and recites the Bhagavata with devotion, in the presence of Hari, attains the abode of Vishnu, together with his entire family."

21) And in the Garuda Purana: "This composition is exceedingly perfect. It contains the meaning of the Brahmasutra and determines the meaning of the Mahabharata. It functions as a commentary on the Gayatri and fortified the meaning of the Vedas. It is the Samaveda of Puranas, declared by Bhagavat himself. It contains twelve skandhas, numerous vicchedas, and eighteen thousand (verses), and goes by the names Shrimadbhagavata."

"It contains the meaning of the Brahmasutra": That is, it represents a natural commentary on the sutras. Previously, it had been revealed in the heart (of Vyasa) in a subtle form; that was then summarized and made manifest in the form of sutras. Later, that appeared in its expanded form as the Bhagavata itself. Therefore, since the Bhagavata represents a self-revealed commentary on the Brahmasutra, it follows that only those modern, self-styled commentaries which are in consonance with the Bhagavata are to be respected. "It determines the meaning of the Mahabharata": That is, it contains the determination of the meaning of that Mahabharata which is characterized as follows: "The Mahabharata is extolled as determining the significance of all the scriptures. In olden times, Brahma and the other devas, along with all the rsis, gathered together at the command of Vyasa, and weighed the Mahabharata against all the Vedas. The scales tipped in favor of the Mahabharata. (Therefore) because of its greatness (mahattva) and its heaviness (bharavattva), it is known as the Mahabharata."

The import of the Mahabharata is explained in Shrimad Bhagavatam. And the meaning of both revolves around Lord alone. Thus, the following verses are uttered by Janamejaya to Vyasa in the Narayaniya section of the Moksa-dharma (Mahabharata): "O Brahmana, O Treasure-house of austerities, just as fresh butter is extracted from curds and sandalwood from the Malaya mountains the Upanisads from all the Vedas and the nectar from herbs, so too, by churning the ocean of the highest wisdom with the churning rod of knowledge, have these nectar-like words which you have uttered, based on stories concerning Narayana, been extracted from the legends found in the Mahabharata, strewn throughout these hundred thousand verses." (M.Bh., Moksa-dharma 170/11-14)

22a) "It functions as a commentary on the Gayatri": For it is so explained in those sections of the Vishnudharmattara etc. which contain expositions on the Gayatri, that Lord alone is described in detail (in the Gayatri). A similar explanation will also be given in this regard in the commentary on Bh. P. 1/1/1.

"It fortifies the meaning of the Vedas": That is, by virtue of the Bhagavata, the meaning of the Vedas is fortified. Therefore it is said, "One should supplement the Vedas with Itihasa and Purana." (M.Bh., Adiparvan 1/267)

"It is the Samaveda of Puranas": That is, Just as the Samaveda is the most perfect of Vedas, so is the Bhagavata the most perfect of Puranas. Therefore, we find in the Skanda Purana: "If the Bhagavata is not kept in one's house in the Kali Yuga, of what avail are collections of other scriptures by the hundreds and thousands? How can he be considered a Vaishnava who, in the Kali Yuga, does not keep the Bhagavata in his house? Even if he is a brahmana, he is lower than an outcaste. O Narada, O Sage, wherever the Bhagavata is found in the Kali Yuga, there Hari goes together with all the demigods. O Muni, that pious soul who daily recites a verse from the Bhagavata reaps the fruits of the eighteen Puranas." (Sk P., Vishnu Khanda 16/40,42,44,331)

"It contains sata vicchedas": That is, it is characterized as having 335 adhyayas. The meaning of the rest is clear. It is therefore thus established that in the present age, those seeking to know the highest truth need only study the Bhagavata Purana.

22b) The following Bhagavata verse, quoted in the Vrata Khanda (of the Caturvargacintamani) of Hemadri determines the meaning of the Mahabharata to be equivalent to that of the Vedas: "The sage Vyasa compassionately composed the epic, Mahabharata, with the idea in mind that it would lead to the welfare of women, sudras, and fallen Twice-born who are not entitled to hear the three Vedas, and are thus deluded as to what action would lead to their ultimate good." (Bh.P.1/4/25) Thus, according to this view, the phrase "it determines the meaning of the Mhabharata" should be interpreted to mean "the meaning of the Mahabharata

Since the composition known as the Shrimadbhagavatam and characterized by the phrase "based on the Gayatri" is thus concerned with Lord alone, it may be said to serve as a commentary on the Gayatri which is itself concerned solely with Lord. Therefore it is stated, "That is to be known as the Bhagavata which, basing itself on the Gayatri, describes dharma in all its fullness..." A similar detailed explanation is presented in the expository account of the Gayatri found in the Agni Purana. A brief survey of that account is given below.

"That 'light' (mentioned in the Gayatri) is the supreme brahman, for the word bhargas indicates the light of consciousness." (Ag.P.216/3) He continues, "That 'light is Lord, Vishnu, the source of the origin, preservation, and dissolution of the universe. There are some who repeat the name 'Siva' (in place of 'Vishnu'), some Sakti', 'Surya', or that of other deities, while the Agnihotr priests repeat the name 'Agni'. Verily it is Vishnu who has assumed the form of Agni and the rest, and is praised in the Vedas etc. as brahman." (Ag.P.216/7-9)

A similar explanation will also be given in this regard in the commentary on Bh.P.1/1/1. And in the concluding section of the Bhagavata, the final line of verse 12/13/19, beginning tac chuddham, is identical in import with the explanation of the Gayatri found in the Agni Purana: "Let us meditate on the eternal, pure, supreme brahman, the everlasting light, and the highest Lord, (thinking) 'I am the light, the supreme brahman, in order to attain liberation.'" (Ag.P. 216/6,7) Here, the phrase "I am brahman" indicates a kind of meditation in which one assumes an attitude of identity between oneself and brahman in order to be fit for worship according to the principle "One who is not himself divine may not worship the divine." The verb dhyayema ("Let us meditate") means "May I, and all of us as well, meditate."

But then, on the strength of this verse, one would expect to find the adanta stem, in the Gayatri as well. This can be explained, however, with the help of Panini Sutra 7/1/39 Supam Suluk as an instance of a Vedic irregularity in which the singular accusative ending am is replaced by the ending su.

And in the prose passages which praise the sun as the object of worship in the Gayatri (Bh.P.12/6/67-69), the sun should not be viewed as an independent entity, but rather as indicating paramatman, rendering those passages free from blemish. The words of Saunaka at the end of the Bhagavata are similarly to be understood: "Tell us, who are full of faith, of the manifestations of Hari, in the form of the sun." (Bh.P.12.11.28)

And the 'light'(mentioned in the Gayatri) does not refer to that which dwells in the physical sun alone, for, as indicated by the word varenya ("most excellent") from the Gayatri and the word para ("supreme") from the Bhagavata (1/1/1 and 12/13/19), its application extends as far as the majesty of isvara. Therefore it is stated in the Agni Purana "Through meditation, the purusa can be seen dwelling in the disc of the sun. (But) the Supreme abode of Vishnu, Brahman, is alone real and, ever auspicious. (Ag.P. 216/16, 17) That is, through meditation, the purusa, who manifests the indweller within the disc of the sun, which will itself perish at the time of dissolution, so that the inhabitants of the three worlds may worship him, can be seen, i.e. worshipped. But the supreme abode of Vishnu, in the form of Vaikuntha, is alone real, unchanging in the past, present, and future, free from all disturbances, since it partakes of the nature of Brahman.

After thus explaining the Gayatri, the Agni Purana also makes use of the verse beginning yatr adhikṛtya gayatrim (Ag.P.272/6) in the section which deals with the characteristics of Puranas. Thus we find the following verses: "The Agni Purana considers the Gayatri to be concerned with Lord alone, who is held therein to be the source of the origin, preservation, and dissolution of the universe. The Bhagavata, characterized by the phrase, 'based on the Gayatri', ever flourishes throughout the caste." Thus is the origin of the Bhagavata demonstrated to be based on the Gayatri.

And the earlier statement regarding the Sarasvata Kalpa is also appropriate since Sarasvati, whose distinguishing characteristic is speech illustrative of Lord, represents the essence of the Gayatri. As stated in the Agni Purana, "It is called Gayatri since it sings (gayati), or reveals, Vedic text, scriptures, the divine light, and the vital forces. It is called Savitri (the daughter of the sun) since it has the power of enlightening. And since speech represents the essence of the sun, it is also called Sarasvati." (Ag.P. 216/1,2)

Now the next phrase will be explained. "It fortifies the meaning of the Vedas" : That is, by virtue of the Bhagavata, the meaning of the Vedas is fortified. Therefore it is said, "One should supplement the Vedas with Itihasa and Puranas." (M.Bh.,Adiparvan 1/267)

"It is the Samaveda of Puranas": That is, just as the Samaveda is the most perfect of Vedas, so is the Bhagavata the most perfect of Puranas. For just as the Samaveda brings out the one common theme running through the three kandas of the Vedas (karmakanda, upasanakanda, and jnanakanda), so does the Bhagavata demonstrate the fact that some of the other Puranas which occasionally seem to partake of the nature of rajas and tamas, and do not appear to be concerned with Lord ultimately find their resolution in Lord alone, as presented in the Bhagavata. Therefore it is said, "In the Vedas, Ramayana, Puranas, and Mahabharata, Hari is everywhere praised, in the beginning, the middle, and the end." The truth of this statement will be demonstrated in the Paramatmasandarbhā.

"Spoken by the Lord Himself": This is to be understood in accordance with the concluding words of the Bhagavata: "Let us meditate on the Lord, who revealed the Bhagavata to Brahma..." (Bh.P.12/13/19)

"It contains sādā vicchedas": This phrase will not be discussed, out of fear of unduly lengthening this text. Thus, Shridhara's interpretation of the phrase hemasimhasamanvitam as meaning "mounted on a throne of gold" is fitting indeed, for as has just been demonstrated, the Bhagavata occupies the position of sovereign ruler of all scriptures. Consequently, both the superiority of the Bhagavata, and the need for its repeated study are established in the Skanda Purana: "Of what avail are collections of other scriptures by the hundreds and thousands...?(Sk.P.16/40) It is therefore thus established that in the present age those seeking to know the highest truth need only study the Bhagavata Purana.

23) Thus, even though there exists a variety of scriptures, it is the Bhagavata alone which is described as follows: "This Purana has risen like the sun for those bereft of sight in the Kali Yuga." (Bh.P.1/3/44) It is thus demonstrated that, aside from the sun-like Bhagavata, no other scripture is capable of properly illuminating reality.

The Tantra known as Tantrabhagavata is considered, in the section of the Hayasirsapancaratra which classifies scriptures, to represent a virtual commentary on the Bhagavata. Actual commentaries on the Bhagavata include the Hanumadbhasya, Vasanaabhasya, Sambandhokti, Vidvatkamadhenu, Tattvadipika, Bhavarthadipika, Paramahamsapriya, Sukahrdaya, etc. There also exists a variety of Nibandhas, composed by distinguished authors, well-known for their particular interpretations, such as the Muktaphala, Harilila Bhaktiratnavali, etc. The Bhagavata is also praised in the Danakhanda of Hemadri's Caturvargacintamani, in the section dealing with the gift of Puranas, as embodying the characteristics mentioned in the Matsya Purana

(53/20-23). and in the Parisesakhanda of the same work by Hemadri, in determining the dharma appropriate to the Kali Yuga, in the Kalanirnaya section, the dharma which the Bhagavata verse, 11/5/36 quoted: "The noble ones praise the Kali Yuga..."

Sankara, however, commonly accepted to be an avatara of Siva, realized the significance of the Bhagavata, characterized by utterances concerning the joys of bhakti which surpass even the joy of liberation, to be superior to his own doctrines, and was afraid to upset the views found in this divinely composed exposition on Vedanta. As will be explained later, he propagated the doctrine of Advaita at the command of the Lord in order that the latter's true nature might remain hidden. Still, Sankara desired his own words to be fruitful, and so touched on the Bhagavata indirectly, by describing in such works as his Govindastaka etc. certain events found only in the Bhagavata, such as Yasada's amazement at the vision of the universe form (of Krishna), Krishna's theft of the Gopi's clothes, etc.

24) Tradition has it that after seeing that Bhagavata, has not only been avoided but the revered Madhvacarya embraced the views of the Vaishnavas, actually respected by Shankar even though himself a direct disciple of Sankara, and fearing that other Vaishnavas might fall under influence of commentaries written by Sandara's other disciples, such as Punyaranya etc., wrote a different tatparya pointing out the true path: thus is it described by the Satvatas. The following statements, found in the Bhagavata itself, are therefore appropriate. First canto of :"(Vyasa) imparted this Bhagavata to his (Suka), the best of the self-realized ed, representing the essential extracts from all the Vedas and Itihasa." (Bh.P. 1/3/41, 42)

And in the twelfth skandha: "The Bhagavata is considered to represent the essence of all Vedanta. He who is appeared by its nectar-like juice, has no taste for anything else." (Bh.P.12/13/15)

And in the first skandha; "O Connoisseurs of mellows here on earth, drink again and again, for all your days, the juice of the Bhagavata, the ripe fruit fallen from the wish-fulfilling tree of the Vedas, whose nectar-like juice flows from the lips of Suka (like the juice of a ripe fruit from the mouth of a parrot)." (Bh.P.1/1/3)

Thus, in the same skandha: "I seek refuge with (Suka), the son of Vyasa and most venerable of sages, who, out of compassion for worldly beings desirous of going beyond the blinding darkness (of ignorance), recited the 'sacret one' among Puranas, of uncommon majesty, the essence of all Sruti, unparalleled, and the illuminator of Self-knowledge." (Bh.P.1/2/3) It is thus indicated that the doctrines found in the Bhagavata are the overlord, as it were, of all other doctrines.

Suka took his seat in the midst of the assembly of all the sages, and fully exhibited his superiority over them by assuming the role of preceptor of Shrimad Bhagavatam.

25) For it is said: "The word-purifying, high-souled sages went there with their disciples: Atri, Vasistha, Cyavana, Saradvat, Aristanemi, Bhrigu, Angiras, Parasara, Visvamitra (the son of Gadhi), Rama, Utathya, Indrapramada, Idhmavaha, Medhatithi, Devala, Arstisena, Bharadvaja, Gautama, Pipalada, Maitreya, Aurva, Kavasa, Kumbhayoni, Dvaipayana (Vyasa), the venerable Narada, as well as other devarsis, brahmarsis, and rajarsis, including Aruna and others-for often holy men, on the pretext of making pilgrimage to a holy place, actually purify those place by their own presence. King Pariksit welcomed the assembled chiefs of the various holy clans, worshipping them with bowed head And the wise king again saluted the sages who were filled with joy, and, standing before them with joined palms, informed them of his intention." (Bh.P. 1/9/12)

Then (the king said): "Thus, O wise ones, having confided in you fully, let me ask a pressing question concerning duty. What pure action should be performed with all one's soul by those who are about to die?

Please consider this jointly among yourselves." (Bh.P. 11/9/24)

As the king was asking this question: "(Suka), the son of Vyasa, appeared, wandering about the earth at will, free from care, bearing no distinguishing marks, content within himself, in the garb of an avadhuta, and surrounded by children." (Bh.P.11/12/25)

And then: "The sages all rose from their seats..." and "that most noble Bhagavan Suka, surrounded there by these most eminent brahmarsis, rajarsis, and surarsis, shone brilliantly, like the moon surrounded by clusters of planets, constellations, and stars." (Bh.P. 1/9/28,30)

26) Even though Vyasa, Suka's guru, and Narada, his grandguru, were both present there, still, the Bhagavata flowed forth from Suka's lips in such a manner that it seemed to them as if they had never heard it before. This is the sense in which it is said that Suka instructed the who of them as well. As it was said, "...whose nectar-like juice flows from the lips of Suka." (Bh.P.1/1/3) Thus, the superiority of the Bhagavata is seen in this sense also.

Those statements, then, which one hears regarding the superiority of other Puranas, such as the Matsya etc., are only relatively true. But what is the need for so much argument ? The Bhagavata is Krishna's very own representative. As stated in the first skandha: "Now that Krishna has returned to his own abode, along with dharma and knowledge, etc., this Purana has risen like the sun for those bereft of sight in the Kali Yuga." (Bh.P.1/3/43,44)

The Bhagavata is thus seen to be endowed with all virtues, as demonstrated in the verse, "The supreme dharma, devoid of all ulterior motive, is found in this Bhagavata.." (Bh.P. 1/1/2) This fact is further demonstrated by the words of Vopadeva in the Muktapala: "The Vedas, Puranas, and Kavya give council like a ruler, a friend, and a beloved, but the Bhagavata is said to give council like all three combined." Thus, even if some consider other Puranas to be dependent on the Vedas, the same supposition with regard to the Bhagavata is dispelled by the Bhagavata itself; this is also self-evident. Therefore the Bhagavata represents the highest form of Sruti. As it is said, "How then, my child did the dialogue between the royal sage Pariksit and the sage Suka come about, as a result of which this Satvati Sruti became manifest ?" (Bh.P. 1/4/7)

And the fact that Vyasa composed the Bhagavata only after completing all of the other Puranas, as stated earlier, ca be verified by examining the dialogue between Vyasa and Narada, recorded in the first skandha.

27) Therefore, we will examine the BHagavata alone, observing consistency between the earlier and later portions, in order to determine what is the supreme good. Here, in this composition of six volumes, the introductory remarks will occupy the position of sutras, and the words of the Bhagavata, the subject matter. Our interpretation of the words of the Bhagavata, representing a king of bhasya, will be written in accordance with the views of the great Vaishnava, the revered Shridhare Svamin, only when they conform to strict Vaishnava standpoint, since his writings are interspersed with the doctrines of Advaita so that an appreciation for the greatness of the Lord may be awakened in the Advaitins who nowadays pervade the central regions etc. In some places we will follow Shridhara's interpretations found elsewhere. In other instances, our interpretation will be based on the doctrine found in the writings of the venerable Ramanuja, such as his Shribhasya etc., (adhered to) by the Shri Vaishnavas whose renowned sampradaya has originated from the goddess Shri herself, and who are celebrated as great Bhagavatas of the Dravida region etc.; for as the Bhagavata itself states, there are many in this area well known as Vaishnavas: "O Great King, some (devotees of Narayana) can be found here and there, but their numbers are great in the Dravida regions." (Bh.P.11/5/39) And in some instances, our interpretations will differ from both (Shridhara and Ramanuja), and will follow the natural sense of the Bhagavata. As the Advaita doctrines are well-known, they need not be delineated here.

28) And here, the authoritative words of Sruti, the Puranas, etc. will be quoted just as I have seen them; they are meant to establish the validity of the various interpretations presented by me, and not the validity of the words of the Bhagavata. In some cases, I have been unable to personally see certain verses, and so have taken them from the Bhagavatatparya, Bharatatparya, and Brahmasutrabhasya, etc. of the venerable Madhvacharya, the ancient preceptor of the doctrine of Tattvavada, who advanced many distinctively "Vaishnava" doctrines, who was chief among knowers of the Vedas and their meaning, and whose disciples and grand-disciples include Vijayadhvaja, Brahma Tirtha, Vyasa Tirtha, etc., of great renown in the South and elsewhere. As stated by Madhva in his BHaratatatparya: "Having mastered the other scriptures by the light of Vedanta, and having seen different scriptures in various parts of the country, I will examine these, and will speak according the view of Bhagavan Vyasa, the Lord Narayana Himself, who spoke the Mahabharata etc." (2/7,8)

The Sruti texts which will be quoted from Madhva will be the Caturvedasikha etc.; the Puranic texts will include those portions of Puranas, such as the Garuda etc., which are no longer available; the Samhitas will include the Mahasamhita etc.; and the Tantras will include the Tantrabhagavata and Brahmatarka etc.

29) Now, Suta gives a brief description of the import of this just described Bhagavata to Saunaka, while offering salutations (to Suka), by reflecting on the ideal lodged in the heart of its narrator (Suka): "Ibow down to the son of Vyasa, the destroyer of all sins, whose mind was filled with Brahmananda and thus his was free from all worealy thoughts, has had his drawn toward the enchanting lilas of Ajita (i.e. Krishna), and who has compassionately unfolded this Purana, revolving around him (Krishna), which illumines reality like a lamp."
(Bh.P.12/12/68) According to Shridhara's commentary: "He offers salutations to his venerable guru- to him whose mind is filled with its own bliss alone, and thus who has cast aside all thought, i.e. worry, and who, despite being of such a disposition, has had heart, which steadfastly dwelled in its own bliss, attracted by the enchanting lilas of Ajita. 'I bow down to him who unfolded the BHagavata, the lamp of truth, the illuminator of the highest reality.'" The three verses from the second skandha (Bh.P. 2/1/7,9), uttered by Suka himself, should also be examined in this connection.

The expression 'all sins' in this verse should be understood to signify aversion or indifference to such a feeling (of attraction to Krishna). Thus, a related principle is found here, namely that the holy Ajita, distinguished by his enchanting lilas, is Himself superior to the bliss of brahman. And it will become clear (by examining) the samadhi of Vyasa that Ajita, in his fullest aspect, is primarily known as "Shri Krishna".

It thus follows that the goal of life, technically known as prayojana, is nothing less than the joy which springs from love of Him, engendering attachment of such a kind (as Suka's) to Him, and that the abhidheya also is nothing less than the worship of Him, characterized by listening to accounts of His divine sport etc., engendering love of such a kind for Him. According to the Brahmavaivarta Purana, the appellation "Vyasasunu" ("the son of Vyasa") is indicative of the fact that Suka, due to a boon from Krishna, was untouched by maya from his very birth.

30) Suta gives a similar concise explanation of the import of the Bhagavata, (this time) in terms of the samadhi experienced by its author, wherein the principle which was to be set forth in that work was ascertained: "With his heart purified and perfectly poised through bhaktiyoga, he saw the purnapurusa, with maya taking His shelter. The jiva, deluded by that maya, considers himself to be composed of the three gunas, though really beyond them, and consequently comes to grief. Vyasa composed this Satvatasamhita for those people ignorant of the fact that bhaktiyoga directed toward Adhoksaja (i.e. Krishna) directly puts an end to grief. If one but hears this (Satvatasamhita, i.e. Bhagavata), devotion for Krishna, the supreme purusa, will grow in him, putting an end to grief, delusion, and fear. After composing and arranging this Bhagavati Samhita, Vyasa taught it to his son (suka), then leading a life of renunciation." (Bh.P.1/7/4-8)

At this point Saunaka asked, "But why did the sage (Suka), then leading a life of renunciation, being unconcerned in all situations, and rejoicing in the Self alone, study this vast composition?" (Bh.P.1/7/9)

In reply to Saunaka's query, Suta said, "Although such sages rejoice in the Self alone, and are free from all bounds, still they cherish motiveless devotion for Urukrama (i.e. Krishna); indeed such are the virtues of Hari. The venerable son of Vyasa had his heart captivated by the virtues of Hari and studied this great narrative daily, holding the devotees of Vishnu dear to his heart." (Bh.P.1/7/10-12)

The expression bhaktiyogena ("through bhaktiyoga") means "through preman, or love of God", based on the use of the same term in the following verse: "Bhagavan Mukunda (i.e. Krishna) no doubt grants liberation to those who offer him (mere) worship; but he never grants them bhaktiyoga." (Bh.P.5/6/18) Pranihite ("perfectly poised") means "absorbed in samadhi", since he had been instructed earlier by Narada to "recall the events of Krishna's lila by means of samadhi". (Bh.P.1/5/13) The word purna ("full" or "perfect") should be understood in its unrestricted sense, based on the statement from the Uttara Khanda of the Padma Purana: "The words bhagavat and purusa are both free from limiting adjuncts, and refer to Vasudeva, the Self of all." And the fact that the purnapurusa mentioned here refers to bhagavat himself is also verified by Shridhara's commentary in the following verses: "The desirer of desires should worship Soma; the desireless one, the supreme purusa. The high-minded ones, whether free from desires, desiring all, or desiring liberation, should worship the supreme purusa with intense bhaktiyoga." (Bh.P.2/3/9-10) According to Shridhara's commentary, the term purusa from the first of the two preceding verses signifies "the paramatman, whose sole limiting adjunct is prakrti", while the same term from the second verse refers to the "purnapurusa, free from all limiting adjuncts." The purnapurusa here refers to the Selfsame Personality of Godhead.

31) Even if the reading purvan is accepted (for purnam), still Lord alone is indicated, based in the etymological interpretation of Sruti which derives the essential nature of the purusa from his statement, "I existed here even prior (purvam) (to the universe)."

It is self-evident that the phrase "he, i.e. Vyasa, saw the purusa" means that he saw him indowed with his sarupasakti alone, just as when someone says, "he saw the full moon", it is understood that he saw the moon endowed with all its effulgence. Therefore Arjuna said to Krishna, "You are the primordial purusa, the visible Lord, beyond prakrti. Having cast aside maya by means of Your cicchakti (power of consciousness), You dwell in a state of supreme independence within Yourself." (Bh.P. 1/7/23)

Therefore, the phrase mayam ca tadapasrayam indicates that maya does not constitute svarupa sakti of bhagavan, since, having had her ground removed from her (indicated by the preverb apa), she remains concealed from bhagavat. As stated later, "Maya, embarrassed to remain in his presence, flees..." (Bh.P.2/7/47)

The nature of this svarupasakti will now be explained by means of Bhagavata verses 1/7/9 and 1/7/10. In the first of these, the power of bhaktiyoga is understood to be a function of the svarupasakti, based on its ability to overpower maya; and in the latter, the virtues (of Hari) deserve to be considered the highest functioning of the svarupasakti, since they surpass even the bliss of brahman.

It should be understood that no separate mention is made of the purusa which presides over maya (i.e. the paramatman), or of brahman, since both are considered to fall within the domain of the purnapurusa, the former as a partial aspect of him, and the latter as his unqualified manifestation. Thus, just as before, the related principle sambandhy tattva is here set forth.

32) Then, Vyasa saw the essential distinction between the jiva and paramesvara which forms the basis for the abhidheya and prayojana of this work, as stated earlier. Thus was it described by Suta in Bh. P. 1/7/5.

"The jiva, deluded 'by that', i.e. by maya. considers himself to be 'composed of the three gunas', i.e. to be the insentient aggregate of the body etc., even though as a conscious entity, he is 'beyond', i.e. beyond the insentient combination of the three gunas, and 'consequently', i.e. as a result of that misconception, 'comes to grief', i.e. experiences the misery of repeated birth and death."

Thus, even though the jiva is a conscious entity, the phrases "deluded by maya" and "he considers himself (to be composed of the three gunas)" reveal the fact that consciousness, which constitutes his essential nature, is as attribute of the jiva, just as the power of illumination, which represents the essential nature of light, is also capable of illuminating both itself and other entities. This view is verified by the words from the Bhagavatagita: "Knowledge is covered by ignorance; hence are beings deluded." (5.15)

Thus, Vyasa rejected that other doctrine which maintains that it is the limiting adjuncts, or upadhis, which constitute the nature of the jiva, and it is their destruction which constitutes his liberation.

The phrase "deluded by maya" indicates that she alone is responsible (for deluding jivas), while the Lord remains uninvolved. As stated later, "Foolish people are deluded by maya, who is ashamed to stand in the presence of the Lord and speak boastfully of 'I' and 'mine'." (Bh.P.2/5/13) Here, the word "ashamed" indicates that maya, though realising that her practice of deluding jivas is not pleasing to the Lord, is nevertheless unable to bear the fact that jivas have been ignorantly turning their backs on the Lord from time immemorial as indicated by the line, "Those who turn away from the Lord experience fear because of their devotion to a second" (Bh.P. 11/2/37)-and so conceals their real nature and engrosses him in matter.

33) And the Lord is unable to withhold His favor from maya who, being in charge of creation, has been His devotee from time immemorial. So, desiring that jivas turn within, even if out of fear of maya, He instructs them as follows: "This divine maya of Mine, composed of the three gunas, is indeed difficult to transcend. They cross over this maya who take refuge in Me alone." (Bh.G. 7/14) "As a result of holy company, conversations concerning My prowess take place, pleasing the heart and ear. By taking part in these, one quickly attains faith in the path of salvation, followed in turn by attachment and devotion." (Bh.P. 3/25/25) And as seen in the verse immediately following this, (Bh.P.1/7/6), the Lord taught this in a special way, by assuming the form of Vyasa, through His divine sport. Therefore, the respective activities of both (bhagavata and maya) should be deemed proper.

But if maya is nothing but a sakti, and sakti is nothing but the capacity to perform a function, which is itself a kind of attribute, how can you speak of it as possessing such characteristics as embarrassment etc. ?

To this we reply: What you say is true. However, we do find mention in Sruti of the presiding deities of the saktis which reside in the Lord, such as in the dialogue between Indra and Maya in the Kena Upanisad. But enough for now. Let us return to the topics already introduced.

34) tatra jivasya tadsacidrupatve 'pi paramesvarato vailaksanyam tadapasrayam iti yaya sammohita iti ca darsayati //

34) Here, the phrases "maya resting outside of him" (Bh.P. 2/7/4) and "deluded by maya" (Bh.P. 2/7/5) indicate that the jiva, even though, like paramesvara, being essentially pure consciousness, is nevertheless distinct from paramesvara.

35) It is thus erroneous to contend that one and the same brahman, pure consciousness itself, is simultaneously the embodiment of knowledge, as it functions as the substratum of maya, as well as overpowered by ignorance, falling under the sway of that maya. In fact, this is the very sense in which the distinction between isvara and jiva is to be understood. It thus follows that, due to the respective differences in their natural capacities, the two (ie. isvara and jiva) are essentially distinct.

36) na copadhitaratamyamayaparicchedapratibimbatva-

36) Nor can the distinction between the two (i.e. isvara and jiva) be explained on the basis of limitation by, or reflection in, different grades of adjuncts, etc.

37) Here, if the limiting adjuncts are objectively real, and not the result of ignorance, then brahman, who is beyond the objective realm, cannot be subject to division by them. Furthermore, that which is attributeless, all-pervading, and without "limbs" cannot be reflected, since (what is attributeless) can have no connection with adjuncts, (what is all-pervading) admits of no distinction between the object and its reflection, and (what is without "limbs") cannot be perceived. The reflection of luminous bodies resting in the sky, separated by their own adjuncts, alone can be seen, but never the reflection of the sky itself, for the simple reason that the sky possesses no visible attributes.

38) tatha vastavaparicchedadau sati samanadhikaranyajna-

38) Similarly, if division and reflection are real, then they cannot be negated merely by thinking that the terms tat and tvam

39) If, on the other hand, the limiting adjuncts are considered to be unreal, then the division etc. which they allegedly effect must also be unreal, since it simply could not take place. Thus, the doctrine of those who base their position on the analogy of the unreal dream state cannot be substantiated with the help of analogies involving real limiting adjuncts, such as jars and space, etc., since no logical connection can be shown to exist between that which is possible and that which is not. And so, these notions of theirs are nothing but a phantasmagoria, as it is not possible to establish the existence of various phenomena on the strength of these two theories, which are themselves not related with reality.

40) If one, then, tries to reduce everything to brahman and avidya alone, the end result is also a contradictory state of affair, namely that the one brahman which, as pure consciousness, is untainted due to a perfect absence of contact with avidya (ignorance), is none other than the jiva, who has become tainted through contact with avidya. Furthermore, this same brahman is considered to be isvara when seen as the substratum for maya, which is itself superimposed by avidya belonging to the jiva, and is called jiva, when seen to fall within the domain of maya, which belongs to isvara. Thus, avidya is said to exist within pure consciousness, and vidya (knowledge) within that consciousness which is known as isvara, and which possesses upadhis superimposed by the aforementioned avidya. The unhappy result of all this is that he who is the embodiment of vidya is, nevertheless, held to be the source of illusion. This and other questions merit close scrutiny.

41) Moreover, if the doctrine of Abhedavada ("non-difference") represented the actual significance here, then Vyasa would have seen that it is brahman alone which (appears) divided due to ignorance, and that the suffering which results from this (apparent) division within brahman can be removed by means of knowledge; and Suta would have described it as such. Also, if the lila etc. of the Lord were to be considered unreal, a contradiction would result with regard to the experience of Suka.

42) Therefore, one should also make use of scriptures which teach such doctrines as Pratibimbavada and Paricchedavada, accepting these doctrines in a secondary sense, as indicating partial similarity (between the metaphor and the reality). This is corroborated by Brahmasutra 3/2/19 ("The jiva is not a reflection of the Supreme, like the sun reflected in water, because it is not so perceived") and 3/2/20, ("The comparison is not appropriate in its primary sense but in its secondary sense of participating in increase and decrease, because the purposes sastra is attained by that and thus both comparisons become appropriate.") The former representing the apponent's objection, and the latter the author's reply.

43) Therefore, those scriptures which propound non-difference can be employed to arrive at the conclusion reached by Vyasa in samadhi, by avoiding the contradiction between the views that the jiva is either identical with or distinct from isvara; for despite the two of them being one with respect to their pure conscious nature, due to the inconceivable potency of the Lord, making even the impossible possible, jivas and isvara are both identical and distinct, like innumerable atomic rays and the sun.

44) tad evam mayasrayatvamayamohitatvabhyam sthite dvayor bhedo tadbhajanasyaivabhidheyatvam ayatam //

44) Therefore, since isvara and jiva are thus shown to be distinct, the former as the substratum of maya and the latter as deluded by maya, it follows that the worship of isvara alone constitutes the abhidheya.

45) atah shribhagavata eva sarvahitopadestrtvat sarvadu-khaharatvat rasminam suryavat sarvesam paramasvarupatvat sarvadhikagunasalitvat paramapremayogatvam iti prayojanam ca sthapatam //

45) And since the Lord alone teaches what is beneficial for all, destroys all sorrow, represents the ultimate nature of all beings, like the sun with respect to its rays, and is endowed with a superabundance of virtues, he alone is deserving of the highest love; thus is the prayojana (of the Bhagavata) also established.

46) tatrabhideyam ca tadsatvena drstavan api yatas tatpravrttyartham shribhagavatakyam imam satvatasamhitam pravartitavan ity aha anartheti / bhaktiyogah sravanakirtanadilaksanah sadhanabhaktiyogah na tu premalaksanah // anusthanam hy upadesapeksam prema tu tatprasadapeksam iti / tathapi tasya tatprasadahetos tatpremaphalagarbhatvat saksad evanarthopasamanatvam na tv anyasapeksatvena yat karmabhir yat tapasa jnanavairagyatas ca yat ityadau sarvam madbhaktiyogena madbhakto labhate 'njasa / svargapavargam ityadeh / jnanades tu bhaktisapeksatvam eva sreyahsrtim bhaktim ityadeh / athava anarthasya samsaravyasanasya tavat saksad avyavadhanenopa samanam sammohadidvayasya tu premakhyasviyaphaladvaretyarthah / atah purvavad evatrabhidheyam darsitam //

46) And Vyasa also realized the abhidheya in this sense while in samadhi for, as explained by Suta in Bh. P.1/7/6, he undertook the writing of this Satvasamhita, known as the Bhagavata, in order to initiate that (i.e. the worship of bhagavat which forms the abhideya of the Bhagavata). The term bhaktiyoga in this verse indicated the preliminary stage of bhakti (sadhana bhakti), characterized by such practices as listening to the scriptures, singing the praises of the Lord, etc.; it is not characterized by the highest love of God, for devotional practices alone require instruction, while love of God depends solely on the grace of the Lord. Still, bhaktiyoga may be said to directly remove misery since, as the means of acquiring the grace of the Lord, it ultimately ripens into love for Him; it does not require the aid of anything else (to remove misery). This is verified in the following lines: "Whatever benefits come from the performance of rituals or austerity, from knowledge or renunciation, through the practice of yoga, charity or virtue, or any other righteous means, My devotee attains them all without effort, through bhaktiyoga aimed at realizing Me, whether it be heaven, liberation, My own abode, or whatever else he might desire." (Bh.P.11/20/32-33) Knowledge etc., on the other hand, are themselves dependent on bhakti, as indicated in the following verse: "Those, O Lord, who take pains solely to realize Brahman, rejecting the higher path of devotion, will receive as their gain wasted effort alone, like those who engage in the husking of chaff." (Bh.P.10/14/4)

Or it may be that bhaktiyoga removes only worldly suffering directly, i.e. without intermediary, but removes the double misery of delusion etc. by means of its effect, love of God. Thus, the abhidheya is presented here (Bh.P.1/7/6) just as it was earlier (Bh.P.1/7/4-5).

47) Then, in order to clarify the nature of the prayojana, as was done earlier, and to reveal the fact that the purnapurusa mentioned in Bh. P. 1/7/4 is none other than Krishna, Suta utters the verse, Bh.P. 1/7/7, explaining another experience of Vyasa's by indicating the effects of listening to the Bhagavata.

The word bhakti in this verses means preman, since it is the goal of sadhanabhakti in the form listening (to the Bhagavata); the verb utpadyate means "become manifest". Suta mentions a concomitant virtue of preman with the phrase "destroying grief, delusion, and fear", namely, that with the manifestation of preman, even the subtle impressions of grief, delusion, and fear are destroyed. For in the words of the Lord Rsabhadeva: "As long as one has no love for Me, Vasudeva, he will not be freed from association with a body." (Bh.P. 5/5/6)

The paramapurusa mentioned in this verse is identical with the purnapurusa of Bh.P. 1/7/4. In answer to the question "What form does He take?", Suta replies, krsne. The idea is that His is the form which first comes to the mind, at the mere hearing of His name, of all those whose hearts have been nourished by thousands of scriptural statements, such as "But Krishna is Lord Himself" (Bh.P.1/3/28), as well as to those countless individuals who have fallen under the influence of His through an unbroken tradition; it is that which is visualized after uttering merely the first syllable of His name, in order to attract His attention. As the author of the Namakaumudi explains, "The word krishna primarily signifies 'black like the tamala tree', 'he who was suckled by Yasoda', 'the supreme brahman'."

48) Now, Vyasa realized that this prajyogana (i.e. love of God) was superior even to the experience of the bliss of brahman, and so taught the Bhagavata to Suka, who was accustomed to remaining absorbed in the bliss of brahman, so that he might realize the superiority of the bliss of the Lord. Thus is it described by Suta in Bh.P. 1/7/8.

Here, the phrase "after composing and arranging" indicates that Vyasa first composed the Bhagavata himself, in an abbreviated form, and later, according to the instructions of Narada, expanded it serially. Thus, the statements which are found in the Bhagavata to the effect that the Bhagavata is later than the Mahabharata, and the statements found elsewhere that the Mahabharata is later than the eighteen Puranas can both be regarded as true.

(Suka is described here as) "engaged in a life of renunciation" since he remained absorbed in the experience of the bliss of brahman; he was in all respects engaged in a life of renunciation and did not swerve from the ideal.

49) In answer to Shri Saunaka's question Shri Suta explained the experience of Vyas, born of samadhi or transcendental trance, as superior to the bliss of Brahman and he further corroborates it by the experiences Atmaramas, with logic in Bh.P.1/7/10.

Here, the word nirgrantha ("free from ties") means either "beyond all injunctions and prohibitions" or "free from the bonds of egoism". Ahaituki ("motiveless") means "not seeking any results". In order to remove any doubt, he explains, "The nature of Hari is such that even those who rejoice in the Self alone feel an attraction for Him".

This same fact is related in Bh.P. 1/7/11 by explaining Suka's own experience. Suka had earlier had his heart captivated by what little he had heard of Hari's nature from Vyasa. Later he studied the Bhagavata, despite its great length. Thereafter his nature became such that the devote of Vishnu became dear to him, due to the friendship which grew out of daily discourses with him about the Lord. Or (the expression visnujanapriyah) may mean that Suka had himself become dear to them.

The idea is this: According to the accounts of the Brahmavaivarta Purana, even prior to this, while still lying in his mother's womb, Suka realized that Krishna was capable of subduing maya at will. Thus, according to Suka's own order, Vyasa brought Krishna there, who revealed Himself to Suka (still lying in his mother's womb). Being thus freed from the bonds of maya, and considering his goal of life accomplished, Suka (took birth) and retired to a secluded spot. Now, Vyasa realized that the Bhagavata was the only affective means to captivate him, and so somehow managed to have him hear a few selected portions of the Bhagavata, in which the greatness of Hari's nature is particularly evident. By this means, Vyasa captivated Suka's heart, and taught him the whole of the Bhagavata. Thus (the example of Suka) also speaks of the extreme greatness of the Bhagavata.

It is thereby demonstrated that Suka, the narrator of the Bhagavata, and Vyasa shared the same sentiments (with regard to the Bhagavata). Therefore, in every instance, the significance of this work must be evaluated in accordance with the understanding of its narrator, Suka, and not otherwise. Whatever interpretations are found to be contrary to this should be considered mere deviations from the proper path.

50) Now, in order to determine the significance of the BHagavata in the manner just indicated, the sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana will be ascertained, one after the other, and in detail, in these six sandarbhas. The first of these (i.e. the Tattvasandarbhā) will deal with the sambandha, or the relationship between the principle being taught and the medium through which it is taught. The substance of this relationship is described by Vyasa in a general manner in Bh.P. 1/1/2 with the phrase vedyam vastavam atra vastu ("The absolute reality is to be discovered in the BHagavata.."). According to the commentary of Shridhara: "Here, in this beautiful Bhagavata, the absolute reality, i.e. vastu in the highest sense, is to be discovered, and not vastu in the sense of substance or attribute, as interpreted by the Vaishesikas etc."

51) Then, in reply to the question, "What is the nature of this principle of reality (tattva)?", Suta states: "The knowers of reality declare non-dual consciousness to be reality." (Bh.P.1/2/11)

Here, jnana ("consciousness") means "having pure consciousness as its essential nature". This consciousness is termed advaya ("non-dual") for the reasons that there exists no other self-existent tattva, either similar or dissimilar; it represents the sole support for its saktis; and without this consciousness as their ultimate substratum, these saktis could not exist.

Since the term tattva indicates the highest goal of life, this consciousness is understood to be of the nature of supreme bliss. Consequently it is also shown to be eternal.

52) But consciousness is seen to be absolutely momentary, taking the form of a blue object (one moment) and a yellow object (the next). How can such a consciousness be characterized as non-dual and eternal, as the Bhagavata is intent on doing?(Objection raised by ksanik visnavadis)

To this Suta replies: "The Bhagavata has for its subject matter that non-dual reality which forms the essence of all the Upanisads, and is characterized by the oneness of atman and brahman; its sole purpose is to bring about the attainment of kaivalya." (Bh.P.12/13/12) That is, this Bhagavata has for its nistha, i.e. its sole concern, that non dual reality which forms the essence of all the Upanisads. Its primary and most efficacious teaching is characterized as oneness between the jiva and brahman. This oneness is understood, in such statements as tat tvam asi ("You are that," Ch.U.6/8/7), to be an identity of form, since the jiva, being a portion of brahman, shares his conscious nature. Due to his nature and power, brahman is the most extensive of all. He is that whose essential nature has been described by the words satyam jnanam anantam brahma ("Brahman is truth, knowledge, and infinity," Tai.U. 2/1/1); by knowing whom, all is said to be known: yenasrutam srutam bhavati ("...by learning about whom, the unheard become heard..."Ch.U.6/1/3); who is declared to be the single cause of the universe: sad eva saumyedam agra asit ("In the beginning, my boy, this was being alone," Ch.U. 6/2/1); and who has been described as being able to create by a mere wish: tad aiksata bahu syam ("He looked about and thought, 'May I be many.'"Ch.U.6/2/3). That the jiva is not absolutely non-different from brahman has been established by arguments based on Vyasa's vision in samadhi. Still, he is one with brahman in that he represents a particular portion of Him. This is demonstrated by the phrase, anena jivenatmana ("by this living self", Ch.U.6/3/2), in which the employment of the pronoun idam ("this") implies difference from brahman while the use of the word atman ("self") indicates inclusion within brahman.

The edea is this: Suppose someone who has been confined to a dark room from his birth wishes to know the nature of the sun. Then, someone points out to him a tiny ray of light which has somehow managed to peep through a small hole, and instructs him as follows: "This is that (sun). Seek to realize the sun as a great sphere of light, identical in nature with this ray of light, which is but a particle of that sun." We will demonstrate in the Paramatmasandarbhā that the jiva similarly represents a portion of the paramatman, owing his very existence to a particular aspect of His unthinkable power. Therefore, the Upanisads teach in places that brahman possesses parts, but only in the sense that He is qualified by these parts, characterized as "jiva" etc. The Sruti texts, on the other hand, which indicate brahman, to be partless are concerned only with His absolute aspect.

The fourth pada of this verse, kaivalyaikaprayojanam ("its sole purpose is to bring about the attainment of kaivalya"), will be analyzed in the Pritisandarbhā by taking kaivalya to mean "purity" alone, and by showing "purity" to be synonymous with "pure bhakti".

53) And here, only if the conscious and eternal nature of the jiva first comes to mind in connection with the word tvam, will his similarity with the being signified by the word tat be easily comprehended. Therefore, in accordance with Br.S. 1/3/20, anyarthas ca paramarsah ("The reference to the jiva has a different meaning"), Pippalayana utter the following words to King Nimi, showing the conscious and eternal nature of the jiva, in order to enlighten him about brahman: "The atman was not born, nor will it die; it neither increases nor decreases, since it is the witness of the changes which occur in all ephemeral things. Just as prana is conceived of as manifold on account of the senses, so is the atman, though eternal, everywhere unchanging, pure awareness, conceived of as many ." (Bh.P.11/3/38)

That is, "the atman", i.e. the pure jiva, "was not born". Since it has no birth, it is likewise free from the modification classified as astita ("existence") which immediately follows birth. "It does not increase." Since it is free from increase, the modification known as viparinama ("transformation") is likewise ruled out. The particle hi introduces the reason: "It is the savanavit", i.e. the witness of the different phases of time, "of all ephemeral things", i.e. of all things having a beginning and an end, whether bodies in the stages of childhood, youth, etc., or bodies in the form of gods, mortals, etc. The idea is that the observer of things subject to certain states is not itself subject to those states.

What is this unconditioned atman? He replies, upalabdhimatram, i.e. he whose nature is consciousness alone. What is it like? It exists "everywhere", i.e. in every body, "eternally", i.e. at all times. But we see that consciousness of a blue object disappears, and that of a yellow object arises. Doesn't this prove the changing nature of consciousness? To this he replies, indriyabalena ("on account of the senses"). Consciousness, which is existence itself, is one; it is conceived of as manifold on account of the senses. It is the mental states (vrtti) alone, in the form of blue objects etc., which appear and disappear, not consciousness. This is what is meant.

The first argument is based in the distinction between that which is subject to origination and annihilation, and that which is free from them. The second argument is to be understood in terms of the distinction between the seer and the seen. The phrase "just as prana" represents as illustration of something which does not swerve from its own state, even in the midst of things which are themselves changing.

54) Pippalayana further develops this metaphor, and shows how, with the merging of the senses, the unchanging atman is realized: "For prana follows the jiva wherever he may go, whether in eggs, fetuses, trees, or sweat-born creatures. When the senses and 'I'-consciousness have merged in deep sleep, then the immovable atman is free from its dwelling place, and (upon waking) we remember that." (Bh.P. 11/3/39) Here, andesu refers to creatures born from eggs, pesisu to those born from wombs, rarusu to those born from sprouts, and aviniscitesu to those born from sweat or heat. The verb upadhavati means "follows".

Having thus shown the changeless nature (of prana) in the illustration, he goes on to show the changeless nature (of the atman) in the illustrated portion of this analogy. How is that? The atman appears to be changing when the senses are functioning in the waking state, or when the sense of "I", made up of impressions from the waking state, functions in the dream state. When, however, one is in deep sleep, his senses and "I"-consciousness both merged, then the atman remains kutastha, i.e. unchanging. In what way? Asayam rte, i.e. free from its limiting adjunct, the subtle body. The idea is that it is unchanging since it lacks upadhis, which are the cause of change.

But when everything, including even the sense of "I", becomes merged, only a void remains. Where is this changeless atman then? To this he replies: "We remember that." "We", i.e. the waking perceivers, remember that indivisible atman, the witness of the state of deep sleep, and say (upon waking): "I slept soundly for a long time. I wasn't aware of anything." The experience of the atman in deep sleep is such since there can be no memory of that which has not been experienced; it is hazy due to the absence of any connection with sense objects. This is the idea. It therefore follows that the atman, which is pure awareness itself, possesses the power of knowing, which is grounded in itself, just as self-luminous objects, like the sun etc., possess the power of illumination. As states in Sruti: "And when (in deep sleep), he does not see, still he sees, though he does not see objects of sight, for there can be no severing of sight from the seer.." (Br.U.4/3/23)

This is the third argument, based in the distinction between the categories of "witness" and "objects" witnessed". The fourth argument is understood in terms of the categories, "the sufferer" and "the repository of love"

55) Therefore it is said: " This reasoning is known as 'anvayavyatireka' (positive and negative concomitance') and is of four kinds. The first argument is based on the distinction between that which is subject to origination and annihilation, and that which is free from them; the second is based on the distinction between the seer and the seen. The third is considered by the wise to turn on the distinction between the witness and the objects witnessed, while the fourth convincing argument rests on the distinction between the sufferer and the repository of love."

56) The tattva which forms the subject matter of the Bhagavata is the principle of non-difference between the jiva, whose nature has just been described, and brahman, based on the fact that the jiva is, by nature, pure consciousness and a portion of brahman; this has been described from the vyasti, or individual, point of view. The same tattva is also described from the samasti, or aggregate, point of view, by means of the categories which form the characteristics of Mahapuranas, such as sarga etc.; it is then termed asraya, the ultimate ground of existence. These categories are enumerated by Suka in the following two verses: "We find in the Bhagavata the categories: 1)sarga, 2)visarga, 3) sthana, 4)posana, 5)uti, 6)manvantara, 7)isanukatha, 8)nirodha, 9)mukti, and 10)asraya. The great souls describe the characteristics of the first nine, either directly, with the aid of Sruti, or by explaining their significance (indirectly) in order to clarify the meaning of the tenth." (Bh.P. 2/10/1-2)

Here, manvantareshanukathas is a dvandva compound meaning "manvantaras and ishanukathas". The idea is that these ten topics, sarga etc., are described here. And of those ten, they describe the laksana, i.e. the nature, of the first nine, "in order to clarify the meaning of the tenth", i.e. in order to bring about an understanding of the true nature (tattva) of the tenth. But this is not at all evident in this verse. To clear this up, Suka replies, "They describe them srutena, i.e. by means of Sruti (text) uttered in eulogistic passages etc., anjasa, i.e. directly, and also arthena, i.e. by demonstrating their significance through a variety of legends."

57) In order to clarify the meaning of the tenth topic alone, Suka utters the following seven verses, explaining the significance of all ten: "The origination of the elements, sense objects, sense organs, and mahat, Ahmaka, due to the disturbance of the equilibrium of the gunas by Lord is known as sarga. The gross creation produced by the Brahma is called visarga." (Bh.P.2/10/3)

Here, the term bhuta refers to the elements, ether etc.; matra signifies sense objects, such as sound etc. Indriya ("sense organs") represents the third element of this compound, and the term dhi indicated that mahat and ahankara are also to be included. "Due to the disturbance of the equilibrium of the gunas" means "due to the transformation of the gunas". This origination of the elements etc. "from Brahman", i.e. from the creator, paramesvara, is what is known as sarga. The purusa is Brahma, born from Viraj; what is created by him is known as paurusa. This paurusa creation of the moving and the unmoving is known as visarga. This is the idea.

"Sthiti signifies the triumph of Vaikuntha (i.e. Vishnu); posana indicates his grace; manvantara stands for the virtuous conduct of the holy; and uti, for the subtle impressions from past actions. The descriptions of the deeds of the avatars of Hari and Him associates, supplemented by various legends, are known as isakatha." (Bh.P.2/10/4-5)

Here, sthiti, or sthana, signifies the "triumph", i.e. excellence, " of Vaikuntha", i.e. of the Lord, in maintaining the different rules and regulations for creatures. Posana indicates the grace of the Lord on His devotees dwelling within this period of maintenance. Manvantara refers to lives of virtuous individuals, such as Manu etc., who have received the grace of the Lord, and who dwell within the different manvantaras. Their lives are themselves considered dharma; worship of Lord is known as saddharma. Uti stands for the impressions formed by the various activities performed during the period of maintenance. The stories of the deeds of the avatars of Hari and his followers during the period of maintenance are called isanukatha. This is the idea.

"Nirodha signifies the coming to rest of the jiva, together with his saktis, in consequence of the cosmic sleep of Hari. Mukti indicates the abandonment of what is foreign to one's own nature, and the establishment in one's own true nature." (Bh.P.2/10/6)

That is, following the period of maintenance, "the atman", i.e. the jiva, comes to a state of rest "together with his saktis", i.e. with his own limiting adjuncts, as a consequence of "His" ,i.e. Hari's, rest; this is what is known as nirodha. Here, the "rest of Hari" (sayana) signifies a closing of the eyes from the manifest universe, while the "rest of the jiva" signifies the marging of the jivas in the state of nirodha. Mukti indicates the steady dwelling in one's own true nature in the condition of nirodha, by abandoning all that is foreign to one's own nature, i.e. ignorance etc., superimposed by avidya.

58) "That is the asraya, form which come the origin and dissolution of the universe, and by virtue of which it is perceived; it is designated the supreme brahman and paramatman." (Bh.P. 2/10/7)

That is, he who is well-known under the designations brahman and paramatman, from whom come the abhasa, i.e. the origin, and the nirodha, i.e. the dissolution (of the universe), and because of whom it adhyavasiyate, i.e. is perceived, or shines, through the sense organs of jivas, He is known as the asraya. Since the particle iti indicates variety, Bhagavan is also to be understood. A further explanation (of this topic) is given below.

59) In order to clearly demonstrate the nature of the asraya during the period of maintenance, from the vyasti point of view as well, that is, in terms of one's own immediate experience, Suka explains the distinction between the categories, adhyatmika etc., in the following two verses: "He who is the adhyatmika purusa is verily the adhidaivika purusa. The purusa who is responsible for the division of these two is verily the adhibhautika purusa. In the absence of any one of these three, we do not perceive the others. Then, he who knows all three is the atman (i.e. the jiva), who is himself grounded in Him (i.e. in paramatman) who has no asraya other than Himself." (Bh.P.2/10/8-9)

That is, he who is the adhyatmika purusa, the jiva, or perceiver, who identifies himself with the sense organs, such as the eyes etc., is also the adhidaivika purusa, the presiding deity of the eye setc., such as Surya (the sun) etc. Prior to the creation of the body, there exists no dwelling place for the sense organs, which are thus rendered impenetrable. Consequently, no distinct modifications arise within either (the adhyatmika purusa), who considers himself to be the illuminator of the senses, or his ally (the adhidaivika purusa). As a result, both remain indistinguishable from the pure jiva. Then, on account of the adhibhautika purusa, i.e. the visible body, endowed with eyeballs etc., the other two purusas are divided, and assume their respective forms, the one identifying himself with the senses, and the other as the presiding deity of the senses. The adhibhautika purusa (i.e. the physical body) is referred to a purusa (literally, a "person") insofar as it represents the limiting adjunct of the purusa, or jiva. This usage is justified by the following Sruti text: "This purusa (i.e. the physical person) is the embodiment of the essence of food." (Tai.U.2/1/1)

60) The second of these two verses (i.e. Bh. 2/10/9) reveals the fact that none of these (three purusas) can be considered the asraya, since they are all mutually dependent. That is, in the absence of the visible object, it is not possible to establish the existence of either the sense organ, whose existence is inferred from the perception of the object, or the seer. And in the absence of either the sense organ or the seer, is not possible to establish the existence of the presiding deities of the senses, such as Surya (the sun) etc., whose existence is inferred from the functioning of the sense organs. Furthermore, without the presiding deity, the sense organs cannot function; and in the absence of the senses, the existence of the visible object cannot be established. Thus, in the absence of any one of these, we do not perceive the others. Then He who "knows" these three, i.e. perceives them as the witness through a reflective cognition, He, i.e. paramatman, is the asraya. The qualifier svasraya, i.e. "having no asraya other than itself", is meant to distinguish paramatman from the other three, which also function as asrayas, each being the asraya for the others. And (in addition to being its own asraya) , the paramatman is also the asraya for the others.

The term asraya is used here only with reference to that aspect of the pure jiva, or "part", which is identical with the paramatman , or "whole". Thus, there should be no hesitation in considering the pure jiva, known as the "witness" and characterized in the following verses, to be the asraya: "...though beyond the three gunas, he considers himself to be composed of the three gunas, and consequently comes to grief" (Bh.P.1/7/5); "The states of waking, dream, and dreamless sleep are all modifications of the intellect based on the gunas. The jiva, being their witness, is considered distinct from them" (Bh.P. 11/13/27); and "...the pure (witness) observes the modifications of the mind, the impure agent" (Bh. P.5/11/12).

But then, shouldn't the adhyatmika purusa and the others also be considered asrayas? True, but since they are mutually dependent, they cannot be considered asrayas in any absolute sense; therefore, the term asraya should not be applied to them in its primary sense. This is the significance of the phrase, "In the absence of any one of these three, we do not perceive the others."

Then why not consider the witness alone to be the asraya? To this Suka replies, "Then he who knows all three is the atman..." This atman is the jiva, or witness. But He who represents His own asraya, i.e. has no asraya other than Himself, is paramatman. It is He who is the asraya for the witnessing jiva.

As stated in the Hamsaghyastava, "Man knows all, including the gunas; but knowing all that, he still does not know the all-knowing infinite (paramatman). My salutations to that (paramatman)" (Bh.P. 6/4/25). Therefore, the paramatman alone is declared to be the asraya in the Bhagavata verse (Bh.P. 2/10/7).

61) Suta also declares (paramatman) alone to be the asraya, in the following two verses, though enumerating the characteristics which indicate the Bhagavata to be a Mahapurana in a different fashion: "The knowers of Puranas understand a Purana to have the following ten characteristics:

1)sarga, 2)visarga, 3)vr̥tti. 4)raksa, 5)antara, 6) vamsa, 7)vamsanucarita, 8)samstha, 9)hetu, and 10)apasraya. Some, O Brahmana, consider the characteristics to be fivefold based on a distinction between major and minor."(Bh.P.12/7/9-10)

Here, antarani signifies manvantaras. Some consider the characteristics of Puranas to be fivefold by citing the following verse: "Sarga, pratisarga, vamsa, manvantara, and vamsanucarita are the five characteristics of a Purana." This difference of opinion is "based on a distinction between major and minor", i.e. based on the fact that major and minor Puranas each have their own distinctive topics. Even though all ten topics are described in such Puranas as the Vishnu Purana etc., still, since only five are principally discussed, they are considered minor.

This is not to say that these ten topics can be found one after the other in the subsequent skandhas of the Bhagavata, for the Bhagavata contains twelve such skandhas. Nor can the characteristics enumerated in the second skandha be found one after the other in skandhas three through twelve, since it is not possible to find the topics nirodha, mukti, and asraya in skandhas ten, eleven, and twelve; the same is also true regarding the other characteristics and skandhas, with the exception of skandha eight (which deals with the topic manvantara). Therefore, Shridhara himself states: "The destruction (nirodha) of the wicked kings, necessitated by a decline in righteousness, is described in skandha ten, in order to spread the fame of Krishna. The four kinds of nirodha, prakṛta, etc., have already been described." Thus, Shridhara considers the tenth skandha to be chiefly concerned with describing the asraya alone, in the form of Krishna. As he himself says: "The tenth topic (asraya), in the form of him (i.e. Krishna) who is the refuge for all who seek shelter with him, is the aim of the tenth skandha." And the same conclusion can be reached with regard to the other skandhas as well. Thus, according to Shridhara, virtually every topic is described either directly or indirectly, in every skandha. This same idea is indicated by the phrase, "(The first nine topics are described) either directly, with the aid of Sruti, or by explaining their significance (indirectly)," since one or the other of these methods is met with throughout the Bhagavata. Thus, the first and second skandhas are also to be considered as part of the nature of a Mahapurana. Therefore, we do not accept the idea that the ten topics are dealt with in successive chapters.

62) Suta then describes the characteristics of sarga etc.:" The origination of mahat from a disturbance of the gunas of the unmanifest (prakṛti), of the three-fold 'I'-consciousness, and of the subtle elements, senses, and sense objects is called sarga." (Bh.P.12/7/11)

That is, mahat originates from a disturbance of the gunas of prakṛti; from mahat comes ahankara, composed of the three gunas; from ahankara arise the bhutamātras, or subtle elements, the senses, and the gross elements, along with their respective presiding deities. This process of origination is termed sarga. That is to say, sarga indicates causal creation.

"The assembling of these (elements of creation), with the aid of the puruṣa, based on the stored-up impressions (of jivas), is called visarga. It is the creation of all moving and unmoving beings, and proceeds like one seed growing out of another."(Bh.P.12/7/12)

Here, the puruṣa stands for paramatman. The assembling of these elements of creation, i.e. mahat etc., is based primarily on the stored-up impressions from past actions of the jiva. It represents the affect in the form of living beings, both moving and unmoving. This unbroken cycle, like one seed arising from another, is called visarga; that is, it is the creation of the particular. The category uti ("the subtle impressions from past actions") is also indicated by this verse.

"Unmoving being constitute the vrtti, or means of subsistence, for moving being. The means of subsistence for men is accomplished naturally, out of desire, or in accordance with scriptural injunction." (Bh.P.12/7/13)

That is, unmoving beings generally constitute the means of subsistence for moving beings, based on desire. The conjunction ca in this verse indicates that moving beings are also to be understood (as constituting the means of means of subsistence for other moving beings). The regulated vrtti of men, however, performed to maintain their livelihood, is carried out "naturally", i.e. based on their own nature, either out of desire, or according to scriptural injunction; this is what is known as vrtti.

"Rakṣa ('protection of the universe) indicates the exploits of the avatars of Acyuta (i.e. Viṣṇu), who come age after age, among animals, mortals, rṣis, and devas, and who destroy the enemies of the Vedas." (Bh.P.12/7/14)

Here, the pronoun yaiḥ indicates that it is the avatars who destroy the enemies of the Vedas. The three categories, isakatha ("stories of the avatars"), sthāna ("maintenance of the universe"), and posana ("the grace of the Lord on his devotees") are also indicated by this verse.

"Manvantara is said to contain six elements: the Manu, the sons of Manu the devas the rulers of the devas, the rṣis, and the partial avatars of Hari." (Bh.P. 12/7/15)

By the descriptions of the deeds of Manu etc. Saddharma is indicated. Thus this characterization (of the categories) is identical with the earlier one. (Bh.P. 2/4/10)

"The dynastic succession, past, present, and future, of the kings fathered by Brahma is known as vamsa. The descriptions of the lives of their descendants is known as vamsanucarita." (Bh.P.12/7/6)

Here, "of their (descendants)" means "of the descendants of the kings". It is the description of the lives of

63) "Samstha, or dissolution, is declared by the wise to result from the essential power (of paramesvara), and to be of four kinds: naimittika (causal), prakrta (natural), nitya (necessary), and atyantika (final)." (Bh.P. 12/7/17)

Here, the pronoun asya indicates paramesvara, and the term svabhavatah means "due to His sakti". The mention of atyantika, or final dissolution, indicates that mukti is also included here.

"The jiva performs actions out of ignorance, and is thus the hetu, or cause, of the creation etc. of the universe. Some call that anusayin, while others call it avyakrta." (Bh.P. 12/7/18)

Here, the term hetu indicates the efficient cause; asya means "of the universe". The compound avidyakarmakarakah provides the reason: "since he performs actions out of ignorance". Some refer to this hetu as anusayin, emphasizing the conscious aspect, while others call it avyakrta, emphasizing its association with upadhis.

"That brahman, who is both associated with and distinct from the states of waking, dream, and deep sleep as well as the products of maya, serves as the apasraya, or ground, for the functions of the jiva (Bh.P.

The pure form of the jiva is not explained here to be the asraya, since that would contradict Vyasa's experience in samadhi. Rather, the idea is this: Brahman, in his pure form, is distinct from the states of waking etc., as well as from the products of maya, such as mahat etc., which are conceived through the power of maya; but in His role as the supreme witness, He is associated with them. That is to say, though the apasraya is the ground (asraya) for the functions of the jivas, both in its pure form, and in its qualified form, as dwelling in the midst of these functions, it is all-transcending. This is indicated by the preverb apa (in apasraya) which indicates "abandonment", which is itself synonymous with "transcendence".

Therefore, Suta, in the following two verses, speaks of the pure conscious nature of the jiva, designated by the term hetu, as a means to revealing the true nature of the apasraya: "Just as a material element, is both associated with and distinct from the objects which it constitutes, made up of names and form, so is the Atman both associated with and distinct from the various stages of life, beginning with inception and ending with death. When one withdraws the mind and goes beyond the three states (waking, dreaming, and deep sleep), either on his own, or with the aid of yoga, he realizes the atman, and refrains from endeavors." (Bh.P. 12/7/20-21)

That is, just as a substance, such as earth etc., is associated with objects, such as jars etc., and is also distinct from them when viewed without regard for its effect, so also the tanmatra, i.e. the reality, or pure consciousness of the jiva, is associated, through avidya, with the nine stage of life, beginning with conception and ending with death, and yet is, in itself, unassociated.

Having realized the pure atman to be such, one becomes indifferent and qualified to inquire into the nature of the apasraya. This is explained by Suta in the second of these two verses (Bh.P.12/7/21). Here, the "three states" are those of waking, dreaming and deep sleep; the term atman signifies paramatman. The expression "on his own" means "by inquiring into the illusory nature of things, as did Vamadeva etc.", and "through yoga" means "through the practices of yoga, performed by Devahuti etc." "Refraining from all endeavors" means "from all endeavors other than the pursuit of paramatman".

Thus has the sambandha been indicated.

Here ends the first volume of the Bhagavatasandarbhah, entitled Tattvasandarsha, written according to the teachings of Rupa and Sanatana, the objects of veneration in the assemblies of all great Vaishnavas, and the companions of the Supreme Lord Krishna Chaitanya, the purifier of the Kali Yuga, who incarnated in order to bestow the boon of His own worship.

"In the age of Kali intelligent persons perform congregational chanting to worship the incarnation of Godhead who constantly sings the names of Krishna. Although His complexion is not blackish, He is Krishna Himself. He is accompanied by His associates, servants, weapons, and confidential companions.”

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Shri Jiva Gosvami begins the mangalacarana of his Bhagavata-sandarbha with this text from Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.5.32). The word mangala-acarana literally means “enacting auspiciousness,” and this enactment is usually done poetically, by means of a sanctifying invocation. Traditionally in India authors were expected to start all their serious works with one or more verses of mangalacarana. The oft-cited reasons for doing so were that the invocation helps remove obstacles and assure the successful completion of one’s book, and also that beginning one’s work in this way conforms to the precedent set by cultured authorities (nirvighnayai tat-purtaye shishtacara-pariprapta...mangalam acarati [Baladeva Vidyabhushana, Sukshma-tika on Govinda-bhashya 1.1.1]). Though it is undeniable that many inferior writers have followed the tradition with mediocre results, in the hands of a great author the mangalacarana can concisely summarize his whole message and immediately establish an elevated level of discourse.

Shrila Krishnadasa Kaviraja lists the purposes the mangalacarana can serve after completing his own invocation at the start of Shri Chaitanya-caritamrita :

se mangalacarana haya tri-vidha prakara
vastu-nirdesha, ashirvada, namaskara

“The mangalacarana involves three processes: defining the objective, offering benedictions, and offering obeisances” (Cc. Adi 1.22). Shri Jiva Gosvami has accomplished the first of these purposes in this opening verse of the Tattva-sandarbha, and in the following seven verses, which continue the mangalacarana, he will reiterate this purpose and also accomplish the other two.

By first citing a verse from Shrimad-Bhagavatam instead of following the general practice of composing a showcase verse of his own, Shri Jiva Gosvami turns our attention without undue formalities to the Bhagavatam itself, the vastu (subject) of Shri Bhagavata-sandarbha. The Bhagavatam is unique even among the eighteen major Puranas. It is more coherently organized than others, its style is more elegant, and more than any other Purana it focuses on a single theme: the supremacy and all-attractiveness of svayam bhagavan, the original Personality of Godhead, Shri Krishna. Each of the standard schools of Vaishnavism implicitly trusts the Bhagavatam and studies it regularly. The followers of Chaitanya Mahaprabhu especially revere it as their primary scripture. Since Shri Jiva was the protege of his uncles Rupa and Sanatana, who were directly working under the personal instructions of Lord Chaitanya, it was natural for Jiva to be imbued with an intimate affinity for Lord Chaitanya and for His favorite source of inspiration, Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

Here at the beginning of the mangalacarana and throughout the Sandarbhas we find that Shri Jiva forgoes opportunities to display his poetic eloquence. Such an encyclopedic work of systematic philosophy as this demands from its author a concise, straightforward presentation, and so in the Sandarbhas Shri Jiva expresses himself tersely in prose, though he was certainly a brilliant poet, as anyone who has read his Gopala-campu can attest.

Because the Sandarbhas are a commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam, they inherit the Bhagavatam’s own subject, namely the Supreme Lord Krishna along with His avatara expansions and generations of devotees. This additional vastu (substance) is also indicated in the first mangalacarana verse. Shri Jiva Gosvami has taken the verse from the section of the Bhagavatam’s Eleventh Canto recounting a long conversation between King Nimi and the nine Yogendra sages that ranges over a number of theological topics. Nimi asked Yogendra Karabhajana about the Supreme Lord’s yuga-avatars, His special incarnations who appear once in each age to teach human society the particular method of spiritual development appropriate for that age. (The general Puranic scheme of ages measures the current age, Kali-yuga, as lasting 432,000 years, five thousand of which have passed; preceding it were three other yugas—Satya, Treta, and Dvapara—the first four times as long as Kali, the second three times as long, and the third twice as long.) Karabhajana said that the yuga-avatara in Satya-yuga has a white complexion, dresses as a brahmachari celibate student, is known by the names Hamsa, Vaikuntha, and others, and teaches meditational devotion. Karabhajana explained that the Treta-yuga avatara has a red complexion, is known by the names Vishnu, Yajna, and others, and teaches the rituals of Vedic fire sacrifice as the method of devotional service appropriate for that age.

Describing the avatara during the Dvapara Age, Karabhajana said that He has a dark blue complexion, wears yellow garments, is addressed in prayer as Vasudeva, Sankarshana, Pradyumna, and Aniruddha, and teaches worship of the Supreme through the combined methods of the Vedas and tantras. Though Karabhajana does not explicitly identify this yuga-avatara, one can easily recognize Him to be Krishna, the son of Vasudeva. Then, reaching the point of our mangalacarana verse, Karabhajana introduces it by stating,

iti dvapara urvisha/ stuvanti jagad-ishvaram
nana-tantra-vidhanena/ kalav api tatha shrinu

“O King, in this way people in Dvapara-yuga glorified the Lord of the universe. In Kali-yuga also people worship the Supreme Personality of Godhead by following various regulations of the revealed scriptures. Now kindly hear of this from me” (Bhag. 11.5.31).

Some contend that Lord Vishnu does not appear as a yugavatara in Kali-yuga. Indeed, one of Vishnu’s descriptive names is Tri-yuga, which apparently means that He manifests Himself in three ages—Satya, Treta, and Dvapara—but not in Kali, the most corrupt age, when even lesser demigods avoid visiting the earth. There is some Puranic evidence supporting this view: Shri Jiva Gosvami, in his own commentary on Shri Tattva-sandarbha (known as Sarva-samvadini), cites the following verses from the Vishnu-dharmottara Purana:

pratyaksha-rupa-dhriḥ devo/ [DDB1]drishyate na kalau hariḥ
kritadishv eva tenaiva/ tri-yugāḥ paripathyate

kaler ante ca samprapte/ kalkinam brahma-vadinam
anupraviṣṭya kurute/ vasudevo jagat-sthitim

“The Supreme Lord Hari does not appear in a visibly manifest form in the Age of Kali. He appears only in the three ages starting with Krita [Satya], and so He is called Tri-yuga. But at the end of the Kali Age Lord Vasudeva reestablishes order in the world by causing the appearance of Kalki, the proponent of absolute truth.” Prahlada Maharaja makes a similar statement in his prayers to Lord Nrisimha in the Seventh Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam:

ittham nri-tiryag-rishi-deva-jhashavatairair lokan vibhavayasi hamsi jagat-pratipan dharmam maha-purusha pasi yuganuvrittash channash kalau yad abhavas tri-yugo 'tha sa tvam

“In this way, my Lord, You appear in various incarnations as a human being, an animal, a great saint, a demigod, a fish, or a tortoise, thus maintaining the entire creation in different planetary systems and killing the demoniac principles. According to the age, O my Lord, You protect the principles of religion. In the Age of Kali, however, You are covered, and therefore You are known as Tri-yuga” (Bhag. 7.9.38). The venerable Bhagavatam commentator Shridhara Svami gives his gloss on this prayer: vibhavayasi palayasi hamsi ghatayasi kalau tu tan na karoshi yatas tada tvam channo 'bhavah, atas trishv eva yugeshv avirbhavat sa evam-bhutas tvam tri-yuga iti prasiddhah. “You [usually] engage in protecting [the devotees] and killing [the demons], but not in Kali-yuga, for at that time You are covered. Therefore, since you appear only in three yugas, you are known as Tri-yuga.”. Later, in his comments on the Eleventh Canto, when he comes to the verse krishna-varnam tvishakrishnam, Shridhara Svami reads tvishakrishnam as the euphonic combination of tvisha krishnam (“having a blackish complexion”) instead of tvisha akrishnam (“having a nonblackish complexion”), which is grammatically allowable because of the inherent ambiguity of the combination. Based on this reading of tvishakrishnam, Shridhara Svami identifies the avatara being described as Shri Krishna, making Him the yugavatara for both Dvapara and Kali.

But Shridhara Svami wrote his commentary a few hundred years before the advent of Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, the worshipable Lord of Jiva Gosvami and all other Gaudiya Vaishnavas. They consider Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, who initiated the devotional method of sankirtana, congregational chanting of the names of God, to be the actual yuga-avatara for Kali. Lord Chaitanya fits the description channah kalau, the hidden avatara in Kali-yuga, because He consistently played the role of a simple devotee of Krishna, refusing to admit He was Krishna Himself. Lord Chaitanya greatly respected Shridhara Svami’s explanation of Shrimad-Bhagavatam and did not like to hear any criticism of his opinions, but we cannot expect the commentator to have predicted the Lord’s future covert appearance. In any case, if he did know of it, he did not publically reveal this insight.

In his Sarva-samvadini Shrila Jiva Gosvami states that the Vishnu-dharmottara’s denial of a yugavatara in Kali may apply to other Kali-yugas but not to the present one. As Shri Jiva explains, we are living in the twenty-eighth Kali-yuga of the seventh manvantara of the day of Brahma called Shveta-varaha-kalpa. Only once in each day of Brahma—meaning once every 8,640,000,000 years—does the Personality of Godhead Shri Krishna descend to the earth in His original form. This rare descent of Lord Krishna did in fact occur during our present cycle of ages, just before Kali-yuga began five thousand years ago. Krishna is not just another avatara but is the ultimate source of all forms of God. When He appears, His unlimited potency overrules the general pattern and He comes again in Kali-yuga. Thus Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, who displayed His pastimes in Bengal and elsewhere some five hundred years ago, is Krishna Himself, not an avatara of Krishna exhibiting only some of the Supreme Lord’s potencies. Lord Chaitanya coincidentally accepts the role of yugavatara, but to regard Him as that and nothing more would be a gross underestimation of His greatness. The Gaudiya Vaishnavas’ realization that Lord Shri Krishna and Krishna Chaitanya Mahaprabhu are one and that Lord Chaitanya is the deliverer of Kali-yuga easily reconciles with Shridhara Svami’s opinion that Shri Krishna Himself is the yugavatara for both the Dvapara and Kali ages.

The principal thesis of this first Sandarbha, Shri Tattva-sandarbha, is that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the perfect scriptural authority. The other Sandarbhas will demonstrate how the Bhagavatam perfectly reveals the glories of Lord Krishna and of devotional service to Him. As Shrinatha Cakravarti has written in his Chaitanya-manjusha, aradhyo bhagavan vrajesha-tanayas tad-dhama vrindavanam ramya kacid upasana vraja-vadhu-vargena ya kalpita shastram bhagavatam pramanam amalam prema pum-artho mahan ittham gaura-mahaprabhor matam atas tatradaaro nah parah

“The Supreme Lord to be worshiped is the son of the King of Vraja. His personal abode is Vrindavana. The most favorable mode of serving Him is that practiced by the young maidens of Vraja. The scripture Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the spotless source of reliable knowledge, and pure love of God is the supreme goal of human life. Such are the opinions of Gaura Mahaprabhu, and we therefore respect them implicitly.”

The Bhagavatam is such a complete revelation of all the Supreme Truth’s potencies that it can enlighten the various understandings of Vaishnava acaryas both before and after Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu’s appearance. For example, directly following the verse krishna-varnam tvishakrishnam, Karabhajana Yogendra addresses two beautiful prayers to the Mahapurusha. The followers of Lord Chaitanya understand that these prayers are offered to Him, the Mahaprabhu, while Shridhara Svami interprets them more generically, removing them from the context of the description of the yugavataras.

vande maha-purusha te caranaravindam

“O Mahapurusha, I worship Your lotus feet. You gave up the association of the goddess of fortune and all her opulence, which is most difficult to renounce and is hankered after by even the great demigods. Being the most faithful follower of the path of religion, You thus left for the forest in obedience to a respectable superior’s words. Out of sheer mercy You chased after the fallen conditioned souls, who are always in pursuit of the false enjoyment of illusion, and gave them the true object of all desire” (Bhag. 11.5.34). The devotees of Chaitanya Mahaprabhu understand this verse as a summary of His pastimes: Cursed by an angry brahmana (arya-vacasa) to lose all happiness in family life, Lord Chaitanya entered the renounced order (aranyam) and left His wife Vishnupriya, even though she is directly His eternal consort, the goddess of fortune (rajya-lakshmim).

Shridhara Svami reads the same lines differently: Ordered by His father (arya-vacasa) into exile in the forest (aranyam), Lord Ramacandra gave up His royal opulence (rajya-lakshmim). For Shridhara Svami, maya-mrigam means “the golden deer that was the sorcerer Marici in disguise,” and dayitaya ipsitam means “desired by His beloved Sita”; that is, Lord Rama chased after the false deer because His wife wanted to have it. The Gaudiya acarya Vishvanatha Cakravarti repeats Shridhara Svami’s explanation in his commentary but then adds another: Maya-mrigam means “the living entities who are entangled in material life, seeking out the illusion of wife, children, wealth, and so on” (mayam kalatra-putra-vittadi-rupam mrigayati anveshyatiti maya-mrigah samsaravishto janah). Dayitaya means “out of compassion,” and ipsitam means “object of desire.” In other words, Lord Chaitanya pursued the deluded souls to attract them to the better life of Krishna consciousness. Both these interpretations are grammatically and logically feasible.

In his Sarva-samvadini Shri Jiva explains the phrase krishna-varnam tvishakrishnam as follows: Lord Chaitanya is Krishna Himself, yet His complexion (tvisha) is akrishnam, not dark blue but golden. Krishna-varnam means “containing the syllables krish-na,” as in the name Krishna Chaitanya, the brahmacari name given to Lord Chaitanya by His spiritual master Keshava Bharati. Or, alternatively, Lord Chaitanya always describes (varnayati) the glories of Shri Krishna under the spell of remembering His own blissful pastimes as Krishna; out of His supreme compassion He also describes these glories to everyone else. Or, although He does not appear in the dark-blue form of Krishna, by the brilliance of His golden effulgence (tvisha) He nevertheless inspires everyone with realization of Krishna (krishna-varnam); therefore those who see Him also see Krishna. Or, although to the general populace He is not Krishna but a devotee, to a few intimate followers He offers a revelation (tvisha) of Himself as the same Shyamasundara with dark-blue complexion (krishna-varnam).

Each avatara of Vishnu should be identifiable by His special bodily features and ornaments (angas and upangas), His personal weapons (astras), and His associates (parshadas). According to Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana in his commentary on the Tattva-sandarbha, Chaitanya Mahaprabhu appears with all of these identifying features (sangopangastra-parshadam): His main limbs (angas) are Lord Nityananda and Lord Advaitacarya; His ornaments (upangas) are principal followers like Shrivasa Thakura; even though in this appearance Lord Vishnu does not directly kill demons, with His weapons (astras) of the holy names of God He kills the demonic spirit lurking in every heart in Kali-yuga; and He has His regular associates (parshadas), such as Gadadhara Pandita and His servant Govinda.

Thus the Eleventh canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam verifies that Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu is the yugavatara for the current age. Further verification is found in the Tenth Canto, where Vasudeva’s priest, Garga Muni, says the following during the name-giving ceremony for his new-born son Krishna:

asan varnas trayo hy asya/ grinato 'nu-yugam tanuh
shuklo raktas tatha pita/ idanim krishnatam gatah

"Your son Krishna appeared previously in three different colors, assuming His forms according to each age. He has been white, red and yellow, and now He is dark blue" (Bhag. 10.8.13). The white incarnation was Lord Hamsa, the yugavatara for Satya-yuga; the red incarnation was Lord Yajna, the yugavatara for Treta-yuga; and dark-blue Krishna appeared in Dvapara-yuga. By a simple process of elimination, the yellow yugavatara must appear in Kali-yuga. Garga Muni is referring to a previous Kali-yuga, but in the current Kali Age the yugavatara is also yellow (pita): He is Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, the Golden Avatara. Fully aware of this and of the fact that no attempt at spiritual advancement can be succesful without following the lead of the current age's yugavatara, Shri Jiva Gosvami first dedicates Shri Bhagavata-sandarbha to the glorification and service of Lord Chaitanya.

Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana remarks that Lord Krishna became non-krishna, or golden, when His own dark-blue complexion was covered by the effulgence (tvisha) of His beloved consort, Shrimati Radharani. This comment hints at the more confidential purpose Lord Krishna had in appearing as Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, namely, that He assumed the mood and complexion of own pleasure potency to experience for Himself the love that only She knows.

Invocation I

natva krishnadasa-varyam prabhupadam tattvartha-dam bhashatikan karomy aham shri-vaishnavanam tushtaye

"After paying my obeisances to the best among Lord Krishna's devotees, Shrila Prabhupada, who has imparted knowledge about the essence of Vedic literature, I write this translation and commentary for the satisfaction of the Vaishnavas." [new2]

In the Vedic culture every undertaking begins with an invocation, technically called mangalacarana. The purpose is to invoke the blessings of the Supreme Personality of Godhead so He may remove any obstacle to the completion of the work. This book, Shri Shat-sandarbha, is a detailed treatise on the Lord's name, fame, abode, qualities, pastimes, and associates. As such, it is already all-auspicious and thus needs no invocation. Shrila Jiva Gosvami nonetheless performs mangalacarana, following in the footsteps of the previous acaryas and setting an ideal example for his readers.

A book's mangalacarana is of three types and may have one or more verses. The three types are:

Namas-kriyatmaka: paying obeisances to one's teacher(s) or worshipable deity, or to both.

Ashir-vadatmaka: praying to the Lord for His blessings, bestowing blessings upon the readers, or exclaiming "All glories to the Lord!"

Vastu-nirdeshatmaka: summarizing the subject matter of the book.

Often the mangalacarana will also describe four essential elements of the book, called anubandha-catushtaya:

adhikari ca sambandho vishayash ca prayojanam avashyam eva vaktavyam shastradau tu catushtayam

"At its beginning a book must describe these four items: the qualifications of the person who may read the book (adhikari), the connection between the book and its subject (sambandha), the subject itself (vishaya or abhidheya), and what the reader will gain by reading the book and following the path it prescribes (prayojana).” In modern books these four items are usually covered in the introduction.

It is significant that Shrila Jiva Gosvami begins his mangalacarana with a quotation from Shrimad-Bhagavatam and not with an original verse. By doing so he shows his reverence for Shrimad-Bhagavatam and his surrender to the instructions of Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, for whom Shrimad-Bhagavatam was the supreme scriptural authority. Shrila Jiva Gosvami also implies that in the Shat-sandarbha he will analyze the Bhagavatam and establish its superiority over all other scriptures. In addition, this verse establishes that his worshipable Deity is Lord Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu.

The opening verse was spoken by Karabhajana Rishi in response to a question Maharaja Nimi posed concerning the Lord’s color, name, and mode of worship in the various yugas. In this verse Karabhajana Rishi describes the Lord’s incarnation in Kali-yuga, and in so doing he indirectly reveals that Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu is Lord Shri Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Krishna-varnam indicates one who describes the pastimes of Lord Krishna to others or who always chants “Krishna, Krishna.” Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu certainly meets this criterion for being krishna-varna. Varnam also means “class” or “category.” So krishna-varnam may also indicate one who is in the same class as Krishna. Shri Krishna Chaitanya Mahaprabhu is krishna-varna in this sense because He is nondifferent from Lord Shri Krishna. Varna also means “letter” or “word,” and thus krishna-varnam also indicates one whose name has the word Krishna in it—in this case Shri Krishna Chaitanya.

Other meanings of varna are “fame,” “form,” “outward appearance,” “quality,” and “ritual.” One may apply all these meanings to the phrase krishna-varnam and thus understand it to indicate Shri Krishna Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. For example, krishna-varnam may indicate one whose fame is like Krishna’s or whose form is like Krishna’s.

In Sarva-samvadini, a supplementary commentary to Shri Shat-sandarbha by Shrila Jiva Gosvami himself, he explains that Lord Chaitanya is referred to as krishna-varna because people were reminded of Lord Shri Krishna just by seeing Him. Another reason is that although Shri Chaitanya displayed a golden complexion to the common man, to His intimate associates He sometimes appeared blackish. [DDB3] Finally, krishna-varna also means one who is blackish like Krishna, but in the case of Lord Chaitanya krishna-varna must refer to His inner complexion. This Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains in the next Text.

The compound word tvishakrishnam may be broken as tvisha akrishnam, giving the meaning “whose bodily hue is not blackish.” In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.13), Garga Muni tells Nanda Maharaja:

asan varnas trayo hy asya grihnato ‘nu-yugam tanuh
shuklo raktas tatha pita idanim krishnatam gatah

“Your son Krishna appears as an incarnation in every millennium. In the past He assumed three different colors—white, red,[DDB4] and yellow—and now He has appeared in a blackish color.”

According to Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the Supreme Personality of Godhead had a white complexion when He appeared in Satya-yuga, a reddish one in Treta-yuga, and a blackish one in Dvapara-yuga. So by the process of elimination the word akrishnam, “non-blackish,” must indicate the incarnation with a yellow complexion—that is, the golden avatara, Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. Garga Muni’s mention of His yellow color “in previous yugas” may refer either to Lord Chaitanya’s previous appearances or to His future appearances, but Garga Muni uses the past tense because he is mentioning the yellow incarnation along with other incarnations who had appeared in the past. The usage is similar to what a person might say if he saw a householder and fifteen brahmacaris walking on the road: “The brahmacaris are coming.” Yet another consideration is that Gargacarya may have used the past tense to hide Krishna's future incarnation as Lord Chaitanya. Garga's purpose would have been to avoid confusing Nanda Maharaja and to play along with the Lord's plan to appear in Kali-yuga as the channa-avatara, or hidden incarnation. This last reason is why the Vedic scriptures only indirectly refer to Lord Chaitanya's incarnation.

In the Bhagavad-gita (7.25) Lord Krishna says, naham prakashah sarvasya yoga-maya-samavritah: "Because the veil of Yogamaya covers Me, I am not manifest to everyone as I am." This declaration specifically applies to the Lord's appearance in Kali-yuga as Shri Krishna Chaitanya. Prahlada Maharaja also refers to Lord Chaitanya when he says in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.9.38), channah kalau yad abhavas tri-yugo 'tha sa tvam: "O Lord, Your incarnation in Kali-yuga is hidden, or confidential, and therefore you are called Tri-yuga, one who incarnates in three yugas [namely Satya, Treta, and Dvapara]." Here the word channa ("covered") also signifies that Lord Chaitanya is Lord Krishna covered by the mood and complexion of Shri Radhika. The Naradiya Purana (5.47) also foretells the Lord's appearance as a devotee:

bhagavad-bhakta-rupena lokan rakshami sarvada*

"The Lord said: 'Concealing My real identity, O vipra [Markandeya Rishi], I appear in Kali-yuga in the garb of a devotee and always protect My devotees.'"

Tvishakrishnam may also be broken up as tvisha krishnam, meaning "one whose complexion is blackish." Although Lord Chaitanya's complexion was golden, He is Lord Krishna Himself, and thus the words tvisha krishnam indicate His original form as Lord Krishna, which He revealed only to certain devotees, such as Sarvabhauma Bhattacharya.

Sangopangastra-parshadam means "with His limbs, ornaments, weapons, and associates." According to Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana, Lord Chaitanya's limbs are Lord Nityananda Prabhu and Advaita Acarya, His ornaments are Shrivasa Thakura, Shrila Haridasa Thakura, and others, His weapons are the holy names, which dispel ignorance, and His associates are Gadadhara, Govinda, and the many other devotees who stayed with Him in Jagannatha Puri.

Sangopangastra-parshadam may also refer to Lord Chaitanya's form as Shri Krishna, which He showed to His intimate devotees. This form has beautiful limbs decorated with ornaments (such as the Kaustubha gem), which act like weapons by attracting one's mind toward Lord Krishna and thus killing one's demoniac mentality. The Lord's ornaments are also associates of His, since they are living persons and are His devotees.

The words yajnaih sankirtana-prayair yajanti hi su-medhasah convey the following meaning: The Vedas recommend many processes for worshiping the Supreme Lord, but in Kali-yuga the wise worship Him by chanting His holy names congregationally. Lord Chaitanya inaugurated this process and is thus called the father of the sankirtana movement.

Su-medhasah means "people of fine intelligence." The implication is that less intelligent people will worship the Lord in other ways and that outright fools will oppose the sankirtana movement. Sankirtana is very dear to Lord Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. He Himself was always absorbed in performing sankirtana, and He enjoined everyone to participate, declaring it the [DDB5]universal remedy for all the defects of Kali-yuga. Shukadeva Gosvami confirms this in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (12.3.51, 52):

kirtanad eva krishnasya mukta-sangah param vrajet*

krite yad dhyayato vishnum tretayam yajato makhaih

dvapare paricaryayam kalau tad dhari-kirtanat

“My dear king, although Kali-yuga is an ocean of faults, there is still one good quality about this age: Simply by chanting the names of Krishna one can become free from material bondage and be promoted to the transcendental kingdom. Whatever result was obtained in Satya-yuga by meditating on Vishnu, in Treta-yuga by performing sacrifices, and in Dvapara-yuga by serving the Lord’s lotus feet can be obtained in Kali-yuga simply by chanting the Hare Krishna maha-mantra.”

Shrila Jiva Gosvami’s worshipable Deity is Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. Therefore Jiva Gosvami begins his topmost literary achievement by quoting a verse about Shri Chaitanya from Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the supreme scriptural authority for all time. This is a vastu-nirdeshatmaka mangalacarana.

antah krishnam bahir gauram darshitangadi-vaibhavam kalau sankirtanadyaih smah krishna-chaitanyam ashritah

Gopiparanadhana: In this Age of Kali we have taken shelter of Krishna Chaitanya by congregationally chanting the Lord’s holy names and performing other devotional practices. Blackish within but golden without, He exhibits all His opulences, beginning with His bodily features.

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

This original verse by Shri Jiva Gosvami restates the previous text. In the first line he glosses krishna-varnam as meaning antah krishnam, “internally Krishna Himself,”[DDB6] and tvishakrishnam as bahir gauram, “outwardly appearing golden.” Gaura (“Golden One”) and Gauranga (“Golden-limbed One”) are names of Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. He displayed the spiritual opulences proving He is God (darshitangadi-vaibhavam), but not in the usual ways. Unlike such incarnations as Lord Varaha and Lord Nrisimha, He did not kill great demons, and unlike Lord Krishna, He did not exhibit amorous pastimes that violated ordinary morality. Instead, the distinctive opulences of Lord Chaitanya were His all-attractive pure love of Krishna and the unprecedented kindness He showed to His devotees and to the unfortunate, deluded people of this world. Those with clear intelligence can understand that Lord Chaitanya’s activities are far beyond the ability of a mortal being. He was more generous than any previous avatara, including Lord Krishna Himself, who advised in the Bhagavad-gita (18.66):

sarva-dharman parityajya/ mam ekam sharanam vraja

“Abandon all varieties of religion and just surrender unto Me. I shall deliver you from all sinful reactions. Do not fear” Thus Lord Krishna demanded full surrender before He would give His full mercy. When He appeared 4,500 years later as Lord Chaitanya, however, He put aside that demand and freely gave love of God to whoever would hear and chant Krishna’s names according to His instructions.

Devotees who receive the mercy of Lord Chaitanya know directly the power of that mercy, and anyone who takes shelter of such devotees will also begin to experience its influence. Any person in this age who honors

Lord Chaitanya as the Supreme Lord and faithfully follows His simple teachings will become an ideal Vaishnava, with the saintly qualities described in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.25.21–23) by Lord Kapila, the incarnation of the Supreme Lord born in Satya-yuga as the son of Devahuti:

titikshavah karunikah/ suhridah sarva-dehinam ajata-shatravah shantah/ sadhovah sadhu-bhushanah

mayy ananyena bhavena/ bhaktim kurvanti ye dridham mat-krite tyakta-karmanas/ tyakta-svajana-bandhavah

mad-ashrayah katha mrishtah/ shrinvanti kathayanti ca tapanti vividhas tapa/ naitan mad-gata-cetasah

“The symptoms of a sadhu are that he is tolerant, merciful, and friendly to all living entities. He has no enemies, he is peaceful, he abides by the scriptures, and all his characteristics are sublime. Such a sadhu engages in staunch devotional service to the Lord without deviation. For the sake of the Lord he renounces all other connections, such as family relationships and friendly acquaintances within the world. Engaged constantly in chanting and hearing about Me, the Supreme Personality of Godhead,]the sadhus do not suffer from material miseries, for they are always filled with thoughts of My pastimes and activities.”

The special dispensation of Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu—sankirtana, the congregational chanting of the Lord’s holy names—was considered in other ages suitable only for the most advanced spiritualists, not for those who are still inclined toward materialism or impersonalism. But by the mercy of Lord Chaitanya this process is now freely available to all. One who chants the Hare Krishna maha-mantra approaches the Supreme Personality of Godhead in His most intimate relationship with His feminine counterpart, Shrimati Radharani; there are several dangerous offenses that a careless practioner can commit in this mode of worship, any of which will impede the good effects of chanting. Only by Lord Chaitanya’s special order has the Hare Krishna maha-mantra recently been made universally available. Lord Chaitanya has requested every man, woman, and child in the universe to chant Hare Krishna, promising that if we chant under His guidance He will protect us from our offenses.

Although Kali is the most corrupt of ages, Chaitanya Mahaprabhu has made it auspicious:

kaler dosha-nidher rajan/ asti hy eko mahan gunah
kirtanad eva krishnasya/ mukta-sangah param vrajet

“My dear King, although Kali-yuga is an ocean of faults, there is still one good quality about the age: Simply by glorifying Krishna one can become free from material bondage and be promoted to the transcendental kingdom.

dvapare paricaryayam/ kalau tad dhari-kirtanat

“Whatever result was obtained in Satya-yuga by meditating on Vishnu, in Treta-yuga by performing sacrifices, and in Dvapara-yuga by serving the Lord’s lotus feet can be obtained in Kali-yuga simply by chanting the glories of Krishna” (Bhag. 12.3.51–52).

Therefore the most discriminating and fortunate people are eager to participate in Lord Chaitanya’s sankirtana movement. Even residents of higher planets and of the spiritual world, who otherwise do not come near the earth during Kali-yuga, are attracted:

kritadishu praja rajan/ kalav icchanti sambhavam

kalau khalu bhavishyanti/ narayana-parayanah

“My dear King, the inhabitants of Satya-yuga and other ages eagerly desire to take birth in this Age of Kali, since in this age there will be many devotees of the Supreme Lord, Narayana” (Bhag. 11.5.38).

As in His other appearances, when the Supreme Personality of Godhead came to this world as Chaitanya Mahaprabhu He brought with Him many intimate companions from His eternal abode. These parshadas were related to the Lord in various ways, and among the most confidential of these associates were six devotees from Goloka Vrindavana in the conjugal mode of loving service to Krishna (madhurya-rasa), who joined Lord Chaitanya’s pastimes as the Gosvamis of Mathura Vrindavana. The six Gosvamis exemplified the perfection of love of God in separation, living out their lives in extreme renunciation and apparent pain in the absence of Krishna but in fact all the while immersed in the immeasurable bliss of remembering Him in one another’s company.

Lord Chaitanya entrusted them with the tasks of restoring the forgotten sites of Krishna’s pastimes in the area of Vrindavana and of writing books to establish the principles of devotional practice for this age. Jiva Gosvami took his birth as the nephew of Rupa and Sanatana, the leaders of this group. He carried their work forward into the next generation.

Invocation II

Here Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains the meaning of the opening verse. Lord Krishna, whose complexion is blackish, covered Himself with the golden complexion of Shrimati Radharani to appear in Kali-yuga as Krishna Chaitanya. He is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, but His purpose is to show us how to be devotees of the Lord. For this reason it is not readily apparent that He is the Supreme Lord, and so Shrimad-Bhagavatam describes Him as “the hidden incarnation.” Or, alternatively, the words antah krishnam bahir gauram here may be taken to mean not that Lord Chaitanya is blackish within and golden without but that He is Krishna within though outwardly appearing as Gaura, Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. Shrila Jiva Gosvami also indicates here that one can please Lord Krishna Chaitanya by chanting the Hare Krishna maha-mantra.

Darshitangadi-vaibhavam means that Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu manifested His opulence through His limbs and associates. His body was so beautiful that just by seeing Him people would be inspired to surrender to Him. He also manifested His supremacy through Nityananda Prabhu and other associates who preached the chanting of the holy name. This phrase can also mean that Lord Chaitanya manifested the ‘greatness of his associates by engaging them in distributing love of Godhead.

By using the plural form “we” in the phrase “we take shelter of Shri Krishna Chaitanya,” Shrila Jiva Gosvami includes the readers of Shri Shat-sandarbha. He invites them to join him in taking shelter of Lord Chaitanya by participating in the sankirtana movement, the universal process for pleasing the Supreme Lord and attaining deliverance. By using the plural Shri Jiva also implies that Lord Chaitanya’s teachings are not limited to a particular sect or nationality.

So far Shrila Jiva Gosvami has described his worshipable Deity. Next he performs ashir-vadatmakamangalacarana, invoking auspiciousness by declaring the glories of his spiritual masters.

jayatam mathura-bhumau
shrila-rupa-sanatanau
yau vilekhyatas tattvam
jnapakau pustikam imam

Gopiparanadhana prabhu: All glories to Shrila Rupa and Shrila Sanatana in the land of Mathura! Having enlightened me in the true science, they are inspiring me to write this book.

BBT: All glories to Shrila Rupa Gosvami and Shrila Sanatana Gosvami in the land of Mathura! They have engaged me in writing this book to broadcast the essential truth about the Supreme Lord.

Purport by Gopiparandhana prabhu

As Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana discusses in his Tattva-sandarbha commentary, this verse fulfills the second and third purposes of a mangalacarana, namely offering blessings and paying respects. Jiva Gosvami had a blood relationship with Rupa and Sanatana as their nephew, the son of their brother Shri Anupama. But spiritually the relationship between Rupa, Sanatana, and Jiva was more formal: Rupa Gosvami accepted, revered, and obeyed his older brother Sanatana Gosvami as his guru, the prime director of his spiritual life. Shri Jiva, in turn, considered himself a surrendered disciple of Shrila Rupa Gosvami. In this verse, then, the author is honoring his spiritual master and grand-spiritual-master, and by praising them he automatically offers respects to all their predecessors and to Supreme Lord.

The title Shrila means “endowed with the blessings of Shri, the goddess of fortune and consort of Lord Vishnu” For Rupa and Sanatana these blessings took the form of their great knowledge, detachment, and spiritual discipline. Jayatam literally means “may they be victorious” or, in other words, “may they manifest their superexcellence.” Rupa, Sanatana, and later Jiva especially showed their excellence in the land of Mathura, the best place in the universe for practicing pure Krishna consciousness. Their lives became successful when each of them, one after another, overcame difficult obstacles and finally reached Mathura-mandala. In that most sacred of districts they lived sometimes in Vrindavana and sometimes at other sites such as Govardhana and Radha-kunda. They and the other Gosvamis founded temples for the Deities of Krishna who preside over the town of Vrindavana. Shrila Sanatana Gosvami founded the Radha-Madana-mohana temple, Shrila Rupa the Radha-Govindaji temple, and Shrila Jiva the Radha-Damodara temple.

Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana states that the verb jayati (“is victorious”) here expresses excellence beyond that of all other saintly persons, indicating that all Vaishnavas owe respect to Rupa Gosvami and Sanatana Gosvami. In this way the current verse offers blessings to all the devotees of the Lord by reminding them to acknowledge the supremacy of these two transcendental brothers. And because Jiva Gosvami considers himself among the general mass of Vaishnavas, he is hinting in this verse that he also feels obliged to maintain a reverential attitude toward them.

Shri Jiva Gosvami is especially grateful to Rupa and Sanatana for the enlightenment and inspiration in Krishna consciousness he received from them. They revealed the Absolute Truth, tattva, to him. Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana points out that the Vishva-kosha dictionary assigns a few definitions to this word tattva: tattvam vadya-prabhede syat svarupe paramatmani. “Tattva (‘truth’) means a kind of verbal proposition, the essential substance of something, or the Supreme Soul.” In accordance with these meanings of tattva, what Rupa and Sanatana revealed to Jiva was the Supreme Personality of Godhead along with His entire retinue. To Shri Jiva they were jnapakau, imparters of knowledge, but not in the ordinary sense. They gave their student the kind of knowledge received only from teachers who are entirely free from material motivations.

A sentiment of belief in God is the beginning of spiritual progress, but one cannot make substantial advancement without seriously committing oneself to following a living representative of God. A disciple's initiating spiritual master and his instructing spiritual master (or masters) are his direct, personal link with the entire line of previous acaryas, and through them to the Personality of Godhead. A spiritual master must know his disciple's individual spiritual needs so that he can engage the disciple in practical devotional service to Krishna for his purification. The spiritual master establishes the individual mood of devotional service to be followed by the disciple. Thus only when a conditioned soul becomes a Vaishnava's disciple does he establish his link with spiritual reality. The process is not just an institutional formality but an essential step for one who wants to reach God consciousness.

Invocaton III

Here Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains his reason for composing the Shat-sandarbha. He is doing so at the behest of his spiritual masters, Rupa and Sanatana Gosvamis, who are also his uncles. Jiva Gosvami studied under them, and they asked him to compile their teachings into a book for the benefit of all. This request is indicated by the word jnapakau, which literally means "those who like to teach others."

Previously Shrila Rupa and Shrila Sanatana were glorious in Bengal as ministers of Hussein Shah[new7]. Now they are glorious in the land of Mathura, which is itself glorious, being the place of Lord Krishna's pastimes. To be glorious in this land means to have the wealth of krishna-prema, love of Godhead, which is the most rare possession. To show this achievement Jiva Gosvami adds the honorofic "Shrila" before their names. "Shrila" signifies that Rupa and Sanatana Gosvamis are endowed with transcendental knowledge, renunciation, devotional service, and love of God. Shrila Jiva Gosvami prays that through the Shat-sandarbha these two great souls may manifest their opulence and glory for the welfare of others.

According to Sanskrit grammatical rules, the pronoun imam ("this") is used for objects near at hand. Since at this point Jiva Gosvami is in the process of writing the Shat-sandarbha, his mention here of pustikam imam ("this book") may seem a defect. Baladeva Vidyabhushana comments, however, that because the book already exists within the author's mind, his usage is proper.

Gopiparanadhana: A friend of theirs, a Bhatöa scholar from a family of South Indian brahmanas, composed the original edition of this book after studying the writings of venerable Vaishnavas.

BBT: Shri Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami, a friend of Shri Rupa's and Shri Sanatana's born in a South Indian brahmana family, compiled the original version of this book based on the works of venerable Vaishnavas.

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Here Jiva Gosvami gives credit to Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami as the original author of Shri Bhagavata-sandarbha. Gopala Bhaööa first conceived of the project, extensively researched the writings of Vaishnava authorities—Ramanuja, Madhva, Shridhara Svami, and others—and compiled his findings into notes. It was upon these notes that Shri Jiva Gosvami later based the Sandarbhas. Shrila Gopala Bhaööa's exalted place among the six Gosvamis of Vrindavana is so well known that Shri Jiva's poetic understatement in this verse only serves to underscore the depth of his appreciation for his senior.

The title Bhaööa belongs to a certain class of scholarly brahmanas who specialize in prescribing for the public appropriate atonements for sins. That Gopala Bhaööa had such a prestigious birth was certainly not the extent of his glory. His family did come from the Bhaööa subcaste, but much more significantly they were advanced devotees of the Lord whose association Lord Chaitanya Himself enjoyed.

His Divine Grace A.C. Bhaktivedanta Swami Prabhupada has provided information about Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami's life in a purport to Shri Chaitanya-caritamrita (Adi 10.105): "Shri Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami was the son of Venkata Bhaööa, a resident of Shri Rangam. Gopala Bhaööa formerly belonged to the disciplic succession of the Ramanuja-sampradaya but later became part of the Gaudiya-sampradaya. In the year 1433 shakabda (A.D. 1511), when Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu was touring South India, He stayed for four months during the period of Caturmasya at the house of Venkata Bhaööa, who then got the opportunity to serve the Lord to his heart's content. Gopala Bhaööa also got the opportunity to serve the Lord at this time. Shri Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami was later initiated by his uncle, the great sanniyasi Prabodhananda Sarasvati. Both the father and the mother of Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami were extremely fortunate, for they dedicated their entire lives to the service of Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. They allowed Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami to go to Vrindavana, and they gave up their lives thinking of Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. When Lord Chaitanya was later informed that Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami had gone to Vrindavana and met Shri Rupa and Sanatana Gosvami, He was very pleased, and He advised Shri Rupa and Sanatana to accept Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami as their younger brother and take care of him. Shri Sanatana Gosvami, out of his great affection for Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami, compiled the Vaishnava smriti named Hari-bhakti-vilasa and published it under his name. Under the instruction of Shrila Rupa and Sanatana, Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami installed one of the seven principal Deities of Vrindavana, the Radha-ramana Deity. The sevaites (priests) of the Radha-ramana temple belong to the Gaudiya-sampradaya."

The Source of Shri Shaö-sandarbha

Shrila Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami was the son of Venkaöa Bhaööa, the head priest of the temple of Lord Ranganatha at Shri Rangam, where the Shri-vaishnava sect had[DDB8] its headquarters. It was in Venkaöa's home that Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu stayed for the four months of the rainy season during His tour of South India. There He and Venkaöa discussed philosophy, as is known from the Chaitanya-caritamrita, Madhya-lila, chapter nine, and the Bhakti-ratnakara, first wave. At that time Gopala Bhaööa was a young boy, and he learned the intricacies of Gaudiya-vaishnava philosophy directly from Shri Chaitanya. Later he studied the writings of the eminent Vaishnavas of the Shri-sampradaya. On Lord Chaitanya's order Gopala Bhaööa later moved to Vrindavana, where he established the temple of Shri Radha-ramana. He is one of the great authorities on Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu's teachings.

As we shall learn further on, the venerable Vaishnavas Shrila Jiva Gosvami refers to here as sources for Shrila Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami include Shri Ramanujacarya, Shri Madhvacarya, and Shridhara Svami. Shrila Gopala

Bhaöä Gosvami culled the essence from the works of these previous acaryas and Vaishnava scholars and then composed a book explaining the essential truths about Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. That book is the basis for the present work. In this way Jiva Gosvami hints at the authenticity of his work, for by basing it on Shrila Gopala Bhaöä Gosvami's book he implies that the work is authoritative, free of concocted ideas.

Gopiparanadhana: That first edition of this work was a rough draft, with some parts in topical order and others not, and with some parts only suggestive fragments. So I, an insignificant Jiva, have carefully gone over the manuscript and rewritten it more systematically.

BBT: Some parts of this first book by Gopala Bhaöä Gosvami were in correct sequence, and some were not. Some parts were incomplete or lost. Now, after careful study, Jiva is rewriting this book in the proper sequence.

Purport by Gopiparandhana prabhu

Since no copies of Shrila Gopala Bhaöä's original notes are known to exist, we cannot say just what in the Sandarbhas Shrila Jiva Gosvami borrowed from him. But judging from this verse and from the coherence and sheer volume of the Sandarbhas in their present form, we can conclude that the material and its organization must be largely Shri Jiva Gosvami's own. Here Jiva humbly credits Shrila Gopala Bhaöä for doing the important part of the work, just as Shrila Sanatana Gosvami credited him for Shri Hari-bhakti-vilasa.

In any case, novelty was not considered much of a virtue in India's brahminical tradition of philosophy. Much more valued was loyalty to one's own school of thought. A theoretician's task in traditional India was not to invent new schemes of ideas. Rather, each philosophical author started with what the original founder of his school had taught and what generations of commentators had added in elaboration; he then tried to elucidate once more the same ideas without contradicting them, adapting them to the language, level of culture, and special concerns of the current generation. He would also deal with issues raised by contemporary opponents.

Thus faithfulness to one's school of philosophy was the ideal, although in some schools—for example Nyaya epistemology—writers expressed only token respect for their predecessors' opinions, especially in later centuries. But among the Vedantists, adherence to the opinions of previous acaryas is not merely a matter of intellectual integrity but is an essential spiritual principle. Vaishnava Vedantists do not try to discover reality on their own strength, individual or collective, but depend on revealed knowledge recorded in standard scriptures (shastra) and received through ancient lines of disciplic succession (guru-parampara).

Homage to Shri Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami

The following question may arise: If Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami had already composed a work on this subject, why should Rupa and Sanatana have engaged Jiva Gosvami in compiling a similar work? Jiva Gosvami replies in this verse: His mission is to complete the task that Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami began and to set the material in proper order. In the previous two verses Jiva Gosvami has already established that his work is not a product of his imagination but is based on the authority of the scriptures and previous acaryas.

By using the word jivaka, Jiva Gosvami makes a pun on his name. Jivaka means “a petty soul,” or else it can be taken as the name of the author. Out of humility the author refers to himself here in the third person. The suffix kan is used in this context in a diminutive sense, to indicate that a humble soul is writing.

As jivanugas, or followers of Shrila Jiva Gosvami, we may prefer to interpret jivaka in other ways. We may, for example, apply the definition jivan kapayati bhagavatārtha-pradanānēti jivakah: “One who makes the living beings emit ecstatic sounds by supplying them with the esoteric meaning of Shrimad-Bhagavatam [through his Bhagavata-sandarbhā] is jivaka.” Or, alternatively, jiva-svarūpa-sambandhabhidheya-prayojanān kāyati varṇayati jivakah: “One who explains the nature of the jiva, his relation with the Lord, the process by which he can achieve the ultimate goal of life, and also that ultimate goal—such a person is jivaka.” Or, jivayati jivan kṛṣṇa-prema-pradanēti jivo, jiva eva jivaka iti svarthe kan: “One who infuses life into living beings by giving them love of Krishna is [DDB10]jiva or, equivalently, jivaka.” Finally, the word jivaka may also be formed by applying to the root jiv the suffix -aka in the sense of “blessing.” In this case jivaka means “the person who confers blessings on the living entities.”

Purport by Gopiparanādhana prabhu

Shri Jiva Gosvami does not intend his Bhagavata-sandarbhā to be polemical. Rather, his purpose is to explain Shrimad-Bhagavatam, a scripture that must be trusted to be correctly understood. Only in a few places will he confront opposing opinions, such as in his discussion of Shankara’s Advaita-vāda later in Shri Tattva-sandarbhā. Therefore here he plainly advises those who want to argue over differing opinions that this is not the right book for them. Best if they stop right here. If such critical speculators proceed, when they reject the opinions of saintly authorities like Shridhara Svami and Dvaipayana Vyasa, they will create unfortunate karmic reactions for themselves, or at least they will certainly fail to understand the Bhagavatam's transcendental message.

Shri Jiva's cursing some of his readers is not as cruel or fanatic as it may seem, because he is in fact sincerely concerned for their spiritual development. A pure Vaishnava advances everyone's welfare by everything he does, even his condemnation of offenders. The Dharma-shastras state that a criminal who is punished by the government escapes much of the sinful reaction he would otherwise have to suffer in future lives. Similarly, an offender benefits from a compassionate Vaishnava's curse. The Tenth Chapter of Shrimad-Bhagavatam's Tenth Canto tells how when the two demigods Nalakuvara and Manigriva appeared naked in front of Narada Muni, he cursed them to take birth on earth as two trees in the yard of Nanda Maharaja in Vraja. This curse proved to be the cause of their perfection, for after some years baby Krishna Himself uprooted them and granted them liberation from material life.

Practicing Vaishnavas, however, should not indulge in the brahminical prerogative of casting curses as long as they themselves have not yet become truly humble. A devotee of the Lord should see no one as his enemy, what to speak of trying to harm someone out of vengefulness. Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu taught a devotional attitude of complete tolerance and simplicity:

trinad api su-nicena/ taror iva sahishnuna
amanina mana-dena/ kirtaniyah sada harih

"One who thinks himself lower than the grass, who is more tolerant than a tree, and who does not expect personal honor but is always prepared to give all respect to others can very easily always chant the holy name of the Lord." (Shishkashöaka 3).

Well-intentioned non-Vaishnava readers may very well ask what they are supposed to do now, having been categorized as offenders and told not to continue reading. They may also question why this translation of the Sandarbhas is even being published and made generally available. The simplest answer to the second question is that our spiritual master, Shrila Prabhupada, asked for it. Shrila Prabhupada received instructions from his spiritual master, Shrila Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati Thakura, that publishing the great works of standard Vaishnava acaryas is the most effective way to increase God consciousness in this confused age. Nowadays the world is filled with lavishly funded propaganda for the purchase and consumption of material things, in the face of which only the most vigorous counter-advertisement for things of spiritual value will even be noticed. When Lord Chaitanya was present on this planet, He organized His followers to perform sankirtana publicly, singing and dancing in glorification of God on the city streets. But five hundred years later, unfortunately, many people are unaware of the sacred history of sankirtana and view the devotees' street chanting as foolish. As Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati Thakura told Shrila Prabhupada, a kirtana party playing karatalas and mridanga drums on a street corner may be heard for one or two blocks, but the printing press is "the big mridanga"; it can be heard all over the world.

Therefore Shrila Prabhupada wanted his disciples to make publishing and distributing Krishna conscious literature their first priority, even at the risk of sometimes committing the offense of "preaching the glories of the Lord to the faithless." At the end of the Bhagavad-gita (18.67), Krishna told Arjuna:

idam te natapaskaya/ nabhaktaya kadacana
na ca shushrushave vacyam/ na ca mam abhyasuyati

"This confidential knowledge should not be explained to those who are not austere, or devoted, or engaged in devotional service, nor to one who is envious of Me." Despite this direct injunction from Lord Krishna Himself, Shrila Prabhupada chose to present Bhagavad-gita As It Is, aiming at the most general possible audience, and he had his disciples print and sell millions of copies in English and dozens of other languages. In this regard Shrila Prabhupada commented that the Vaishnava acaryas, representatives of the Supreme Lord, sometimes show even more mercy than the Lord Himself: "The Lord explicitly forbade the Gita's being spoken to those who are envious of the Lord. In other words, the Bhagavad-gita is for the devotees only. But it so happens that sometimes a devotee of the Lord will hold open class, and in that class not all the students are expected to be devotees. Why do such persons hold open class? It is explained here that although everyone is not a devotee, still there are many men who are not envious of Krishna. . . . Simply by hearing the Bhagavad-gita, even a person who does not try to be a pure devotee attains the result of righteous activities" (Bhagavad-gita As It Is, purport to 18.71).

So we humbly suggest to our readers who do not consider themselves Vaishnavas, please approach this book with respect for Shrila Jiva Gosvami and the authorities he cites. Let the book speak for itself. Carefully study Shrila Jiva's arguments and you will find that they are very reasonable, consistent, and illuminating.

Qualifications of the Reader

Here Shrila Jiva Gosvami defines the adhikari, the person qualified to read Shri Shaö-sandarbha. Shri Jiva is writing only for those whose sole desire is to serve Lord Krishna. He bars all others from reading this work. What prompts him to do so is not fear that critics will find defects in his work; since he is working under the order and supervision of learned Vaishnavas, namely Rupa Gosvami and Sanatana Gosvami, and since all his statements will be based on scripture, there is no question of defects. Rather, it is out of compassion that Jiva Gosvami says that the Shaö-sandarbha "may be studied only by one whose sole desire is to serve the lotus feet of Lord Shri Krishna." His intention is to prohibit those who have no desire to engage in devotional service from reading his book. In the Shaö-sandarbha he intends to establish the glories of the Supreme Personality of Godhead with great logic and force and with scriptural reference. Such a book will displease those who have no desire to be devoted to the Supreme Lord, since they cannot tolerate His glorification. If such persons happen to read this book, they may become offensive toward the Lord and His devotees and thus bring hellish miseries upon themselves. For their benefit, therefore, Shri Jiva pens this statement forbidding them to read Shri Shaö-sandarbha.

In the Bhagavad-gita (18.67), Lord Krishna imposes[DDB11] a similar restriction on Arjuna:

idam te natapaskaya nabhaktaya kadacana
na cashushrushave vacyam na ca mam yo 'bhyasuyati

"This confidential knowledge may never be explained to those who are not austere, or devoted, or engaged in devotional service, nor to one who is envious of Me."

In this Text the word eka ("only") significantly means that even among those desiring to render service to Lord Krishna, none should harbor personal ambition in his heart and misuse Shri Shaö-sandarbha for gaining profit, adoration, and distinction.

Finally, here Shrila Jiva Gosvami indicates indirectly that in Shri Shaö-sandarbha he will establish service to Lord Krishna as the supreme goal of life.

BBT: After offering obeisances to my initiating spiritual master and to those spiritual masters who taught me the meaning of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, I wish to write this book called Shri Bhagavata-sandarbha.

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

There is ancient precedent in the rituals of Vedic sacrifice for declaring one's sankalpa or solemn intent to carry out some sacred work. A brahmana who has uttered the sankalpa at the beginning of a fire sacrifice is obliged to maintain his adherence to truth by finishing the sacrifice at any cost. In the complex soma sacrifices, the yajamana—the person for whom the sacrifice is being performed—chants the sankalpa-mantras and accepts a danda (wooden rod) symbolic of his vow and a deer-skin on which he must sit throughout the ritual performances to remain purified.

The infrequently used word sandarbha, which appears in the title of the Bhagavata-sandarbha and also again in this verse separately as a descriptive term, has been defined as follows (anonymously):

nanartha-vatvam vedyatvam/ sandarbhah kathyate budhaih

"The wise call a composition sandarbha when it elucidates a deep subject matter, focuses directly on essentials, is excellently composed, conveys various complex ideas and is readily understandable." In a more general sense sandarbha can also mean simply "a written work." It is likely that no other author has used the word in the title of a book.

Purport by BBT Translators

After showing reverence to his teachers, Shrila Jiva Gosvami names his book in this verse. He calls it Shri Bhagavata-sandarbha because in it he will explain the essential meanings of the Bhagavata Purana (Shrimad-Bhagavatam). To explain the term sandarbha, in his commentary on this Text Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana quotes a well-known verse of unknown origin:

nanartha-vatvam vedyatvam sandarbhah kathyate budhaih

"A literary work that explains the confidential aspects of a subject, incorporates its essence, explains the superiority of the subject, gives its various meanings, and is worth learning is called a sandarbha by learned scholars."

The Bhagavata-sandarbha is also called the Shaö-sandarbha because it contains six books, the Tattva-, Bhagavat-, Paramatma-, Krishna-, Bhakti-, and Priti-sandarbha. Each sandarbha is an analysis of the subject stated in its title, and each is based on Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Shrila Jiva Gosvami also wrote a verse-by-verse commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam called the Krama-sandarbha, and this is sometimes referred to as the seventh sandarbha.

Both Vaishnavas and others have written many essays and treatises on Shrimad-Bhagavatam, but among them all these six works stand as the most exhaustive exposition of the Bhagavata philosophy. His Divine Grace A. C. Bhaktivedanta Swami Prabhupada joined all the other acaryas coming in succession after Shrila Jiva Gosvami in praising him as the greatest Vaishnava philosopher of all time. Shrila Prabhupada called Shri Shaö-sandarbha “the last word on the teachings of Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu.” Thus it is clear that Shrila Jiva Gosvami is perfectly justified in giving the title sandarbha to his work.

In the next Text, while giving blessings to his readers, Jiva Gosvami indirectly explains the subject matter of the Shaö-sandarbha, the process presented in the book by which one can attain the goal, and the goal itself.

Gopiparanadhana: Lord Krishna’s abstract feature of pure spiritual existence often goes by the name Brahman in the texts of the Vedas. His partial expansion as the Lord of creation regulates the material nature (Maya) and exerts His control through further personal expansions. A single manifestation of His personality, called Narayana, rules sovereign in the transcendental sky beyond this universe. May that same Shri Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, be pleased to grant pure love for Himself to those who worship His lotus feet in this world.

BBT: The feature of Lord Krishna as pure consciousness, without any manifest characteristics, is called Brahman in some portions of the Vedas. In another feature He expands as the Purusha, who controls the external potency, Maya, by His many plenary portions. In yet another of His principal forms He is present as Narayana in the spiritual sky, Vaikunöha. May that Lord Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, bestow love for Himself on those who worship His lotus feet in this world.

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

With this verse Shrila Jiva Gosvami concludes his mangalacarana. Here he praises Lord Krishna, wishes the blessing of love of God on His devotees, and also leads directly into the main discussion of Shri Bhagavata-sandarbha, since the revelation of Krishna and His expansions and energies constitutes the whole substance of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Throughout the Sandarbhas, especially in Shri Krishna-sandarbha, Shrila Jiva will elaborate in great detail upon everything he mentions in this verse.

This verse mentions three different manifestations of the Absolute Truth realized by various seekers and identifies all three as expansions of the original Godhead, Shri Krishna. Some understand the Absolute Truth abstracted from His personality, as the perfect source of all existence, one without a second. The Upanishads teach this view, which appeals to philosophers who prefer that the truth remain impersonal. Others conceive the same Supreme as nothing more than the creator of this world, for they cannot imagine that God has more important business of His own. Still others strive to know the Supreme in His form as Narayana (Vishnu), Lord of the infinite spiritual world and object of worship for devotees awestruck by His supremacy. Ultimately, however, the Absolute Truth is Shri Krishna, the Supreme Person, who shares intimate exchanges with the best of His devotees, placing Himself in positions equal to and even subordinate to theirs. Only those who have taken shelter of the Absolute Truth in this original, most confidential form can experience pure love of God. Technically, one may also call love of God in official reverence purely, but it is not of the same transcendental order of perfection as that experienced by Shri Krishna's associates. Fear of God as the creator and judge of this world is only peripherally spiritual, and when the Lord's personality has been relativized and His essence reduced to something nameless and formless, one can no longer have any real relationship with Him at all.

When one perceives the Absolute Truth vaguely, having failed to approach Him with devotion so that He reveals His distinctive personal qualities, one identifies Him impersonally as the perfect existence of pure consciousness. As mentioned above, this level of realization is taught in the Upanishads, the special portions of the Vedas that comprise their philosophical culmination (Vedanta). In the Upanishads we find such statements as satyam jnanam anantam brahma ("The Absolute Truth is real existence and consciousness, unlimited"; Taittiriya Up. 2.1) and astity evopaladhavyah ("It can only be known to the extent of saying 'It exists'"; Kaöha Up. 6.13). In this way the Vedas provide an impersonal understanding of the Supreme. But those who are empowered with the vision of pure devotion can also perceive the personality of the Supreme in these Upanishadic statements. In fact, the Upanishads specify many qualities of the Absolute Truth that it should not have if it were purely impersonal. For example, the Taittiriya Upanishad follows its statement that "Brahman is real existence and consciousness, unlimited" with a detailed description of Brahman as ananda-maya, "ecstatic," and as rasa, "the taste of personal reciprocations": raso vai sah, rasam hy ayam labdhvanandi bhavati ("He is the reservoir of pleasure; one who realizes Him as rasa also becomes ecstatic," Taittiriya Up. 2.7).

God as the creator of this world is called the Purusha or Puman. He is an expanded form of Krishna named Karanodakashayi Vishnu, the Personality of Godhead sleeping in the spiritual Causal Ocean. He is the Lord of Maya, material nature, and exerts His absolute control over her simply by glancing at her once, agitating her equilibrium by injecting the countless conditioned living entities into the millions of egglike material universes that have emanated from the pores of His own body. Into each of these universal eggs Lord Vishnu enters as His further expansion, Garbhodakashayi Vishnu, who lies down in the water that fills the bottom half of the universal shell and directs the subsequent evolution of creation. Through the Garbhodakashayi Vishnu in each universe appear the Personality of Godhead's various pastime incarnations—Lord Matsya, Lord Varaha, and many others. The activities of Karanodakashayi Vishnu and His expansions constitutes the meaning of the phrase amshakaih svair vibhavati vashayann eva mayam: "[He] regulates the material nature (Maya) and exerts His control through further personal expansions."

Lord Narayana is the expansion of Krishna who in the infinite realm of Vaikunöha rules with inconceivable splendor (vilasati). He is technically called a vilasa expansion of the original Godhead because, although He is in essence fully God, He displays not quite all of Krishna's attributes. Shri Jiva Gosvami hints at this vilasa status by using the verb vilasati here. Vaikunöha lies beyond the boundaries of material creation; it is the transcendental sky, the perfect, eternal world inhabited by the Supreme Lord, His consorts, and His surrendered servants. All the residents of Vaikunöha—both those who never fall to this world and those who have recovered their spiritual status—enjoy the Lord's mercy in the form of opulence equal to His and full facility to serve Him in personal, loving relationships.

God is one. In His original and fullest manifestation He is Krishna, the cowherd boy of Vrindavana, and to increase His own pleasure He expands Himself unlimitedly and still remains the same Supreme Person. This original Godhead Shrimad-Bhagavatam designates svayam bhagavan:

ete camsha-kalah pumsah krishnas tu bhagavan svayam

"All the above-mentioned incarnations are either plenary portions or portions of the plenary portions of the Lord, but Lord Shri Krishna is the original Personality of Godhead” (Bhag. 1.3.28). As Shрила Jiva Gosvami will show us in the course of Shri Bhagavata-sandarbha, Shrimad-Bhagavatam recommends with great emphasis, repeatedly and unequivocally, that all success in human life is achieved by attaining pure Krishna consciousness, which is best cultivated through the easy process of hearing and chanting Krishna’s glories. Because the practice of Krishna consciousness pleases the Supreme Lord, He gradually frees His devotees from material entanglement and awakens in their hearts their dormant love for Him.

The Essence of Shri Shaö-sandarbha

Although one without a second, Lord Shri Krishna has limitless expansions. His feature that manifests as dazzling effulgence, without form, qualities, or opulences, is called Brahman in some sections of the Vedas. Some transcendentalists worship this undivided, formless aspect of the Absolute, considering it the ultimate reality. For such persons the Absolute Truth, Lord Krishna, appears as impersonal Brahman. This feature of the Lord is described in the Taittiriya Upanishad (2.1.1): satyam jnanam anantam brahma. “Brahman is eternal, conscious, and unlimited.”

Another aspect of Lord Krishna is His controlling feature called the Purusha. There are three such Purusha expansions. The first is Karanodakashayi Vishnu, who lies in the Causal Ocean and is the Supersoul of the entire material creation. The Lord has only one Karanodakashayi Vishnu expansion, also called Maha-Vishnu. He activates the material energy with His glance. The second Purusha is Garbhodakashayi Vishnu, the Supersoul expansion within each of the innumerable universes. He is the source of the various lila-avatars, the Supreme Lord’s pastime incarnations, who appear in the various universes. The Supreme Lord delegates the responsibility for creating each universe to one of the innumerable Brahmas, each of whom is born from the lotus flower growing from Garbhodakashayi Vishnu’s lotus navel. The third Purusha is Kshirodakashayi Vishnu, who expands as the Supersoul in all life forms, and indeed in every atom.[DDB12]

These three Purushavatars are also called Sankarshana, Pradyumna, and Aniruddha, respectively. Krishna controls the material nature through the agency of His Purusha incarnations. A summary description of these three Purusha manifestations is given in the Satvata-tantra (cited by Rupa Gosvami in his Laghu-bhagavatamrita 1.25):

vishnos tu trini rupani purushakhyany atho viduh
ekam tu mahatah srashöri dvitiyam tv anda-samsthitam tritiyam sarva-bhuta-stham tani jnatva vimucyate

“Lord Vishnu has three forms called Purushas. The first is Maha-Vishnu, who is the creator of the total material energy [mahat], the second is Garbhodakashayi Vishnu, who is situated within each universe, and the third is Kshirodakashayi, who lives in the heart of every living being. He who knows these three becomes liberated from the clutches of Maya.”

Beyond the material creation is the spiritual sky (para-vyoma), which contains the various spiritual planets, called Vaikunöhas. The chief Deity in the spiritual sky is Lord Narayana, a vilasa expansion of Lord Shri Krishna. The Laghu-bhagavatamrita (1.15) defines a vilasa form as follows:

svarupam anyakaram yat tasya bhati vilasatah
prayenatma-samam shaktya sa vilaso nigadyate

Lord Krishna in His two-handed form is svayam bhagavan, the original Personality of Godhead. This svayam-rupa is described in the Laghu-bhagavatamrita (1.12): ananyapekshi yad rupam svayam-rupah sa ucyate. “That form of the Supreme Lord which is not a dependent expansion of some other form is called svayam-rupa, a ‘self-sufficient form.’” The Lord’s svayam-rupa is grounded in itself and is the basis of all other forms. It is completely independent, second to no other form. In Shri Krishna-sandarbha Shrila Jiva Gosvami will explain all this in greater detail. Here he briefly describes the essence of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, giving us a seed that he will cultivate until it gradually grows into the tree of Shri Bhagavata-sandarbha.

Words have an integral relationship with their meaning, or reference, and in Sanskrit linguistics this relationship is called vacya-vacaka-sambandha. Similarly, a book has an integral relationship with its subject through the meanings of the words that constitute it. In the present Text the phrase sa krishnah indicates that svayam bhagavan, Lord Shri Krishna, is the subject (vishaya) of the Shaö-sandarbha. By this phrase Shrila Jiva Gosvami establishes the vacya-vacaka-sambandha between his book and the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Shri Krishna.

The process (abhidheya) for realizing Lord Shri Krishna is devotional service to His lotus feet, a fact indicated by the words tat-pada-bhajam. The purpose (prayojana) of this process is to attain love of Godhead, indicated by the word prema. In this way Shrila Jiva Gosvami here alludes to the four introductory topics mentioned in Text 1: the subject of the book, the book’s relationship with the subject, the process of achieving the final purpose, and the final purpose itself. In the next Text he explicitly states these four and explains the means of acquiring valid knowledge about them.

Translation

Gopiparanadhana: The previous verse has alluded to a few topics: Shri Krishna; sambandha, or the relation between Shri Krishna and the words that describe Him; abhidheya, what is enjoined to be done, or in other words the recommended practice of worshipping Him; and prayojana, the final goal, which is love for Him.

Before we can elucidate these topics we must first settle the question of pramana; i.e., we must determine a reliable means of ascertaining facts. To start with, an ordinary person’s means of knowing—sensory perception and so on—are imperfect: they are tainted by his four defects, beginning with incorrect judgment, and moreover they are simply inadequate for establishing contact with a reality whose nature is supramundane and inconceivable.

BBT: Four topics were suggested in the previous Text: Shri Krishna as the subject (vishaya), the connection between Him and the words describing Him (sambandha), service to Him as the recommended process to be performed (abhidheya or vidheya), and pure love for Him as the final purpose (prayojana).

Now, to understand these topics we should first determine the means of acquiring valid knowledge. Human beings are bound to have four defects: They are subject to delusion, make mistakes, tend to cheat, and have imperfect senses. Thus their direct perception, inference, and so forth are deficient, especially since these means of knowing cannot help them gain access to the inconceivable spiritual reality.

After invoking auspiciousness in his mangalacarana, the author of a work of philosophy in the brahminical tradition is next expected to justify his book by stating how it fulfills the anubandha-catushöaya, or “four prerequisites.” These requirements are often said to comprise vishaya, sambandha, adhidheya, and prayojana: The author should establish his vishaya, “subject matter,” showing that the book he is writing has a specific, well-defined topic. He should show the sambandha, or “connection” between the topic (vacya, what needs to be described in words) and his book (vacaka, the words that fulfill this need), convincing the readers that his presentation is going to be relevant to the stated subject and adequately explain it. He should also indicate the adhidheya, the practical method he will provide so that his readers can [DDB13]realize the subject, and the prayojana, the higher purpose to be achieved by this realization.

Systematic thought in India is called darshana (“vision”), a word with different connotations than the Greek term philosophia (“love of knowledge”). Indian philosophy is generally intended not for amateurs but for those who are serious about achieving their own full potential in life. In other words, one who practices philosophy should aim at some form of substantial self-realization. Therefore a serious work in any school of darshana should not only theoretically describe its topic but also relate it to the readers’ self-realization under the headings of abhidheya and prayojana. This requirement implies that an author claiming to be an authority on darshana should be fully realized himself, at least within the scope of his topic. Since he is responsible for teaching his readers the effective means by which they can achieve a definite goal, he will be regarded as unreliable if he is only speculating about his subject.

In this first prose anuccheda (“section”) of Shri Bhagavata-sandarbha, Shrila Jiva Gosvami points out that the preceding verse has already stated the anubandha-catushöaya. Shri Krishna is the subject of the Bhagavatam and of the Sandarbhas. The Bhagavatam is fully competent to describe Krishna—His personality and expanded energies—and the Sandarbhas will be an exposition of the Bhagavatam by an experienced and authorized representative of a Bhagavata school whose eminent members include Madhva Muni and Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu. Shrila Jiva’s words in the preceding verse, sa krishnah and bhagavan iha svayam (“that same Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead”), concisely express that Krishna as He is portrayed in Shrimad-Bhagavatam is Himself the Absolute Truth in all its aspects, personal and impersonal, complete and partial. In the same final line of the verse, the phrase tat-pada-bhajam (“for those who worship His lotus feet”) describes in essence the recommended means for realizing Shri Krishna, i.e., the standard method of bhakti-yoga, devotional service, which begins with hearing and chanting about Him. The word prema identifies the final goal achieved by bhakti-yoga, namely transcendental love for Krishna, in which a devotee enjoys his own personal relationship with the Lord forever.

The overall plan of the Sandarbhas is as follows: The first sandarbha, Shri Tattva-sandarbha, will prove the sambandha; this is Shrila Jiva Gosvami’s thesis that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the most appropriate source of useful knowledge in Kali-yuga and that it thoroughly describes Lord Krishna. The Bhagavata-, Paramatma-, Krishna- and Bhakti-sandarbhas will explain the methods of devotional thought and activity on the basis of statements from Shrimad-Bhagavatam. and the Priti-sandarbha will discuss pure love of God according to the Bhagavatam.

But, as Shrila Jiva Gosvami says here, “before we can elucidate these topics we will first have to settle the question of pramana.” We need to ascertain how, in general, human beings can arrive at a correct understanding of things. Pramana, as defined in the epistemology of the Nyaya darshana, means prama-karana, “an instrumental cause of true knowledge” (Nyaya-bhasha 5). “True knowledge” (prama) is further defined as yatharthanubhava, “perception that agrees with the facts” (Nyaya-bhasha 7). (Nyaya authors have also given analytic definitions for “instrumental cause,” “perception” and several other connected terms, but we need not deal with these here.) The Nyaya theory of pramana is accepted by Vaishnava acaryas with some modifications, but it is not the only version; each school of thought in India has its own conception of prama and pramana—what true knowledge is, to what extent it can be achieved, and how. Buddhist logicians, for example, do not like to define true knowledge as a correspondence to real things because they deny that any “things”, that any reality extends in time and space beyond the raw phenomena of each separate moment. Buddhists instead define truth in terms of consistency and of capacity to inspire purposeful activity: avisamvadakam jnanam samyag jnanam (“True knowledge is knowledge which does not create contradiction”; Nyaya-bindu 1).

Vedic philosophers also differ concerning what the valid pramanas are. In the Sarva-samvadini Shri Jiva Gosvami mentions ten different pramanas accepted by various philosophic schools. Shri Jiva states, in agreement with other Vaishnavas and Vedantists, that only the first three of these are primary, the other seven being derivative applications of them. The most basic pramana is sensory perception (pratyaksha). When one of our senses contacts its object and our mind chooses to give the received sensation attention, knowledge has been created. Within its natural limits this knowledge should be considered valid, as long as the senses and mind are functioning properly. Since all the other pramanas start from pratyaksha and extend it, they depend on its validity. One who insists on always distrusting the evidence of his senses will have no basis for participating in philosophy or, for that matter, in any meaningful aspect of life.

The second major pramana is logical inference (anumana), the instrument of knowing that recognizes an unperceived fact on the basis of the its being known to accompany another fact that is perceived. The Nyaya school often gives the following classic example:

1. There is fire on the mountain.
2. The reason is that there is smoke.
3. Wherever there is smoke there is fire, as in a kitchen.
4. Indeed, on the mountain there is smoke.
5. Therefore there is fire on the mountain.

This example uses the five-step style of syllogism preferred by the Nyaya logicians: First, the claim to be proven is stated (pratijna). Second, the observed fact that will prove it (hetu) is stated. Third, the general premise (vyapti) is stated—that what is to be proven is a fact whenever the hetu occurs, and at least one instance of this combination is cited (udaharana). Citing an instance (“as in a kitchen”) roots the argument in concrete reality and makes it difficult to introduce absurd arguments. (Without this provision, “formal” logic as practiced by Western philosophers and the Buddhists has to recognize as valid arguments like “All flowers in the sky are pink,” because formally “A implies B” is false only in the case that A is true and B false; “A is a flower in the sky” is always false, so the inference is always true.) Fourth, the reason is confirmed to be present in the specific situation under consideration (upanayana). Finally, the conclusion is drawn that in situation under consideration what was to be proven is true (nigamana). An inference is considered valid when none of its constituents is defective, but outside of pure mathematics and trivial arguments there is always an element of uncertainty about the vyapti, in this case the general premise that “wherever there is smoke there is fire.” Such a premise is necessarily based on induction—the accumulation of enough experience in kitchens and other places to allow one to believe that whenever there is smoke there is fire—and this kind of reasoning is never completely certain. Modern science suffers from this same unavoidable weakness.

It is theoretically possible to create a philosophy that accepts the validity only of pratyaksha-pramana, sense perception. The version of materialism ascribed to Carvaka Muni was one attempt to do this. Carvaka is said to have denied both logic and the law of karma. He is famous for preaching,

bhasmi-bhutasya dehasya kim punar-agamo bhavet

“Eat ghee even if you have to go into debt for it. As long as you are alive, live happily. After your body has been burned to ashes, how will it ever return to this world again?” A world-view without inference is very limited, however, and invites ridicule from rival philosophers:

carvaka tava carv-angi jarato vikshya garbhinim
pratyaksha-matra-vishvaso ghana-shvasam kim ujhasi

“My dear follower of Carvaka, since you have faith only in the direct evidence of your senses, why are you sighing so deeply to see your lovely wife, now pregnant by some other man?” (Vedanta-syamantaka 1.6)

Buddhist logicians recognize only pratyaksha and anumana as valid pramanas. In their opinion, only immediate sense perception is strictly speaking reliable but inference can also be put to practical use although it is founded on the mere useful fictions of persistent things and general categories.

The third pramana, called shabda, was never accepted by the Indian materialists and Buddhists, and it is also little understood by us in the modern world, where we have been conditioned by the predominance of science and critical thought. A standard definition of shabda-pramana is apta-vakya, “the words of a reliable authority.” Who is a reliable authority depends on what field of knowledge is being studied. If one’s mother is a simple woman with no reason to deceive, she can be trusted as an authority on who one’s father is. Any honest person who has seen things we have not should be trusted to provide us information otherwise difficult or impossible to obtain. Everyone relies on such knowledge from apta-vakya in day-to-day life, even those who proudly declare they have no faith in any authority.

According to the Sarva-samvadini, these are the other pramanas proposed by various schools:

(4) Arsha, the authority of sages. Knowledge gleaned through this pramana is based on statements by gods and rishis. Arsha is just a kind of shabda-pramana.

(5) Upamana, analogy. Using this pramana, one can derive knowledge from such comparisons as “the creature called a gavaya is similar to a cow.” A forest-dweller may tell this to a city-dweller who has no knowledge of gavayas, and when the city-dweller visits the forest and sees a gavaya the analogy will give him correct understanding. Upamana is thus an application of shabda and pratyaksha.

(6) Arthapatti, conjecture from an otherwise unexplainable situation. Devadatta is fat, but no one ever sees him eat during the day, so therefore he must be eating at night. This kind of reasoning is a form of anumana, sometimes called negative hypothetical deduction.

(7) Abhava, nonexistence. This pramana gives knowledge of an object’s absence from the fact of not seeing it. Abhava has been analyzed as a special variety of pratyaksha, where the object of perception is not a positive thing but the absence itself.[DDB14]

(8) Sambhava, inclusion. When we conclude that someone with a thousand dollars also possesses a hundred dollars, we are employing sambhava to acquire knowledge. This pramana is a form of simple mathematical deduction.

(9) Aitihya, tradition. We employ this pramana when we receive knowledge through a chain of informants without knowing the original speaker. Aitihya can be identified as shabda if in fact we can establish the reliability of the authority without even knowing his identity.

(10) Ceshöa, gesture. When we make something known by literally pointing at it, we are employing ceshöa. This is a tacit variation of shabda together with pratyaksha.

Shri Bhagavata-sandarbha is concerned with the highest kind of knowledge obtainable, personal realization of the Absolute Truth. Shri Jiva Gosvami emphatically asserts in the present anuccheda that for this purpose all pramanas are unreliable in the hands of imperfect humans. Every person in this world tends to make four kinds of mistakes in perceptive judgment: bhrama, confusing one thing for another, as when one sees a tree at dusk and thinks it is a man; pramada, inattentiveness because of having one's attention turned elsewhere, as when one fails to notice that someone close by is singing a song; vipralipsa, [DDB15]the desire to deceive others, as when a teacher fails to divulge some useful information to his students; and karanapaöava, weakness of the senses, as when even with a focused mind one cannot discern some object. Because of these natural faults, it is impossible for any mortal to be [DDB16]perfectly reasonable on his own strength, no matter how diligently he tries.

Dharma, the eternal principles of human responsibility, stood originally like a mighty bull with four legs—self-control, cleanliness, mercy, and truthfulness. Each yuga in the cycle of four has seen a loss of one of these legs of dharma, to the point where now only one leg remains in Kali-yuga, respect for truth. Thus in our materialistic age science is the predominant belief system. We are supposed to have faith in the collective endeavor of the scientific community, trusting that science will eventually succeed in conquering nature for the perfect, eternal happiness of mankind. We are encouraged to assume that the truths science gives us are firm and unquestionable. But this faith is naive: like every other human pramana, the inductive scientific method is prone to error. Fifty years ago, the findings of medical research indicated that tobacco smoke was harmless to the human body and even beneficial for the lungs and heart. Backed up by the best available scientific findings of the day, a cigarette company in 1945 could hire Ronald Reagan to dress as a doctor in magazine advertisements and recommend that his patients could improve their health by smoking more cigarettes. This mistake due to the weakness of anumana-pramana has resulted in untold suffering for millions.

The ordinary means of acquiring knowledge are especially inadequate for learning about the Absolute Truth, which is not a measurable thing of this world and which refuses to reveal itself to speculators and skeptics. Although physical scientists may claim to know the basic laws of nature, knowledge of these laws reveals only the relative truths of how mechanical forces interact and how we can manipulate them for our own aims. Such incomplete knowledge falls far short of knowledge of the Absolute Truth, which requires knowing not only how to use things but also what their ultimate causes and purposes are. The laws of physics tell us how to measure and predict the physical forces at work among objects, but they say nothing about what or who first brought these forces into being, nor about why these forces and objects exist.

Many consider Henry Ford one of the practical geniuses of the twentieth century. He foresaw the usefulness of mass-produced automobiles and devised the means to realize this vision. He saw a desirable purpose in this, better mobility for the common citizen, but his material vision could not foresee other, unexpected results of the automobile. Hundreds of thousands of unmarried couples would use it for parking in secluded places, resulting in hundreds of thousands of unwanted births and abortions. Domiciles and workplaces would be separated by up to a hundred miles, causing great inconvenience and social dislocation. In cities around the world, the air would be filled with carcinogens and other poisons. And all due to the inadequacies of anumana-pramana.

A basic premise of spiritual science is that there is a unity underlying all existence, an Absolute Truth, and that thus everything has definite causes and purposes. As long as human intelligence ignores this premise, it remains sadly inadequate.

Vaishnava Epistemology

Without knowing the purpose of a book, a prospective reader is unlikely to take a keen interest in it, so in the previous Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami outlines his subject and purpose. Now, with the phrase tad-bhajanalakshana-vidheya, he states that devotional service as explained in the Vedic scriptures is the process for achieving the final goal, prema-bhakti. But before one practices any important process he should have correct knowledge about it. Thus the need arises for discerning the various means of acquiring valid knowledge. This portion of Tattva-sandarbha therefore deals with Vaishnava epistemology. Jiva Gosvami first establishes the validity of his means of acquiring knowledge before analyzing the four topics mentioned in the previous Text. In English the word “knowledge” means valid knowledge. In Sanskrit, valid knowledge is called prama, and a means of acquiring it is called pramana. Sometimes the word pramana is used to mean “proof,” “evidence,” or “authority.”

Jiva Gosvami is concerned with establishing an infallible means of acquiring knowledge. Ordinary human beings use various means to acquire knowledge, but none of these is infallible. This fallibility is due to the four inherent defects found in all ordinary humans. Without exception every ordinary human being has the tendency to be deluded (bhrama), makes mistakes (pramada), has a cheating propensity (vipralipsa), and has imperfect senses (karanapaöava).

Bhrama, or mistaken identification, is of two kinds. The first is identification of the body as the self. Everyone is born with this delusion, but how completely we identify with our body depends on our attachment to it. Because of this defect we mistake the temporary, [DDB17]miserable sense objects as permanent sources of pleasure. The second kind of mistaken identification occurs when we think we perceive something that in fact is not present, as in the case of a mirage or hallucination.

Pramada, the second of the four defects, is our tendency to become deluded because of inattention. If our mind is not connecting with a particular perceiving sense—the eyes, ears, nose, tongue, or skin—we do not get the knowledge it can supply. For example, we may sit through a lecture but miss portions of it because our mind is wandering.

The third defect is vipralipsa, the propensity to cheat. Material conditioning causes us to consider ourselves the material body, which, being temporary, can never give us real happiness. But still out of delusion we seek happiness through sense gratification. When we fail to obtain this to our full satisfaction, we take to cheating to improve our chances. Friends cheat friends, politicians cheat the public, and so on. Even in spiritual life a so-called guru will cheat his disciple [DDB18]by teaching some materialistic philosophy as the absolute truth, or an insincere disciple will try to cheat his guru by pretending to follow the guru’s orders when he’s not.. This cheating propensity manifests on all levels of material existence.

The last of the four defects is karanapaöava, imperfect senses. We have five perceptive senses—the eyes, ears, tongue, nose, and skin. Each of these functions only within a limited range. The human eye, for instance, can see light between infrared and ultraviolet wavelengths, but there are many other wavelengths the eye cannot discern—radio waves, x-rays, and so on. Even within the visible range our eyes cannot see clearly if the light is too bright or too dim, if the object is too far or too close, or if the eyes themselves are diseased[DDB19]. Upon analysis, each sense will reveal a similar built-in limitation.

The conclusion is that since these four defects make perfectly reliable knowledge about material objects a rare achievement, perfect knowledge about the transcendental realm is altogether impossible by the means we commonly accept. This premise is the cornerstone of Vedic epistemology. Of course, after[DDB20] acknowledging these four defects one will find the quest for a reliable pramana to be an exacting challenge.

Among India’s philosophical traditions there are a total of ten pramanas, or means of acquiring valid knowledge. Each philosophical school recognizes a certain combination of these as valid and may present arguments to support its opinion. These ten traditional pramanas, with the three most important ones listed last, are as follows:

1. Arsha: the statements of an authoritative sage or demigod. There are many exceptional sages, such as Kapila, Gautama, and Patanjali, who founded their own schools of philosophy. Naturally these authorities' opinions differ, and therefore the Mahabharata (Vana-parva 313.117) says, nasav rishir yasya matam na bhinnam: "One is not considered a philosopher if his opinion does not differ from the opinions of other philosophers." Since these philosophers are all profound thinkers, we take their utterances seriously, but an ordinary person can hardly determine which philosopher's opinion is correct. For Vaishnavas, the criterion for judging whether a particular arsha opinion is valid is whether it conforms to the principal pramanas (numbers 8, 9, and 10 below)[DDB21].

2. Upamana: comparison. We can identify something about which we have no prior knowledge after it has been compared to a familiar object. Suppose we have seen an ordinary cow but never a gavaya (forest cow), and someone tells us that a gavaya resembles a cow. Then we may recognize a gavaya when we see one.

3. Arthapatti: presumption. By this means we assume an unknown fact or facts to account for some known fact or facts that are otherwise inexplicable. For example, if we know that fat Devadatta does not eat during the day, we can safely assume he must eat at night. Otherwise his stoutness is inexplicable.

4. Abhava: absence. Failing to perceive an object by means of a suitable sense is considered perception of the absence of that object. For example, a book is a suitable object for visual perception, and the eyes constitute the suitable means for this perception. Thus when one does not see a book on a table, one is experiencing the book's absence. Such abhava is classified as a separate category of perception because in it there is no actual contact between the object and the sense instrument, as there would be in ordinary sensory perception. What is perceived is the object's absence.

5. Sambhava: inclusion. This pramana is based on our common experience that a larger quantity includes some smaller quantity. For example, if we know someone possesses a hundred dollars, we automatically know he possesses one dollar, five dollars, ten dollars, and so on. This kind of reasoning, based on the principle of inclusion, is called sambhava.

6. Aitihya: tradition. This pramana is applied when some accepted fact is known by common belief or tradition but the original source of that knowledge is unknown. For instance, there is a popular belief that the Pandavas built the Old Fort in what is now New Delhi. There is no written proof or scriptural authority to support this belief, but it has been passed down for generations to the present day and is nearly universally accepted as corresponding to fact.

7. Ceshöa: gesture. This pramana comes into play when one learns something from a knowledgeable person's gestures or from symbols. For instance, we may make a "V" sign with our fingers to indicate victory, or a pujari may show the Deity mudras to convey certain messages

8. Pratyaksha: direct perception. Directly perceiving something with our senses can be the means to either valid or invalid knowledge. But only that sense perception which leads to valid knowledge should be considered pramana. Sense perception is the principal means of acquiring knowledge in this material world. Both theistic and atheistic philosophers accept pratyaksha-pramana as one of the means to valid knowledge. Direct perception is of two types—external and internal. An external perception occurs when we acquire knowledge through the senses. In an internal perception we acquire knowledge directly through the mind, as when we perceive emotions such as pain, pleasure, love, and hate. In the Bhagavad-gita (15.7) Lord Krishna lists the mind as the sixth sense (manah-shashöhanindriyani).

Because of our four inherent human defects, pratyaksha is not always a reliable means with which to acquire valid knowledge. For one thing, its scope is limited only to the present, since it cannot extend into the past or future[DDB22]. Moreover, it is limited only to material things. According to Shrila Jiva Gosvami, however, perfect devotees who achieve direct perception of the Lord, His abode, and His associates through spiritual trance all have pure senses and have transcended the four defects. For such persons pratyaksha is a reliable source of knowledge because their sense perception is completely pure. Lord Krishna confirms this in the Ninth Chapter of the Bhagavad-gita (9.2) when He says that "this knowledge leads to direct realization of transcendence by experience (pratyakshavagamam)." And in the sixth chapter (Bg. 6.21) the Lord likewise assures Arjuna that in the state of transcendental trance, samadhi, a devotee acquires perfect knowledge through his purified intelligence and transcendental senses (buddhi-grahyam atindriyam vetti). This experience of pure Vaishnavas is called vaidusha-pratyaksha, and it is flawless.

9. Anumana: inference based on generalized experience. The word anumana literally means "knowing after." Based on repeated experience or authoritative verbal testimony, one arrives at some probable general principle, called vyapti ("invariable concomitance"). One can then apply this principle in specific cases to deduce unknown facts.

Inference is of two kinds, for oneself and for others. An example of inference for oneself, which is less formal, is the process of reasoning a person goes through when he repeatedly sees, in the kitchen and elsewhere, the concomitance between smoke and fire and arrives at the general principle "Wherever there's smoke, there's fire." Then if he sees smoke hanging over a mountain in the distance, he may recall the principle and conclude, "There is a fire on the mountain."

Inference for others uses a five-step syllogistic formula. After arriving at an inferred conclusion for himself, a person uses this method to enable others to infer the same conclusion. The syllogistic format is as follows:

1. Proposition: There is a fire on the mountain.
2. Reason: Because there's smoke..
3. General principle and example: Wherever there's smoke, there's fire, as in the kitchen.
4. Application: There is smoke over the mountain.
5. Conclusion: Therefore there is a fire on the mountain.

If there is any error in perceiving the reason or any deviation in the universal generalization, the inference will be faulty and its conclusion unreliable. In the above example, if the observer mistakes clouds over the mountain for smoke or sees the smoke just after rain has extinguished the fire, his deduction that a fire is burning on the mountain will be wrong. Like pratyaksha, therefore, anumana is not a foolproof means of acquiring knowledge.

10. Shabda: revealed knowledge. Shabda literally means sound, but as a pramana it refers to meaningful, articulate sound spoken or written by an apta-purusha, a trustworthy person who is an authority on the matter in question. In its ultimate sense the term shabda refers to revealed knowledge that concerns the transcendental reality and that has come from reliable authorities free from the four human defects. This kind of shabda differs from the language used in mundane transactions, which is called paurusheya-shabda and is not always reliable. For Shrila Jiva Gosvami, shabda-pramana is restricted to the revealed knowledge of the Vedas. It is called apaurusheya-shabda, revealed knowledge from a superhuman source. It originated with the Supreme Personality of Godhead and is received in disciplic succession from a bona fide guru. Apaurusheya-shabda is therefore the perfect pramana because it is free from the four defects.

At present, people who fail to accept the authority of apaurusheya-shabda-pramana generally fall into two groups: those in the first group doubt the very existence of a transcendental reality beyond the empirical world; those in the second group accept the existence of such a reality, and may even accept the principle of hearing from apaurusheya-shabda-pramana as a means of knowing about it, but unfortunately they also accept one or more paurusheya sources of shabda-pramana as apaurusheya. Members of the first group usually favor knowledge gained through their own sensory experience. Yet like everyone else they constantly rely on knowledge imparted to them through sound. In our practical day-to-day life we depend on knowledge transmitted from parents, teachers, books, magazines, TV, radio, and numerous experts. Hearing from authorities enhances the extent of our learning, and if we were to dispense with it we could not function in our complex modern society. Those who consider sensory experience superior to shabda forget that we gain most of our knowledge by hearing second hand or reading, not by immediate perception. Direct experience is a great teacher, but it is nonetheless severely vitiated by the four human defects, and also by the great expenditure of time it takes to acquire it. Moreover, we cannot directly experience past or future events. So even though those in the first group actually accept the principle of shabda, because the shabda they accept imparts to them only empirical knowledge and is therefore all paurusheya, they remain skeptical about the existence of transcendental reality. Ultimately, no amount of raw sensory experience or paurusheya-shabda can ever give us access to the transcendent, spiritual reality, for it is a simple fact that neither of these means is at all reliable for understanding transcendence. For that, apaurusheya-shabda-pramana is our only hope. This brings us to the second group—those who accept both the existence of a transcendental reality and the principle of hearing from apaurusheya-shabda-pramana to learn about it. For them, Shrila Jiva Gosvami elaborately explains in the next Texts what constitutes genuine apaurusheya-shabda-pramana.

Unlike pratyaksha, shabda is not limited in scope only to the present time. It extends into the past and future as well. It is the most powerful tool for conveying knowledge from one person to another, especially if they are greatly separated by time or space, which is almost always the case when one wants to understand the spiritual realm. For all these reasons philosophers in virtually all of India's orthodox traditions accept apaurusheya-shabda-pramana as the flawless means for acquiring transcendental knowledge.

Like other followers of India's orthodox philosophical traditions, Shrila Jiva Gosvami (as we have already mentioned[DDB23])[DDB24] calls apaurusheya-shabda-pramana shabda-pramana and equates the latter with the Vedas. The Vedas alone can deliver knowledge of the spiritual reality, which lies beyond all our sensory perception. As explained in the next Text, the Vedas are not human creations: they are manifest from the Supreme Lord (vedo narayanah sakshat; Bhag. 6.1.40), who is free from all defects.

In his Sarva-samvadini, while discussing the principle of shabda-pramana, Shrila Jiva Gosvami writes: tathapi bhrama-pramada-vipralipsa-karanapaöava-dosha-rahita-vacanatmakah shabda eva mulam pramanam. anyesham prayah purusha-bhramadi-dosha-mayatanyatha-pratiti-darshanena pramanam va tad-abhaso veti purushair nirnetum ashakyatvat tasya tad-abhavat. Although there are ten means of acquiring knowledge, shabda is the primary process because all other means are made unreliable by the four human defects. In all other processes it is difficult for an ordinary person to tell whether or not the knowledge gained is valid.

Although different schools of philosophy accept various combinations of the ten pramanas, Shrila Jiva Gosvami follows in the footsteps of Madhvacharya by accepting pratyaksha (direct perception), anumana (inference) and shabda (revealed knowledge) as the only valid means by which one can acquire knowledge and subsuming the other pramanas under them. Pratyaksha and anumana can serve as assistants to shabda, but whenever pratyaksha and anumana contradict shabda, we should give preference to shabda-pramana.

Here are some scriptural references showing the importance of these three pramanas:

pratyaksham canumanam ca shastram ca vividhagamam trayam su-viditam karyam dharma-shuddhim abhipsata

"A person serious about executing the responsibilities of human life should try to understand the three processes of direct perception, inference, and hearing the various Vedic scriptures"(Manu-samhita 12.105).

pratyakshenumanena nigamenatma-samvida
ady-anta-vad asaj jnatva nihsango vicared iha

“[Lord Krishna said:] ‘By direct perception, logical deduction, scriptural testimony and personal realization one should know that this world has a beginning and an end and so is not the ultimate reality. Thus one should live in this world without attachment’” (Bhag. 11.28.9).

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.19.17) Lord Krishna includes aitiḥya (tradition) with sense perception, inference, and śabda as a means of acquiring knowledge, but in fact aitiḥya is usually considered a kind of śabda, although not necessarily apauruṣeya-śabda.

By accepting only three of the ten pramāṇas, Jīva Gosvāmī does not exclude the other seven. His opinion is that pratyakṣa, anumāna, and śabda include the other seven pramāṇas, as follows: Upamāna, arthapatti, sambhava, and ceshōa are varieties of anumāna; abhava is a kind of pratyakṣa; and arsha and aitiḥya are kinds of śabda.

Next Śrīla Jīva Gosvāmī explains the process suitable for determining the viśaya (the subject), the sambandha (the connection between the viśaya and the words describing it), and the prayojana (the final goal).

Gopiparānadhana: Therefore direct perception and so on are unreliable sources of valid knowledge. We want to understand that object which transcends everything and is the shelter of everything, and whose nature no person can conceive or imagine. For this purpose our source of knowledge can only be the Vedas, which are comprised of nonmaterial sound. The Vedas alone should be our pramāṇa because they are [DDB25]externally self-manifest and from them in fact have been derived all departments of knowledge, mundane and spiritual, among all schools of thought in human society since time immemorial.

BBT: Consequently, for us who are inquisitive about that which is beyond everything yet the support of everything—that which is most inconceivable and wondrous in nature—direct perception, inference, and so on are not suitable means of gaining knowledge. For this purpose the only suitable means is the Vedas, the transcendental words that have been the source of all mundane and spiritual knowledge passed down among all schools of thought in human society since time immemorial.

Purport by Gopiparānadhana prabhu

However useful ordinary sense perception, logic, and expert opinion may be in their proper realms, these means of knowing cannot approach the transcendental reality, which no ordinary person has ever seen or inferred. That higher reality simply cannot be reached by any human capacity; only when it chooses to reveal itself can anyone know it. In Vedic terms, the process of knowing the Absolute Truth must be descending rather than ascending (avarōha-pantha instead of arōha-pantha). The Absolute Truth makes itself known by shabda-pramana (word of authority) that is apaurusheya, not created by any mortal being.

Authentic scriptures of various cultures reveal aspects of the Absolute Truth, but among these scriptures the Vedic literature distinguishes itself by the scope of its revelation. The Vedas and their supplements offer a great variety of approaches to the Absolute for people in different situations in life and on different levels of spiritual development. The Vedic corpus includes thousands of separate texts, yet when we carefully study the whole we find it very consistent. Many generations of reputable, discriminating brahmanas have been satisfied to direct their lives according to Vedic authority, not only because their parents did so but because they themselves have experienced the practical benefits. By living according to the Vedic standards of self-control in body and mind, one becomes peaceful, clear-headed, and fit to understand the highest purposes of life.

This anuccheda of Shri Tattva-sandarbha calls the Vedas the source of all kinds of knowledge “mundane and spiritual, among all schools of thought in human society since time immemorial.” In other words, all human knowledge comes from the Vedas; the various branches of worldly scholarship and even corrupted and faulty teachings all derive from the original Vedic knowledge. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.14.3–8) Lord Krishna outlines the history of Vedic knowledge in human society:

kalena nashōa pralaye vaniyam veda-samjnita

“The Supreme Personality of Godhead said: By the influence of time, the transcendental sound of Vedic knowledge was lost at the time of annihilation. Therefore, when the subsequent creation took place, I spoke the Vedic knowledge to Brahma because I Myself am the religious principles enunciated in the Vedas.

“All of the many universal species, along with their respective leaders, appeared with different natures and desires generated from the three modes of material nature. Therefore, because of the different characteristics of the living entities within the universe, there are a great many Vedic rituals, mantras, and rewards.

"Thus, due to the great variety of desires and natures among human beings, there are many different philosophies of life, which are handed down through tradition, culture, custom, and disciplic succession. There are other teachers who directly support atheistic viewpoints."

Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana comments that when it is not apaurusheya, shabda-pramana is subject to the human imperfections of ordinary speakers and hearers. Each authority presents "final" theories, only to be corrected by his successors. In the words of the Mahabharata (Vana-parva 313.117), nasav rishir yasya matam na bhinnam ("No one is considered a sage who does not have his own opinion").

In his Sarva-samvadini Shrila Jiva Gosvami has a good deal to say about the superiority of shabda-pramana, even the shabda spoken by ordinary human authorities. Shabda alone is the basis of all correct knowledge because a person can never be certain that an instance of one of the other pramanas is not faulty, a perverted reflection of the true instrument (pramana-abhasa). Apaurusheya-shabda, however, is free from the influence of the four human defects in perception. Therefore all the other pramanas depend completely on its authority, just as a powerful king's ministers depend completely on his direction and good will. Shabda-pramana is independent of the other pramanas. Although sometimes the others assist shabda, still shabda is free to overrule any of them, while the others can never contradict the facts shabda has established. Shabda alone, moreover, is the only effective means for gaining knowledge of matters the other pramanas cannot penetrate.

When employed by an infallible perceiver, however, any pramana can be a source of reliable knowledge. For example, not only ordinary persons but also those in perfect knowledge can exercise pratyaksha, direct sense perception. And the pratyaksha of one who uses his senses infallibly, as does God or His faultless servant, is undeniable evidence. When the Supreme Lord explains reality as He sees it or an inspired messenger of the Lord conveys His pratyaksha without distortion, we can trust that the words spoken are true. Such infallible pratyaksha is indeed, is the origin of apaurusheya-shabda-pramana. The pratyaksha of imperfect perceivers, however, is always more or less doubtful. For example, the audience in a movie theater may be fooled by an expertly constructed model of an actor's head and think that the actor has actually been decapitated. Shabda evidence is free from such doubt. The speaker's authority certifies as doubtless statements like "There is snow in the Himalayas" and "There are jewels in this mine," regardless of the hearers' ignorance about these things. When an expert on special effects explains how a model of the actor's head was constructed for his death scene, the audience has received definitive information and need no longer entertain the idea that the actor was killed. As a matter of epistemological principle, no fact is absolutely certain until an appropriate authority verifies it; in our eclectic age many may not like to acknowledge this principle, but it is natural and in practice even radical skeptics obey it.

Shabda-pramana is independent of the dictates of pratyaksha. For example, in a place where several others were present, a Vedic teacher asked his student, "How many people do you see here?"

The student counted the teacher and eight others he could see and answered, "Nine."

"No, think again."

When the student could not understand what was wrong with his answer, the teacher explained, "There are ten. You are the tenth person."

In this case a mistaken perception was immediately corrected by an authoritative statement. As soon as it entered the student's ears, his confusion was removed.

Pratyaksha can render assistance to shabda as far as it is able, as in confirming the authoritative statement "Fire will melt ice." But in other cases it can do nothing to help, as when a mother says, "My son, you were in my womb in the city of Mathura.” Shabda can overrule pratyaksha, as when a person is cured of a snakebite by potent mantras, one of which states, “You were bitten by a snake, but now there is no more poison in you.” Pratyaksha cannot overrule statements of shabda, such as “Cow dung is pure.” A foreigner visiting India may perceive cow’s feces as unclean and be puzzled when he sees it used for cleansing sacred temples, but the Indians all know from traditional authority that actually it is very antiseptic. Shabda alone is also the most effective pramana for gaining knowledge of things that are difficult to see directly; astronomers gladly accept the authority of an ephemeris rather than bother to calculate for themselves the positions of each object in the sky they need to observe.

Someone might suggest that a better standard of truth than appeal to authority is “what everyone’s shared perception establishes” (sarva-pratyaksha-siddham). This definition of truth, however, is impossible to apply; everyone cannot be brought together in one place to share the same perceptions, and it is impossible even in different locations to conduct a complete survey of everyone’s experience. If the definition is modified to “what the perception of many people establishes” (bahu-pratyaksha-siddham), then truth can never be certain but will become an object of controversy whenever more knowledgeable judgment disagrees with the majority opinion.

Anumana (inductive-deductive inference) is also sometimes erroneous, and so it also must yield the place of honor to shabda. An argument’s general premise can be faulty in various ways, as when reasoning involves vishama-vyapti, a too broad or too narrow generalization. One may posit “There is fire on this mountain because there is smoke,” unaware that the billowing smoke seen on the mountain is from a fire that has just a moment before been extinguished by rain. Shabda-pramana makes up for this innate weakness in anumana; someone who knows the actual situation better can explain, “My dear cold travelers, don’t expect to find any fire on this mountain, despite the smoke you observe. I just saw the rain extinguish the fire there. But over on that other mountain you will find a fire.”

Some logicians may disagree with this analysis, objecting that in this instance of arguing from smoke to fire the reason (smoke) is not actually present, a fault technically called hetv-abhasa (“a defective reason”) of the variety svarupasiddha (“inconclusive on the grounds of the cited reason not occurring in the situation”); when all the elements of an inference are free from defect, however, the conclusion is guaranteed to be true. We answer this objection is answered by pointing out that no matter how elegantly we define the theoretical distinctions of defective and nondefective reasons, in real life we can never be fully sure that the reason we give for drawing a conclusion is not defective. There may be any number of conditions under which the appearance of smoke is an insufficient hetu for inferring the presence of fire: what we think is smoke may really be fog, or the mountain may be exuding some poisonous gas. Indeed only after the fact, when we have seen the fire, can we sure that the reason was not defective; what is supposed to prove the conclusion must, conversely, be proven by the conclusion. This is a serious logical fault—mutual dependence of the proven and its proof, or in other words circular reasoning. In addition, the sense perceptions that must precede the construction of an inference may themselves be faulty. For both these reasons, even when one’s logic is formally sound the conclusions one draws may contradict reality.

Shabda-pramana acts independently of anumana in authoritative statements like “You are the tenth person.” Anumana can assist shabda as far as its capacity allows. For example, those who have not heard of the special qualities of diamond may infer that, like other stones, it can be cut by steel. After hearing how exceptionally hard diamond is, however, these same persons will reformulate their argument: steel can cut most stones but not diamond.

Shabda sometimes overrules logic, as when we hear from medical experts that an infected burn should be treated by being cauterized, or that some bitter foods like ginger become sweet after being digested. Anumana cannot contradict what shabda has established, as in a pharmaceutical dictum like “This herb eliminates excesses of all three dhatus.” Shabda can effectively inform us of things inaccessible to anumana,

Since both pratyaksha and anumana are thus secondary in relation to shabda-pramana, certainly the other recognized pramanas, all derivatives of these three, are also subordinate. Beginning with pratyaksha, all the pramanas other than shabda are powerless to give anyone knowledge of the higher purposes of life. Human beings share these other pramanas with animals, who search for their food and other needs with the help of acute senses and simple reason. A cat knows that when it pretends to be affectionate its human masters provide everything; remembering and logically applying this general principle, the cat successfully manipulates its human family again and again. But animals never achieve spiritual realization from the knowledge gained by their pramanas, and neither do humans who have not recognized shabda-pramana. It has been observed that infants develop real human understanding only when they receive verbal input from their parents; if they are raised without being talked to often, even with all other needs taken care of they grow up dull and inarticulate.

In his Sarva-samvadini Shrila Jiva Gosvami continues to describe the special nature of shabda-pramana. This additional commentary is presented in Appendix 1 at the end of this book.

The Vedas Are the Original Source of Knowledge

As already noted, direct perception and inference depend on sense perception, which is limited only to empirical objects and vitiated by the four human defects. Thus direct perception and inference are inadequate by themselves for completely understanding anything beyond our senses. By tracing the chain of causes in material creation, we can infer that something exists beyond our sense perception, but inference can take us no further, leaving us unable to identify it; nor can inference yield valid knowledge about abhidheya, the process for realizing it. We can acquire such knowledge only from revealed scripture, the Vedas, which are not the creations of mortal beings and so are free from the four defects of human nature. The Vedas appeared from the Supreme Lord at the dawn of creation, a fact confirmed in the Shvetashvatara Upanishad (6.8): yo brahmanam vidadhati purvam yo vai vedamsh ca prahinoti tasmai. "That Supreme Lord created Brahma at the beginning of creation and gave him the Vedas." The term anadi-siddha, as used in this Text, means that the Vedas were not written at a particular date but exist eternally, like the Lord. They first manifested in this universe within the heart of Lord Brahma, the oldest created being: tene brahma hrida ya adi-kavaye (Bhag. 1.1.1); then they were handed down through disciplic succession. The Vedas provide both material and spiritual knowledge. Knowledge about such common phenomena as the trees, water, land, and sky originally came from the Vedas, along with the knowledge of the divisions of duties for various people according to their psycho-physical natures. As the Manu-samhita (1.21) states:

veda-shabdebhya evadau prithak-samsthash ca nirmame*

"Lord Brahma learned the names of various objects and the duties of various classes of people from the words of the Vedas, and thus he could propagate the manifest divisions of names and duties."

Over time, there developed different cultures and languages that obscured the original Vedic culture.

For acquiring transcendental knowledge, the Vedas (shabda-pramana) is the only effective means. The Vedas inform us about the soul's existence beyond the body, about the planets of the spiritual world, and about the Supreme Lord, His pastimes, and other matters. All these subjects are beyond the reach of our sensory and mental faculties. Without the method of shabda, such philosophers as the Buddhists,[DDB26] who do not accept the Vedas, cannot justifiably say anything positive about transcendence, let alone the way to attain it. Shabda-pramana is so important that although Vaishnavas count Lord Buddha among the incarnations of the Lord on the strength of Vedic testimony, they reject his philosophy because it was not based on shabda-pramana.

All orthodox schools of philosophy in India, whether monistic or dualistic, consider the Vedas apaurusheya, not written by any mortal being. Many modern scholars, however, dispute the divine origin of the Vedas. They suggest various dates for the composition of the Vedas, and while most of them agree that the Vedas were composed before 1500 B.C., they disagree about the exact time of their composition. They have yet to arrive at a definitive conclusion.

Here Shrila Jiva Gosvami says that the Vedas are beginningless and are the source of various kinds of knowledge coming down through many schools of thought since time immemorial. The phrase sarva-purusha, “all persons,[DDB28]” indicates that the knowledge was passed on not only by human beings but also by superhuman beings, such as the demigods and divine sages. These traditions of thought all originate with the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is infallible in all respects and thus completely untainted by the four human defects. Moreover, Shrila Jiva Gosvami has already shown (in Text 9) how unreliable are the alternatives to the Vedic authority. If, as he has established, only apaurusheya-shabda can give access to transcendental reality, how could the Vedas then have been written or compiled by human beings? If Jiva Gosvami allowed that human authors composed the Vedas, he would be contradicting his own previous dismissal of human knowledge as imperfect.

[DDB29]Those scholars who contest the apaurusheya origin of the Vedas, claiming that they are human compilations, have no conclusive proof to back up their claim. Refusing to consider the Vedas’[DDB30] own statements about their origin and purpose, these scholars merely assume that the Vedas are not authoritative and speculate about their true origin. Their motive is clear, for accepting the Vedic version would put an end to the speculative philosophical tradition; it would oblige them to accept the Vedic description of ultimate reality. On account of being too attached to the speculative, or ascending, method of knowledge, however, such scholars and philosophers rather insist that the Vedas are of human origin, regardless of their inability to produce any proof of their claim. Indeed, the theory that the Vedas [DDB31]have a human composer is a recent development advocated by persons who did not come in disciplic succession. They were mostly outsiders who refused to believe that India had much of importance to offer the world in the realm of philosophy and who had their own motive for minimizing the Vedic traditions—namely, their eagerness to convert India to Christianity. They certainly were not impartial judges of the Vedas’[DDB32] origin.

On the other side, great scholars and saints like Shankaracarya, Madhvacarya, Ramanujacarya, Kumarila Bhaṭṭa, and Rupa Gosvami all accepted the Vedas as apaurusheya and eternal. These exalted authorities are famed for their renunciation, knowledge, and selflessness. Contemporary mundane scholars who contest the divine origin of the Vedas naturally fail to place their faith in the opinions of these authorities, but, as we have p[DDB33]ointed out, such materialistic scholars are not free from ulterior motives, nor do their character and conduct compare favorably with those of the great acaryas.

Another consideration, and an important one, is that the Vedas themselves repeatedly enjoin that one who wants to understand the spiritual knowledge they teach must first approach a guru in disciplic succession. Vedic knowledge is verifiable; it is not just a collection of abstract ideas. But to realize the truth of Vedic knowledge one must approach a bona fide guru. Mundane scholars, however, tend to be proud of their textbook knowledge and flout this requirement, all the while considering themselves authorities on Vedic knowledge. In reality, by not applying themselves to this knowledge in the prescribed way they ensure that for them the door to its mysteries will ever remain locked. The attempts of these hapless scholars to understand the Vedas without joining an authorized disciplic succession are like someone’s trying to taste honey by licking the outside of a honey-filled jar. Their labor is futile and their analysis and conclusions are useless.

By contrast, the great Vaishnava acaryas all became Vedic authorities by virtue of their scrupulously following the injunction to surrender to a guru coming in disciplic succession. As far as sincerity and credibility are taken into account, therefore, the evidence weighs heavily in favor of the saintly acaryas. In any case, a seriously interested person can always take up the Vedic process himself and personally verify the Vedic conclusions. Granted, this requires some effort, and it is of course much easier to offer glib speculations denying the Vedas' authority than to discipline oneself and follow their instructions. Ultimately, however, the Vedas' scholarly detractors can never prove their claims.

And even if someone proposes that just as modern science is evolving, so the Vedas evolved over a period of time, then the question arises, Why in recorded history have people stopped making further refinements of the Vedas? If the Vedas indeed have a human source, they should have been revised and improved over time, and new, improved versions should be available; but this is not the case. Rather, North or South, East or West, the same standard readings of the Vedas are found, and no older or newer versions are seen anywhere. The Vedic saints have developed a meticulous system for protecting the word order of the Vedic texts. Changing even a single syllable is considered criminal. Thus the Vedas are rightly called shruti, or that which is heard from the guru unchanged, with proper intonation and accent of the syllables.

The Vedas are unique. Can one imagine that in a particular field of science or art we will reach the apex in knowledge and produce one standard book accepted by all, making all other books in that field obsolete? Is it conceivable that no one would make any further changes or additions to such a book, and that this book would become worshipable to the people interested in that field? The reasonable, unbiased answer is no, and yet this is precisely the case with the Vedas, for they are free of defects, having emanated from the perfect source, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. But if someone says yes, then there is no reason for debate over the authority of the Vedas.

In addition to the spiritual knowledge it contains, the Vedic literature has references to many modern scientific achievements. The Vedas have sections on astronomy, medicine, yoga, music, drama, dance, algebra, civil engineering, and so on. The list is long indeed. These are all arts and sciences that were practiced in India centuries before the dawn of their modern counterparts. His Divine Grace A.C. Bhaktivedanta Swami Shрила Prabhupada writes in his introduction to Shrimad-Bhagavatam, "The authority of the Vedas is unchallengeable and stands without any question of doubt. The conch shell and cow dung are the bone and stool of two living beings. But because they have been recommended by the Vedas as pure, people accept them as such because of the authority of the Vedas." It has been proven by scientific experiment that cow dung is antiseptic and medicinal. It would be simplistic, therefore, to brush aside the Vedas as manmade. Had this been the case, renowned thinkers and powerful logicians like Shрила Jiva Gosvami and Shрила Madhvacarya would have taken no stock in them.

Still one may question the eternal nature of the Vedas on the grounds that any scriptural references in support of them will necessarily come from the Vedas themselves. In logic, citing evidence that relies on itself for proof of legitimacy is called circular reasoning and is unacceptable. The Vedas may thus appear tainted with this defect of svashraya, or begging the question, relying as they do on themselves to establish their own authority.

Circular reasoning would be a serious defect, but a closer look shows that the Vedas are an exception to this fallacy. That the Vedas rely on themselves to establish their authority is not a defect; rather it is logical and sensible. It simply affirms their absolute, transcendental nature, since if some other source were needed to confirm the authority of the Vedas, the authority of that new source would surpass that of the Vedas. In such a case an inquisitive person would be obliged to discard the Vedas and begin all over again analyzing the new source's authenticity. Before long this new source would need confirmation from yet another source. This could go on ad infinitum. But the absence of such a superior source with reference to the Vedas shows that the authority of the Vedas as apaurusheya-shabda-pramana is final.

Logically, therefore, no other pramana can substantiate the Vedas. And that is why the Vedas are traditionally accepted as “mother.” When a person wants to know who his father is, he cannot find out by direct perception, nor by inference or deduction. To know for sure who his father is he has to accept his mother’s testimony. We similarly have to accept the revealed knowledge of the Vedas to learn about the reality beyond our sensory and intellectual power.

The theories advanced by some scholars about the Vedas’ mundane origin are unreliable and untenable because these scholars have not studied the Vedas in a bona fide disciplic succession. Because of the scholars’ four human defects and their being impelled by ulterior motives—desires for degrees, reputation, research funding, and the like—divine arrangement has barred them from gaining real insight into the Vedas. These scholars will readily admit that to understand any complex material subject one needs the help of experts in that field, but somehow they reject the necessity of a bona fide guru for understanding the Vedas. They do not know that in the case of the Vedic literature submission to a guru is an absolute requirement. This prerequisite serves as a kind of password protecting the Vedas against insincere persons who would try to exploit or refute them. In the Bhagavad-gita (7.25) the Supreme Lord affirms:

mudho 'yam nabhijanati loko mam ajam avyayam

This statement is relevant both when the Lord comes to this world in person and when He reveals Himself in scripture. The Lord has given the conditioned souls the method by which they can approach Him, and that method begins with taking knowledge from a bona fide disciplic succession. Those unwilling to thus qualify themselves can have no real access to Him, even if they study the Vedas on their own for many lifetimes.

In summary, owing to the absence of any conclusive proof of the Vedas’ being authored by a mortal being, and by the logic known as the law of the remainder (parisheshya-nyaya), as well as on the authority of the great acaryas and saints coming in the bona fide disciplic successions, and ultimately by accepting the testimony of the Vedas themselves, we reasonably conclude that the Vedas exist eternally and are an infallible source of knowledge.

Next, Shrila Jiva Gosvami shows that inference cannot be an independent means for understanding the Absolute Truth.

Gopiparanadhana: The conclusion stated in Text 10 is corroborated in such statements as the following:

“Because revealed scripture, on the other hand, is based on shabda-pramana” (V.s. 2.1.27).

“For the forefathers, demigods, and human race, O Lord, the Vedas are your own perfect eye. They are the best instrument for seeing what cannot ordinarily be perceived and for ascertaining the goals and means of progressive life” (Bhag. 11.20.4).

BBT: The following scriptural statements confirm this conclusion [Text 10]:

1. “Logic has no sure basis” [DDB44][Vedanta-sutra 2.1.11].

2. “One should not use logic to try to understand what is inconceivable” [Mahabharata, Bhishma-parva 5.22].

3. “Scriptures are the source of knowledge of the Absolute Truth” [Vedanta-sutra 1.1.3].

4. “The Vedas are the source of knowledge of the Absolute Truth” [Vedanta-sutra 2.1.27].

5. “O Supreme Lord, Your Veda is the supreme eye for the forefathers, demigods, and human beings. By it they can understand Your form and qualities, along with the highest goal of life and the means for attaining it, none of which can be ascertained otherwise” [Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.20.4].

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

The Vedas have no human author, but among human beings the most universally respected authority on the Vedas is Shrila Krishna Dvaipayana Vyasa. Just before the beginning of this Kali-yuga, five thousand years ago, he edited all the texts of the Vedas to make them accessible to the less intelligent people of our age. For this accomplishment he earned the title Veda-vyasa, “editor of the Vedas.” In addition, as his personal contribution to Vedic understanding Vyasadeva composed two great works, the Vedanta-sutra and Mahabharata. The Vedanta-sutra is a systematic commentary on the essential Vedic knowledge contained in the Upanishads. In it Vyasadeva proves that the Vedas focus on one goal consistently (samanvaya), namely realization of the Supreme Truth (Brahman); he describes the relationships between Brahman and His energies (sambandha), various spiritual practices for achieving association with Brahman (abhidheya), and the sublime results of these practices (prayojana). The Mahabharata is a vast epic history primarily dealing with a civil war fought between factions of the Kuru dynasty during the time Shri Krishna was manifest on the earth, and it also includes narrations on hundreds of other topics. The chief heroes of the Mahabharata are the five ideal sons of Maharaja Pandu; Lord Krishna is also present throughout, but for the most part He remains in the background, allowing His devotees to take center stage in the drama.

To substantiate his proposition that the Vedas are the most perfect source of shabda-pramana, Shri Jiva Gosvami here cites Dvaipayana Vyasa’s own opinions from these two works, plus a statement from another preeminent Vaishnava, Uddhava. Tarkapratishtohanat is part of an argument in the Second Chapter of the Vedanta-sutra. Under considerations is an opposing claim that one can discover the Absolute Truth by logic.

Tarkapratishtohanat is the answer to the opposition. The sutra implies the unspoken words “No, logical conjecture is not sufficient for realizing the Supreme” and then continues “because it is never conclusive.” The word tarka in its more technical sense indicates the prelogical mental process of sorting out a number of possible premises, imagining the consequences of each one, and eliminating those that are obviously inappropriate. Here is an instance of tarka concerning our example of the fire on the mountain: “I want to prove that there is fire on this mountain. Why do I believe this? Because the air is getting warmer? No, the sun’s coming out from behind the clouds could cause that. Because there is smoke on the mountain? Well, if there weren't any fire there wouldn't be any smoke." This kind of educated guessing may be fruitful in a limited range of logically analyzable situations, but it can never enter the materially immeasurable range of transcendence. As the Upanishads declare,

naisha tarkena matir apaneya proktanyenaiva su-jnanaya preshōha

"My dear boy Naciketa, this understanding cannot be attained by tarka. To be realizeable as spiritual truth it has to be spoken by someone with special authority" (Kaōha Up. 1.2.9).

In the verse from the Mahabharata, acintya means "inconceivable" in the sense of "impossible to explain materially because it is a phenomenon of a higher, transcendental nature." Among the "things" (bhavah) of this inconceivable, spiritual nature are the Supreme Lord's personal qualities and His playful activities. There are ways to know these, but tarka is not one of them.

Having cited these negative opinions, Shri Jiva gives the next three statements to show the positive alternative. Shastra-yonitvat is the third sutra of the Vedānta-sūtra. It resolves a doubt about how one should search out the object of devotional meditation, Lord Hari—whether by one's own reason or by the direction of scripture. Some may argue that according to the Upanishadic statement gautamadyair mantavyah ("Gautama and others realized Him mentally"), logic is suitable for realizing the Lord. "No," this sutra replies, "anumana is not the means for knowing Him, because scripture is 'His source.'" Yoni literally means "womb," and in this context it signifies not "place of His generation" but "source of knowledge about Him." Shastra, Vedic scripture, is where He is revealed. This idea accords with the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad's prototypical inquiry tam tv aupanishadam purusham pricchami ("I want to ask about the Supreme Person, who is known from the Upanishads"; Brihad-aranyaka Up. 3.9.26).

Shrutes tu shabda-mulatvat is from the same section of the Vedānta-sūtra as tarkapratishōhanat. Brahman is the creator of this world, but how does He avoid the fatigue and anxiety other creators suffer? Because He created everything simply by desiring to do so, as stated in the Taittiriya Upanishad (2.6): so 'kamayata bahu syam prajayeya ("He desired, 'Let Me become many; let Me create progeny.'"). But how can the scripture say something like this, which direct perception denies?[DDB45] Shrutes tu shabda-mulatvat: "Because revealed scripture, unlike sense perception, is based on shabda-pramana." Shabda-pramana alone is the verification of the Vedas' authority. When other pramanas seem to contradict what the Vedas say, the contradiction is only apparent. Vedic shruti is irrefutable.

Uddhava, the speaker of the verse from Shrimad-Bhagavatam quoted in Text 11, was one of Lord Krishna's closest friends and advisers in the Yadu capital, Dvaraka. As the best student of Brihaspati, the teacher and priest of the demigods, Uddhava was a renowned Vedic scholar. More importantly, however, he was an intimate devotee of the Personality of Godhead. Krishna trusted him to convey His personal messages to the gopis, who were grieving in Vrindavana because of His absence. To meet and talk with the gopis as Krishna's representative, Uddhava must have been able to appreciate the most refined moods of love of God. Just before Lord Krishna ended His pastimes on earth, He spoke extensively to Uddhava about the science of devotional service; these instructions are recorded as the Uddhava-gita in the Eleventh Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. In this verse Uddhava declares that the the Vedas' authority is superhuman because it is actually the authority of the Supreme Lord; through the Vedas the Lord reveals the deliberations of His own intelligence and offers the divine vision of His personal viewpoint to those who will accept it.

Here, using scriptural evidence, Shrila Jiva Gosvami confirms the conclusion about inferential knowledge he reached in the previous Text. Having argued that logic is not the most reliable means of acquiring knowledge, and having used logic to establish this conclusion, he now presents appropriate Vedic references as the final proof. Again, one should not think that Jiva Gosvami is guilty of circular reasoning because he resorts to the Vedas themselves to confirm an assertion about the Vedas. The Vedas are self-luminous like the sun. Just as the sun illuminates itself, independent of any other source of light, so only the Vedas can establish themselves as an infallible pramana. As explained in the previous Text, this self-confirmation is not a defect in the process of shabda-pramana, or verbal revelation, because if the Vedas indeed convey knowledge of the Absolute Truth, we can justifiably look to the Vedas themselves to confirm their own authority. And those who have approached Vedic knowledge in the prescribed way have corroborated by their own realization that the Vedas do describe the Absolute Truth.

Another consideration is that our objective is to know the inconceivable reality, and after analyzing all the sources of knowledge we find that no source but the Vedas affords us the opportunity for achieving this objective. If all the best logicians, nuclear physicists, astrophysicists, and other leaders in various departments of science and philosophy who lived in the past, live in the present, and will live in the future could somehow assemble and deliberate together, they would be unable to shed any light on the nature of transcendence. Any theory this assembly might propose would only be a subjective speculation, liable to endless refutations and counterrefutations. Understanding the futility of such endeavors, Shrila Jiva Gosvami has gone directly to the heart of the matter by citing Vedic authority.

Shrila Vyasadeva presented the conclusion of all the Vedas in the concise aphorisms of the Vedanta-sutra, also called the Brahma-sutra. Sutra 2.1.11 is tarkapratishtānaḥ: "Reason has no sure basis." In other words, logic has no absolute stance because its results are always subject to revision. [DDB46]Both deductive and inductive reasoning are based on human perception and intelligence, which are unreliable owing to the four inherent human defects mentioned earlier. And since different people have varying capacities and types of intelligence, the opinions they derive from their own intelligence also vary. Logical reasoning therefore has its limitations; it is inconclusive in transcendental matters except when supported by the scriptures. In his Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (1.1.46), Shrila Rupa Gosvami quotes a verse from Bhartrihari's Vakya-padiya (1.34) to this effect:

abhiyukta-tarair anyair anyathaivopapadyate

"Expert logicians may establish their proofs with great endeavor, but these proofs will simply be contradicted by stronger logicians establishing newer conclusions." The truth of this statement is confirmed in the fields of modern science and philosophy, where there is endless theorizing about the origins of the universe and the meaning of life.

[DDB47]Shrila Jiva Gosvami also cites the Mahabharata's claim that because logic is limited one should not use it to try to understand inconceivable realities. For example, by mere logic one will certainly fail to understand such childhood pastimes of Lord Krishna's as His dama-bandhana-lila, in which His mother bound Him up with ropes. When mother Yashoda tried to tie Krishna to a grinding mortar, she was amazed to find that when she joined all her ropes together the new length of rope was still too short! Yet the black thread around Krishna's waist did not break, nor did His waist become inflated. Such inconceivable behavior by the Absolute Person is entirely beyond the reach of all logical faculties; one can understand it only by accepting the authority of Vedic testimony, shabda-pramana.

Still, although logical reasoning is not a reliable independent method in the quest for knowledge of the absolute, this does not mean all logic is useless. The very idea that logic is not fully reliable is itself known through the use of logic supported by scripture. We should certainly use our reason in trying to understand the statements of the Vedas. The Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (2.4.5) thus states, atma va are drashöavyah shrotavyo mantavyo nididhyasitavyo maitreyi: “The Self, my dear Maitreyi, should be realized, and so it should be heard about, reflected on, and deeply meditated on.” Here the word mantavyah refers to logical understanding. We should apply logic to properly understand the Vedic injunctions, but we should reject logic that runs counter to their conclusions. Mere logic can never supersede the opinions of the Vedas, which are free of the human defects.

While discussing this topic in his Sarva-samvadini, Shrila Jiva Gosvami quotes the Kurma Purana:

*purvaparavirodhena ko 'nv artho 'bhimato bhavet
ity-adyam uhanam tarkah shushka-tarkam tu varjayet*

“Conjecturing about the meaning of a scriptural passage by referring to the statements preceding and following it is called proper logic. One should abandon dry logic, however.”

We find excellent examples of dry logic among speculative philosophers. These thinkers generally use their reason to prove a preconceived opinion, and in their stubbornness they of course fail to maintain any objectivity. They disregard scriptural injunctions that do not support their conclusions. They have no success in applying their method to ultimate matters because no one can penetrate the inconceivable transcendental plane by any amount of speculation. [DDB48]The philosophical musings of such persons amount to no more than a futile mental exercise with no tangible result. No matter how profound and mesmerizing their vision, it is inevitable that some other powerful logician will eventually defeat them. The Vedas enjoin, therefore, that those who seek the Absolute Truth should abandon dry logic, but not all logic. Indeed, in the Bhagavad-gita (10.32) Lord Krishna Himself declares that logic aimed at understanding the Absolute as it is presented in scripture is one of His opulences: vadah pravadatam aham. “[DDB49]Among logicians I am the conclusive truth.” Thus Shrila Jiva Gosvami is right in accepting anumana as one of the principal means of gaining valid knowledge.

Jiva Gosvami next cites two more Brahma-sutras (1.1.3 and 2.1.27), which state emphatically that one can understand the Absolute Truth only from the revealed scriptures. He then concludes by quoting from Shrimad-Bhagavatam to show that not only human beings but even superhumans like the demigods need the Vedas’ help. Thus he emphasizes the need for everyone—humans, subhumans, and superhumans—to rely on the Vedas as the flawless means for understanding the Absolute Truth.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami begins his demonstration that the Puranas are even more important for us than the Vedas.

Gopiparanadhana: We should consider that at present the authoritative statements of the Vedas are impossible for anyone to study completely, that their meaning is very difficult to construe, and that even the sages who have explained them in commentaries disagree among one another. For these reasons we would be well advised to turn our attention to the shabda-pramana of the Itihasas and Puranas, which are substantially nondifferent from the Vedas and which explain them definitively. Since by referring to the Itihasas and Puranas one can decipher those Vedic texts whose purport is not self-evident, the Itihasa-Purana has been accepted as the appropriate source for correct knowledge in our times.

BBT: But at present it is difficult to study the Vedas in their entirety or to understand them. In addition, the great thinkers who have commented on the Vedas interpret them in contradictory ways. We should therefore study the Itihasas and Puranas, since they are Vedic in nature and are conclusive in determining the Vedas' meaning. Moreover, with the help of the Itihasas and Puranas we can infer the meaning of the unavailable portions of the Vedas. Thus at present only the Itihasas and Puranas constitute the appropriate source of valid knowledge.

TEXT 12.2:

Gopiparandhana: Thus both the Mahabharata [Adi-parva 1.267] and the Manu-samhita state, "One should complete the Vedas with the Itihasas and Puranas." And elsewhere it is said that "The name Purana comes from the word 'completion' (purana)." The Vedas cannot be made complete by what is not also Veda, just as one should not fill the missing part of a broken gold bangle with cheap tin.

BBT: This is why the Mahabharata [Adi-parva 1.267] and Manu-samhita state, "One should complement one's understanding of the Vedas with the help of the Itihasas and Puranas." And elsewhere it is stated, "The Puranas are called by that name because they complete (purana)." One should not try to "complete" or explain the meaning of the Vedas with something that is not Vedic in nature, just as one should not finish an incomplete gold bracelet with lead.

Gopiparandhana: [DDB50]"But," someone may object, "if the Vedas include the Puranas and Itihasas, we are going to have to identify as Purana something different from what the word commonly means. Otherwise the Itihasas and Puranas will not be nondifferent from the Vedas."

This objection is answered as follows: the Puranas and Itihasas are in fact nondifferent because the whole unified collection of words, expressing one particular message, has apaurusheya authority. Despite this nondifference, however, separate categories of texts have become designated in terms of differences of intonation and exact order.

BBT: But, one may object, if the Itihasas and Puranas are actually included as part of the text of the Vedas, we need to identify some other Puranas than those we are familiar with; otherwise the Itihasas and Puranas would not qualify as nondifferent from the Vedas.[DDB51]

To this we reply that the Itihasas and Puranas are nondifferent from the Vedas inasmuch as both kinds of literary works have no human author and present the same detailed knowledge. Nonetheless, there is some difference between them with regard to intonation and word order.

TEXT 12.4:

Gopiparanadhana: This nondifference of the Vedas and the Itihasa-Purana—on the grounds of the Itihasa-Purana being as apaurusheya as the Rig Veda and other Vedas—is implied in the passage of the Madhyandina-shruti beginning “Thus indeed the breath of this Supreme Being constitutes the Rig Veda, Yajur Veda, Sama Veda, Atharvangirasa Veda, Itihasa, and Purana” [Brihad-aranyaka Up. 2.4.10].

BBT: The Madhyandina-shruti [Brihad-aranyaka Up. 2.4.10] implies the oneness of the Itihasas and Puranas with the Rig and other Vedas in terms of the apaurusheya nature all these works share: “My dear Maitreyi, the Rig, Yajur, Sama, and Atharva Vedas, as well as the Itihasas and Puranas, all appear from the breathing of the Supreme Being.”

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Because the Vedic sound directly emanates from the intelligence of the Supreme Being, all the Vedas and their numerous supplements form a unified whole. They are expressions of one and the same consciousness. The intelligence of the Supreme is infinite and communicates with the variously limited intelligences of His countless creatures in an unlimited number of ways. In the words of Lord Krishna in the Bhagavad-gita (4.11), ye yatha mam prapadyante tams tathaiva bhajamy aham: “I reciprocate with each soul exactly according to how that soul relates to Me”. Thus the Vedic literature appears as many separate books in a number of categories of texts that seem to have been written at different times, for different purposes, in different styles of language, and by authors with different convictions and different levels of knowledge. The Vedas explain themselves in another way, however, and if we are willing to look at the entire Vedic literature from its own point of view instead of with the attitude of critical analysis, then with some scrutiny we can see the true picture: the apparent diversity of the texts is in fact due not to their being written by different authors but to their being spoken for several different audiences.

Vedic literature is divided into two main kinds of texts, shruti and smriti. Shruti (“what has been heard”) is eternal, revealed scripture received in this world by rishis in their meditation and repeated unchanged through disciplic chains of teachers and disciples. Smriti (“what has been remembered”) is literature composed by the sages in their own words and reflecting the message of shruti without having to maintain the same exact wording in the same order perpetually. The four Vedas are considered shruti, including in each Veda the Samhita collections of hymns and incantations, the Brahmana ritual interpretations, the more esoteric interpretations of the Aranyakas, and the philosophical Upanishads. To ordinary perception, the language and contents of the Samhitas, especially of the Rig Veda Samhita, seem the most archaic. The Brahmanas, Aranyakas, and Upanishads appear to be afterthoughts, speculations by later generations about the meaning and purpose of the Samhitas; they are written in a variety of successively “newer” dialects, gradually approaching “classical” Sanskrit. The Upanishads seem an altogether different sort of work, discussing as they do otherworldly concerns hardly touched upon in the “older” ritual shruti. There are many superficial reasons, therefore, for critical scholars to disregard the Vedas’ own claim to being a single, coherent whole. Not understanding the methods of shabda-pramana, the unfortunate Indologists can only try to dissect the separate organs of the Vedic corpus, unaware that the organism is actually alive.[DDB52]

From one viewpoint, a particular plant’s stages of growth—its seed, sprout, flower, and fruit—are quite distinct events that occur at different times. Viewed another way, however, the plant’s stages of growth are part of a timeless cycle: there have been many earlier generations of plants of the same kind, and there will many more in the future. Each new instance of the plant simply copies the permanent genetic plan. In essence, the seed of the species is no older than its fruit. Similarly, we can understand that the eternal Vedas temporarily display parts of themselves to human perception at various historical points in the cycle of ages. Shrimad-Bhagavatam calls Shri Krishna svayam bhagavan, the “original Personality of Godhead,” or in other words the oldest person; but the Bhagavatam also describes Lord Krishna’s appearance on earth as an avatara in the dynasty of the moon-god, fifty-six generations after its founder. The Vedas, being co-eternal with the Supreme Lord, also descend to earth at specific times. Thus the language of the Rig Veda can appear to be an ancestor of “later” Sanskrit, though in reality the two are simultaneously existing dialects of the same language, one liturgical and the other vernacular.

Various sages composed different kinds of smritis. Some wrote handbooks to explain the details of Vedic sacrificial performances—Shrauta-sutras for major sacrifices and Grihya-sutras for rituals performed at home. Manu and others compiled lawbooks, the Dharma-shastras. But especially important for the spiritual education of the general public are the Itihasas (epics such as the Ramayana and Mahabharata) and the Puranas. These works are written in simple, spoken Sanskrit and aim at explaining all aspects of Vedic knowledge to nonspecialists, often through entertaining historical narrations. Although both the Itihasas and the Puranas describe the ancient history of the universe, the Itihasas generally concentrate on single heroes or events, while the Puranas deal with an assortment of topics. There are eighteen major Puranas, including Shrimad-Bhagavata Purana, and at least as many secondary Puranas, or Upapuranas.

In Kali-yuga truly qualified brahmanas are rare. Those who are brahmanas in name only or who belong to the less-educated classes cannot make much sense of the shruti scriptures. There are simply too many shruti texts for anyone in our less intelligent age to read through, what to speak of comprehend. Tens of thousands of years ago this world was a different place, where educated people could understand subtle topics that are unfamiliar and inscrutable to us today. Extant commentaries on the Vedas, such as Sayana’s from the tenth century A.D., are too recent to provide reliable insight into the original intentions of the texts. The orthodox philosophical darshanas each claim Vedic connection, but all of them except Jaimini’s Mimamsa and Dvaipayana’s Vedanta merely pay lip service to apaurusheya-shabda-pramana while in practice ignoring it. Mimamsa minimizes the authority of the Upanishads and their approach to the Absolute Truth. Gautama’s Nyaya and Kanada’s Vaisheshika are involved only with the logic and structure of the physical world. In opposition to the opinions of the Upanishads, the atheist Kapila’s Sankhya and Patanjali’s Yoga consider material nature the prime cause of creation and the soul or God only a passive witness. In general, the standard darshanas disagree among one another on major points of epistemology and ontology. The existing commentaries on the ancient sutras of each of these schools were all written within the last two thousand years, long after the actual Vedic civilization had ceased to exist.

Therefore in the modern age the Itihasas and Puranas assume special value. Itihasa-puranabhyam vedam samupabrimhayet: “One should complete the Vedas with the Itihasas and Puranas.” Although the Vedas are complete in themselves, our modern understanding of them needs to be made more complete. As many authoritative sources attest, the Itihasas and Puranas are faithful to shruti, so much so that the Upanishads call them the fifth Veda. They are available and not difficult to understand. They give us access to ways of ancient wisdom that would otherwise be closed off.

The opposing opinion addressed in Text 13.2 centers on the view of some ritualistic brahmanas and impersonal Vedantists who acknowledge the authority of shruti but not of most smṛiti. According to them, when shruti texts mention Itihasas and Puranas and enjoin reciting them, the reference is not to the more recent texts now called such but to certain passages of the original Vedas. Some Vedic passages fit the functional definition of Itihasa narrations, such as the portion of the Rig Veda Samhita describing a conversation between the demigods and Lord Brahma (samyum prajapatim deva abruvan . . . yo brahmanayavagureṭ tam shatena yayatet) and the portion of the Nṛsiṃha-tapani Upanishad (7) describing [DDB53]xxx (avacanenaiva procava. . . .) Other passages describe the creation of the universe in Puranic fashion, as in the Taittiriya Upanishad's descriptions yato va imani bhutani jayante ("From that Supreme everything in existence was generated"; Taittiriya Up. 3.1) and etasmad atmana akashah bhutah ("From that Supreme Soul, the sky came into being"; Taittiriya Up. 2.1). The opponents argue that if the recently composed, popular smṛitis were the real Itihasas and Puranas one could not correctly equate them with the perfect, eternal Vedas.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami replies by confirming that all the Vedic literature, from the Rig Veda through the Puranas, is essentially a single conception. Only because the language of the shruti differs from that of the smṛiti are they designated separately. The Vedic dialect pronounces each syllable with one of three intonations, which "classical" Sanskrit does not use. In shruti texts, the exact sequence of every syllable is perpetually fixed, whereas smṛiti can be spoken again in different words in each new cycle of ages.

Concerning the references Shrila Jiva Gosvami cites in this text, the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad is also referred to as the Madhyandina-shruti because the recension cited most often belongs to the Madhyandina branch of the Vajasaneyi White Yajur Veda. Since the Atharva Veda appeared in the meditations of two sages, Atharva and Angira, it is sometimes called the Atharvangirasa Veda.

Difficulties in Studying the Vedas

In the previous Texts Shrila Jiva Gosvami has established that the Vedas—Rig, Yajur, Sama, and Atharva—constitute the valid means of acquiring knowledge about the Supreme. Here he points out the practical difficulties involved with studying them nowadays.

The first difficulty is the unavailability of the complete text of the Vedas. Originally the Veda was one, and at the advent of the current age, Kali-yuga, Shrila Vyasadeva divided it into four: vyadadhad yajna-santatyai vedam ekam catur-vidham (Bhag. 1.4.19). Then, as explained in the Kurma Purana (52.19–20), Vyasadeva's followers further divided the four Vedas into 1,130 branches:

eka-vimshati-bhedena rig-vedam kritavan pura shakhanam tu shatenaiva yajur-vedam athakarot

sama-vedam sahasrena shakhanam prabibheda sah atharvanam atho vedam bibheda navakena tu

[DDB54]"Formerly the Rig Veda was divided into 21 branches, the Yajur Veda into 100 branches, the Sama Veda into 1,000 branches, and the Atharva Veda into 9 branches." Each of these branches has 4 subdivisions,[DDB55] called Samhita, Brahmana, Aranyaka, and Upanishad. So all together the Vedas consist of 1,130 Samhitas, 1,130 Brahmanas, 1,130 Aranyakas, and 1,130 Upanishads, a total of 4,520 titles. By the influence of time, however, many texts have been lost. At present only about 11 Samhitas, 18 Brahmanas, 7 Aranyakas, and 220 Upanishads are available. This constitutes less than 6% of the original Vedas.

The second difficulty one faces in trying to study the Vedas concerns their language. There are two varieties of Sanskrit, vaidika ("Vedic") and laukika ("worldly" or "ordinary"), and the Vedas contain only the former. Years of study are required to become an accomplished scholar of ordinary Sanskrit, but if such a scholar wishes to understand Vedic Sanskrit he has to learn extra rules of grammar and a different vocabulary, which may require years of additional study. And even when the language of the Vedic verses is fathomed, these verses are so cryptic that one cannot possibly decipher them without hearing them explained by a bona fide guru in disciplic succession.

Another difficulty: Even before studying the Vedas one must study their six corollaries, or "limbs," called Vedangas. These six limbs are shiksha, the science of pronunciation; kalpa, the process of performing sacrifice; vyakarana, the rules of grammar; nirukta, the meanings and derivations of difficult words used in the Vedas; jyotisha, astronomy and astrology; and chandasa, Vedic meters. Each of these limbs is extensive and requires serious study.

To further complicate matters, with the advent of Kali-yuga human memory has grown weaker. In former times there were no books: a student could assimilate all knowledge from his spiritual master simply by hearing and remembering. But this is no longer possible. In this age the food, water, air, and even the very ether are all polluted, and all these factors have taken their toll on human memory, making it difficult to study even the available 6% of the Vedic texts, what to speak of the entire four Vedas and their branches. Shrila Jiva Gosvami therefore concludes that although the four Vedas are perfect shabda-pramana, in the present age it is impractical to study them thoroughly and thereby ascertain the Absolute Truth.

As an alternative, someone may suggest that since only a few of the Vedas are available and even they are difficult to understand, why not simply study the Vedanta-sutra, the definitive summary of the Vedic conclusions? To this Jiva Gosvami replies that various thinkers differ about the meaning of the Vedanta-sutra and so this method will likely just lead to confusion. Furthermore, important thinkers like Gautama, Kapila, and Jaimini adhere to other philosophies, so why should we accept only Vedanta rather than one of their theories?

For all these reasons we must admit that even with the help of the Vedas and Vedanta we will not be able to understand sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana. To solve this dilemma Shrila Jiva Gosvami proposes an alternative: study of the Itihasas and Puranas.

The Itihasas and Puranas are easier to understand than the Vedas because they are written in laukika Sanskrit, which is spoken, rather than Vedic Sanskrit, which is not. Furthermore, the esoteric meanings of the Vedas are more accessible in the Itihasas and Puranas because these works are narrated in story form. And whereas only the dvijas, the twice-born Vedic initiates, are permitted to study the Vedas, that restriction does not apply to the study of the Itihasas and Puranas: [DDB56] anyone may read them. Even the Puranas' original speaker, Suta Gosvami, was not a twice-born brahmana. The Itihasas and Puranas convey the same conclusions as the Vedas, and since they come from the same source, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, they are also free from the four human defects and thus qualify as perfect shabda-pramana. The Itihasas and Puranas should therefore be considered as reliable as the four Vedas.

But although the Itihasas and Puranas are one with the Vedas, this does not mean they are literally identical with them. Otherwise the words Itihasa and Purana would simply be names for certain special parts of the Vedas. The Vedas are written in Vedic Sanskrit, which necessarily involves three different tone accents—udatta (high), svarita (intermediate), and anudatta (low). In the Vedic language one word can actually be changed to another if the accent is changed. We see an example of this in the history of the demon Vritra, who was created by the chanting of a mantra during a sacrifice. This demon was supposed to kill Indra, but during the sacrifice the priests pronounced the mantra indra-shatro vivardhasva with the wrong accent. The result was just the opposite of what was intended: Indra killed Vritrasura.

Another significant difference between the four Vedas and the Itihasas and Puranas is the sequence of particular words, which is rigidly fixed in the Vedas. No one should change even one syllable of the Vedic texts, which have maintained their primeval arrangement of words since the beginning of creation. Techniques have been devised, such as pada-paöha, krama-paöha, ghana-paöha, and jaöa-paöha, for keeping the word order intact. But while no rewording or rearrangement of words is allowed in the Vedas, the Itihasas and Puranas need not be so rigidly preserved: their exact wordings are allowed to vary in different yuga cycles. Because no special techniques are used to keep the word order of the Puranas and Itihasas intact, we find slight differences from edition to edition.

Shrila Vyasa compiled the Itihasa called Mahabharata for people of this age specifically because they are not qualified to understand the Vedas. This is explained in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.4.25):

stri-shudra-dvija-bandhunam trayi na shruti-gocara
karma-shreyasi mudhanam shreya eva bhaved iha
iti bharatam akhyanam kripaya munina kritam

“Out of compassion, the sage thought it wise to do something that would enable those who were ignorant of how to act for their own welfare to achieve the ultimate goal of life. Thus he compiled the great historical narration called the Mahabharata for women, laborers, and friends of the twice-born because they do not have access to the Vedas.”

Shrila Jiva Gosvami says that the Puranas are called so because they make the Vedas complete. Does he mean the Vedas are incomplete? No, but the Puranas are a form of explanatory, supplementary literature that help us understand the terse, cryptic message of the Vedas. Like the Vedas, they convey knowledge of the Absolute Truth, and to do so they must be transcendental like the Vedas. The Skanda Purana (4.95.12) indicates the equal transcendental status of the Puranas, Itihasas, and Vedas as follows:

vede ramayane caiva purane bharate tatha
adav ante ca madhye ca harih sarvatra giyate

The conclusion is that because the Itihasas and Puranas emanate from the same source as the four Vedas and have the same purport, they are also equally authoritative.

Next Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains more about how the Itihasas and Puranas are not inferior to the Vedas.

ata eva skande prabhasa-khande:

Gopiparanadhana: Therefore the Prabhasa-khanda of the Skanda Purana states, “In ancient times Brahma, the grandfather of the immortal demigods, executed severe penances. As a result, the Vedas became manifest, along with their six supplements, their word-for-word glosses, and their reordered texts. There then appeared the entire Purana, incorporating all scriptures. The Purana is unchanging, consists of eternal sound, is auspicious, and includes as many as one billion verses. It emanated from Lord Brahma’s mouth. Listen to the description of its divisions: First is the Brahma Purana. . . .”

BBT: The Prabhasa-khanda of the Skanda Purana [DDB57][2.3.5] therefore states: “Long ago, Lord Brahma, the grandfather of the demigods, performed severe penances, and as a result the Vedas appeared, along with their six supplements and their pada and krama texts. Then the entire Purana emanated from his mouth. Composed of eternal sound and consisting of one billion verses, it is the unchanging, sacred embodiment of all scriptures. You should know that of the various divisions of this Purana, the Brahma Purana is the first.”

Gopiparanadhana: The figure of one billion mentioned here refers to the number of verses extant on Brahma’s planet. In a passage similar to the one quoted above from the Skanda Purana, the Third Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam has a passage that starts “Beginning from the front face of Brahma, gradually the four Vedas—Rig, Yajur, Sama, and Atharva—became manifest” [Bhag. 3.12.37]. In this passage we find the statement “Then Brahma created the fifth Veda—the Puranas and the histories—from all his mouths, since he could see all the past, present, and future” [Bhag. 3.12.39]. Here also the word veda refers to the Puranas and Itihasas.

BBT: The figure one billion cited here refers to the number of verses existing in Brahma’s domain. Shrimad-Bhagavatam’s Third Canto gives a similar description in the passage starting with the words rig-yajuh-samatharvakhyan vedan purvadibhir mukhaih: “Beginning from the front face of Brahma, gradually the four Vedas—Rig, Yajur, Sama, and Atharva—became manifest” [Bhag. 3.12.37]. In this passage we find the statement “Then Brahma created the fifth Veda—the Puranas and the histories—from all his mouths, since he could see all the past, present, and future” [Bhag. 3.12.39]. Here the word veda is used specifically in reference to the Itihasas and Puranas.

Gopiparanadhana: Elsewhere we find similar statements to the effect that “the Purana is the fifth Veda”: “The Itihasas and Puranas are called the fifth Veda” [Bhag. 1.4.20]. “He taught the Vedas along with the fifth of their number, the Mahabharata” [Mahabharata, Moksha-dharma 340.21].

If the Itihasas and Puranas were not Vedic, they would not be specified as “the fifth” in such statements as these, since counting necessarily involves things that belong to a same category.

BBT: And elsewhere it is said, “The Puranas are the fifth Veda,” “The Itihasas and Puranas are called the fifth Veda” [Bhag. 1.4.20], and “He taught the Vedas along with the fifth of their number, the Mahabharata” [M.Bh. Moksha-dharma 340.21].

If the Itihasas and Puranas were not Vedic, it would have been inappropriate for the preceding verses to include them as the fifth Veda, since normally one counts together only objects of the same kind.

Gopiparanadhana: Moreover, the Bhavishya Purana states, “The Veda written by Krishna [Dvaipayana Vyasa] is the fifth Veda and is known as the Mahabharata.” And the Chandogya Upanishad of the Kauthumiya branch of the Sama Veda states, “Sir, I have studied the Rig Veda, the Yajur Veda, the Sama Veda, the fourth or Atharva Veda, and the Itihasa-Purana, which is the fifth Veda.” And so on.

BBT: Also, the Bhavishya Purana states, “The fifth Veda, written by Shri Krishna-dvaipayana Vyasa, is called the Mahabharata.”

Gopiparanadhana: Thus is disproved the objection that denies the authenticity of the Itihasas and Puranas as we know them by presuming that the Itihasa and Purana mentioned in the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad’s statement about “the breath of this Supreme Being” are nothing more than certain parts of the four Vedas. The same is said by the words beginning “First is the Brahma Purana. . . .”

BBT: Thus is refuted the frequently raised objection that the Itihasas and Puranas, said in the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad to emanate from the breath of the Supreme Being, are included in the four Vedas and therefore have no separate existence. The same is stated in the words “Brahma Purana is the first . . .”(Skanda Purana). [DDB58]

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

These quotations from an assortment of sources, both smṛiti and śruti, further justify the Itihasas’ and Puranas’ reputation as equivalents of the Vedas. Smṛiti references like the passage cited in Text 13.4 from the Chandogya Upanishad are the primary evidence of the Itihasas’ and Puranas’ status as the fifth Veda, but Śrīla Jīva Gosvāmī is also drawing from the Puranas themselves for additional insight. How four-headed Brahma manifests the Puranas along with the Vedas during his work of periodic re-creation is described in the verses from the Skanda Purana quoted in Text 13.1. Lord Brahma is the grandfather of the immortal (or more properly very long-lived) demigods, who descend from Marīci and his other sons. Brahma does not create ex nihilo the already existing material cosmos, which after the annihilation at the end of each of his days lies dormant in his sleeping body. Nor does he create the eternal Vedas. Therefore the account of the Third Canto of Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam concerning his production of the Vedas uses the verb sashrije, “he sent forth”.

According to the Skanda Purana, from his mouths Brahma first manifested the Vedas and their integral supplements—the six Vedāṅgas, the pada-pāṭhas, and the krama-pāṭhas. The six corollary texts known as the Vedāṅgas present scientific information needed to properly recite the Vedas, understand them, and use them in rituals. The Shiksha-vedāṅga teaches correct pronunciation and intonation, as differently practiced by the schools of each Veda; Chandas is the theory of poetic meters; Vyākaraṇa is grammar; Nirukta is Vedic lexicography, which explains the meaning and etymology of less familiar words; Jyotiṣa is astronomy, used for calculating the correct times for performing sacrifices; and Kalpa describes the details of rituals. The pada-pāṭhas (“word-by-word readings”) help in studying the Samhitas by providing a transcription of each word and word-compound in the forms they theoretically had before the many euphonic sound changes. To better assure exact memorization, the Samhitas are also meant to be recited phrase by phrase in the krama-pāṭhas (“reordered readings”), where the words are repeated in groups of two, each second word of a pair becoming the first word of the next pair. For example, a sequence represented by abcd in a Samhita becomes ab/bc/cd in the krama-pāṭha.

After manifesting the Vedas and these corollaries, Lord Brahma produced all the Puranas at once. The Skanda Purana describes them as summaries of the contents of all the Vedic scriptures (sarva-veda-mayam), unchanging (dhruvam) even though they are officially in the smṛiti category, expressions of the same transcendental sound of śabda-pramāṇa as the Vedas (nitya-śabda-mayam), and all of them beneficial to study (puṇyam). The Puranas are said to contain altogether one billion verses (śata-koṭi-pravistaram); the eighteen Puranas known on earth, however, contain a total of only 400,000 verses, having been condensed by Śrīla Veda-vyāsa from the one original Purana, which is still current on higher planets in its much longer version. (See Text 14.3.)

The statements cited from the Moksha-dharma and Bhaviṣya Purana specifically call the Mahābhārata the fifth Veda. Of course, the Mahābhārata is one of the important Itihasas, and more commonly all the Itihasas and Puranas together are termed the fifth Veda. In any case, strictly speaking there are four Vedas; references to a fifth are more or less poetical, based on the special apauruṣeya status of the Itihasa-Purana. The Bhaviṣya Purana calls the Mahābhārata the Karṣṇa Veda because it was written by Krishna Dvaipayana Vyāsa.

These statements put to final rest the objection previously discussed, that the Itihasas and Puranas mentioned in shruti cannot be the ones edited by Veda-vyasa and open to the purview even of uneducated shudras. Hearing the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad's enumeration of scriptures that proceed from the breath of the Supreme (Text 12.4), one might feel free to say that the Itihasas and Puranas mentioned there are not necessarily separate from the first-listed four Vedas. Now we see, however, that many other authorized scriptures place the Itihasas and Puranas in a category of their own, equal to but separate from the first four Vedas. The Skanda Purana, for example, after describing the emanation of the Vedas and then the Puranas from Lord Brahma, immediately lists the Puranas, beginning with the Brahma Purana. These are unquestionably the eighteen major Puranas edited by Shrila Vyasadeva.

The Itihasas and Puranas Are Vedic

To substantiate the statement from the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad quoted in Text 12.4 (B.a. Up. 2.4.10), which establishes the Vedic nature of the Itihasas and Puranas, Shrila Jiva Gosvami here cites more evidence from the Puranas, Itihasas, and Upanishads. From these references the following is clear: The Puranas and Itihasas have the same source as the four Vedas and are in fact called the fifth Veda.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami here refers to the frequent objection that the Itihasas and Puranas cannot be the fifth Veda because they are part of the four Vedas. While explaining the above-mentioned statement from the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad, some followers of the Mimamsaka school claim that the words Itihasa and Purana refer to historical passages found in some parts of the Vedas and not to separate works. Examples of shruti statements sometimes considered Puranic are yato va imani bhutani jayante ("from whom these beings take birth"; Taittiriya Up. 3.1) and sa brahmana shrijati rudrena vilapayati harir adir anadih ("Lord Hari creates through Brahma and destroys through Rudra, but He Himself is the beginningless source of all"). These and similar passages are referred to as "[DDB59]Purana" because they deal with creation and destruction, which are among the subjects treated in the Puranas.

Mimamsakas further argue that over an immense period many of these original Puranic portions of the Vedas were lost and those that remained became difficult to understand. Therefore, the Mimamsakas propose, Shrila Vyasa mercifully wrote new Itihasas and Puranas for the benefit of the unintelligent people of Kali-yuga, and this is what is described in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.4.25). Hence the Itihasas and Puranas mentioned in the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad are part of the Vedas, not independent books, and therefore it is incorrect to conclude that they are the fifth Veda. This is the Mimamsakas' argument.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami refutes this argument with references from the Vedas and also from the Itihasas and Puranas themselves. These citations confirm the Itihasas' and Puranas' status as the fifth Veda on the grounds that they emanated separately from Lord Brahma's mouths. If they were only parts of the Vedas, there would be no reason for these authoritative scriptures to call them the fifth Veda. Moreover, there are many statements about the apaurusheya, Vedic nature of the Itihasas and Puranas in the Vedic Samhitas, Brahmanas, Aranyakas, Upanishads, Kalpa-sutras, Dharma-sutras, and Grihya-sutras, as well as in the Puranas, Itihasas, and other smriti texts. Here are a few of these statements:

ucchishöaj jajnire sarve divi deva divi-shritah*

"The Rig, Sama, Yajur, and Atharva Vedas appeared from the Supreme Lord along with the Puranas and all the demigods residing in the heavenly planets" (Atharva Veda 11.7.24).

sa brihatim disham anu vyacalat tam itihash ca puranam ca gathash ca itihasya ca sa vai puranasya ca gathanam ca narashamsinam ca priyam dhama bhavati ya evam veda.

“He approached the Brihati meter, and thus the Itihasas, Puranas, Gathas, and Narashamsis became favorable to him. One who knows this verily becomes the beloved abode of the Itihasas, Puranas, Gathas, and Narashamsis” (Atharva Veda 15.6.10, 12).

evam ime sarve veda nirmitah sa-kalpah sa-rahasyah sa-brahmanah sopanishatkah setihasah sanvakhyatah sa-puranah.

“In this way all the Vedas were manifested along with the [DDB60]kalpas, rahasyas, Brahmanas, Upanishads, Itihasas, anvakhyatas, and Puranas” (Gopatha Brahmana, Purva 2.10).

nama va rig-vedo yajur-vedah sama-veda atharvanash caturtha itihasa-puranah pancamo vedanam vedah.

“Indeed Rig, Yajur, Sama, and Atharva are the names of the four Vedas. The Itihasas and Puranas are the fifth Veda” (Chandogya Up. 7.1.4).

mimamsate ca yo vedan shadbhir angaih sa-vistaraih
itihasa-puranani sa bhaved veda-para-gah

“One who thoroughly studies the Vedas along with their six limbs and the Itihasas and Puranas becomes a true knower of the Vedas” (Vyasa-smriti 4.45).

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains why the Itihasas and Puranas are counted as the fifth Veda.

Gopiparanadhana: These words spoken by Suta Gosvami in the Vayu Purana [60.16–18, 21–22] describe why the Itihasa and Purana are considered the fifth Veda:

"The Personality of Godhead [Shrila Vyasadeva] then chose me as an authorized speaker of the Itihasas and Puranas. At first there was only one Veda, the Yajur Veda. Vyasadeva divided it into four parts. Within these were manifested the ritual activities of the four kinds of priests, on which basis he arranged for the performance of sacrifice. With the yajur-mantras he arranged the activities of the Adhvaryu priests, with the rig-mantras those of the Hota priests, with the sama-mantras those of the Udgata priests, and with the atharva-mantras those of the Brahma priests.^{1/4} O best of brahmanas, out of the akhyanas, upakhyanas and gathas Vyasadeva fashioned his summary of the Puranas, being thoroughly conversant with the purport of the Puranas. Whatever was left over [from the division of the Veda into four] is considered Yajur Veda. Such is the definitive word on understanding the revealed scriptures."

BBT: In the Vayu Purana [60.16–18, 21–22] Suta Gosvami explains why the Itihasas and Puranas are considered the fifth Veda:

"Shrila Vyasadeva, the almighty Supreme Lord, accepted me [Suta Gosvami] as the qualified speaker of the Itihasas and Puranas. In the beginning there was only one Veda, the Yajur Veda, which Shrila Vyasa divided into four parts. These gave rise to the four activities called catur-hotra, by means of which Shrila Vyasa arranged for the performance of sacrifice.

"The adhvaryu priests carry out their responsibilities with yajur-mantras, the hota priests with rig-mantras, the udgata priests with sama-mantras, and the brahma priests with atharva-mantras."

Suta Gosvami further states:

"O best of the twice-born, thereafter Shrila Vyasa, who best knows the meaning of the Puranas, compiled them and the Itihasas by combining various [DDB61]akhyanas, upakhyanas, and gathas. Whatever remained after Vyasa divided the Vedas into four parts was also Yajur Veda. This is the conclusion of the scriptures."

Gopiparanadhana: We also see that the Itihasas and Puranas are employed in the recitation of the Brahma-yajna, as is enjoined, "[The texts to be recited include] Brahmanas, Itihasas and Puranas" [Taittiriya Aranyaka 2.9]. This could not be the case if the Itihasas and Puranas were not Vedic. The Supreme Lord says in the Matsya Purana [53.8], "O best of brahmanas, foreseeing that in the course of time the Puranas will be neglected, I appear as Vyasa in each age and make an abridgement of them." According to what we have seen here, what the Lord means in saying this is "I edit the already existing Purana for easier assimilation."

BBT: The Puranas are also used in the formal study of the Vedas called brahma-yajna: yad brahmananitihasa-puranani. "The Itihasas and Puranas are Vedas" [Taittiriya Aranyaka 2.9]. If the Itihasas and Puranas were not Vedic, they would not be used this way in the brahma-yajna.

Therefore[NEW62] in the Matsya Purana [53.8–9[DDB63]] the Supreme Lord says, “O best of the twice-born, foreseeing that the Purana will gradually be neglected, in every age I assume the form of Vyasa and abridge it.” In other words, Shrila Vyasa condenses the already existing Purana so that people can easily comprehend it.

Gopiparanadhana: Since it has been stated that "Whatever was left over is considered Yajur Veda," these four hundred thousand verses were not new compositions but the most useful portions of the original collected into an essential abridgement in this world of mortals.

BBT: Suta's statement [quoted in Text 14.1] that “whatever remained after Vyasa divided the Vedas into four parts was also Yajur Veda” indicates that the essence of the original Purana formed the abridged version of four hundred thousand verses in the world of mortals. It is not a different composition.

Purport by Gopiparandhana prabhu

Ugrashrava Suta, the son of Romaharshana, learned the Puranas from his father, whom Krishna Dvaipayana Vyasa chose from among his disciples to be the prime authority on Itihasas and Puranas. It is known from accounts in the Puranas that Ugrashrava also studies the Puranas from Vyasadeva directly. Therefore he says in the passage cited here from the Vayu Purana that it was Vyasadeva who authorized him as a Puranic bard.

This does not contradict Shrimad-Bhagavatam's account of his being later appointed by Lord Balarama to replace his father as speaker at the great sacrifice at Naimisharanya after Romaharshana's unfortunate death there.

Ugrashrava here affirms the apaurusheya authority of the Puranas by tracing out their Vedic origin. Before Shrila Veda-vyasa's editing, there was only one undivided Veda. The four different kinds of mantras comprising the four basic Vedas were then mixed together indiscriminately, along with other explanatory and historical texts. Intelligent brahmanas before Kali-yuga were competent enough to locate the particular mantras they needed from the unordered collection. Only for the generally corrupt age of Kali is it necessary to divide the Vedas into separate books. The Bhagavatam's analogy to explain this process is that of a rich man's collection of rare jewels. An owner of many diamonds, rubies, emeralds and sapphires who has been keeping them mixed in one box might have someone sort them out for him into four separate piles. After this has been done, nothing has changed substantially in the collection, only the order.

rig-atharva-yajuh-samnam/ rashir uddhritya vargashah
catasrah samhitash cakre/ mantrair mani-gana iva

"Shrila Vyasadeva separated the mantras of the Rig, Atharva, Yajur and Sama Vedas into four divisions, just as one sorts out a mixed collection of jewels into piles. Thus he composed four distinct Vedic literatures" [Bhag. 12.6.50].

Four categories of Vedic mantras exist eternally, each serving a different function through a different style of language. Rig-mantras praise the demigods who represent the personal powers of the Supreme Lord. The Hota priests who use them in sacrifices are compared to the master of ceremonies and his assistants at a feast, who invite the special guests, greet them and make arrangements for their satisfaction. The Adhvaryu priests are magicians who conjure up the sacrificial environment from simple objects in ordinary space and time. The yajur-mantras they chant effect mystic transformations through the power of the language of evocation. Examples of this special, creative mode of speech are sometime found in mundane life, as when a judge declares "I now pronounce you man and wife" or "I sentence you to be hung until dead. May God have mercy on your soul." The sama-mantras sung by the Udgata priests are extremely complex musical modifications of selected rig-mantras. Thoroughly permuted and interpolated with non-significant syllables, hardly recognizable as music to human ears, the sama songs accompany the more elaborate sacrifices in which soma is offered. The Brahma priests' atharva-mantras are mainly reserved for use when a mistake or inauspicious intrusion in the performance requires rectification. They are expressed in a language of incantation against various inimical forces.

According to this statement of the Vayu Purana, the original, combined Veda was known as Yajur Veda. One might question how this does not disagree with the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad's description of the breathing of Lord Vishnu creating the Vedas one after another, the Rig Veda being first [Text 12.4]. Shrila Radha-mohana Vacaspati, in his commentary on Shri Tattva-sandarbha--written not long after Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana's commentary but without reference to Shrila Baladeva's opinions--answers this objection. When the Rig and other Vedas are said to have appeared in distinct order from Maha-Vishnu at the beginning of this cycle of creation, what is being referred to is only their periodic re-manifestation. Perpetually all four co-exist, and because the yajur-mantras are the most prominent, the complete corpus can be called Yajur Veda by the hermeneutic rule, adhikyena vyapadesha bhavanti ("A name may be assigned according to the most prominent category of a mixed group.").

Following his division of the Veda into four, Shrila Vyasadeva fashioned portions of the remaining Yajur Veda material into the Itihasas and Puranas. The Puranas and epics are thus not human creations but as authorless as the Vedas. Specifically, the portions Vyasadeva used are called akhyanas, upakhyanas and gathas. Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana defines these: Akhyanas are Puranic texts according to the strict definition of five required topics. Upakhyanas are other historical accounts. Gathas are specially composed musical poems. In Shrila Baladeva's opinion, the words purana-samhitash cakre mean that Vyasadeva "fashioned his own summary of the Puranas," namely Mahabharata. Mahabharata is composed of akhyanas, upakhyanas and gathas as defined by Baladeva Vidyabhushana.

Radha-mohana Gosvami's opinion is different, that purana-samhitah refers to all the Puranas as a body. The followers of Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana in his disciplic succession should acknowledge the first priority of his opinion. In any case, both interpretations confirm the Vedic status of the Puranas. Shrila Radha-mohana Gosvami's commentary is considered also authoritative by knowledgeable Gaudiya Vaishnavas, and he does not contradict Baladeva Vidyabhushana on crucial matters. But there are some misled Vaishnavas who belittle Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana with the idea that he does not truly represent Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu; they favor Radha-mohana's commentary for its supposedly rival views, even though the commentary itself shows no clear indication that he had the intention of being Shrila Baladeva's philosophical adversary.

In the verse of the Matsya Purana quoted in Text 14.2, the Supreme Lord says "I appear as Vyasa in each age." "Each age" here means each cycle of ages. Krishna-dvaipayana Vyasa advented near the end of Dvapara-yuga, and as confirmed by the Vishnu Purana, a different person is empowered by the Personality of Godhead to take the role of Vyasa at the same time in each cycle of ages:

ashöavimshati kritva vai/ veda vyasta maharshibhih
vaivasvate 'ntare hy asmin/ dvapareshu punah punah

veda-vyasa vyatita ye/ ashöavimshati sattama caturdha yaih krito vedo/ dvapareshu punah punah

"During this period of Vaivasvata Manu's reign, already twenty eight different exalted sages have edited the Vedas in one Dvapara age after another. Twenty eight Veda-vyasas have already come and gone, O best of souls, dividing the Veda into four parts in each Dvapara-yuga" [Vishnu Pur. 3.3.9–10].

Text 14.2 mentions the sacrifice called brahma-yajna. This is one of the five "great sacrifices" (panca-maha-yajnah) enjoined for every Vedic householder brahmana as daily atonement for the unavoidable violence he commits in the five "places of slaughter" in the house: the kitchen stove, the stone on which rice is ground, the broom, the spice mortar and the water pot. The demigods must be honored by deva-yajna, daily fire sacrifices. Revered forefathers are placated by pitri-yajna, xxxxxxxxx. Human beings are satisfied by hospitality to guests. All living beings are shown respect by bhuta-yajna, the symbolic offering of a portion of food from one's plate at every meal. The Vedic sages are thanked by performing brahma-yajna, recitation from various scriptures at the time of chanting the Gayatri mantra. The details of brahma-yajna are specified in various shrutis such as the Shatapatha Brahmana and Taittiriya Aranyaka.

The Itihasas and Puranas Are the Fifth Veda

The Itihasas and Puranas are called the fifth Veda because they are derived from the original Veda, the Yajur Veda. This is explained in the section of the Vayu Purana that describes the catur-hotra priests. There are four kinds of ritviks, or priests, needed to perform a Vedic sacrifice, and their duties were originally all known from the Yajur Veda. But later on the Veda was divided into four parts for easy understanding and application. The duties of the four priests—adhvaryu, udgata, hota, and brahma—are known from each of these four divisions. The adhvaryu is associated with the Yajur Veda, and his duties include sanctifying the sacrificial paraphernalia and measuring the shape and size of the sacrificial arena. The udgata priest studies the Sama Veda and chants hymns during the sacrifice to propitiate the Lord. The hota priest decorates the altar, invokes the demigods, pours oblations, and chants the Rig Veda. The brahma priest is a student of the Atharva Veda and acts as the supervisor and coordinator of sacrificial ceremonies.

After Shrila Vyasa compiled the four Vedas, there still remained one billion verses from the original Yajur Veda. These verses became the original Purana, which is still available on the heavenly planets. Out of compassion for the people of Kali-yuga, Vyasadeva extracted five hundred thousand essential verses from this original Purana. Four hundred thousand of these He divided into the eighteen Puranas. The remaining verses formed the Itihasa called Mahabharata. The Itihasa and Puranas are therefore called the fifth Veda because they were produced from the original Veda. Another reason the Puranas and Itihisas are considered the fifth Veda, distinct from the other four, is that the priests of the four Vedas do not use the Puranas and Itihisas in sacrificial ceremonies, even though these works are studied along with the Vedas.

In his commentary on the Vishnu Purana (3.6.16), Shrila Shridhara Svami defines the terms akhyana, upakhyana, and gatha:

svayam-drishöartha-kathanam prahur akhyanakam budhah shrutasyarthasya kathanam upakhyanam
pracakshate gathas tu pitri-prithivy-adi-gitayah

“An akhyana is a narration of something witnessed by the speaker, while an upakhyana is a narration of something the speaker has not witnessed but rather heard about. Gathas are songs about the forefathers and earthly beings.”

The words yac chishöam tu yajur-vedah (“The remaining part was also called Yajur Veda”; Vayu Purana 60.16.22) signify that the Itihisas and Puranas are apaurusheya, not composed by any mortal; thus they have the same authority as the Vedas, having been compiled by Shrila Vyasa from the Supreme Lord’s very breath. While compiling the Puranas and Itihisas He included some of His own statements to make the narration more easily comprehensible. For example, in the Bhagavad-gita the words “Arjuna said” and “Krishna said” are added by Shrila Vyasa to help the reader understand. But we should not consider even these added statements to have been written by a mortal being, since Vyasa is an incarnation of the Supreme Lord. This is evident from the verse of the Matsya Purana quoted in the text.

Someone might raise the objection that from the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (2.4.10) it is clear that the four Vedas individually appeared from the Supreme Lord. Why, then, is it said that Vyasadeva divided the one Veda into four parts? We reply that while it is true that each Veda individually emanated from the Lord, originally all four Vedas were collectively called the Yajur Veda because that Veda is much larger than the other three. Generally, the largest member of a set can represent the whole set. In Sanskrit this is called adhikyena vyapadesha bhavanti, or the law that the largest constituent represents the whole. A herd of cows with just a few buffaloes in it is still called a herd of cows, and the four fingers and one thumb are usually called the five fingers. Because the four Vedas had become disordered, Shri Vyasa rearranged the Vedic texts to help clearly define the duties of the four sacrificial priests. How the Vedas became mixed up because of a curse by Gautama Rishi will be told in Text 16.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami further substantiates his conclusion about the Vedic nature of the Itihisas and Puranas, and he also explains the meaning of the name Veda-vyasa.

Gopiparanadhana: The same picture is drawn, describing the Puranas in conjunction with the Vedas, in the Vayaviya-samhita [1.1.37–38] of the Shiva Purana: "The great master condensed the four Vedas and divided them into four parts. Because he separated the Vedas into parts, he is called Veda-vyasa. He also condensed the Purana into four hundred thousand verses, although even today it contains one billion verses on the planets of the demigods."

"Was condensed" (sankshiptam) here implies "by him" to complete the idea.

BBT: Similarly, the Vayaviya-samhita of the Shiva Purana indicates the Vedic nature of the Puranas by discussing their appearance along with the Vedas:

"The ingenious Lord abridged the Veda and then divided it [vyasta] into four. Therefore He became known as Veda-vyasa. He also summarized the Puranas in four hundred thousand verses, but in the heavenly planets they still comprise one billion verses" [Shiva Purana 7.1.1.37–38].

Here the word sankshiptam ("condensed") implies "condensed by Him."

Gopiparanadhana: The names of Puranas like Skanda and Agni, however, pertain to the Puranas' speakers, in the same way as the names Kaöhaka and so on. Or else, they pertain to the conventional order in which they were composed. Therefore when we sometimes hear that the Puranas are not eternal, this is only in reference to their visible manifestation and disappearance.

Thus we have proven [in Texts 13–15.2] that the Itihasas and Puranas are Vedic.

BBT: The name of a Purana—Skanda, Agni, and so on—refers to its original speaker, as with the Kaöha Upanishad, which was promulgated by the sage Kaöha. Or else the name refers to the person who arranged the Purana's contents. The reason the Puranas are occasionally described as impermanent is that they are sometimes manifest and sometimes not.

In this way[NEW64] the Vedic nature of the Itihasas and Puranas is established.

Gopiparanadhana: That persons like Suta Gosvami had the privilege to speak the Itihasas and Puranas follows the pattern of the qualification for chanting the name Shri Krishna, which is the perfect fruit of the creeper of the entire Vedic shruti. As the Prabhasa-khanda states, "This name Krishna is the sweetest of the sweet, the most auspicious of all auspicious things. It is the perfect fruit of the creeper of the entire Vedic shruti. In essence it is pure, living spirit. O best of the Bhrigus, any human being who just chants this name even once, whether with faith or neglectfully, will become liberated."

BBT: Yet Suta and others who are not twice-born are qualified to recite the Puranas in the same way that every person is qualified to chant Lord Krishna's holy name, the transcendental fruit of the creeper of all the Vedas. As stated in the Prabhasa-khanda [of the Skanda Purana]:

"O best of the Bhrigu dynasty, the holy name of Krishna is the sweetest of the sweet and the most auspicious of the auspicious. It is the transcendental fruit of all the Vedas and is purely spiritual and conscious. Whoever chants it but once, whether with faith or with contempt, is liberated."

BBT: The Vishnu Dharma Purana states:

Gopiparanadhana: Even though we understand that the Itihasas and Puranas are just two types of shastra among many which elucidate the meaning of the Vedas, still these two are special on account of the special status of their promulgator. As stated in the Padma Purana, "Even Brahma and other demigods do not know everything Dvaipayana Vyasa knows. He understands everything known to anyone else, but some things he knows no one else can comprehend."

BBT: Moreover, even if we count the Itihasas and Puranas among the books explaining the meaning of the Vedas, still they are unique because their compiler is so glorious. The Padma Purana says, "Brahma and others do not know what Bhagavan Veda-vyasa knows. Indeed, He knows everything known to others, but what He knows is beyond everyone else’s grasp."

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Krishna Dvaipayana Vyasa is omniscient because he is an empowered incarnation of God. "I appear as Vyasa in each age" (Text 14.2). Therefore everything Vyasadeva has written and edited is self-evident truth. In Bhagavad-gita (15.15) Lord Krishna claims that Vyasadeva is His own expansion: vedanta-krid veda-vid eva caham ("I am the author of Vedanta-sutra and the knower of the Vedas."). The Supreme Lord does not present Himself as the author, only as the perfect knower, of the Vedas, which are in fact co-eternal with Him.

Vyasadeva did two things with the Vedas: he condensed and divided them. These functions are expressed by two different verbs, sankship and vyas. His condensing the vast text of the Vedas did not violate their sanctity, but simply reflected the natural process of the Vedas' concealing some of their own complexity from the population of a less intelligent age. It is known from various sources that not all the Vedic mantras are available at any particular time, especially in Kali-yuga: In his Karma-mimamsa-sutra, Jaimini Rishi teaches methods for interpolating sacrificial instructions that he assumes were once specified in no longer available passages of the Brahmana shrutis. As described in the Twelfth Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, Yajnavalkya worshipped the sun-god to obtain a revelation of "new" yajur-mantras. In general, Vedic rishis receive mantras in their meditation. They are not authors, but transmitters. Their service is essential to human society because from time to time lost mantras need to be revived.

Both of his services of condensing and editing Shrila Vyasa also performed for the Puranas. The Puranas are eternal like the Vedas, and like the Vedas they are periodically forgotten. Vyasadeva's spiritual master Narada specifically instructed him to recompile the Puranas in the form in which they are known on earth.

The Puranas are not original compositions of their namesakes. Only some of them are named after their speakers, others after the deities they glorify. In either case, the names are fixed by eternal convention; it is a timeless fact that the first Purana is named after Brahma, but only coincidental that a certain jiva assumes the role of Brahma at the beginning of a cycle of creation to be the Purana's object of worship. The same situation can be observed among the Vedic shrutis. One branch of the Yajur Veda is called Kaöha or Kaöhaka, for example, because in each age a sage appears with the name Kaöha to become the teacher of this recession and pass it on to his disciplic succession, the Kaöhakas.

That only properly purified and trained brahmanas should be allowed to teach the Vedas is not merely a prejudice of caste-conscious ritualists; Vaishnava authorities also acknowledge this standard. Stri-shudra-dvija-bandhunam/ trayi na shruti-gocara: "Women, shudras and unqualified members of brahmana families should not even hear from the three principal Vedas" (Bhag. 1.4.25). A doubt may therefore arise: If the Itihasas and Puranas are Vedic, why was a lower-class person invited by the sages at Naimisharanya to speak them? Many of the most prominent sages in the universe had gathered at Naimisha Forest at the beginning of Kali-yuga to perform a one-thousand-year soma sacrifice in an attempt to help minimize the ensuing corruption of human civilization. But didn't they instead advance the age's degradation by asking Ugrashrava Suta, a half-caste descendent of a kshatriya man and brahmana woman, to become in effect their preceptor? Shrila Jiva Gosvami replies, that just as all human beings are authorized to chant the holy names of Lord Krishna even though these names are the most sacred essence of the Vedic hymns, the perfect fruit of the creeper of the entire nigama or shruti, similarly the Itihasas and Puranas are open for the study of everyone. Hari-nama, the holy names of God, are universally available on the authority of the orders of God Himself and the statements of revealed scripture; studying the epics and Puranas is authorized for all persons without restriction in the same way.

It is true that a mantra containing names of God is effective only when received by proper initiation from a representative of the mantra's disciplic succession, and that in previous ages the names of Krishna and His internal pleasure potency were generally worshipped only by those who were already very purified, out of fear of the adverse effects of offenses against hari-nama. Therefore the Hare Krishna maha-mantra in particular is almost never mentioned openly in shruti or smriti. Nevertheless, in our current age Chaitanya Mahaprabhu has given automatic initiation to everyone by issuing His request that every man, woman and child in the universe chant the Hare Krishna maha-mantra. He has offered to take on His own head the reactions of our offenses against hari-nama when we chant according to His order.

Text 15.4 states that "Without doubt all the Vedas are given a firm foundation in the Puranas." According to Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana, this means that the Puranas help fortify the position of the Vedas by explaining parts of them that are difficult to understand and replacing other parts that are missing. Here the Mahabharata and Puranas have again been mentioned together as virtually equivalent. The Itihasas and Puranas are closely allied classes of literature, differentiated mostly by stylistic formalities. The Mahabharata and Puranas share the distinction of having passed through the hands of Dvaipayana Vyasa, even though the Dharma-shastras and Smriti-shastras compiled by lesser sages also present useful knowledge from the Vedas. Shrila Vyasadeva's unique genius was to find the eternal, universal essence of Vedic knowledge; the teachings of other sages was almost always limited in applicability to their own times and to certain social strata.

Verses have been cited here from the Vayaviya-samhita and the Prabhasa-khanda. These are major sections of two large Puranas, the 24,000-verse Shiva and 81,000-verse Skanda Puranas.

The Itihasas, Puranas, and Vedas All Have the Same Origin

The word sankshiptam in the verse cited here from the Shiva Purana (7.1.1.37) is significant. It means “condensed,” not “composed.” Shrila Veda-vyasa, the literary incarnation of God, condensed the already existing Vedas. Then He took unused verses from that abridged portion and made them into the Puranas. Thus He did not create the Puranas as an original composition. This confirms that the Puranas, by virtue of their transcendental origin, are equal to the four Vedas. They are eternal and apaurusheya.

One may protest that since the Puranas have names such as Skanda and Agni they must have been composed by these persons, and so they are neither eternal nor apaurusheya. But if this were the case, the Vedas themselves would have to be considered noneternal compositions since their parts have names like Kaõha Upanishad and Aitareya Brahmana, which refer to the sages Kaõha and Aitareya. The explanation is that portions of the Vedas are named after certain sages not because the sages[DDB65] wrote those portions but because they were these portions’ main teachers and exponents. Since persons with names like Kaõha and Aitareya appear in every millennium, one should not think that before the appearance of the known Kaõha and Aitareya these names were meaningless words in the Vedas.

In the same way, several of the Puranas are named either after their first teacher or the person who rearranged them. It may sometimes be that over the course of time a certain Vedic work becomes less popular or is completely forgotten on this planet. Eventually some sage or demigod again speaks it, and then the book becomes known by his name. An example of this is given in Shrimad-Bhagavatam, where sage Yajnavalkya is described as receiving the Vajasaneyi-samhita of the Yajur Veda from the sun-god: “Satisfied by such glorification, the powerful sun-god assumed the form of a horse (vaja) and presented to the sage Yajnavalkya the yajur-mantras previously unknown in human society” (Bhag. 12.6.73). Just as the Lord seems to take birth and disappear like a mortal being, the Vedic literature similarly becomes manifest and unmanifest. Shrimad-Bhagavatam had become unmanifest at the end of the Dvapara-yuga, five thousand years ago. At that time Narada Muni instructed Vyasa to again reveal the Bhagavatam. If the Bhagavatam had not existed before, Puranas older than the Bhagavatam would not refer to it by name. In the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda, Gautama advises Ambarisha Maharaja, who reigned in the Satya-yuga, to study Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

Thus the Puranas are eternal, but sometimes they are manifest and sometimes unmanifest in human society. As the Lord is independent in His appearance and disappearance, so by His free will He speaks the revealed scriptures through the medium of various sages and gives these scriptures various names.

Another objection to the Itihasas’ and Puranas’ Vedic status may be stated as follows: In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.4.25) Suta Gosvami says, stri-shudra-dvija-bandhunam trayi na shruti-gocara . . . iti bharatam akhyanam kripaya munina kritam: “Women, laborers, and unqualified descendants of the twice-born have no access to the Vedas. . . . Therefore the sage [Vyasa] mercifully compiled the Mahabharata.” Since the Mahabharata, the foremost of the Itihasas, was written specifically for women and others with no access to the Vedas, how can the Itihasas be part of the Vedas? Moreover, in Text 13 of the same chapter, Shaunaka Rishi says to Suta Gosvami, manye tvam vishaye vacam snatam anyatra chandasat: “We consider you expert in all subjects except the Vedas.” So if Suta Gosvami was not expert in the Vedas yet was being requested to narrate the Puranas (specifically the Bhagavata Purana), how can the Puranas be part of the Vedas?

Anticipating these objections, Shrila Jiva Gosvami compares the privilege of studying the Itihasas and Puranas to that of chanting Krishna’s holy name, the choicest fruit of the Vedas. The holy name of Krishna is purely Vedic, yet anyone may chant it, including those who have no right to study the Vedas. Similarly, the Itihasas and Puranas are also purely Vedic, yet even a sincere shudra or outcaste can approach them, just as he or she may chant the holy name of the Lord.

As one can gain all perfection simply by chanting Lord Krishna’s holy name, which is the ultimate fruit of the Vedas, so one can learn the essence of the Vedas by studying the Itihasas and Puranas, even without studying the Vedas themselves. If one could not do so, then knowledge of how to attain perfection would be inaccessible to those who are barred from studying the Vedas because they are not twice-born.

Finally, even if one were to include the Itihasas and Puranas among other smṛiti scriptures written by saintly sages to explain the meaning of the Vedas, the Itihasas and Puranas occupy a unique place because of the eminence of their propounder, Śrīla Vyāsadeva, an incarnation of the Supreme Lord.

In the next Text Śrīla Jīva Gosvāmī elaborates on how the Itihasas and Puranas are superexcellent by virtue of their compiler's divinity.

Gopiparanādhana: The Skanda Purāṇa says, "These others make use of small collections of ideas they have carved out from the infinite sky of Vyāsadeva's mind. They take advantage of these borrowed ideas like people who pick up things discarded from someone else's house." In the same vein is this statement of Parashara Muni in Śhṛi Vishnu Purāṇa [3.4.2.–5]: "Then, during the period of the twenty-eighth Manu, the great master, my son Vyasa, divided the one Veda with four divisions into four separate books. In the same way as he, the brilliant editor of the Vedas, arranged their entire text into various books, so have other Vyasas in the past, including myself. O best of brahmanas, you can understand that thus in each of the rotations of the cycle of four ages a different Vyasa organizes the branches of the Vedas. But know that Krishna Dvaipayana Vyasa is the Supreme Lord Narayana Himself. Who else on this earth, Maitreya, could be the author of the Mahabharata?"

BBT: The Skanda Purana states, "Just as a person picks up things in his own house and uses them, many people have taken knowledge from the sky of Vyasa's heart for their own use."

We find a [DDB66]similar statement in the Vishnu Purana [3.4.2–5], where the sage Parashara says, "Thereafter, during the twenty-eighth manv-antara, the Lord in the form of my son Vyasa took the one Veda, consisting of four sections, and divided it into four separate parts. Just as this intelligent Vyasa divided the Veda, previously all other Vyasas, including myself, also divided it. O best of the twice-born, understand that in every cycle of four yugas Vyasas come and arrange the Veda into various branches. But know, O Maitreya, that Shri Krishna-dvaipayana Vyasa is Lord Narayana Himself. Who else in this world could have written the great epic Mahabharata?"

Gopiparanadhana: In the Skanda Purana we read, "Knowledge in this world was original generated from Lord Narayana. In the Krita-yuga it remained intact. In Treta-yuga it became somewhat corrupt, and in Dvapara-yuga altogether so. When knowledge had thus gradually transformed into ignorance because of Gautama Rishi's curse, the confused demigods headed by Brahma and Rudra went to ask protection from Narayana, the faultless provider of shelter. Informed of what they needed Him to do, He, the Personality of Godhead and greatest of mystics, descended to earth as the son of Parashara in the womb of Satyavati. In that form Lord Hari Himself restored the neglected Vedas."

BBT: The Skanda Purana further states, "In Satya-yuga the knowledge that emanated from Lord Narayana remained pure. It became somewhat polluted in Treta-yuga, and completely so in Dvapara-yuga. When ignorance had covered that knowledge because of Gautama Rishi's curse, the demigods became perplexed. Led by Brahma and Rudra, they approached Lord Narayana, the Supreme Person and faultless protector, and told Him why they had come. On the request of the demigods, Lord Hari then descended as the great yogi Vyasa, son of Satyavati and Parashara, and re-established the forgotten Vedas."

Gopiparanadhana: The word veda in this context also implies the Puranas and Itihasas.

Thus we have established that the best way to proceed is to examine the Itihasas and Puranas. Even among these two, moreover, there is evidence that the Puranas are more important. As stated in the Narada Purana, "O lovely one, I consider the message of the Puranas more important than that of the Vedas. Without doubt all the Vedas are given a firm foundation in the Puranas. Anyone who disrespects the Puranas will have to take his next birth as an animal; even if he is very self-controlled and peaceful, he will achieve no good destination."

BBT: Here the word veda also indicates the Itihasas and Puranas. Thus it is established that studying the Itihasas and Puranas is supremely beneficial. And of these two, the Puranas are more excellent. As stated in the Naradiya Purana, "O lovely one, I consider the Puranas more important than the Vedas because the Puranas firmly establish all the Vedic meanings. There is no doubt of this. One who disrespects the Puranas will take birth as a subhuman; even if he can expertly control his senses and mind, he can attain no good destination."

Just as infinite space is all-accomodating, so the mind of Veda-vyasa encompasses everything there is to know. All Vedic rishis are greater than ordinary mystics who comprehend something of the Absolute Truth and Its energies for their own self-realization, but cannot express their experiences coherently for the benefit of others. The Vedic sages are not only mystics but expert communicators as well; they systematically teach practical means by which persons entangled in material life can also become self-realized. Of these sages, Dvaipayana Vyasa is incontestably the greatest. His own father, Parashara Rishi, student of Maitreya Rishi and narrator of the Vishnu Purana, attests to this. Previously, in the twenty-sixth Dvapara-yuga of this Vaivasvata-manvantara, Parashara himself was Vyasa, editor of the Vedas. As an incarnation of Narayana, however, Krishna Dvaipayana excels all the other Vyasas. He best knows the whole purpose of the Vedas.

With the progression of the four ages, the intelligence of living beings naturally decreases, and their understanding of the Vedas gradually weakens. Gautama Rishi's curse coincidentally helped accelerate this spontaneous process of degradation. Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana has summarized the Varaha Purana's account of this event: Gautama had once received a benediction that his fields would always produce abundant rice crops. So when the country surrounding his ashrama was struck by a severe drought he took the opportunity to host many learned brahmanas and feed them. The drought eventually ended and the brahmanas wanted to return to their villages, but Gautama did not want to let them leave. The brahmanas created an illusion of a cow to fool Gautama. Gautama touched the false cow and it appeared to fall dead. His guests pretended to be struck with horror over Gautama's killing a cow and took this as their pretext for leaving. Gautama then strictly observed the prescribed atonement for such an inauspicious act, only afterwards discovering that he had been deceived by the brahmanas. He angrily cursed them and all their colleagues to lose their Vedic knowledge.

The eternal Vedas never actually suffer corruption. But as the brahmana class, who are meant to study and teach the Vedas, fall from their standards of purity and neglect their responsibilities to society, true Vedic knowledge becomes more and more inaccessible. In its stead appear perverted forms of knowledge, materialistic and impersonal misinterpretations. This is described by the word utsanna in the Skanda Purana passage cited in Text 16.2; the word carries the several meanings of "forgotten," "neglected," "falling apart," and "decaying."

As Shrila Jiva Gosvami previously stated, the Itihasas and Puranas are especially important in Kali-yuga as means of access to Vedic knowledge. The Itihasa epics and Puranas have the same apaurusheya authority as the Vedas, and they faithfully explain the Vedas, in this way revealing the higher purposes of life. Lord Shiva in the verses cited from the Narada Purana tells his wife Parvati that he considers the message of the Puranas more important than that of the Vedas. By this he means not that anything is lacking in the Vedas or that they can be improved on, but that the Purana's simple explanations are less likely to be misunderstood.

To a large extent one can know the quality of a product by assessing the quality of the person who made it. By this criterion the Puranas and Itihasas are supremely excellent, since they were compiled by Lord Narayana Himself in the form of Shrila Vyasadeva.

Here Shrila Vyasa's mind is compared to the unlimited sky, indicating that just as the sky accommodates all objects, so Vyasa's mind contains all knowledge. Another significance of comparing Vyasa's mind to the sky is that the sky is the medium for sound, which transmits knowledge. In other words, Vyasa's mind is the medium for transcendental sound, which is the basis of all kinds of knowledge. All other thinkers, both on this planet and on higher planets, simply make use of the knowledge Shrila Vyasa has given. According to one Sanskrit saying, vyasocchishōam jagat sarvam: "The whole world tastes the remnants of Vyasa's knowledge." Any "new" idea one may find or conceive of already exists in [DDB67]His writings. Thus all the writers throughout history have borrowed from Him, directly or indirectly.

According to Parashara Muni, at the beginning of each Kali-yuga in the repeated cycle of four yugas, a vyasa, or "compiler," arranges the Vedas. In the present reign of Manu, Parashara himself was the twenty-sixth Vyasa, and Shri Krishna-dvaipayana is the twenty-eighth. Of the twenty-eight Vyasas who have appeared until now, Krishna-dvaipayana is special because He is an incarnation of Lord Narayana. He appeared on the request of the demigods at the end of the Dvapara-yuga, after a curse spoken by Gautama Muni caused ignorance to cover the Vedic knowledge.

Chapter 171 of the Varaha Purana relates how Gautama Muni underwent severe austerities during a famine to please Lord Brahma. When Brahma offered Gautama a boon, the sage asked that he would be able to feed all his guests. The boon was granted, and benevolent Gautama fed his many brahmana guests for the duration of the famine. When rains finally came, the brahmanas wanted to leave his hermitage. As is the custom, however, Gautama asked them to stay a little longer, and they agreed. After some time they again wished to leave, but once again Gautama prevailed on them to stay a while longer. This happened a few times.

Finally the brahmanas, determined to leave, devised a plan. They made an illusory cow and left it near Gautama's ashrama. In the early morning, when the sage was going to bathe, the animal blocked his path, and to drive her away he threw a few drops of water at her. At the first touch of the water, the cow fell down dead. The brahmanas immediately raised a hue and cry, declaring "We cannot stay here and accept food from a cow-killer!" and then they left for their respective residences. Later Gautama performed an atonement, and by his mystic power he could understand that he'd been tricked. So he angrily cursed the brahmanas that they would lose all their Vedic knowledge. In this way the Vedic knowledge became covered by ignorance during the Dvapara-yuga, and thus it was necessary for Vyasa to send forth the Vedas again.

From Lord Shiva's statement that the Puranas are more important than the Vedas because they explain them, we should not conclude that absolutely no one should study the Vedas. Still, Vyasadeva's [DDB68] verdict is that in Kali-yuga people are not intelligent enough to understand the true message of the Vedas, especially since there exists no authentic disciplic succession through which to acquire this understanding. We find, in fact, that those who attempt nowadays to study only the Vedas and Upanishads often end up taking to ordinary, fruitive activities or else to meditation on the impersonal Brahman, with the aim of merging into it. They do not come to the Vaishnava siddhanta, the perfect conclusion of Vedic understanding, which is realization of unalloyed devotional service to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The failure of modern-day students of the Vedas to understand their real message is proof that this message is not easy to discern in the present age. As Lord Krishna says in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.3.44), paroksha-vado vedo 'yam: "The Vedas speak indirectly." Therefore, if we wish to learn the true conclusion of the Vedas in this age, it is more practical to study the Puranas.

However, a serious student who wants to understand the Puranas' siddhanta must still seek out a guru in disciplic succession. This basic prerequisite of Vedic study is not waived when one approaches the Puranas. Indeed, Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.3.21) emphatically declares, tasmad gurum prapadyeta jijnasuh shreya uttamam: "One who seriously wants to learn about the highest good in life must take shelter of a bona fide spiritual master."

Next, Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains the three divisions of the Puranas.

Gopiparanadhana: And in the Prabhasa-khanda of the Skanda Purana [3.121–24] we find the statement, "O best of brahmanas, I consider the purport of the Puranas as unquestionable as the Vedas themselves. Without doubt all the Vedas are given a firm foundation in the Puranas. Some time in the past the Vedas became afraid that "These people are going to distort my meaning because they are inadequately trained in proper hearing." But at that time the Itihasas and Puranas came forward to give the Vedas an unquestionable foundation. What cannot be found in the Vedas, O brahmanas, is found in the smritis, and what cannot be located in either is clearly described in the Puranas. O brahmanas, one who knows the Vedas along with their supplements and the Upanishads but does not know the Puranas is not really learned."

BBT: Furthermore, the Prabhasa-khanda of the Skanda Purana [5.3.121–24] states:

"O best of the twice-born, I consider the meaning of the Puranas to be as well established as that of the Vedas. Without doubt all the Vedas are given a firm foundation in them. Once, long ago, the Vedas became afraid of those who might hear from [DDB69]her insufficiently, and she thought, 'This sort of person will distort my meaning.' But then the Itihasas and Puranas helped the Vedas by firmly establishing her meaning. What cannot be found in the Vedas is found in the smriti, and what cannot be found in either is clearly explained in the Puranas. A person is not considered learned if he does not know the Puranas, O learned brahmanas, even if he has studied the four Vedas along with the Vedangas and Upanishads."

Gopiparanadhana: Even though we have thus settled the question of the Puranas' authoritativeness, we need to next consider a doubt regarding their current status: Less intelligent people of modern times find it difficult to understand them because their original texts are not completely available and because for the most part they promote the worship of a variety of deities.

BBT: Next we must consider the following doubt concerning the status of the Puranas: Although their authority has been thus established [in the previous Texts], still it is difficult for the less intelligent men of the modern age to comprehend their ultimate meaning. The reasons for this difficulty are that the Puranas, like the Vedas, are only partially available and that in general the Puranas try to establish the supremacy of various deities.

Gopiparanadhana: As the Matsya Purana [53.65, 68–69] states, "A historical text is a Purana if it has the five defining characteristics; otherwise it is known as an akhyana. In Puranas describing days of Brahma in the mode of goodness, the Supreme Lord Hari is mostly glorified. In those describing days in the mode of passion, there is especially glorification of Brahma. In those describing days in the mode of ignorance, there is glorification of Agni and of Shiva. In those describing mixed days Sarasvati and the Pitas are discussed."

BBT: As stated in the Matsya Purana [53.65, 68–69]:

"A history is called a Purana if it has the five defining characteristics; otherwise it is called an akhyana. The sattvic Puranas primarily glorify Lord Hari; the rajasic Puranas, Lord Brahma; and the tamasic Puranas, Lord Shiva and Durga, along with Agni. The Puranas in mixed modes glorify Sarasvati and the Pitas."

Gopiparanadhana: Here glorification "of Agni [the fire-god]" means of Vedic sacrifices which are executed with offerings into various sacred fires. In the phrase "and of Shiva also," the word "also" implies "also of Shiva [his wife]." "During mixed days" means during the many days of Brahma in which goodness, passion and ignorance are all prominent. "Of Sarasvati" means of various demigods who are indirectly indicated by reference to her, since she is the presiding deity of various kinds of verbal expression. "Of the Pitas [celestial forefathers]" means of the ritual activities which lead to attaining them, in accordance with the shruti statement, "By Vedic rituals one achieves the world of the Pitas."

BBT: Here the word agni refers to the Vedic sacrifices performed by making offerings into various sacred fires. The word ca ("and") in the phrase shivasya ca implies the wife of Lord Shiva. Sankirneshu ("in the mixed") means "in the various Puranas in the mixed modes of sattva, rajas, and tamas combined." Here sarasvatyah ("of Sarasvati") means "of the presiding deity of speech" and, by implication, "of the various deities referred to in the numerous scriptural texts she embodies." According to shruti, karmana pitri-lokah: "By fruitive activities one can attain the abode of the forefathers." Thus here the word pitrinam ("of the forefathers") refers to the fruitive rituals meant for attaining to the planet of the forefathers.

It is impossible in Kali-yuga to understand the Vedas correctly without resort to the authority of the Puranas. In general in this age, even those who are supposed to be religious leaders are very often themselves victims of delusion and hypocrisy. We see this tendency all over the world. In India many apparently well educated and strictly religious brahmanas are actually confused about the purpose of life and the means of achieving it, mainly because they have failed to approach the right sources of knowledge. Some brahmanas claim to be purely Vedic, free from sentimental and fanatic idolatry; among these deniers of Puranic authority are the ritualists of the first millenium A.D. who followed the Jaimini-mimamsa interpretation of Kumarila and Prabhakara and the much more recent proponents of the Arya-samaja. These brahmanas presume to have direct access to the Vedas through the commentaries of their teachers, even though the manifest fruits of their so-called Vedic education are arrogance, atheism and entanglement in sense gratification.

Therefore, as we are told here from the Skanda Purana, the Vedas have just cause to fear abuse at the hands of the brahmanas of our age. Hearing the Vedas' call for help, the Puranas have come to their assistance. Their instructions are as trustworthy as the original words of the Vedas and are honored by every true brahmana, that is to say, by every honest person who has real intelligence and humility. What need is there for speculative commentaries on the Vedas when there their natural commentary is already available in the Puranas?

But this is the age of corruption, when even more definite guidance is needed to find the correct path of spiritual progress. Even the Puranas, which were easy enough to understand in earlier times, often bewilder their disoriented modern readers. Intended to appeal to people of many different natures, the Puranas encourage worship of demigods alongside that of the Supreme Lord. Demigod worship gradually purifies those who are too materialistic to be interested in pure devotional service. The actual history of the universe passes through varying cycles, "days of Brahma," during some of which the lower material modes of passion (rajas) and ignorance (tamas) are prominent. At those times the Supreme Lord gracefully allows Lord Shiva and other servants of His to defeat Him in competition and otherwise seem superior. Puranas which describe events of these rajasic and tamasic kalpas thus superficially seem to raise demigods to the position of God. It is no wonder that imperfectly informed students of the Puranas cannot discern the unity of the Puranas' underlying message--that the powerful controllers and wonderful opulences of this universe are all energies of the supreme energetic, the Personality of Godhead. These readers have no capacity to appreciate the Hari-vamsha Purana's judgment,

adav ante ca madhye ca/ harih sarvatra giyate

"Throughout the Vedas and everywhere in the Ramayana, Puranas and Mahabharata, from the beginning to the middle to the end, the praises of Lord Hari are sung" [Mahabharata, Svarga-parva 6.93].

As a source of further confusion, not only are portions of the Puranas now missing, but in some cases these portions have been replaced with spurious substitutions. In recent centuries the brahminical community has become less and less familiar with several of the more rarely preserved Puranas, allowing unscrupulous scribes to distort the texts without detection. The only sure protection against such changed texts is the testimony of commentaries by reliable authorities. Over six hundred years ago Shrila Shridhara Svami commented on both Shrimad-Bhagavatam and the Vishnu Purana, taking special care to certify the wording of almost every verse; no such commentaries by standard acaryas exist, however, for the other Puranas, only citations of isolated passages.

The verses cited from the Matsya Purana enumerate the typical deities whose worship is promoted in each category of Purana. Theoretically, kalpa could be translated instead as "written work," but the verses immediate following these in the Matsya Purana show that "days of Brahma" is the intended meaning:
< find these verses >

"<translation>" This is also confirmed by the way the word kalpa is used in the next anuccheda (Text 18.1).

All eighteen major were spoken by Suta Gosvami at Naimisharanya and accepted by the sages there as authentic, but at the same time they are meant for three basically different target audiences, defined according to the three modes of nature. The situation of the individual Puranas is more complex, most of them displaying some mixture of the modes. For example, the pastimes of Lord Krishna and of Lord Ramacandra, which must be considered in the pure mode of goodness, are both described to some extent in every one of the Puranas. Lord Shiva specifies the basic division of six Puranas belonging to each mode in the forty-third chapter of the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda (236.18–21):

sattvikani puranani/ vijneyani shubhani vai

"O beautiful one, the Vishnu Purana, Narada Purana, the auspicious Bhagavata Purana, and the Garuda, Padma and Varaha Puranas belong to the mode of goodness. They are all considered auspicious.

brahmandam brahma-vaivartam/ markandeyam tathaiva ca
bhavishyam vamanam brahmam/ rajasani nibodhata

"Know that the Brahmanda, Brahma-vaivarta, Markandeya, Bhavishya, Vamana and Brahma Puranas belong to the mode of passion.

matsyam kaurmam tatha laingam/ shaivam skandam tathaiva ca
agneyam ca shad etani/ tamasani nibodhata

"And know that these six Puranas belong to the mode of ignorance: the Matsya, Kurma, Linga, Shiva, Skanda and Agni Puranas."

The five topics which every Purana should include will be discussed later in Shri Tattva-sandarbha.

Three Divisions of the Puranas

The verse from the Matsya Purana cited in text 17.3 mentions the five subjects that characterize a Purana. Another verse of the Matsya Purana (53.65) lists those subjects:

sargash ca pratisargash ca vamsho manvantarani ca vamshyanucaritam caiva puranam panca-lakshanam

"The five subjects that characterize a Purana are creation, dissolution, genealogy, reigns of Manus, and the activities of famous kings." Texts 57 and 61 of Shri Tattva-sandarbha discuss these five subjects in detail.

In the verses cited above from the Matsya Purana, the word kalpa means "scripture" or "Purana." This is one of the various meanings of this word, as listed in the Medini Sanskrit dictionary (1.21.2): kalpa shastre vidhau nyaye samvarte brahmane dine. "Kalpa means [DDB70]'scripture,' 'rule,' 'logic,' 'dissolution,' and 'day of Brahma.'"

The Puranas are divided according to the modes of material nature. The list of the Puranas belonging to each mode is given in the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda (236.18–21):

vaishnavam naradiyam ca tatha bhagavatam shubham
garudam ca tatha padmam varaham shubha-darshane

sattvikani puranani vijneyani shubhani vai
brahmandam brahma-vaivartam markandeyam tathaiva ca

bhavishyam vamanam brahmam rajasani nibodha me
matsyam kaurmam tatha laingam shaivam skandam tathaiva ca

agneyam ca shad etani tamasani nibodha me

"[Lord Shiva said:] '[DDB71]O beautiful lady, know that the Vishnu, Narada, Bhagavata, Garuda, Padma, and Varaha Puranas are in the mode of goodness, the Brahmanda, Brahma-vaivarta, Markandeya, Bhavishya, Vamana, and Brahma Puranas are in the mode of passion, and the Matsya, Kurma, Linga, Shiva, Skanda, and Agni Puranas are in the mode of ignorance.'"

The verses Shrila Jiva cites from the Skanda Purana imply that the Puranas are as good as the Vedas and should be accepted as such by anyone who accepts the Vedas' authority. There are many commentaries on the Vedas, but the Puranas are the natural commentary because they were compiled by the Vedas' compiler, Shrila Vyasa. Therefore one can understand the message of the Vedas by studying the Puranas alone, even without directly studying the Vedas. But study of the Vedas is incomplete in this age without study of the Puranas; therefore studying the Puranas is even more appropriate and practical for us than studying the Vedas. Furthermore, the statement from the Skanda Purana quoted in text 17.1—that no one can become learned without studying the Puranas—suggests that the Puranas are also more important than the Itihasas.

But just as we meet with difficulties in studying the Vedas in this age, we also encounter difficulties in studying the Puranas. The eighteen major Puranas and eighteen minor ones constitute a vast body of literature, and there are no current disciplic successions or authentic commentaries for most of these works. Portions of some Puranas are not available, and other Puranas have variant readings and interpolations. As with the Vedas, independent study of the Puranas yields no clear conclusion, because each Purana seems to establish a different deity as the supreme. The Shiva Purana proclaims Lord Shiva supreme, the Vishnu Purana, Lord Vishnu, and so on. The result is confusion for one who studies them without proper guidance. Such a student will not know whether to worship Shiva, Vishnu, Devi, or some other deity.

tad evam sati tat-tat-kalpa-katha-mayatvenaiva matsya eva prasiddhanam tat-tat-purananam vyavastha jnapita. taratamyam tu katham syad yenetara-nirnayah kriyeta. sattvadi-taratamyenaiveti cet `sattvat sanjayate jnanam' iti `sattvam yad brahma-darshanam' iti ca nyayat sattvikam eva puranadikam paramartha-jnanaya prabalam ity ayatam.

Gopiparanadhana: Such being the facts, we can understand that the Puranas mentioned in the Matsya Purana are divided into natural categories according to the kinds of days of Brahma they contain narrations of. But how can we define a hierarchy of these categories to determine which is superior? It might be suggested that this can be done with a hierarchy of the modes of nature—goodness, passion and ignorance. If so, we can conclude that Puranas and other scriptures in the mode of goodness have the most authority to teach us about transcendental reality, according to the reasoning of such statements as "From the mode of goodness knowledge develops" [Bg. 14.17] and "In the mode of goodness one can realize the Absolute Truth" [Bhag. 1.2.24].

BBT: This being the case[DDB72][—that Puranas are in various modes of nature—]the Matsya Purana classifies them in three divisions based on the stories found in them. But how can we determine the relative importance of the Puranas so that we can then learn about the other subjects under discussion, namely, sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana? If we use the three modes of nature as the basis for categorizing the Puranas, depending on such statements as "the mode of goodness produces knowledge" [Bg 14.17] and "the mode of goodness leads to realization of the Absolute Truth" [Bhag. 1.2.24], we will conclude that the Puranas and other such literature in the mode of goodness are superior means for gaining knowledge of the Absolute Truth.

Gopiparanadhana: Even so, what one standard can reconcile all these Puranas, which discredit one another with divergent opinions even when discussing the same Absolute Truth? Someone may point out that the powerful saint Shri Vyasa produced the Vedanta-sutra just to accomplish this task of determining the purport of the entire Vedas and Puranas; therefore, this person will propose, the meaning of all these scriptures should be ascertained by reference to the Vedanta-sutra. But then our conclusions will not be respected by followers of sages who wrote other sutras. And apart from that, certain authors have interpreted the Vedanta-sutra's very esoteric and terse aphorisms in such a way as to distort their meaning. What authority, then, can actually serve to reconcile all of this?

BBT: But even then, how can we reconcile the different inconclusive[NEW73] views regarding the Absolute Truth that the various Puranas put forward? Someone may propose study of the Vedanta-sutra as the solution, claiming that Bhagavan Vyasadeva compiled the Vedanta-sutra to present the decisive conclusion of both the Vedas and the Puranas concerning the Absolute Truth. But then the followers of sages who wrote other sutras may be dissatisfied. Moreover, since the aphorisms of the Vedanta are terse and extremely esoteric, and since they are also subject to varying interpretations, someone will always express a contrary idea about them. What, then, can resolve disputes concerning the Vedanta-sutra's meaning?

Gopiparanadhana: We would have such a basis of reconciliation, one might comment, if there were one scripture which fit the definition of a Purana, had apaurusheya authority, contained the essential ideas of all the Vedas, Itihasas and Puranas, gave support to the positions of the Brahma-sutra and was currently available in full on the earth. Well said, because you have called to mind our own most preferred authority, the emperor of pramanas, Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

BBT: This problem could be solved if there were one scripture that had the characteristics of a Purana, that had no human origin, that presented the essence of all the Vedas, Itihasas, and Puranas, that was based on the Vedanta-sutra, and that was available throughout the land in its complete form. Well said, sir, because you have reminded us about our revered Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the emperor of all pramanas.

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Faced with the bewildering complexity of the Puranas--the non-linear chronology cutting across millennia and universes, the thousands of prehistoric personalities and the pantheon of deities--critical scholars most often dismiss the whole body of literature as an incoherent collection of competing sectarian mythologies. Indologist are free to think in this way if they choose, but in fact this freedom of judgment is also under the control of material nature. The way in which scholars filter what they see and form their opinions, and the influence they have on the public, are all part of nature's arrangement for keeping the secrets of transcendence concealed from the intrusions of material intelligence. Only by accepting the means of shabda-pramana on its own terms can anyone begin to penetrate these secrets.

tasyaite kathita hy arthah/ prakashante mahatmanah

"If someone has unalloyed devotion for the Supreme Lord and equal devotion for his own spiritual master, then his intelligence becomes broad and everything described in these texts reveals itself clearly to him" (Shvetashvatara Up. 6.23).

As we have already discussed earlier, Shrila Jiva Gosvami is not interested in answering the skepticism of critical scholars in his Sandarbhas. He assumes that his readers are already convinced of the authority and consistency of the Vedic literature, an attitude which is much more likely to develop from the qualities of honesty and humility in one's heart than from the scrutinizing analysis of masses of information.

If we assume that there is a coherent purpose to the Puranas, our practical problem at this point is how to discover it. We need to identify a prime authority according to which all the other texts can be reconciled. In this anuccheda Shrila Jiva Gosvami first limits the candidates for primacy to the Puranas addressed to persons in the mode of goodness. These sattvic Puranas glorify the Supreme Lord Vishnu and His incarnations. But the mode of goodness in the material world is rarely found unmixed with the lower modes, and this is reflected in the Puranas. Several of the Puranas classified as sattvic describe mixed modes of worshiping God rather than pure devotional service. After reading all the sattvic Puranas one may therefore be left uncertain as to whether Lord Vishnu is ultimately a person with real qualities, or impersonal and formless, or a manifestation of the universal mind, or even a product of matter.

Casual readers of the Samhitas of the four Vedas usually see in them an unorganized assortment of praise and appeals offered to a large number of demigods. Many of these incompletely individualized deities seem nothing more than convenient personifications of forces of nature. Their personalities often overlap to the extent that it is difficult to clearly separate their identities. The Upanishads of each Veda correct this misunderstanding by elucidating the underlying reference throughout the Vedas to the one Absolute Truth, Brahman. The various deities of the Vedas and the energies of nature are shown in the Upanishads to be all integrally related to Brahman as Its expansions, borrowing Its own names, forms and functions:

jivenatmanupravishya nama-rupe vyakaravani. tasam tri-vritam tri-vritam ekaikam karavaniti.

"That Lord looked and said, `Ah, let me enter these three lords along with this jiva soul, and expand names and forms. I will manifest each being's threefold nature'" (Chandogya Up. 6.3.2–3). The "three lords" indicated in this text are the three principles of created existence--the controlling demigods, the enjoying jivas, and their controlled and enjoyed bodies. Entering into this raw substance of creation, the Supreme distributed His own names and forms. Shri-narayanadini namani vinanyani rudradibhyo harir dattavan ("Lord Hari gave away His own names to Rudra and others, with the exception of certain names like Shri Narayana."). In the later phase of creation, the demigod Brahma periodically completes this work on behalf of his creator, using the eternal Vedas as his blueprint:

nama-rupam ca bhutanam/ krityanam ca prapancanam
veda-shabdebhyo evadau/ devadinam cakara sah

"In the beginning Brahma expanded the names, forms and activities of all creatures from out of the words of the Vedas" [Vishnu Pur. 1.5.63].

Because the Upanishads provide this insight into the essential meaning of the Vedas, they are called Vedanta, the culmination of the Vedas. Krishna Dvaipayana Vyasa commented on the major Upanishads and reconciled their apparent contradictions in the concise codes of his Vedanta-sutra. By this composition, he established the Vedanta school of Vedic theology in our age. It was the standard style of the founders of orthodox brahminical philosophies to write in aphoristic sutras, leaving it to disciples who have been personally instructed to elaborate further explanations. But compared to the relatively mundane level of discourse of others sutras, like Gautama Rishi's Nyaya-sutra on epistemology and logic, the contents of Vyasadeva's Vedanta-sutra are particularly difficult. His aphorisms are virtually impossible to decipher without a commentary, and thus also easily misinterpreted. Earlier in Kali-yuga there existed a strong tradition of Vaishnava theistic interpretation of Vedanta-sutra, led by several prominent teachers like Bodhayana who are now known only from fragments quoted by Ramanuja Acarya and others in their later Vedanta commentaries. The prime reason for these earlier explanations being forgotten is that they were completely eclipsed by the popularity of Shankara Acarya's Shariraka-bhashya.

Written around 700 A.D. from the monistic Advaita point of view, in which the personal concept of Godhead is relativized as an inferior aspect of an ultimate Supreme beyond name and form, Shankara's commentary imposed a monopoly on the school of Vedanta for some centuries, until the great Vaishnava acaryas Ramanuja and Madhva responded with their own commentaries in the eleventh and twelfth centuries. They and other Vaishnavas like Nimbarka and Vishnu Svami vigorously criticized Shankara's interpretation as not faithfully adhering to the Upanishads' intentions. Among the Shankara Advaitists and all four Vaishnava sampradayas, even up to modern times the main philosophic activity of both explanatory and polemic authors has been to present updated sub-commentaries on the Vedanta-sutra. On this basis the debate between the Advaita and Vaishnava camps has been continuing for over a thousand years.

When he established the Gaudiya branch of the Madhva-sampradaya, however, Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu chose to forgo having a Vedanta commentary written as the keystone of His new theistic school. He preferred focusing attention on Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which He considered the natural commentary by the Vedanta-sutra's own author. Only in the early eighteenth century was Baladeva Vidyabhushana commissioned by Shrila Vishvanatha Cakravarti to compose a Vedanta commentary to answer the complaints of critics who demanded that the Gaudiya Vaishnavas defend themselves on the evidence of Vedanta-sutra.

Proposing Shrimad-Bhagavatam as the one Purana which can reconcile all scriptures and perfectly represent the philosophy of Vedanta, Shri Jiva Gosvami will now proceed to reveal the glories of the Bhagavatam in the rest of this Sandarbha and the others.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam Is the Best [DDB74]Purana of All

The Matsya Purana, Chapter 53, gives the number of verses in each Purana and describes the benefits of donating each one on special days. In that same chapter Suta Gosvami speaks two and a half verses containing a formula for dividing the Puranas into three classes according to which one of the three modes of nature predominates. These three classes of Puranas[DDB75] glorify various deities, and commentators often try to establish their own favorite among these deities as supreme, arguing on the basis of logic and apparently conclusive scriptural references. One consequence of this partiality is that commentators tend to denigrate Puranas in a category different from their own: proponents of tamasic Puranas tend to reject the authority of the rajasic and sattvic Puranas, and proponents of rajasic and sattvic Puranas likewise reject the Puranas outside their group. But there cannot actually be several Absolute Truths; therefore the question of which Puranic deity is the one Supreme Truth remains to be settled.

For the unbiased seeker of the truth, Shrila Jiva Gosvami shows how to resolve the matter. He explains that sattva, or the mode of goodness, is clearly superior to passion and ignorance, as Lord Krishna confirms in the Bhagavad-gita (14.17):

"From the mode of goodness, real knowledge develops; from the mode of passion, greed develops; and from the mode of ignorance develop foolishness, madness, and illusion." Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.24) also states, tamasas tu rajas tasmāt sattvam yad brahma-darshanam: "Passion is better than ignorance, but goodness is best because it can lead to realization of the Absolute Truth." In the passage where this verse appears, Suta Gosvami is explaining which form of worship produces the ultimate good. His opinion is that one can achieve the ultimate good only by worshiping Lord Krishna, the personification of pure goodness. The citation from the Matsya Purana in the previous Text states that the sattvic Puranas glorify Lord Hari, Krishna. By contrast, the rajasic and tamasic Puranas recommend worship of other deities. Such worship is in the lower modes of nature and does not lead to realization of the Absolute Truth.

Thus one can tell the modal quality of a Purana by seeing which deity it recommends for worship. Another way to tell is by seeing how it opens. In a sattvic Purana the questioner will approach a learned speaker and inquire from him about the Absolute Truth. In this vein the questioner may ask the speaker to elaborate on the nature of ultimate reality, the supreme religion for all, the ultimate benefit a human being can aspire for, how one should prepare for death, and so on. These questions allow the Purana's speaker full freedom to explain these topics; as a self-realized teacher, free from all gross and subtle material desires and concerned only with the welfare of the inquirer and those who will hear the discourse, either then or in the future, the speaker replies with answers that are specific and unambiguous, leaving no room for misinterpretation or confusion. Examples of such sattvic Puranas include the Padma Purana, the Vishnu Purana, and, most prominently, the Bhagavata Purana, or Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

In the rajasic and tamasic Puranas, however, the questioners inquire about limited topics, those that do not address the ultimate concerns of life. In the Linga Purana, for example, the sages at Naimisharanya ask Suta Gosvami to narrate the glory of Linga, Lord Shiva. Although Suta Gosvami has fully realized the Absolute Truth and is perfectly competent to explain it, the questions here restrict him to speaking on the particular topic of Linga. He is not free to explain the deeper meaning of life. Since all rajasic and tamasic Puranas have this shortcoming, they cannot be reliable sources of knowledge about the essential topics of sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana.

The Puranas were arranged in different modes in response to the various desires and interests of the conditioned souls. Nevertheless, every Purana contains glorification of Lord Hari, the Absolute Truth. Shрила Veda-vyasa included this glorification so that even persons in the lower material modes could gradually develop interest in the Supreme Personality of Godhead by hearing or reading the tamasic and rajasic Puranas.

Someone might object that the statement cited above concerning the classification of the Puranas according to the modes does not itself come from a sattvic Purana and so should not be taken as authoritative. We reply that this classification is supported by numerous other statements as well, including some from such sattvic scriptures as the Padma Purana, which we have already cited in the previous Text. Nor is it true that the Puranas in the lower modes give no valid knowledge at all, since even they give some insight into absolute reality, what to speak of the insights they give into lesser topics. In addition, no statement in the Vedic literature specifically contradicts the verses cited here classifying the Puranas according to the modes of nature, and so we are left with no compelling reason to doubt the authenticity of this classification.

From this analysis we can conclude that in our quest for the ultimate shabda-pramana we need consider only the sattvic Puranas. As the Padma Purana states, sattvika moksha-dah proktah: "The Puranas in the mode of goodness lead to liberation."

But even these sattvic Puranas have been understood in many ways by great thinkers. Some interpreters have found that they glorify the path of yoga as the best, others have concluded that they recommend bhakti as the highest path, and yet others have found that they promote the path of jnana (knowledge) as supreme.

Next Shrila Jiva Gosvami suggests the Vedanta-sutra as a possible basis of reconciliation. The Vedanta-sutra, written by Vyasadeva, certainly incorporates the essential understanding of the Vedas and the Puranas. But we must also consider that the dedicated followers of other sages who wrote philosophical sutras, such as Gautama and Patanjali, might not accept the Vedanta-sutra's ideas. Even if these followers of other philosophers could somehow be convinced to change their minds by logical proof of the greater authority of the Vedanta-sutra, the situation is still problematic: The sutras of the Vedanta being terse and esoteric, acaryas of various persuasions have commented on them, and so it is difficult to decide whose opinion agrees with that of Shrila Veda-vyasa, the author.

For the seeker who has come this far along the way but finds himself sinking in the marshy confusion created by the various scriptures and their myriad commentators, Shrila Jiva Gosvami finally points out the high ground of the Shrimad-Bhagavatam. The Bhagavatam has the ten characteristics of a major Purana (discussed in Text 56); it is apaurusheya; it is the natural commentary on the Vedanta-sutra and thus constitutes the purport of all the Vedas, Itihasas, and Puranas; it is available in its entirety; it is respected by all Vaishnava acaryas, and also many others[NEW76]; it is the most popular of the Puranas; it has an intact tradition of Vaishnava commentaries; and it is the culmination of Shrila Veda-vyasa's literary output, composed in His maturity.

By establishing Shrimad-Bhagavatam as the last word in Vedic scripture, Shrila Jiva Gosvami fulfills the will of Lord Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, who accepted the Bhagavatam as "the spotless Purana," the supremely authoritative text.

In the next Text Jiva Gosvami explains that Shrimad-Bhagavatam has not been composed by a mortal and that it is the natural commentary on the Vedanta-sutra.

Gopiparanadhana: After bringing all the Puranas to light and compiling the Vedanta-sutra, the powerful sage Vyasa was still not satisfied. Therefore he then manifested as a product of mature meditation this Bhagavatam, the natural commentary on his own sutras. The coherent overview of all scriptures is found in this work, inasmuch as it begins under the auspices of the Gayatri mantra, which is distinguished as the foundational text for the purport of all the Vedas.

BBT: Indeed, Lord Vyasa was not satisfied even after compiling all the Puranas and the Vedanta-sutra. He therefore wrote Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which was revealed to Him in trance, as the natural commentary on His own sutras. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam we find the consistent reconciliation of all scriptures. That the Bhagavatam gives the essence of all scriptures is shown by its opening with the Gayatri mantra, the essential text incorporating the message of all the Vedas.

Gopiparanadhana: In just this manner the Matsya Purana depicts the identity of Shrimad-Bhagavatam: "In the beginning of one of the Puranas the Gayatri mantra is the focus of discourse. In it all the ramifications of true religion are delineated, and the killing of the demon Vritra is described. The Purana which has these characteristics is known as Shrimad-Bhagavatam. A person who transcribes a copy of the Bhagavatam, places it on a gold lion-throne and gives this as a gift to someone on the full moon day of the month Praushöhapada will achieve the supreme goal of life. This Purana is said to have eighteen thousand verses" [Matsya Pur. 53.20–22].

BBT: The characteristics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam are further described in the Matsya Purana (53.20–22): "That Purana is known as Shrimad-Bhagavatam which explains the topmost principles of religion with reference to the Gayatri mantra and which tells of the killing of the demon Vritra. This Purana has eighteen thousand verses.[DDB77] Whoever writes out a copy of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, places it on a golden lion-throne, and presents it to someone on the full-moon day of the month of Bhadra (August-September) will attain the supreme goal."

Gopiparanadhana: The word gayatri here indicates the basic meaning of Gayatri, along with the one word dhimahi, which alludes to the Gayatri texts and invariably occurs within them; it would improper to utter in this context the actual Gayatri, the primeval form of all Vedic mantras. The meaning of Gayatri is found in the phrases "from whom proceed the generation, maintenance and destruction of this universe" and "He imparted the transcendental sound of the Vedas from within the heart" [Bhag. 1.1.1]. These two phrases express ideas identical to ideas contained in Gayatri, that the Supreme Truth is the shelter of all the worlds and that He is the inspirer of intelligence. In the phrase "all the ramifications of religion," the word "religion" (dharma) means "the supreme religion," since the Bhagavatam [1.1.2] states, "In this work the supreme religion is described, to the exclusion of all kinds of cheating religion." Such activities as meditation on the Personality of Godhead are the specific features of this supreme religion, as we will make evident later on.

BBT: Here the word gayatri indicates the meaning of the Gayatri mantra, which includes the word dhimahi. Dhimahi is an indicator of Gayatri, implying its purport; it would be improper to directly utter Gayatri itself, the origin of all Vedic mantras. The first verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam [1.1.1] alludes to the meaning of Gayatri by the phrases janmady asya yatah ("by Him this universe is created, maintained, and destroyed") and tene brahma hrida ("He revealed Vedic knowledge in the heart"). These phrases express the same meaning as Gayatri, describing the Lord as the basis of all the universes and as He who inspires everyone's intellect.

The word dharma in the compound dharma-vistara refers to the supreme religion, as expressed in the Bhagavatam's words,[DDB78] dharmah projjhita-kaitavo `tra paramah [Bhag. 1.1.2]: "the supreme religion, devoid of all cheating propensities." And, as will become clear in upcoming Texts, this dharma is indeed characterized by meditation on the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Krishna Dvaipayana Vyasadeva is the literary incarnation of the Supreme Lord. Thus he is often called Bhagavan, a title reserved for Lord Vishnu and for specially empowered servants of Vishnu like Lord Shiva. Nevertheless, Vyasadeva accepted the pastime of experiencing doubt. After organizing all the shrutis and composing the Vedanta-sutra and Mahabharata, he felt dissatisfied. He doubted how people in Kali-yuga would understand the mysteries of the Personality of Godhead's opulence and all-attractiveness, since in all the works he had produced these were never fully revealed.

"I think I mostly failed to describe the principles of devotional service to the Supreme Lord, which are dear both to perfect beings and to the infallible Lord" [Bhag. 1.4.31]. Although Shrila Vyasa thus knew already what the source of his dissatisfaction was, he needed to hear confirmation of this from his spiritual master Narada, and specific instructions on how to remedy the problem.

"Shri Narada said: You have not actually broadcast the sublime and spotless glories of the Personality of Godhead. That philosophy which does not satisfy the transcendental senses of the Lord is considered worthless" [Bhag. 1.5.8].

"O highly fortunate one, your vision is completely perfect. Your good fame is spotless. You are firm in vow and situated in transcendence. You should think of the pastimes of the Lord in trance for the liberation of the people in general from all material bondage" [Bhag. 1.5.13].

tvam atmanatmanam avehy amogha-drik

"Your Goodness has perfect vision. You yourself can know the Supersoul Personality of Godhead because you are present as the plenary portion of the Lord. Although you are birthless, you have appeared on this earth for the well-being of all people. Please, therefore, describe the transcendental pastimes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead Shri Krishna more vividly" [Bhag. 1.5.21].

Even pure devotees of the Lord suffer apparent forgetfulness of His presence and directions while living in this world in the mood of separation from Him. Thus sometimes a fully surrendered devotee thinks that he should first accomplish some business in this world before becoming a full-time preacher of the Lord's glories. Humbly feeling unqualified to assume the position of Vaishnava acarya, he makes plans for success as a businessman or scholar. But because he is sincere, the Lord arranges at the right time for him to be reminded of his higher duty. Shrila Vyasadeva followed this pattern in his transcendental pastimes, busying himself for a long time in teaching the worldly principles of ritualistic religion, material acquisition, sense enjoyment and impersonal liberation. When he finally realized the inadequacy of all he had done, he was ready to be redirected by his spiritual master.

Following Narada's advice, Vyasadeva sat in meditation at his ashrama in the Himalayas on the bank of the Sarasvati River. What he saw in his trance became the basis of the eighteen-thousand-verse Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the most natural commentary on his Vedanta-sutra for the simple reason that an author best knows the purpose of his own work. Shrimad-Bhagavatam is equivalent to the Vedanta-sutra because it also presents the definitive reconciliation of all scriptures. Both the Vedanta-sutra and Shrimad-Bhagavatam delimit the supreme tattva, the unifier of all truths--sarve veda yat padam amananti, "that reality which all the Vedas affirm" (Kaõha Up. 2.15). Only the Bhagavatam, however, fully explains that Supreme Truth in a way that every honest and sensible person can understand, irregardless of birth, training and past behavior.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami next highlights how Shrimad-Bhagavatam embodies the purport of the sacred Vedic mantra known as Gayatri. Every twice-born brahmana is enjoined to chant this mantra at the three junctures of the day--sunrise, noon and sunset. Gayatri is a direct expansion of the original Vedic syllable om, and from her expand all the other mantras; therefore she is known as the mother of the Vedas. There are twenty-four syllables in Gayatri, divided into three sections of eight syllables each. Like other Vedic and tantric mantras, Gayatri should be chanted only by those who have been properly initiated into it by a representative of an authentic disciplic succession. Sampradaya-vihina ye/ mantras te nishphala matah: "It is understood that whatever mantras you might chant will be fruitless if they have not been received through a bona fide sampradaya" [Padma Purana <ref>]. Thus as a general rule scriptures avoid giving away mantras gratuitously by quoting them verbatim; almost always some words or syllables are inverted or left out in citations. Shrimad-Bhagavatam in fact never directly quotes the Gayatri mantra, either in the first verse or anywhere else in its Twelve Cantos. Neither the original Brahma-gayatri or any of its variants appear anywhere in Shrimad-Bhagavatam, there are not even any verses in the twenty-four syllable Gayatri meter. The only literal fragment of Gayatri visible in the opening verse of the Bhagavatam is the one word dhimahi ("let us meditate").

tat savitur varenyam bhargo devasya dhimahi dhiyo yo nah pracodayat.

"Let us meditate on the all-worshipful effulgence of the Supreme Lord, the giver of life. May He inspire our intelligence" [Brahma-gayatri, without the prefixed pranava and vyahriti].

janmady asya yato 'nvayad itaratash cartheshv abhijnah sva-raõ tene brahma hrida ya adi-kavaye muhyanti yat surayah tejo-vari-mridam yatha vinimayo yatra tri-sargo 'mrisha dhamna svena sada nirasta-kuhakam satyam param dhimahi

"Let us meditate upon Lord Shri Krishna because He is the Absolute Truth and the primeval cause of the all causes of the creation, sustenance and destruction of the manifested universes. He is directly and indirectly conscious of all manifestations, and He is independent because there is no other cause beyond Him. It is He only who first imparted the Vedic knowledge unto the heart of Brahmaji, the original living being. By Him even the great sages and demigods are placed into illusion, as one is bewildered by the illusory representations of water seen in fire, or land seen on water. Only because of Him do the material universes, temporarily manifested by the reactions of the three modes of nature, appear factual, although they are unreal. We therefore meditate upon Him, Lord Shri Krishna, who is eternally existent in the transcendental abode, which is forever free from the illusory representations of the material world. We meditate upon Him for He is the Absolute Truth" [Bhag. 1.1.1].

Meditation on the Personality of Godhead, indicated by the injunctive verb dhimahi, comprises the essence of Krishna consciousness, the path of unalloyed devotional service. It is the same means of achieving the perfection of human life taught by the Vedas and Vedanta.

atma va are drashöavyah shrotavyo mantavyo nididhyasitavyo maitreyi.

"My dear Maitreyi, one should realize the Supreme Soul and come to see it directly. One should hear about that Soul, carefully think about It, and deeply meditate upon It" [Brihad-aranyaka Up. 4.5.6]

Shrimad-Bhagavatam Is the Natural Commentary on the Vedanta-sutra

Shrimad-Bhagavatam contains the story of its own appearance as the crowning achievement of Shrila Vyasadeva's literary efforts. First Shrila Vyasadeva arranged the four Vedas, and then He composed the great epic Mahabharata for the benefit of women, shudras, and others who cannot study the Vedas. Next He compiled the Puranas, the natural commentary on the Vedas, and then He provided the essence of the Vedas and Puranas in His Vedanta-sutra. But even after all this literary output, Veda-vyasa felt discontented, although He did not know why. Then His spiritual master, Narada Muni, came to His rescue:

jijnasitam su-sampannam api te mahad adbhutam
kritavan bharatam yas tvam sarvartha-paribrimhitam

"Your inquiries were full and your studies were also well fulfilled, and there is no doubt that you have prepared a great and wonderful work, the Mahabharata, which is full of all kinds of Vedic sequences elaborately explained" (Bhag. 1.5.3).

yatha dharmadayas cartha muni-varyanukirtitah
na tatha vasudevasya mahima hy anuvarnitah

"Although, great sage, you have very broadly described the four principles beginning with religious performances, you have not in the same way described the glories of the Supreme Personality, Vasudeva" (Bhag. 1.5.9.).

Following Narada Muni's instruction, Shrila Vyasa meditated, and while He was in trance Shrimad-Bhagavatam was revealed to Him. Thus it is clear that Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which gave solace to Vyasadeva, is knowledge descended from the transcendental realm. In upcoming Texts Shri Jiva will show that it is also the natural commentary on the Vedanta-sutra.

Various Puranas mention the relationship between Shrimad-Bhagavatam and the Gayatri mantra. Considered the essence of the Vedas, Gayatri is supposed to be recited at dawn, noon, and dusk by every twice-born person (brahmana, kshatriya, and vaishya). According to Shridhara Svami in his Bhavartha-dipika, Shrimad-Bhagavatam begins with the Gayatri mantra. Commenting on the first verse of the Bhagavatam, he writes, dhimahiti gayatrya prarambhena ca gayatry-akhya-brahma-vidya-rupam etat puranam iti darshitam: "That the Gayatri phrase indicated by the word dhimahi begins this Purana shows that this work has the nature of the brahma-vidya [Vedic knowledge of the Supreme] called Gayatri." Because Shrimad-Bhagavatam is based on Gayatri, the cream of the Vedas, it explains the topmost principles of religion. The Bhagavatam (1.1.3) thus calls itself "the ripened fruit of the wish-fulfilling tree of the Vedas" (nigama-kalpa-taror galitam phalam).

The recitation of Gayatri and other Vedic mantras is governed by strict rules regarding the person, time, and place, and also the purity of the chanter,[NEW79] but such restrictions do not apply to Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Since anyone may read the Bhagavatam, strictly speaking it would be improper for the Gayatri mantra to appear there in its original form. Gayatri is among the Vedic mantras, which only the twice-born are allowed to chant. That is why Shrila Vyasadeva expressed the form and idea of Gayatri in the Bhagavatam without using the actual mantra. Only one word from Gayatri, dhimahi, has been kept to indicate his intention, because it is a compulsory word in the mantra and carries its essence.

Another reason Vyasa did not write the original Gayatri in Shrimad-Bhagavatam is that doing so would have invited misinterpretation. Various schools of thought have explained Gayatri differently—as a meditation on impersonal Brahman, on the sun, on the fire-god, on Lord Shiva, and so forth. Only rarely is it understood to be a meditation on the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Vasudeva. But in Shrimad-Bhagavatam, Shrila Vyasadeva's own commentary on the Vedanta-sutra, Vyasadeva delivers the complete and unambiguous meaning of Gayatri in the opening verse. He reveals that Gayatri is a meditation on the Supreme Personality of Godhead and His eternal consort, Shri Radhika. This meditation is indeed the highest dharma. In the 105th Text of Shri Paramatma-sandarbha, Shrila Jiva Gosvami will explain the Gayatri mantra in detail, and in the Krishna-sandarbha he will thoroughly analyze the Bhagavatam's first verse and show it to be a meditation on Shri Shri Radha-Krishna.

In the next Text of the Tattva-sandarbha, Shrila Jiva Gosvami further introduces the Shrimad-Bhagavatam, describing its distinguishing features and supporting his statements with scriptural references.

Gopiparanadhana: Similarly, the Prabhasa-khanda [1.2.39–42] of the Skanda Purana contains the statements, "Where the Gayatri mantra is the focus of discussion¹/₄," "Among the various scriptures known on earth, that one which recounts the histories of the humans and demigods who lived during the Sarasvata-kalpa is called the Bhagavatam, and "A person who transcribes a copy of the Bhagavatam¹⁴ This Purana is said to have eighteen thousand verses." There are also similar statements in the Agni Purana.

BBT: In the Skanda Purana, Prabhasa-khanda [7.1.2.39–42] we find a description of Shrimad-Bhagavatam similar to the one in the Matsya Purana:

"The Purana known as Shrimad-Bhagavatam recounts the deeds of humans and demigods in the Sarasvata-kalpa, explains the supreme religion in terms of Gayatri, and narrates the slaying of Vritrasura. It has eighteen thousand verses. . . . Whoever writes out a copy of the Bhagavatam, places it on a golden lion-throne, and presents it to someone on the full-moon day of the month of Bhadra will attain the supreme destination." [NEW80]

These verses are also found in the Agni Purana [272.6, 7].

Gopiparanadhana: Another Purana cited as authority by the commentator [Shrila Shridhara Svami] also states, "That book is known as the Bhagavatam which contains eighteen thousand verses in twelve cantos, in which are described the meditation on the Supreme taught by sage Hayagriva and the killing of Vritra, and which begins with Gayatri."

BBT: Yet another Purana, cited by the Bhagavatam commentator Shridhara Svami, describes the characteristics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam thus:

"The Purana known as Shrimad-Bhagavatam has eighteen thousand verses divided into twelve cantos, begins with Gayatri, describes the Hayagriva-brahma-vidya, and narrates the slaying of Vritrasura."

Gopiparanadhana: Here the "meditation on the Supreme taught by Hayagriva" means the "Armor of Narayana" prayer, since it is mentioned alongside the killing of Vritra. The name Hayagriva here refers to the sage Dadhici, who had a horse's head. He initiated the meditation on the Supreme (brahma-vidya) known as the Narayana-varma. That he had a horse's head is established in the Bhagavatam's Sixth Canto [6.9.52] by the words "he who was called Horse-head (Ashva-shira)." That section of the Bhagavatam indeed presents the Narayana-varma as a brahma-vidya, and this identification is also confirmed by a verse cited by Shrila Shridhara Svami in his commentary, "Hearing this and feeling honored, Dadhici the descendent of Atharva, anxious not to break his promise, taught the two Ashvini-kumaras the pravargya method and the meditation on the Supreme."

BBT: The Hayagriva-brahma-vidya mentioned here (meaning "the doctrine of the Supreme taught by Hayagriva") [DDB81] is "The Armor of Narayana" (Narayana-varma), since it is narrated in the same context as the killing of Vritra. The word haya-griva here refers to Dadhici, the sage with a horse's head. He taught the knowledge of Brahman called Narayana-varma. His accepting a horse's head and receiving the name Ashvashira ("horse-headed one") are mentioned in Shrimad-Bhagavatam's Sixth Canto [6.9.52], where these words are spoken: "he who has the name Ashvashira." From a verse Shridhara Svami cites in his commentary on this Bhagavatam text we get further confirmation that the Narayana-varma is in fact a standard teaching about the Absolute:

"Upon hearing this and feeling honored, Dadhici, anxious not to break his promise, instructed the twin Ashvini-kumaras in the knowledge of the Pravargya sacrifice and Brahma-vidya."

Gopiparanadhana: Shrimad-Bhagavatam is most perfectly in the mode of goodness because it pleases the Personality of Godhead and is very much preferred by the devotees of Godhead. As we find in the Padma Purana [Uttara-khanda 22.115], in the questions posed to Ambarisha by Gautama, "O ruler of the earth, do you sit in front of the Deity of Lord Hari and recite the Bhagavata Purana, including the story of Prahlada, the king of the demons?" Also in the Padma Purana, in the section glorifying Vanjuli Maha-dvadashi, Gautama instructs Ambarisha, "One should stay awake through the night, hearing narrations related to Lord Vishnu--the Bhagavad-gita, the Thousand Names of Vishnu and the Purana spoken by Shukadeva. These should be read aloud with careful attention to give satisfaction to the Supreme Lord Hari."

BBT: Since Shrimad-Bhagavatam is pleasing to the Supreme Lord and is His devotees' favorite book, it is the supremely [DDB82]sattvic scripture. As stated in the Padma Purana, in Gautama Rishi's question to Maharaja Ambarisha,

"O lord of the earth, do you recite the Bhagavata Purana before the Deity of Lord Hari, especially the history of the king of the demons, Prahlada Maharaja?" (Padma Pur.[DDB83], Uttara-khanda 22.115).

Again in the Padma Purana, Gautama further instructs Ambarisha, in the section glorifying the vow of Vyashjuli Maha-dvadashi:

"One should stay awake throughout that night and hear scriptures that narrate stories of Lord Vishnu and His devotees, especially the [DDB84] Bhagavad-gita, the thousand names of Lord Vishnu, and the Purana narrated by Shukadeva [Shrimad-Bhagavatam]. One should recite these with care, since they are pleasing to Lord Hari."

Gopiparanadhana: Elsewhere in the same work is the statement, "My dear Ambarisha, you should listen regularly to the Bhagavatam spoken by Shukadeva. Recite it with your own mouth also, if you want to see the end of your material life." And in the Prahlada-samhita of the Skanda Purana, in the section describing the glories of Dvaraka, "One who remains awake all night in front of the Deity of Hari reciting Shrimad-Bhagavatam with devotion will go to the Supreme Lord's abode with all his family."

BBT: And elsewhere in the Padma Purana we find this statement:

"O Ambarisha, if you wish to end your material existence, then every day you should hear the Bhagavatam that was narrated by Shukadeva, and you should also recite it yourself."

Finally, we find the following statement in the Prahlada-samhita of the Skanda Purana, in the section describing Dvaraka's glories:

"A person who stays up [on the night of Ekadashi] and recites Shrimad-Bhagavatam with devotion before the Deity of Lord Hari goes to the Lord's abode along with all his family members."

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

There is no doubt that the Bhagavatam is one of the main Puranas, since several Puranas included it in their lists of the eighteen Puranas, and no such lists exclude it. However, tantric worshipers of Devi, the consort of Lord Shiva, have raised a controversy over exactly which Bhagavatam is the one listed. They claim that their Devi-bhagavata is the real Bhagavatam among the eighteen major Puranas. Without directly embroiling himself in this controversy, Shrila Jiva Gosvami here cites several statements from other Puranas which include convincing evidence of Shrimad-Bhagavatam's place on the Puranic list of eighteen.

Actually, there are two Devi Puranas, both of which have been at times given the title Bhagavata on the grounds of their being dedicated to Bhagavati (Devi). Only one of two, the one called Devi-bhagavata, has features that lend some credibility to the idea that it may be the real Bhagavatam. It is eighteen thousand verses long in twelve cantos. It begins with a form of the Gayatri mantra: sarva-chaitanya-rupam tam adyam vidyam ca dhimahi/ buddhim ya nah pracodayat ("Let us meditate on that primal energy of knowledge, who embodies all living beings. May she inspire our intelligence."). A few episodes in the life of Prahlada are described in the Fourth Canto, although without revealing much of his true saintly character. Canto Six tells about the killing of Vritra. Thus five of the characteristics of the Bhagavatam mentioned in the Puranic verses quoted in anucchedas 19 and 20 are found in the Devi-bhagavata as well as in the Vaishnava Bhagavatam.

These verses list four other special characteristics, however, which the Devi-bhagavata fails to exhibit: 1) The Bhagavatam discusses events which occurred in the Sarasvata-kalpa, also known as the Shveta-varaha-kalpa, the day of Brahma in which Lord Vishnu's incarnation as a boar had a white body. 2) It describes the Brahma-vidya taught by Hayagriva. 3) It was spoken by Shukadeva. 4) It is a narration of Vaishnava character and should be recited in front of a Deity of Lord Vishnu.

The two verses cited from the Matsya Purana (Text 19.2) and the Skanda Puranas' Prabhasa-khanda (Text 20.1) share some of the same phrases, as does also the following verses from the Agni Purana [272.6–7]:

yatrādhikṛitya gayatrim/ kīrtyate dharma-vistarāh vritrasura-vadhopetam/ tad bhagavatam ucyate

sarasvatasya kalpasya/ proshōhapadyam tu tad dadet ashōadasha-sahasrani/ hema-simha-samanvitam

"In the beginning of one of the Puranas the Gayatri mantra is the focus of discourse. In it all the ramifications of true religion are enunciated, and the killing of the demon Vritra is described. The Purana which has these characteristics is called Shrimad-Bhagavatam. It deals with the Sarasvata-kalpa and has eighteen thousand verses. One should give it as a gift on a gold lion-throne in the month of Praushōhapada."

The unidentified Puranic verse cited by Shrila Shridhara Svami specifies that the Bhagavatam describes the Hayagriva-brahma-vidya. Although Hayagriva is also the name of an incarnation of Lord Vishnu who appeared with a horse's head and spoke the Vedas to Lord Brahma, Shrila Jiva Gosvami here explains that this Hayagriva is different. He is the sage Dadhici, who taught the Ashvini-kumaras two specific vidyas, or systematic meditations on the Supreme for aspirants on various levels of realization. The Upanishads give instruction on several such vidyas, among them the pravargya taught by Dadhici, otherwise known as the prana-vidya, a meditation on the Supreme in the form of the air of life. The prana-vidya is introduced in a passage of the Chandogya Upanishad (1.11.4–5):

katama devateti. prana iti hovaca, sarvani ha va imani bhutani pranam evabhisamvishanti pranam abhyujjihate saisha devata.

"`Which is the controlling deity?' He answered, `It is prana, the air of life. All beings which exist enter within prana, and all rise up again from prana. That is the controlling deity.'" In the Vedanta-sutra (1.1.23), Shrila Vyasa offers the aphorism ata eva pranah to prove that the prana-vidya is a not just a depiction of a subtle physical energy but a transcendental meditation on Brahman. Baladeva Vidyabhushana explains in his Vedanta commentary, Govinda-bhashya: prano 'yam sarveshvara eva na tu vayu-vikarah. kutah? ata eva sarva-bhutotpatti-pralaya-hetutva-rupad brahma-lingad eva. "This prana is the Lord of all, not simple a transformation of the element air. Why? Because it is characterized as the Supreme, in terms of its being the cause of all beings' generation and destruction."

The second vidya which the Ashvinis learned from Dadhici is the Narayana-kavaca, a meditation on God in many of His personal forms for protection from various kinds of danger. The same Narayana-kavaca is recited in the eighth chapter of Shrimad-Bhagavatam's Sixth Canto (Texts 12–34), although in that instance it is being taught by a grand-disciple of Dadhici, the sage Vishvarupa, to Lord Indra. His Divine Grace Shrila Prabhupada gives more information on the story of Dadhici's teaching the brahma-vidya in a purport to his translation of Shrimad-Bhagavatam [6.9.52]:

"The following story is narrated by many acaryas in their commentaries:¹⁴The great sage Dadhici had perfect knowledge of how to perform fruitive activities, and he had advanced spiritual knowledge as well. Knowing this, the Ashvini-kumaras once approached him and begged him to instruct them in spiritual science (brahma-vidya). Dadhici Muni replied, `I am now engaged in arranging sacrifices for fruitive activities. Come back some time later.' When the Ashvini-kumaras left, Indra, the King of heaven, approached Dadhici and said, `My dear Muni, the Ashvini-kumaras are only physicians. Please do not instruct them in spiritual science. If you impart the spiritual science to them despite my warning, I shall punish you by cutting off your head.' After warning Dadhici in this way, Indra returned to heaven. The Ashvini-kumaras, who understood Indra's desires, returned and begged Dadhici for brahma-vidya. When the great saint Dadhici informed them of Indra's threat, the Ashvini-kumaras replied, 'Let us first cut off your head and replace it with the head of a horse. You can instruct brahma-vidya through the horse's head, and when Indra returns and cuts off that head, we shall reward you and restore your original head.' Since Dadhici had promised to impart brahma-vidya to the Ashvini-kumaras, he agreed to their proposal. Therefore, because Dadhici imparted brahma-vidya through the mouth of a horse, this brahma-vidya is also known as Ashvashira."

The Characteristics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam

In this Text Jiva Gosvami gives special attention to establishing that the Bhagavatam glorified in the Puranas is Shrimad-Bhagavatam. He does this because some scholars of his time held that the Devi Bhagavatam, rather than Shrimad-Bhagavatam, was actually the Bhagavatam glorified in the Puranas. Like Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the Devi Bhagavatam is a Purana with twelve cantos, 18,000 verses, and an account of Vritrasura's death, although its account of how Vritra was killed differs from the one in Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Also, when some traditional scholars read in the Puranas that on the full-moon day of the month of Bhadra one should donate the Bhagavatam mounted on a golden lion (hema-simha), they take this to mean the Devi Bhagavatam. This seems quite fitting, since Devi, or Durga, rides on a lion. (In the case of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, hema-simha is understood to mean "golden lion-throne.")

Shrila Jiva Gosvami solves the controversy by citing references that list distinctive features of Shrimad-Bhagavatam: it begins with the Gayatri mantra, it contains the Hayagriva-brahma-vidya, the events it narrates happened in the Sarasvata-kalpa, and it was first spoken by Shri Shukadeva Gosvami to Parikshit Maharaja. Jiva Gosvami further supports his opinion by quoting from the Bhavartha-dipika, Shridhara Svami's commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

The Devi Bhagavatam opens with a statement that appears to be based on Gayatri: om sarva-chaitanyarupam tam adyam vidyam ca dhimahi, buddhim ya nah pracodayat. There are two reasons this statement should not be equated with Gayatri: First, nothing in it corresponds to the words savituh, varenyam, and bhargas from Gayatri. (By contrast, in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.1.1 there is such a correspondence.). Second, this statement is a meditation on Devi, but as Shri Jiva will show in the next Text, the object of meditation in Gayatri is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Vishnu.

Like Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the Devi Bhagavatam narrates the killing of Vritrasura, but in its account Indra kills Vritra with ocean foam empowered by Devi. Vritrasura performed severe penances for hundreds of years to please Lord Brahma. When Brahma appeared before him and offered a boon, Vritra asked that he would not be slain by any weapon made of iron or wood, or one that was dry or wet. After Lord Brahma granted this boon, Vritra attacked Indra and defeated him. Indra subsequently took help from Lord Vishnu, who entered Indra's thunderbolt and also advised him to take the help of Devi and make a truce with Vritra. Indra then apparently befriended Vritrasura. But one day at dusk Indra surprised Vritrasura on a beach and slew him with his thunderbolt covered with foam, which was not a weapon of iron or wood and was neither wet nor dry.

The Devi Bhagavatam also makes no mention of the Hayagriva-brahma-vidya (the Narayana-varma). For all these reasons it is clear that the Bhagavatam referred to in the verse cited by Shridhara Svami is not the Devi Bhagavatam.

Hemadri, Ballalsena, Govindananda, Raghunandana, Gopala Bhaööa Gosvami, and Sanatana Gosvami have each written noteworthy dharma-shastras (books and essays on religious duties), in which they quote frequently from Shrimad-Bhagavatam but never from the Devi Bhagavatam. Ballalsena states in his Dana-sagara that only a few verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam specifically recommend acts of charity. In contrast, the entire thirtieth chapter of the Devi Bhagavatam's Ninth Canto deals exclusively with the glory of giving various kinds of charity. In addition, with the exceptions of Ramanujacarya and Nilakanöhacarya, all the great saintly commentators on Prasthanatrayi¹ either wrote about Shrimad-Bhagavatam directly or at least cited it as a standard reference in their books. By contrast, neither Shankara, Madhvacarya, Vallabha, Lord Chaitanyadeva, or any other notable acarya ever cited the Devi Bhagavatam to support or prove any important statement.

The ninety-sixth chapter of the first part of the Naradiya Purana lists the topics of all twelve cantos of the Bhagavatam in order. This list fits Shrimad-Bhagavatam but not the Devi Bhagavatam. And the Padma Purana (Uttara-khanda 193.3), states:

puraneshu tu sarveshu shrimad-bhagavatam param
yatra prati-padam krishno giyate bahudharshibhih

"Among all the Puranas, Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the best. In every line great sages glorify Lord Krishna in various ways." All this leaves no doubt that the Bhagavatam mentioned in the quoted [DDB85] Puranic verses is Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam and other Puranas mention a demon named Hayagriva, and there is also an incarnation of Lord Vishnu called Hayagriva, who had a horse's head. But because the Hayagriva mentioned in this section of the [DDB86] Tattva-sandarbha is connected with the slaying of the demon Vritra, Shrila Jiva Gosvami has identified him as the sage Dadhici. As told in the Sixth Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, after Vritra had conquered the demigods they approached Lord Vishnu for help. The Lord advised the chief of the demigods, Indra, to approach Dadhici and ask him for his body, which had been made firm by vows, penances, and knowledge of Brahman. The Lord told Indra to fashion from Dadhici's bones a thunderbolt strong enough to kill Vritrasura.

Dadhici had previously taught the knowledge of Brahman to the Ashvini Kumara twins, although Indra had earlier forbidden him to teach them transcendental knowledge on the grounds that their medical profession disqualified them from learning it. Indra had threatened to behead Dadhici if he disobeyed, but Dadhici had already promised to teach the twins. The Ashvini Kumaras had solved Dadhici's dilemma surgically: they severed his head and grafted a horse's head in its place, knowing that Indra would eventually cut off that head and enable them to restore Dadhici's original head. Dadhici then instructed them through the horse's head. Dadhici became known as Hayagriva or Ashvashira ("horse-headed one"), and the transcendental knowledge he imparted became famous as the Hayagriva-brahma-vidya. As planned, Indra later severed Dadhici's horse head and the Ashvini Kumaras restored his original head. Then, on the request of the demigods Dadhici offered his body to Indra, who used his bones to make a thunderbolt with which he killed Vritrasura. Earlier Dadhici had taught Tvashöa the same knowledge he had previously taught the Ashvini Kumaras, and Tvashöa in turn taught it to his son Vishvarupa. Vishvarupa taught it to Lord Indra as the Narayana Armor, which helped Indra defeat Vritrasura. Thus the Hayagriva referred to here is Dadhici, and the Brahma-vidya is the Narayana Armor. This is all described in the Sixth Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam and in the Bhagavatam commentaries of the Vaishnava acaryas.

Text 20.5 contains the term shuka-proktam, "recited by Shri Shuka." From this term we should not infer that verses Shukadeva Gosvami did not speak, such as the First Canto, are not part of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. The Bhagavatam Vyasa revealed was complete, including future events and future statements by Suta and Shaunaka. Since Shrimad-Bhagavatam has been identified as having eighteen thousand verses and opening with a verse based on the Gayatri mantra, it must be that its first verse begins with the words janmady asya yatah and its last one ends with tam namami harim param.

Of the eighteen Puranas, six are meant for persons in the mode of ignorance, six for those in the mode of passion, and six for those in the mode of goodness. But Shrimad-Bhagavatam occupies a place of honor even among the sattvic Puranas. It is considered nondifferent from Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and therefore it is parama-sattvika, a manifestation of pure goodness without any tinge of the material modes. Hareh santosha-karanam: it is pleasing to Hari, the transcendental Lord, who cannot be pleased by anything material. It is relished by His devotees, who scoff at the bliss of liberation, what to speak of the pleasure derived from reading something mundane. For this reason the sage Gautama recommends reciting Shrimad-Bhagavatam on Ekadashi, which is also called Hari-vasara, the day of Lord Hari. As the Skanda Purana (Vishnu-khanda 6.4.3) states:

shrimad-bhagavatasyatha shrimad-bhagavatah sada
svarupam ekam evasti sac-cid-ananda-lakshanam

“Shrimad-Bhagavatam and the Personality of Godhead are always of the same nature—possessed of eternal existence, full knowledge, and complete bliss.” And the Padma Purana (Uttara-khanda 198.30) confirms, shrimad-bhagavatakhya ‘yam pratyakshah krishna eva hi: “Without a doubt Shrimad-Bhagavatam is directly Lord Krishna.”

That Shrimad-Bhagavatam is nondifferent from Lord Krishna is confirmed in the Bhagavatam itself (1.3.43), where Suta Gosvami states that after the Lord’s disappearance the Bhagavatam appeared as His representative to enlighten the benighted people of Kali-yuga. The Padma Purana also confirms the oneness of the Bhagavatam and the Lord with this passage equating the Bhagavatam’s cantos with Krishna’s limbs:

padau yadiyau prathama-dvitiyau tritiya-turyau kathitau yad-uru nabhis tatha pancama eva shashöho bhujantaram dor-yugalam tathanyau

kanöhas tu rajan navamo yadiyo mukharavindam dashamam praphullam ekadasho yash ca lalaöa-paööam shiro ‘pi yad dvadasha eva bhati namami devam karuna-nidhanam tamala-varnam suhitavataram apara-samsara-samudra-setum bhajamahe bhagavata-svarupam

“The Bhagavatam’s First and Second Cantos are Lord Krishna’s feet, and the Third and Fourth Cantos are His thighs. The Fifth Canto is His navel, the Sixth Canto is His chest, and the Seventh and Eighth Cantos are His arms. The Ninth Canto is His throat, the Tenth His blooming lotus face, the Eleventh His forehead, and the Twelfth His head.

“I bow down to that Lord, the ocean of mercy, whose color is like that of a tamala tree and who appears in this world for the welfare of all. I worship Him as the bridge for crossing the unfathomable ocean of material existence. Shrimad-Bhagavatam has appeared as His very self.”

Next Shrila Jiva Gosvami demonstrates that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the natural commentary on the Vedanta-sutra.

It is the Sama Veda among the Puranas, spoken directly by the Personality of Godhead. This work with twelve cantos, hundreds of chapters and eighteen thousand verses is called Shrimad-Bhagavatam."

BBT: And the Garuda Purana states:

"This Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the most perfect Purana. It is the natural commentary on the Vedanta-sutra, it establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata, it is a commentary on Gayatri, it explains and expands the meaning of the Vedas, it is the Sama Veda of the Puranas, and it was spoken by the Supreme Lord Himself. Gopiparanadhana: Saying that the Bhagavatam is the purport of the sutras of Vedanta means that it serves as their natural commentary. [Shrila Vyasadeva] first conceived of this in subtle form within his mind, then he summarized it as the Vedanta-sutra, and later he manifested Shrimad-Bhagavatam directly in its fully elaborated form. Inasmuch as this Bhagavatam has already appeared as the Vedanta-sutra's self-effulgent commentary, we can infer that the commentaries other, more recent authors have produced from their own heads are only worth paying attention to when they are faithful to the Bhagavatam.

BBT: Here the words brahma-sutranam arthah mean that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the natural commentary on the Vedanta-sutra. First the Bhagavatam appeared in the heart of Shri Vyasadeva in a subtle form. He then summarized it in the form of the Vedanta-sutra, and later He expanded it into Shrimad-Bhagavatam as we know it. Since the Vedanta-sutra already has a natural commentary in Shrimad-Bhagavatam, whatever else more recent commentators have produced from their own brains should be taken seriously only when it is faithful to the version of Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

Gopiparanadhana: "It establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata" means that in it is ascertained the meaning of the Mahabharata, whose characteristics are as stated: "It is said that the Mahabharata establishes the purport of all scriptures. Once long ago, Vyasadeva made the demigods headed by Brahma and all the sages place both the Mahabharata on one side of a scale and all the Vedas on the other. They found that the Mahabharata weighed more. Because it is so great (mahattvat) and so weighty (bhara-vattvat), it is called Mahabharata."

BBT: Concerning the phrase bharatartha-vinirnayah ("Shrimad-Bhagavatam establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata"), we find the following verses describing the Mahabharata's importance in the Mahabharata itself [Adi-parva 1.272–74]:

"The Mahabharata is glorified because it contains the conclusions of all scriptures. Long ago, on the request of Shrila Vyasa, Lord Brahma and the other demigods came together with all the great sages and placed the Mahabharata on one side of a scale and the entire Vedas on the other. The Mahabharata, it turned out, weighed more because of its greatness (mahattva) and heaviness (bhara-vattva). For this reason it is called Maha-bharata." The message of the Mahabharata, whose importance is as described here, is made clear in the text of Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

Gopiparanadhana: The Mahabharata also has its purport in the divine Personality of Godhead. Janamejaya states this to Shri Veda-vyasa in the Moksha-dharma section of the Mahabharata, in the Narayaniya sub-section, "This Narayaniya is an unexcelled ocean of knowledge, churned from the vast expanse of the Mahabharata's hundred thousand verses of stories with the churning rod of your wisdom. O brahmana, like yogurt churned from new butter, sandalwood brought from the Malaya Hills, the Aranyakas from the whole body of Vedas, or the nectar of life from medicinal herbs, so this immortal nectar of narrations has been distilled. It was spoken by you, O storehouse of austerity, and is full of descriptions of Lord Narayana."

BBT: Another way in which Shrimad-Bhagavatam establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata is that the message of both culminates in the Supreme Lord alone. That the Mahabharata's message culminates in the Lord is evinced in the Narayaniya section of the Mahabharata's Moksha-dharma portion [170.11–14], where Janamejaya says to Shrila Vyasadeva:

"O brahmana, abode of austerities, just as butter can be extracted from yogurt, sandalwood from the Malaya mountains, the Upanishads from the Vedas, and life-giving nectar from herbs, so by Your churning the ocean of the highest knowledge with the rod of Your intelligence, this Narayaniya has been extracted from the Mahabharata's hundred thousand verses. The Narayaniya's narrations are related to Lord Narayana and are sweet like nectar."

All Vedic literatures, including the Puranas, are auspicious. They are all meant for the improvement of human civilization.

tatah puranam akhilam sarva-shastra-mayam dhruvam
nitya-shabda-mayam punyam shata-koṭi-pravistaram

"After these appeared the entire Purana, incorporating all scriptures. The Purana is unchanging, consists of eternal sound, is auspicious and includes as much as one billion verses" (Skanda Purana, Prabhasa-khanda, quoted in Text 13.1). Each Purana has its own special suitability for some particular class of people, and thus each has a right to advertise its own excellence. Shrimad-Bhagavatam also takes many opportunities to declare its own glories. Nigama-kalpa-taror galitam phalam: "This Bhagavatam is the ripened fruit of the desire tree of the Vedas" [Bhag. 1.1.3].

nimna-ganam yatha ganga/ devanam acyuto yatha
vaishnavanam yatha shambhu/ purananam idam tatha

"Just as the Ganga is the greatest of rivers, Lord Acyuta the supreme among deities and Lord Shambhu [Shiva] the greatest of Vaishnavas, so Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the greatest of all Puranas" [Bhag. 12.13.16].

It is only natural that each Purana encourages its own readers to take advantage of its teachings. Very remarkable about Shrimad-Bhagavatam, however, is the unique praise it receives in works that might be expected to be the Bhagavatam's rivals, like the Skanda, Padma and Garuda Puranas. Those who see the Puranas competing for the adherence of the faithful unjustifiably assume that the Vedic literature is not a coherent whole. But as a thorough study of the whole literature under proper guidance shows, the Puranas do present the true viewpoint of the Vedas and Vedanta. That the apparently conflicting voices of all these texts are in fact in perfect harmony should be a cause of reverence and amazement, of appreciation for the complex elegance of the Supreme Truth's personal incarnation in eternal sound, the total body of the revealed scriptures, shabda-brahma. In spite of all the promotion of demigods, the essential principles of eternal service to the one Supreme Lord are never contradicted in the Puranas. Demigods are allowed to display apparent superiority only by the sanction of their absolute master. Every Purana, in fact, shows respect to the Personality of Godhead by including some narration of the pastimes of both Shri Krishna and Lord Ramacandra. In the ultimate issue, due credit is given to the supreme controller Vishnu and to the supreme Vaishnava scriptural authority in the pure mode of goodness, Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

According to the statement cited here from the Garuda Purana, Shrimad-Bhagavatam elucidates the meaning of the Vedas, all the Puranas, the Vedanta-sutra, Mahabharata and the Gayatri mantra; in addition, it is said to have been spoken by the Supreme Lord and be the Puranic equivalent of the Sama Veda. These qualities are substantiated one after another in this and the next anuccheda.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam "establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata," which is a more appropriate source of knowledge for people of our age than the Vedas themselves, because in an interesting to read and easily understandable way it provides a digest of every important principle of Vedic knowledge. Its very name signifies its importance: Mahabharata is so called by virtue of its "greatness" (mahattva) and "weightiness" (bharavattva). It is an extremely elevated narration of the greatness of the noble dynasty of King Bharata, especially of the five sons of Pandu and their friend Shri Krishna. It is "heavy" in the literal sense of its size, containing over 75,000 verses even in its shortest recession, and known on higher planets in a full form of six million verses.

The confidential essence of the Mahabharata is its revelation of the Personality of Godhead, which is found in a few of its sections, including the Bhagavad-gita, Vishnu-sahasra-nama and Narayaniya. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam this same essence of the Vedas is amplified and expanded into a complete programmed course on the science of God consciousness. The Bhagavatam's importance and usefulness is thus proportionately greater than even that of the Mahabharata, in which the discussions of theistic topics are only isolated diversions from the main story. Therefore the acaryas following in the line of Chaitanya Mahaprabhu judge that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is higher authority than the Mahabharata, and that its version should be accepted when there is apparent contradiction between the two. For example, in the Adi-parva of the Mahabharata, King Parikshit reacts to the news that he has been cursed to die from a snakebite in seven days by trying to protect himself in a castle surrounded by moats. This must be reconciled with the account of the Bhagavatam, according to which Parikshit refuses to do anything to avoid the result of the curse. It is necessary to explain the Parikshit of the Mahabharata as a different person who had the same name in a previous day of Brahma.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam is one of the eighteen Puranas, but Shrila Vyasadeva wrote it after compiling the essence of the Vedas in the Vedanta-sutra and also composing the Mahabharata and Puranas. But, one might ask, if the eighteen Puranas had already been compiled, does this make Shrimad-Bhagavatam the nineteenth Purana?

In Text 21.2 Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains that this is not the case. Shrimad-Bhagavatam appeared first to Shrila Vyasa in a concise and subtle form, as one of the eighteen Puranas. Shrila Vyasa composed the Vedanta-sutra on the basis of this first edition of the Bhagavatam. Later, when He sat in trance in pursuance of Narada Muni's order, the expanded form of Shrimad-Bhagavatam was revealed to Him as the natural commentary on the Vedanta-sutra. Shrimad-Bhagavatam and the Vedanta-sutra share the same subject, the Absolute Truth, and they describe the same principles of sambandha (the relationship between the soul and God), abhidheya (the process of attaining the supreme goal), and prayojana (the supreme goal, perfect devotion to the Lord). Many acaryas and scholars wrote later commentaries on the Vedanta-sutra, but only those that agree with Shrimad-Bhagavatam—such as those given by Ramanujacarya, Madhvacarya, and Baladeva Vidyabhushana—are bona fide.

Suta Gosvami alludes to Veda-vyasa's composing two editions of Shrimad-Bhagavatam:

sa samhitaṁ bhagavatim kritvanukramya catmajam
shukam adhyapayam asa nivritti-niratam munih

[DDB87]“The great sage Vyasadeva, after compiling Shrimad-Bhagavatam and revising it, taught it to His own son, Shri Shukadeva Gosvami, who was already absorbed in self-realization” (Bhag. 1.7.8). Commenting on this verse, Shrila Vishvanatha Cakravarti Thakura writes, atas tadaiva purva-nirmitasyaiva shri- bhagavatasyanukramanam: "The word anukramya in this verse means that Veda-vyasa compiled a new edition of the already existing Shrimad-Bhagavatam."

Text 21.3 relates how the Mahabharata was once shown to be literally heavier than the Vedas. This heaviness came about because the Mahabharata, using simple narrations, elaborated upon and lucidly explained the concise and cryptic subject matter of the Vedas. Vyasadeva makes this point in the Mahabharata itself (Adi Parva 1.62):

brahman veda-rahasyam ca yac canyat sthapitam maya sangopanishadam caiva vedanam vistara-kriya

"O Lord Brahma, in this great work [Mahabharata] I have included the secret essence of all the Vedas and of all other scriptures as well. It explains in detail the Vedas' six corollaries and the Upanishads."

Originally the Mahabharata had six million verses, but at present only one hundred thousand are available on earth. The rest can be found on higher planets, where people have life spans and memories suitable for absorbing such large amounts of information. The distribution of the Mahabharata's verses is also mentioned in the Mahabharata itself (Adi-parva 1.106–107):

shashöim shata-sahasrani cakaranyam sa samhitam trimshac chata-sahasram ca deva-loke pratishöhitam

pitrye pancadasha proktam gandharveshu caturdasha ekam shata-sahasram tu manuseshu pratishöhitam

"Then Shrila Vyasadeva compiled another samhita [Mahabharata], containing six million verses. Of these, three million are present in the heavenly planets, one and a half million on the planet of the forefathers, and one million four hundred thousand on the planet of the Gandharvas. The remaining one hundred thousand verses are available among human beings."

Although abridged, the version of Mahabharata on this planet is the longest epic ever written here. So, due to the profundity of its topics (mahattva) and its great weight (bhara-vatva) it is known as Mahabharata.

The Mahabharata is more versatile than the Vedas because the restrictions that apply to studying the Vedas are absent with the Mahabharata. Anyone may read and enjoy the Mahabharata, regardless of social position or gender. However, only the Moksha-dharma and a few other sections of the Mahabharata directly glorify Lord Narayana as supreme. Other sections mainly deal with a mixture of topics, such as fruitive rituals, politics, and charity. By contrast, the entire Bhagavatam speaks only about the glories of the Supreme Lord, and this exclusive focus makes it superior to the Mahabharata. Thus it has been said, "Shrimad-Bhagavatam establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata."

In the next Text, Shrila Jiva Gosvami cites further proof that the Bhagavatam is the essence of all Vedic literature and the topmost pramana.

Gopiparanadhana: The Bhagavatam's Third Canto also says, "Your friend, the great sage Krishna-dvaipayana Vyasa, has already described the transcendental qualities of the Lord in His great work the Mahabharata. But the whole idea is to draw the attention of the mass of people to Krishna-katha through their strong affinity for hearing mundane topics" [Bhag. 3.5.12].

BBT: Similarly, the Third Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam [3.5.12] confirms [that the Bhagavatam establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata]:

"Your friend, the great sage Krishna-dvaipayana Vyasa, has already described the transcendental qualities of the Lord in His great work the Mahabharata. But the whole idea is to draw the attention of the mass of people to topics concerning Krishna[DDB88] through their strong affinity for hearing mundane topics."

Gopiparanadhana: Therefore Bhagavatam "serves as a commentary on Gayatri." So it is also that in the Vishnu-dharmottara and other Puranas elaborately describe the Personality of Godhead while explaining the Gayatri mantra. Later we are going to explain the verse janmady asya [Bhag. 1.1.1] along these same lines. Vedartha-paribrimhita means "by which the Vedas' message is made complete," as is expressed in such statements as "One should complete the Vedas with the Itihasas and Puranas."

BBT: That Shrimad-Bhagavatam is a commentary on Gayatri [DDB89] is shown in the Vishnu-dharmottara Purana, which elaborately demonstrates, in its explanation of the Gayatri mantra (Prathama-khanda [165]), that the object of meditation in the Gayatri is the Supreme Lord. We shall provide similar proofs of this[DDB90] when we comment on the first verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (beginning janmady asya).

`purananam sama-rupah' vedeshu sama-vat sa teshu shreshöha ity arthah. puranantaranam keshancid apatato rajas-tamasi jushamanais tat-paratvapratitativ 'pi vedanam kanda-traya-vakyaika-vakayatayam yatha samna tatha tesham shri-bhagavatena pratipadye shri-bhagavaty eva paryavasana iti bhavah. tad uktam:

vede ramayane caiva purane bharate tatha
adav ante ca madhye ca harih sarvatra giyate

iti pratipadayishyate ca tad idam paramatma-sandarbhah.

Gopiparanadhana: "The Sama Veda among the Puranas" means the best of them, just as the Sama is the best of the Vedas. Persons who are circumstantially influenced by the material modes of passion and ignorance may not see some of the other Puranas as being dedicated to the Personality of Godhead. But just as the Sama Veda reconciles into a single, consistent message all the various statements of the three divisions of Vedic texts, similarly all the Puranas ultimately glorify the same Shri Bhagavan whose glories the Bhagavatam establishes. This is as said, "Throughout the Vedas and everywhere in the Ramayana, Puranas and Mahabharata, from the beginning to the middle to the end, the praises of Lord Hari are sung" [Mahabharata, Svarga-parva 6.93]. This we will demonstrate later, in the Paramatma-sandarbhah.

BBT: Vedartha-paribrimhitah means that Shrimad-Bhagavatam explains and expands the Vedas. Purananam sama-rupah ("the Sama among the Puranas") means that just as the Sama Veda is supreme among the Vedas, so Shrimad-Bhagavatam is supreme among the Puranas.

[gpd91]Therefore the Skanda Purana, Vishnu-khanda, says:

"In Kali-yuga what is the value of collecting hundreds of thousands of other scriptures if one does not keep Shrimad-Bhagavatam at home? How can a person be considered a Vaishnava in Kali-yuga if Shrimad-Bhagavatam finds no place in his house? Even if he is a learned brahmana, such a person should be considered lower than a dog-eater. O learned brahmana Narada, wherever Shrimad-Bhagavatam is present in Kali-yuga, there the Supreme Lord goes along with the demigods. A person who faithfully recites one verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam every day, O sage, attains the fruit of reading the eighteen Puranas" (Skanda Purana, Vishnu-khanda 5.16. 40–42, 44, 33[DDB92]).

Gopiparanadhana: "Directly spoken by the Personality of Godhead" can be understood in accordance with the summarizing verse "This [Bhagavatam] was spoken by the Lord to Brahma" [Bhag. 12.13.19]. "Including hundreds of chapters" we will not elaborate on out of concern for not increasing too much the length of this discussion. Thus we conclude that Shrimad-Bhagavatam indeed deserves the status of emperor of all scriptures, and that thus the commentator [Shridhara Svami] was correct to explain "together with a gold lion" [Bhag. 12.13.13] as meaning "placed upon a gold lion-throne." For these reasons the Skanda Purana has determined that Shrimad-Bhagavatam alone needs to be studied and that it is the best of scriptures.

BBT: The phrase shata-viccheda-samyutah ("having hundreds of divisions") implies that the Bhagavatam has three hundred and thirty-five chapters. The meaning of the rest of the passage [quoted at the beginning of Text 21] is obvious. Thus we conclude that at the present time those who want to know the highest goal of life should deliberate on Shrimad-Bhagavatam alone.

Gopiparanadhana: So the Skanda Purana says, "What is the use of collecting hundreds or thousands of other scriptures? If someone living in this Kali-yuga does not have the scripture Bhagavatam in his home, how can he be considered a Vaishnava? In fact, in Kali-yuga a brahmana who does not have the scripture Bhagavatam in his home is worse than a dog-eater. O brahmana Narada, wherever in Kali-yuga the scripture Bhagavatam is present, there Lord Hari will go along with the thirteen principal demigods. Anyone human being who daily reads with devotion even one verse of the Bhagavatam, O sage, will obtain the benefits of studying all eighteen Puranas." [Skanda Pur., Vishnu-khanda 5.16.40, 42, 44, 331]

Therefore those who want nowadays to understand the supreme goal of life should study Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

BBT: In his Catur-varga-cintamani, Vrata-khanda [1.28], Hemadri cites the following verse and attributes it to Shrimad-Bhagavatam:

"Out of compassion, the great sage thought it wise to do something that would enable even those who were ignorant of how to act for their own welfare to achieve the ultimate goal of life. Thus He compiled the great historical narration called the Mahabharata for women, laborers, and friends of the twice-born because they do not have access to the Vedas" (Bhag. 1.4.25).

Hemadri uses this verse to demonstrate that the Mahabharata is as valuable as the Vedas, and thus the phrase bharatartha-vinirnayah ("Shrimad-Bhagavatam establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata") should be explained, in accordance with this view, as saying that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the [DDB93]scripture in which the Mahabharata's message is conclusively defined and is shown to be equal to that of the Vedas.

Purport by Gopiparanandhana prabhu

In the same way as Shrimad-Bhagavatam establishes the meaning of the Mahabharata, by presenting the complete science of Krishna consciousness, it also completely explains the Gayatri mantra. According to the Agni Purana, Vishnu-dharmottara Upapurana and other sources, the lord of the sun worshipped in the Gayatri mantra is only superficially the jiva who rules over our visible sun in the material world. Understood on a higher level, Gayatri is addressed to the Supersoul of the sun-god, the Supreme Lord in the form of Suryanarayana. When brahmanas chant the Brahma-gayatri, they are praising the light (bhargas) of the effulgent sun (deva), who is the inspirer of all life (savita). Physically, savita is the sun in the sky which everyone sees, but intelligent people recognize according to Vedic authority that more essentially Savita is the name of a powerful demigod, the soul of this external body. And those who are the most intelligent understand that the original Savita is the Personality of Godhead, Supersoul of the sun-god and all other souls.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam was first spoken at the beginning of creation, by Lord Garbhodakashayi Vishnu to Brahma, at that time the only creature in the universe. When there was no one else present to act as Brahma's spiritual master, the Supreme Lord Himself spoke the transcendental knowledge of the Bhagavatam to him within the heart. Tene brahma hrida ya adi-kavaye [Bhag. 1.1.1]. Hearing this first, capsule version of Shrimad-Bhagavatam in four verses, Brahma became adi-kavi, the original scholar of the science of God. Brahma later expanded the Bhagavatam into several hundred verses for his son Narada, and Narada inspired Krishna Dvaipayana Vyasa to receive in his meditation the fully developed Bhagavatam of eighteen thousand verses in three hundred and thirty five chapters.

Some manuscripts and printed editions of Shri Tattva-sandarbha include several additional sentences in this anuccheda, dealing further with the Mahabharata and then at length with the Agni Purana's explanation of Gayatri. Shрила Baladeva Vidyabhushana, however, does not say anything about this section in his commentary. The passage repeats a few phrases found elsewhere in the anuccheda and seems to interrupt the flow of the argument. We have chosen not to include it in our text on the grounds that it was probably inserted later as someone else's comment. Another two redundant sentences near the end of this anuccheda have also been removed. These deleted passages are reproduced in Appendix 2 of this volume, which gives the longer version of anuccheda 22. The third Sandarbha, Shri Paramatma-sandarbha, will turn its attention to the Gayatri mantra in its 105th anuccheda, explaining it at some length as a meditation on the Personality of Godhead with reference to various scriptures.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam Is the Essence of All Vedic Literature

In the previous Text, Shrila Jiva Gosvami quoted three verses from the Garuda Purana. He explained the first of these in that Text, and now he explains the other two. First he quotes a Bhagavatam verse (3.5.12), and then another (1.4.25), which also appears in Hemadri's Catur-varga-cintamani, an authoritative 13th-century work on Dharma-shastra dealing with such subjects as vratas (vows), dana (charity), shraddha (memorial rituals), and kala (considerations of time). Jiva Gosvami's intention in quoting these verses is to show that the Mahabharata is equal to the Vedas. In this part of the Catur-varga-cintamani, Hemadri raises a question about the salvation of those who are not twice-born: Since they do not have access to the Vedas, which give knowledge about Brahman, and since knowledge of Brahman is required for salvation, how can they be saved? To resolve this question he quotes Shrimad-Bhagavatam's description (in verse 1.4.25) of Shrila Veda-vyasa's writing Mahabharata to solve this very problem.

The first of the two Bhagavatam verses cited (3.5.12) also states that Shrila Vyasa compiled the Mahabharata to attract common people toward the glories of the Personality of Godhead by enticing them to listen to seemingly mundane stories. To fulfill this plan He included the Bhagavad-gita in the Mahabharata. Since the Mahabharata is considered equal to the Vedas in purpose, as is evident from the second verse (Bhag. 1.4.25), and as corroborated by [DDB94]Hemadri, we can deduce that the Vedas also aim at glorifying the Supreme Lord.

This being so, the Gayatri mantra, which represents the essence of the Vedas, should also refer to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Shri Krishna. It is with this understanding that the Skanda Purana says that Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which glorifies the Lord at every step, is based on Gayatri. Indeed, as we have seen, this is one of the distinctive characteristics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

In the Paramatma-sandarbha, Shrila Jiva Gosvami will analyze the first verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam in terms of its being an explanation of the Gayatri mantra. Gayatri is explained in the concluding verses of the Bhagavatam as well. This combination of indications from beginning and ending verses makes it indisputably clear that Shrimad-Bhagavatam's purpose is to explain the Personality of Godhead.

The prevalent understanding among traditional Vedic scholars is that Gayatri is meant for worshiping either the sun-god or impersonal Brahman. Shrila Jiva Gosvami here establishes, however, that the real meaning of Gayatri is the worship of Lord Vishnu, who is nondifferent from Lord Krishna. To support his opinion he cites the Agni Purana, which gives Shrila Vyasa's opinion on the meaning of Gayatri. In the Vishnu-dharmottara Purana (165th chapter, Prathama Khanda), King Vajra asks Markandeya Rishi why Gayatri is chanted in Vaishnava sacrifices if its presiding deity is the sun-god. Markandeya replies that Gayatri refers to Lord Vishnu, and then he proceeds to show how each word of Gayatri is related to Lord Vishnu. His explanation concludes with this verse:

akamas tu tad avapnoti yad vishnoh paramam padam

"A person desiring material gain or liberation in the next life can achieve either by chanting Gayatri, but the worshiper who is devoid of desires attains the supreme abode of Lord Vishnu." It would not be possible to attain the Lord's abode by meditating on Gayatri if it did not in fact express worship of Lord Vishnu; this accords with the Lord's own statement in the Bhagavad-gita (9.25) that "Only My worshiper attains Me." Thus Gayatri and the first verse of the Bhagavatam are in complete agreement because they are both meditations on the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

The verse cited from the Agni Purana in Text 22.8, advising us to meditate on Brahman as nondifferent from ourselves, is also in agreement with the Bhagavatam and Gayatri. The verse is meant to remind us of our spiritual nature, to teach us a meditation that removes our bodily identification and thus helps us worship the Supreme Lord. In the later Texts of the Tattva-sandarbha Shrila Jiva Gosvami will discuss in more detail the qualitative oneness of the jiva-Brahman with the Supreme Brahman.

In Texts 22.9–11, Shrila Jiva Gosvami discusses the relationship between Gayatri and the sun. Shrimad-Bhagavatam (12.6.67–72) records the sage Yajnavalkya's prayers in praise of the sun or sun-god, among which texts 67–69 explain the three legs of the Gayatri mantra. From these prayers it may seem that Gayatri is also meant for glorifying the sun-god, but Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains that Yajnavalkya is not worshiping the sun-god independently; rather, he is worshiping the Supersoul dwelling within the sun-god. Generally people hail a taxi driver by calling out "Taxi!", not "Taxi driver!", for they regard the driver and his taxi as one unit. Similarly, Yajnavalkya worships the sun-god while considering "the vehicle" (the sun-god) and "the driver" (the Supersoul) as one. This explanation by Jiva Gosvami finds confirmation in Shri Shaunaka's question to Suta Gosvami that led to the recitation of Yajnavalkya's prayers. Shaunaka explicitly requests "to hear about Lord Hari, the Supersoul of the sun" (Bhag. 12.11.28).

Brahmanas customarily chant Gayatri at dawn and at dusk while facing the sun. In this way they meditate on the Supreme Lord through His energies. The logical principle at work here is called candra-shakha-nyaya, or "the example of the branch and the moon." The idea is that to show someone the moon you may first ask him to look at a tree branch, from which you may then draw his attention to the moon beyond the branch. Similarly, the process of meditating on the Lord may include allowing one's attention to be drawn to the Lord through His energies, such as the sun. It is not always practical or advisable for a twice-born brahmana to carry an actual Deity of the Lord, but still he must perform his daily duty of meditating on the Lord at dawn and dusk. So the Vedas enjoin that he should meditate on the Lord through the medium of the ever-present sun, always remembering that beyond the effulgent sun is Lord Vishnu. This is called pratikopasana.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami concludes his discussion of Shrimad-Bhagavatam's relationship with Gayatri in Text 22.13, where he quotes a statement from the Agni Purana that Gayatri is so called because it sings (gayati) or illuminates the glories of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and protects (trayate) the chanter by fixing his mind on the Lord. Gayatri is related with the sun because one of the words used in Gayatri is Savita, a name for the sun-god. Moreover, another name for Gayatri is Savitri, the daughter of the sun-god. Gayatri is also Sarasvati, the presiding deity of speech, because it is the sound representation of the Supreme Lord. The Skanda Purana therefore states (as quoted in Text 20.1) that the Bhagavatam is based on Gayatri (Sarasvati), that it is the sound representation of Krishna, and that it recounts events which occurred during the Sarasvata-kalpa. All this implies that the Bhagavatam's narrations glorify only Krishna.

In Text 22.4 Shrila Jiva Gosvami resumes his analysis of each phrase of the verses from the Garuda Purana quoted in Text 21. In these verses Shrimad-Bhagavatam is described as "the Sama Veda among the Puranas." Lord Krishna makes a similar statement in the Bhagavad-gita (10.22), where He says, "Of all the Vedas I am the Sama Veda." Here Krishna indicates that since the Sama Veda is the best of all the Vedas, containing beautiful prayers glorifying the Supreme Lord, it therefore represents Him. Such glorification of the Lord is after all the ultimate purpose of the Vedas, as Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.28) states: vasudeva-para vedah.

The karma-kanda and jnana-kanda portions of the Vedas glorify Krishna indirectly, while the Sama Veda glorifies Him directly, and therefore it is the most important of the Vedas. Like the Vedas, the Puranas also glorify various deities, although their underlying purpose is Krishna's glorification, and Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the Sama Veda among the Puranas because it focuses exclusively on Krishna. It reconciles the other Puranas just as the Sama Veda reconciles the Vedas' various kandas. Thus, the Skanda Purana declares, by studying Shrimad-Bhagavatam one gets the benefit of studying all the Puranas.

The very name of Shrimad-Bhagavatam reveals its superior position. Shrimat means "beautiful," and bhagavata means "related to the Supreme Lord." Shrimad-Bhagavatam is thus the most beautiful literary creation because it describes the beautiful pastimes of the Supreme Person. Shrimat also means "opulent." Shrimad-Bhagavatam is most opulent because it is identical with Bhagavan, the Personality of Godhead replete with all opulences.

Shata-viccheda-samyuta literally means that the Bhagavatam "has hundreds of sections." Although Shrila Jiva Gosvami does not comment in detail upon this phrase here, we may point out that most editions of the Bhagavatam have 335 chapters, divided into twelve cantos, but some Vaishnava commentators acknowledge only 332 chapters. They claim that chapters Twelve, Thirteen, and Fourteen of the Tenth Canto are interpolations. However, such great authorities as Shridhara Svami and Vopadeva have accepted these three chapters as authentic and commented on them, and Shrila Jiva Gosvami has done so as well. The three chapters in question describe the killing of Aghasura and Lord Brahma's bewilderment by Krishna. In Chapter Twelve of the Twelfth Canto, Suta Gosvami gives a list of the Lord's pastimes, and in the twenty-eighth text of that list he mentions the killing of Aghasura and Lord Brahma's bewilderment. This inclusion of the pastimes from the three disputed chapters clearly indicates that these chapters have a place in the Bhagavatam. Thus in the opinion of Shrila Jiva Gosvami the Bhagavatam contains 335 chapters, since otherwise it would fall short of the required eighteen thousand verses.

Commenting on the phrase hema-simha-samanvitam (Bhag. 12.13.13), which literally means "together with a golden lion," Shrila Shridhara Svami says that simha (lion) indicates a simha-asana, or Deity's throne. In other words, Shrimad-Bhagavatam recommends that one mount the Bhagavatam on a golden throne and then donate it. A golden throne is not recommended for any other Purana. Shrila Jiva Gosvami concludes, therefore, that just as the lion is the emperor of all animals, Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the sovereign ruler of all scriptures. Consequently it is also the sovereign ruler among all pramanas, and, as the Skanda Purana recommends, a person wishing to understand the absolute reality need not study any other scripture.

Gopiparanadhana: Thus it has been said, even though there are many other revealed scriptures, "This Purana has now arisen like the sun for those who have lost their sight in the age of Kali" [Bhag. 1.3.43]. From this comparison to the sun we can deduce that without the help of the Bhagavatam other scriptures cannot accurately depict reality. In the course of Shri Hayashirsha Pancaratra's description of various scriptures, the tantra called Tantra-bhagavata is listed as a kind of commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Quite a few actual commentaries on the Bhagavatam are currently available, including Shri Hanumad-bhashya, Vasana-bhashya, Sambandhokti, Vidvat-kamadhenu, Tattva-dipika, Bhavartha-dipika, Paramahansa-priya and Shuka-hridaya, as well as a number of monographs on specific topics--Mukta-phala, Hari-lila, Bhakti-ratnavali and so on. These prominent works have been composed by various enlightened authorities, each commenting according to the opinions of his own school.

BBT: Thus while there are many authoritative scriptures, only Shrimad-Bhagavatam has been glorified with the statement "For the blind souls of Kali-yuga, this Purana has now risen like the sun" (Bhag. 1.3.43). This comparison of the Bhagavatam to the sun indicates that without its help other scriptures cannot illuminate the Absolute Truth.

The Hayashirsha Pancaratra, in its chapter classifying various scriptures, describes the Tantra-bhagavata as essentially a commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Among the Bhagavatam's direct commentaries are the Hanumad-bhashya, Vasana-bhashya, Sambandhokti, Vidvat-kamadhenu, Tattva-dipika, Bhavartha-dipika, Paramahansa-priya, and Shuka-hridaya;2 there are also many works written about Shrimad-Bhagavatam, such as Mukta-phala, Hari-lila, and Bhakti-ratnavali. All these works have been produced by the most eminent thinkers of their respective philosophical schools.

Gopiparanadhana: The section on "Charity" in Hemadri's book, while discussing the giving of Puranas as presents, praises the Bhagavatam by quoting the Matsya Purana's enumeration of its special features. And in the Appendix of his work, under the heading of "Defining the significance of various times," Hemadri cites, while defining the principles of religious life for Kali-yuga, the text which begins "Advanced souls have great respect for Kali-yuga" [Bhag. 11.5.36]; identifying this as a verse of the Bhagavatam, he acknowledges that only the religious principles enunciated in the Bhagavatam are suitable for the Kali age. In another work of his, Samvatsara-pradipa, Hemadri quotes the passage of several verses cited by us above from the Skanda Purana beginning, "What is the use of hundreds or thousands¼," and then inserts in his text several verses of the Bhagavatam which he recommends for copying out by hand to purify oneself from all the defects of this age.

BBT: Shrimad-Bhagavatam is also glorified in the Dana-khanda section of Hemadri's Catur-varga-cintamani. His chapter entitled "Giving Puranas in Charity" praises Shrimad-Bhagavatam by noting that it possesses the defining characteristics specified in the Matsya Purana (53.20–22).

In the Parishesha-khanda of the same book, in the Kala-nirnaya section, where Hemadri defines the appropriate religion for Kali-yuga, he quotes the Bhagavatam verse beginning kalim sabhajayanty aryah (11.5.36). In this way he recognizes as appropriate for this age only the religious principles established in Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

Gopiparanadhana: Shankaracarya, known to be an incarnation of Lord Shankara, considered the message of Shrimad-Bhagavatam far superior to his own conception of merging with the Supreme, inasmuch as it reveals the pleasure pastimes of pure devotion and other special truths. Because the Personality of Godhead wanted to hide Himself and accomplish other purposes, Shankaracarya on His order promulgated the philosophy of Oneness, which we will discuss later on. Nonetheless Shankaracarya was anxious not to disturb the Bhagavatam, the original authorless commentary on the Vedanta. By depicting in his Govindashöaka and other works events described only by the Bhagavatam--such as the Queen of Vraja's amazement at seeing the total form of the universe and Krishna's stealing the clothes of the unmarried girls of Vraja--he kept himself at a respectful distance and merely touched the Bhagavatam to assure the success of his own words.

BBT: It is widely acknowledged that Shri Shankaracarya is an incarnation of Lord Shiva. Shankaracarya understood the importance of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which, with its statements about the bliss of pure devotional service surpassing even the joy of impersonal liberation, proves superior to his doctrine of impersonalism. He dared not interpret the Bhagavatam, for he recognized it as an exposition of Vedanta philosophy that is without human author. As we shall explain later, on the Supreme Lord's order Shankaracarya taught his doctrine of monism to conceal the Lord's identity.[DDB95] But still, to make his own words successful by saying something about Shrimad-Bhagavatam, he touched on it indirectly, describing in his Govindashöaka and other hymns certain pastimes of Lord Krishna's that are related only in the Bhagavatam. These include Mother Yashoda's amazement at seeing Krishna's universal form, and His stealing the clothes of the young damsels of Vraja.

Just as the constant sun makes its reappearance every morning, removing the darkness of sleep and inspiring everyone to engage once more in the purposeful activities of their lives, so the eternal Shrimad-Bhagavatam especially manifests itself in the ignorant age of Kali as the one transcendental sun of spiritual enlightenment. Only through the light of the Bhagavatam can the real purpose of life be known in Kali-yuga. In the beginning of the Bhagavatam, the sages at Naimisharanya asked Suta Gosvami, bruhi yogeshvare krishne/ brahmanye dharma-varmani

svam kashöham adhunopete/ dharmah kam sharanam gatah

"Since Shri Krishna, the Absolute Truth, the master of all mystic powers, has departed for His own abode, please tell us to whom the religious principles have now gone for shelter" (Bhag. 1.1.23). Suta answered them, krishne sva-dhamopagate/ dharma-jnanadibhih saha

kalau nashöa-drisham esha/ puranarko 'dhunoditah

"This Bhagavata Purana is as brilliant as the sun, and it has arisen just after the departure of Lord Krishna to His own abode, accompanied by religion, knowledge, etc. Persons who have lost their vision due to the dense darkness of ignorance in the age of Kali shall get light from this Purana" (Bhag. 1.3.43).

Many ages ago, when Lord Brahma was first contemplating his unbegun work of creation, the Personality of Godhead spoke to him a synopsis of Shrimad-Bhagavatam in four verses, which are recorded in the Second Canto of the Bhagavatam (2.9.33-36). After hearing these verses, Brahma was completely educated; he was awakened to pure devotional service and remembered from his past life everything needed for reconstructing the universe. For his most spiritually qualified son, Narada, Lord Brahma amplified the four-verse Bhagavatam into a narration of about 140 verses (Bhag. 2.5.9–2.7.53). Under Narada's instructions, Vyasadeva discovered in his meditation the complete, eternal Bhagavatam, which he then taught to his son Shukadeva. Shukadeva spoke this full Bhagavatam again to Parikshit Maharaja in the last seven days of Parikshit's life. Finally, Suta Gosvami, who was present at the passing away of Parikshit, repeated the Bhagavatam to the sages present at the great soma sacrifice at Naimisharanya. From one angle of view it appears that each of these speakers added something of his own to the text, at least some introductory and connecting verses here and there. It should also be understood, however, that because Vyasadeva is tri-kala-jna, an infallible seer of past, present and future, it was not at all impossible for him to include in his own recitation statements not yet made by Shukadeva, Parikshit, Suta and Shaunaka.

kasmai yena vibhasito 'yam atulo jnana-pradipah pura tad-rupena ca naradaya munaye krishnaya tad-rupina yogindraya tad-atmanatha bhagavad-rataya karunyatas tac chuddham vimalam vishokam amritam satyam param dhimahi

"I meditate on that pure and spotless Supreme Absolute Truth, who is free from suffering and death and who in the beginning personally revealed this incomparable torchlight of knowledge to Brahma. Brahma then spoke it to the sage Narada, who narrated it to Krishna-dvaipayana Vyasa. Shrila Vyasa revealed this Bhagavatam to the greatest of sages, Shukadeva Gosvami, and Shukadeva mercifully spoke it to Maharaja Parikshit" (Bhag. 12.13.19).

A living being is always growing, at least up to the point of his full maturity. Even past the Bhagavatam's reaching maturity in its recitation by Shukadeva Gosvami, it continued to expand its glories through the ongoing process of commentation by self-realized Vaishnava acaryas. Shrila Jiva Gosvami mentions in this anuccheda a number of commentaries by acaryas of various sampradayas which were known to him in the sixteenth century. Unfortunately, several of these are no longer identifiable. The Tantra-bhagavata is not in the normal category of commentaries because it is eternal shruti and therefore has no human author. It is known from citations from it by Shrila Madhvacarya, and there is one old manuscript copy of it in the library of the Asiatic Society of Calcutta which may be authentic.

Bhavartha-dipika, by Shrila Shridhara Svami, is probably the oldest extant Bhagavatam commentary. Because Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu respected Bhavartha-dipika as standard authority, commentators in the line of Lord Chaitanya often used Shridhara Svami's explanations of Bhagavatam verses as the basis upon which they elaborated. Lord Chaitanya's followers are obliged to accept the Lord's opinion, as recorded in Shri Chaitanya-caritamrita (Adi 7.133, 135), shridhara-svami-prasade `bhagavata' jani

jagad-guru shridhara-svami `guru' kari' mani

"Shridhara Svami is the spiritual master of the entire world because by his mercy we can understand Shrimad-Bhagavatam. I therefore accept him as a spiritual master."

shridharera anugata ye kare likhana saba loka manya kari' karibe grahana

"One who comments on Shrimad-Bhagavatam following in the footsteps of Shridhara Svami will be honored and accepted by everyone."

Among the followers of Lord Chaitanya who wrote Bhagavatam commentaries were Shrinatha Cakravarti, Sanatana Gosvami, Jiva Gosvami, Vishvanatha Cakravarti and Baladeva Vidyabhushana. Culminating this venerable tradition are the Bhaktivedanta Purports of the Founder-Acarya of the International Society for Krishna Consciousness. In these purports to Shrimad-Bhagavatam by His Divine Grace Shrila Prabhupada, the priceless treasure of all these great Vaishnavas' cumulative realizations, going back to the Bhagavatam's original speakers, are transmitted to us in the language of our own times.

The commentary Paramahansa-priya and two other works based on Shrimad-Bhagavatam, Mukta-phala and Hari-lila, were written by the Maharashtrian Vaishnava scholar Vopadeva in the thirteenth century A.D. Vopadeva is known as the author of numerous influential books on grammar, medicine, literature and religious principles of behavior. Mukta-phala consists of about eight hundred verses of the Bhagavatam arranged topically, with only a few additional verses of introduction and final summary composed by the author. Hari-lila is a simple listing of the Bhagavatam's contents. In the early nineteenth century the British Indologists Colebrooke and Wilson misinterpreted Vopadeva's having written three books on the Bhagavatam to mean that he was the author of the Bhagavatam itself. This wrong idea continued to have some supporters even into the twentieth century.

Vishnu-bhakti-ratnavali is a work of Vishnu Puri, written about one hundred and fifty years before the appearance of Lord Chaitanya. Its author was a sannyasi in the Madhva-sampradaya, a disciple of Jayadharma Tirtha; he is different from the Vishnu Puri who lived with Chaitanya Mahaprabhu in Jagannatha Puri. Vishnu-bhakti-ratnavali is also a collection of verses from the Bhagavatam, with a few verses added by the author and a few taken from other Puranas and from the Hari-bhakti-sudhodaya. It is so arranged as to very clearly explain the nine processes of devotional service to Krishna, from hearing and chanting to full self-surrender.

Even authorities on mundane matters like Hemadri sometimes acknowledge the greatness of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. In his Catur-varga-cintamani and other textbooks for smarta-brahmanas, Hemadri corroborated the Bhagavatam's opinion that sankirtana, the congregational chanting of God's names, is the appropriate form of religious practice in Kali-yuga.

Shripada Shankaracarya is one of the greatest devotees of Shri Krishna because he is a direct incarnation of his namesake, Lord Shiva. Vaishnavanam yatha shambhuh. He is not even a finite soul like other demigods, but is in a special category of his own, inbetween the jivas and God. On behalf of the Supreme Lord he contacts the Lord's material energy Maya and becomes her consort. He presides over the varieties of material illusion created by Maya's three modes, especially the lower mode of ignorance. One of his special assignments in Kali-yuga, delegated to him personally by Lord Krishna, is to appear as a brahmana teacher on earth and propagate an impersonal misinterpretation of the Upanishads and Vedanta-sutra. When he fulfilled this order in his appearance some thirteen hundred years ago, he succeeded in replacing the Buddhist nihilism then prevalent in India with a similar philosophy which reestablished the authority of the Vedas. Although his mission required committing violence to the correct understanding of the Vedanta-sutra and other sacred texts like Bhagavad-gita, Shankaracarya refrained from openly commenting on Shrimad-Bhagavatam. He honored the Bhagavatam by referring to pastimes described by the Bhagavatam in certain of his works--the Govindashöaka, Yamunashöaka, Prabodha-sudhakara and Sarva-siddhanta-sangraha. Only later did some of Shankara's followers dare take advantage of the Bhagavatam for their own contrary purposes.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam Is Luminous Like the Sun

Although there are numerous works of Vedic literature, when Shaunaka Rishi questioned Shri Suta Gosvami about where religion would take shelter now that Lord Krishna had returned to His own abode, Suta compared Shrimad-Bhagavatam to the sun because it shines the light of the Absolute Truth so brightly that it can dissipate the dense darkness of the Kali Age. When the sun rises, rogues and thieves hide and ordinary people become fearless and active. Similarly, when Shrimad-Bhagavatam is read, lust and greed leave one's heart and one becomes qualified to engage in the service of the Supreme Lord. Hence great saints and thinkers have revered Shrimad-Bhagavatam by writing commentaries and essays on it.

This practice continues in modern times. Among such contemporary saintly persons, the most noteworthy is His Divine Grace Om Vishnupada Paramahansa Parivrajakacarya A. C. Bhaktivedanta Swami Prabhupada, who was not only a scholar of the Bhagavatam but a perfect embodiment of its teachings. He tirelessly imparted its philosophy up to the last moments before he passed away. By presenting Shrimad-Bhagavatam in English with an elaborate commentary, he made the message of the Bhagavatam both unmistakably clear and widely accessible for the first time. Through his efforts, many souls indulging in every sort of roguish vice have had a chance to read the glorious Bhagavatam and have thus undergone a change of heart. They have left their degraded life and taken to the devotional service of Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This practical evidence leaves no room for doubting the potency of Shrimad-Bhagavata Purana.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami again refers to the Catur-varga-cintamani (Dana-khanda 7) of Hemadri, who recommends that one donate Shrimad-Bhagavatam after mounting it on a golden throne, and who glorifies it for having the defining characteristics described in the Matsya Purana (see Text 19). While determining the religion for this age in the fourteenth chapter of his Catur-varga-cintamani, Parishsha-khanda, Hemadri quotes a Bhagavatam verse (11.5.36):

kalim sabhajayanty arya guna-jnah sara-bhaginah
yatra sankirtanenaiva sarvah svartho 'bhilabhyate

"Those who are actually advanced in knowledge are able to appreciate the essential value of this Age of Kali. Such enlightened persons worship Kali-yuga because in this fallen age all perfection of life can easily be achieved by the performance of sankirtana."

Commenting on the word sankirtana, Hemadri declares that hari-sankirtana is the only way to reach perfection. Then he quotes the next verse (11.5.37):

na hy atah paramo labho dehinam bhramyatam iha
yato vindeta paramam shantim nashyati samshritih

"Indeed, there is no higher possible gain for embodied souls forced to wander throughout the material world than the Supreme Lord's sankirtana movement, by which one can attain the supreme peace and free oneself from the cycle of repeated birth and death."

In this way Hemadri recognizes the authority of Shrimad-Bhagavatam in the matter of establishing the principles of religion for Kali-yuga.

Shankaracarya respected Shrimad-Bhagavatam both by not commenting on it and by composing prayers based on its narrations. One such prayer is his Govindashöaka:

Though it was with effortless ease that He[DDB97] rolled and frolicked in the courtyards of Vraja, He appeared to become tired. [DDB98]The Personality of Godhead Govinda ordered Lord Shiva to take birth as Shankara to propagate impersonalism. Then from the Mayavada viewpoint Shankaracarya wrote commentaries on the Vedanta-sutra, eleven of the principal Upanishads, the Bhagavad-gita, and Shri Vishnu-sahasra-nama. He did not interpret Shrimad-Bhagavatam, however, because he considered it very dear to the Lord and His devotees, and also nondifferent from the Lord. There can be no doubt about Lord Shiva’s appreciation of the Bhagavatam, since in the Twelfth Canto Shiva is described as the greatest Vaishnava. As such, he must be fully aware that it is the supreme pramana, and so out of respect he did not interpret it.

From the Padma Purana (Uttara-khanda 71.107) we learn how Lord Vishnu ordered Shiva to propagate monism:

svagamaih kalpitaś tvam ca janan mad-vimukhan kuru
mam ca gopaya yena syat shrishöir eshottarottara

“[Lord Vishnu said:] O Shiva, make people averse to Me by writing speculative scriptures and thus hiding My glories. In this way the world’s population will increase.”

The import of this order is as follows: When Lord Buddha’s teachings were predominant in India, people grew contemptuous of the Vedas and Vedic rituals. They became shunyavadis, or voidists, and Vedic religious practices decreased almost to nil. In this condition the people were not prepared to hear seriously about the personality of the Supreme Lord, His transcendental, eternal, blissful form, or His variegated abode. They would have simply blasphemed these teachings, and then they would have been left with no way to purify their hearts. So the first task in bridging the wide gap between voidism and personalism was to reawaken people’s faith in the Vedas. It was for this purpose that Shankaracarya introduced his Advaita version of monism, a philosophy intermediate between voidism and personalism. Going from the Buddhist nasti to the Mayavada neti, neti—from “The Absolute is nothing” to “The Absolute is something but contains nothing”—is a simple, incremental move, for the difference between these two ideas is hardly noticeable. Still, because Shankara based his philosophy on the Upanishads, Vedanta-sutra, and other Vedic works, that one step was critical in bringing the populace back to accepting the authority of the Vedas.

Later in the Uttara-khanda of Padma Purana (236.7) Lord Shiva himself describes Advaita monism as veiled Buddhism: maya-vadam asac-chastram pracchanam bauddham ucyate. “Mayavada philosophy is an improper explanation of the scriptures; indeed, it is veiled Buddhism.” Shankaracarya’s propagation of Mayavada philosophy was planned by his Lord, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who recognized that until conditioned souls regained access to the Vedas’ spiritual knowledge they could only speculate about transcendent reality and would have no hope of being delivered from the material world.

Once Advaita Vedanta had replaced Buddhism and faith in the Vedas had been re-established, people could be brought further along the path of knowledge to an appreciation for the glories of the Personality of Godhead. This would be accomplished by counteracting the appeal of impersonalism with true Vaishnava philosophy. Thus stalwart Vaishnava acaryas like Ramanujacarya, Madhvacarya, and Shridhara Svami came one after another to drive out impersonalism. In its place they re-established the principles of pure devotional service as the true spirit and intent of the Vedas and its corollary scriptures. For his part, Shridhara Svami helped the impersonalists get a taste for Shrimad-Bhagavatam by writing a commentary that also appealed to them.

Still later, the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself came in the garb of a devotee, as Shri Krishna Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, and went even further. He taught that even more advanced than vaidhi-bhakti, the path of regulated devotional service, is raga-bhakti, the path of spontaneous loving devotion to Krishna, which one can traverse by following in the footsteps of Vrindavana’s residents. He also taught that this raga-bhakti, which is elaborately explained in the Tenth Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, is the ultimate expression of prema, love of God. Since Chaitanya Mahaprabhu is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who can contest His siddhanta? Rather, the gradual progression from voidism to monism to personalism to raga-bhakti was all the Lord’s plan for mercifully saving the conditioned souls, an arrangement by which they could end the otherwise endless cycle of birth and death. Without a doubt, therefore, the Lord was not acting cruelly or capriciously when He instructed Lord Shiva to appear as Shankara and spread the false doctrine of the individual soul’s absolute oneness with the Supreme. To the contrary, He did so out of His limitless mercy.

In later Texts, Shrila Jiva Gosvami will point out many inconsistencies between Shankara’s teachings and the actual conclusion of the Vedas. In the next Text he shows us the glories of Shrimad-Bhagavatam that the Bhagavatam itself reveals .

Gopiparanadhana: Shri Madhvacarya-carana was a direct disciplic descendant of Shankaracarya. Becoming an adherent of Vaishnava thought after reading Shrimad-Bhagavatam, he was concerned that other Vaishnavas might be influenced by the kind of commentaries on it written by other followers of Shankara like Punyaranya. According to the accounts of saintly devotees, Shri Madhva therefore wrote his own explanation of the Bhagavatam's intended message to show the correct way of understanding it.

BBT: Devotees of Lord Vishnu recount that although Shri Madhvacarya-carana belonged to the direct disciplic line of Shankaracarya, upon reading the Bhagavatam Madhvacarya changed his allegiance to the Vaishnava school. Then, concerned that other Vaishnavas might be influenced by the commentaries of other disciplic descendants of Shankara, such as the commentary by Punyaranya, Shri Madhvacarya wrote Bhagavata-tatparyaya, a gloss on Shrimad-Bhagavatam that showed the proper method of interpretation.

Gopiparanadhana: Thus the Bhagavatam itself appropriately states, in the First Canto, "Shri Vyasadeva delivered Shrimad-Bhagavatam to his son, who is the most respected among the self-realized, after extracting the cream of all Vedic literatures and histories of the universe" [Bhag. 1.3.41]. And in the Twelfth Canto, "Shrimad-Bhagavatam is declared to be the essence of all Vedanta philosophy. One who has felt satisfaction from its nectarean mellow will never be attracted to any other literature" [Bhag. 12.13.15].

BBT: For all these reasons, therefore, the following statements in the Bhagavatam are appropriate. In the First Canto [1.3.41]:

"After extracting the cream of all the Vedas and Itihasas, Shri Vyasadeva imparted this Shrimad-Bhagavatam to his son Shukadeva, the best of the self-realized souls."

In the Twelfth Canto [12.13.15]:

"Shrimad-Bhagavatam is declared to be the essence of all Vedanta philosophy. One who has felt satisfaction from its nectarean mellow will never be attracted to any other literature."

Gopiparanadhana: Again in the First Canto, "O expert and thoughtful men, relish Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the mature fruit of the desire tree of Vedic literatures. It emanated from the lips of Shukadeva Gosvami. Therefore this fruit has become even more tasteful, although its nectarean fruit was already relishable for all, including liberated souls" [Bhag. 1.1.3]. And in the same canto, "Let me offer my respectful obeisances unto him [Shuka], the spiritual master of all sages, the son of Vyasadeva, who, out of his great compassion for those gross materialists who struggle to cross over the darkest regions of material existence, spoke this most confidential supplement to the cream of Vedic knowledge, after having personally assimilated it by experience" [Bhag. 1.2.3]. These statements imply that the opinions of Shrimad-Bhagavatam rule sovereign over all other opinions.

BBT: And in the First Canto [1.1.3]:

"O expert and thoughtful men on the earth, relish Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the mature fruit of the desire tree of Vedic literature, up to liberation and beyond. It emanated from the lips of Shri Shukadeva Gosvami. Therefore this fruit has become even more tasteful, although its nectarean juice was already relishable for all, including liberated souls."

Thus in the same canto [1.2.3]:

"Let me offer my respectful obeisances unto him [Shukadeva], the spiritual master of all sages, the son of Vyasadeva, who, out of his great compassion for those gross materialists who struggle to cross over the darkest regions of material existence, spoke this most confidential supplement to the cream of all Vedic knowledge, the transcendental torchlight of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, after having personally assimilated it by experience."

These verses imply that the teachings of Shrimad-Bhagavatam rule over all other philosophies. (They also clearly indicate that Shri Shukadeva, by taking the speaker's seat amidst the assembled sages as the Bhagavatam's preceptor, became the guru of everyone present. – in next verse in Gopiparanadhana's version)

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Shrila Madhvacarya, whom the members of his sampradaya most commonly call by his sannyasa name, Ananda Tirtha, revived the Brahma-sampradaya in this age. By the time of his birth in the thirteenth century, the Brahma-sampradaya had become practically indistinguishable from the Mayavada school following Shankara. Shri Madhva's predecessors had the sannyasa title Tirtha, which Madhva accepted and passed on to his disciplic descendants. Technically, however, this is one of the ten names assigned by Shankaracarya to the sannyasis of his Advaita sampradaya, and is not included in the traditional list of 108 names meant for Vaishnava sannyasis. Madhva considered the Advaita viewpoint of his initiating guru and other teachers unacceptable, and took upon himself the mission of re-establishing the true teachings of bhagavata-dharma as originally inculcated by Brahma, Narada and Veda-vyasa.

Madhvacarya gave his commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam the name Bhagavata-tatparya-nirnaya, signifying that his intention was to show the definitive way of understanding what the Bhagavatam has to say. In this and in all of his writings, Shri Madhva uncompromisingly opposed the Mayavadis' confusion of the separate identities of the Supreme Person, the jivas, material nature, time and karma. He especially did not want devotees of Lord Vishnu to entertain any conjectures about Shrimad-Bhagavatam's possibly aiming at an impersonal, formless conception of the Supreme. Because Madhva and his followers were so staunch in their defiance of impersonalism, Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu choose to formally affiliate Himself with their sampradaya by becoming a disciple of Shri Ishvara Puri, who was a great-grand-disciple of the eminent Madhvite acarya Vyasa Tirtha. Thus, out of deep respect for the founder-acarya of the Madhva-Gaudiya-sampradaya, Shrila Jiva Gosvami here refers to him in the grammatically plural form (shri-madhvacarya-caranaiah).

Shrimad-Bhagavatam contains only the most choice substance (saram saram) carefully selected from all the shrutis and smritis. It embodies the essence of the Upanishads' mysteries. It is the final, perfect fruit of the gradual revelation of Vedic thought through its immature phases of worldly rituals, demigod worship and impersonal meditation. It is the source of divine light for all who are willing to have it in this age of darkness. Of his numerous disciples, Shrila Vyasadeva chose one, his son Shukadeva, to receive this Bhagavatam. Shukadeva is like a parrot (also called shuka in Sanskrit) not only for his perfect repetition, but because in the same way as a fruit whose skin has been broken by a parrot's beak ripens more sweetly, its pulp becoming soft and sugary, so Shrimad-Bhagavatam became all the more relishable after emanating from Shukadeva's mouth. Shukadeva's meeting Parikshit and reciting the Bhagavatam to him was an act of sheer kindness to the unfortunate souls of Kali-yuga. For this one accomplishment of speaking Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the sages assembled with Parikshit at the Ganges' bank and with Suta and Shaunaka at Naimisharanya unanimously acknowledged him as their spiritual preceptor.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam Is the Topmost Vedic Scripture

Here Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains Madhvacarya's reason for commenting on Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Shankaracarya wrote poems glorifying Lord Krishna's pastimes as told in the Bhagavatam, but some of his followers, not understanding his true intention, took this as a license to try to include the Bhagavatam as part of the Mayavada canon. Of those who tried to do this, a few wrote commentaries on the Bhagavatam and somehow managed to screw out an impersonal interpretation. One such commentary was Punyaranya's, which is now lost. Shrila Madhvacarya, wanting to protect Vaishnavas from being misled, wrote a gloss called Bhagavata-tatparya.

Since Jiva Gosvami has already shown that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the topmost pramana, he can now cite it directly to demonstrate its own stature. Such citations will only increase a sincere reader's faith in the Bhagavatam, and so from this point on Shrila Jiva Gosvami relies on the Bhagavatam itself as the principal source for his analysis. Here he also reveals the eminence Shrimad-Bhagavatam enjoys by virtue of the status of its brilliant speaker, Shukadeva Gosvami. Vyasadeva taught the Bhagavatam to Shukadeva, his most brilliant student, and Shukadeva chose to study Bhagavatam because it is the most brilliant of books.

Although Shrila Vyasadeva had many disciples, He gave the Bhagavatam only to Shukadeva. Vyasa did this not because He was partial toward his son but because Shukadeva was atmavatam varam, "the best of the self-realized." In other words, Shukadeva had no ulterior, material motives, and therefore he could understand the true purport of the Bhagavatam, the essence of the Vedas, Vedanta, and Itihasas.

The most important part of a tree is its sweet, juicy fruit, and so Shrimad-Bhagavatam has been compared to the succulent fruit of the tree of Vedic literature. And this Bhagavatam fruit is even more exceptional because it has no skin or pit. In other words, there is nothing to discard in the Bhagavatam. In this Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami quotes two verses from the Bhagavatam, 1.1.3 and 1.2.3, to show its importance for both liberated and conditioned souls. Because Shukadeva was completely free of selfish motives, he fully realized the Bhagavatam's significance and so was elected to speak, even in an assembly of learned sages that included his guru and his guru's guru. The choice of Shukadeva as speaker implies that his qualifications for reciting Shrimad-Bhagavatam made him superior to all the other assembled sages. This is one more indication that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the foremost of scriptures and that it alone should be analyzed to know sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana.

Gopiparanadhana: It is a well-known fact that Shukadeva was placed on the instructor's seat in the assembly of all sages, assuming the role of their guru. This is as described, "At that time all the great-minded thinkers, accompanied by their disciples, arrived there. On the plea of making a pilgrim's journey, such sages verily sanctify a place of pilgrimage just by their presence. From different parts of the universe there arrived great sages like Atri, Cyavana, Sharadvan, Arishōanemi, Bhrigu, Vasishōha, Parashara, Vishvamitra, Angira, Parashurama, Utathya, Indrapramada, Idhmabahu, Medhatithi, Devala, Arshōishena, Bharadvaja, Gautama, Pippalada, Maitreya, Aurva, Kavasha, Kumbhayoni, Dvaipayana, and the great personality Narada. There were also many other saintly demigods, kings, and special royal orders called arunadayas [a special rank of rajarshis] from different dynasties of sages. When they all assembled to meet the emperor [Parikshit], he received them properly and bowed his head to the ground. After all the rishis and others had seated themselves comfortably, the king, humbly standing before them with folded hands, told them of his decision to fast until death" [Bhag. 1.19.8-12].

Then the king said:

"O trustworthy brahmanas, I now ask you about my immediate duty. Please, after proper deliberation, tell me of the unalloyed duty of everyone in all circumstances, and specifically of those who are just about to die" [Bhag. 1.19.24].

Then, after the king's query:

"At that moment there appeared the powerful son of Vyasadeva, who traveled over the earth indifferent and satisfied within himself. He did not manifest any symptoms of belonging to any social order or status of life. He was surrounded by women and children, and he dressed as if others had neglected him" [Bhag. 1.19.25].

BBT: Thus it is said [in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.19.8–12]:

"At that time all the great-minded thinkers, accompanied by their disciples, arrived there. On the plea of making a pilgrim's journey, such sages verily sanctify a place of pilgrimage just by their presence. "Shukadeva Gosvami was then surrounded by saintly sages and demigods just as the moon is surrounded by stars, planets, and other heavenly bodies. His presence was gorgeous, and he was respected by all" [Bhag. 1.19.30].

Purport by Gopiparanandhana prabhu

Shukadeva Gosvami had no material credentials. He had not even taken brahminical initiation. Still, the sages who came to witness King Parikshit's passing away all deferred to his authority without question. Three categories of rishis came to be with Parikshit while he fasted and waited for his death on the bank of the Ganges-Yamuna outside his capital city, Hastinapura. The demigods were represented by Narada, many elevated brahmanas led by Vyasadeva attended, and a number of saintly kings like Parikshit also came to listen. Although any of these wise sages could have instructed Parikshit expertly, they had all arrived there in their wanderings for the specific purpose of hearing Shukadeva speak Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Even in the company of their disciples, they were glad to humbly take the role of Shukadeva's audience. Parikshit was himself already fully God conscious, but he and everyone else participating in this assembly were thinking of the welfare of the future inhabitants of this deluded world.

Parikshit Maharaja first offered his sincere respect to all the sages together. Addressing them as vipras, learned brahmanas, he asked any or all of them to inform him what he, a person facing death, should now do. In the presence of so many great authorities including Narada and Vyasa, a cultured Vaishnava like Parikshit could not avoid asking for their advice. But almost everyone there was aware by mystic insight that Shukadeva Gosvami was meant to answer the king's questions, and indeed at that very moment Shukadeva appeared unannounced. As soon as they saw Shukadeva, everyone immediately recognized him and stood up from their seats. Without any need for deliberation, he was at once offered the speaker's chair.

Shukadeva came there of his own pure will; he had no motive of profit or reputation to satisfy by speaking to Parikshit in front of the sages. Parikshit also came there freely, without material purpose, as did the rest of the hearers. This is the attitude with which Shrimad-Bhagavatam should best be approached: the speaker should as much as possible be of the standard of Shukadeva Gosvami, and the hearers should be as renounced and surrendered as Parikshit and the great sages.

Shri Shukadeva Gosvami Is the Best Scholar of Shrimad-Bhagavatam

After Shringi cursed Maharaja Parikshit, the king renounced his kingdom and took a vow to fast until death on the bank of the Ganges. At that time sages of all classes and orders came from various parts of the universe and assembled there. Among them were even incarnations of the Lord like Parashurama and Vyasadeva. When Parikshit Maharaja inquired from them about the duties of a human being, especially one who is about to die, no one gave him a definitive answer. At that time the most noble Shukadeva Gosvami arrived, and he was unanimously chosen as the right person to answer Maharaja Parikshit's query.

In the previous Text Jiva Gosvami said that all the sages accepted Shukadeva as guru. In this section Jiva Gosvami cites the references to support his claim. Since the sages accepted Shukadeva as guru and it was Shrimad-Bhagavatam that he spoke in response to Parikshit Maharaja's questions, we should understand that the Bhagavatam's philosophy was accepted by all the assembled sages, who included propagators and followers of various other philosophies. Just as Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami shone like an effulgent moon among the starlike sages, Shrimad-Bhagavatam shines in the same way among all other scriptures.

Next Shrila Jiva Gosvami shows that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the representative of Lord Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Gopiparanadhana: Both Shrila Vyasadeva and Narada were present. Although they were Shukadeva's spiritual master and grand spiritual master, still Shrimad-Bhagavatam as it emanated from his mouth seemed to them as if something they had never heard before. Thus, it is understood, Shukadeva acted as preceptor even for the two of them. It has been said that "by being touched by Shuka's mouth this fruit has become soft and full of nectar" [Bhag. 1.1.3]. For this reason also Shrimad-Bhagavatam is superior to all other scriptures. What we hear of the Matsya and other Puranas being the greatest is only relative. Indeed, why do we need to say any more? Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the exact image of Shri Krishna Himself.

BBT: Shri Vyasadeva and Narada Muni were present in that assembly. Although these two sages were Shri Shuka's guru and grand-guru, respectively, when they heard Shrimad-Bhagavatam issuing from his lips, they felt as if they had never heard it before. For this reason it is said here that he taught this most significant wisdom even to them. As mentioned earlier, shuka-mukhad amrita-drava-samyutam: "The Bhagavatam is enriched with nectarean juice from the mouth of Shuka" [Bhag. 1.1.3]. Thus in this sense also Shrimad-Bhagavatam is more glorious than any other scripture. Statements about the superiority of other Puranas, such as the Matsya Purana, are only relatively true. What more needs to be said! Indeed, Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the very representation of Lord Krishna.

Gopiparanadhana: As said in the Bhagavatam's First Canto, "This Shrimad-Bhagavatam is as brilliant as the sun, and it has arisen just after the departure of Lord Krishna to His own abode, accompanied by religion, knowledge, etc. Persons who have lost their vision due to the dense darkness of ignorance in the Age of Kali shall get light from this Purana" [Bhag. 1.3.43]. Therefore we see that this scripture is uniquely endowed with all good qualities; this is shown by such statements as "Completely rejecting all religious activities which are materially motivated, this Bhagavata Purana propounds the highest truth" and, in the words of Mukta-phala and Hemadri's smriti, "The Vedas, Puranas and poetry give instruction like a master, a friend and a lover respectively. The Bhagavatam, however, teaches in all three ways."

BBT: As the First Canto states:

"This Shrimad-Bhagavatam is as brilliant as the sun, and it has arisen just after the departure of Lord Krishna to His own abode, accompanied by religion, knowledge, etc. Persons who have lost their vision due to the dense darkness of ignorance in the Age of Kali shall get light from this Purana" [Bhag. 1.3.43].

In this way we can see that only Shrimad-Bhagavatam is full with all virtues, as stated in the second verse of the First Canto: "Here the supreme religion is explained and all cheating propensities are rejected."

The supremacy of the Bhagavatam is also confirmed by the words of both Vopadeva (in his Mukta-phala) and Hemadri:

"The Vedas, Puranas, and poetic works instruct one like a master, friend, or beloved, respectively, but Shrimad-Bhagavatam instructs like all three."

Gopiparanadhana: So even if, as some people think, other Puranas are subordinate to the authority of the Vedas, Shrimad-Bhagavatam directly denies this idea in regards to itself. In other words, the Bhagavatam claims its own authority independently. Thus its position is that of the highest shruti authority, as is stated, "How did it so happen that King Parikshit met this great sage, making it possible for this shruti text for the pure Vaishnavas to be manifest?" [Bhag. 1.4.7]. What we stated earlier, that first all the other Puranas were revealed and then the Bhagavatam, is supported by the evidence of Shri Vyasadeva's and Narada's conversation in the First Canto.

BBT: Consequently, while some may think that other Puranas need the support of the Vedas' authority, Shrimad-Bhagavatam itself explicitly refutes the possibility that it may be dependent in this way; we thus receive the Bhagavatam on its own authority alone. For this reason it is in fact the highest manifestation of shruti [the original Vedas]. As it is said:

"How did it so happen that King Parikshit met this great sage, making it possible for this Vedic text for the pure Vaishnavas (satvati shrutih) to be sung to him?" [Bhag. 1.4.7].

That Shrimad-Bhagavatam was compiled after the other Puranas, as mentioned earlier, is known from the dialogue between Shri Vyasa and Narada Muni in the First Canto.

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Vyasadeva and Narada were both familiar with the text of the Bhagavatam, the same text which Shukadeva spoke to Parikshit. "Still Shrimad-Bhagavatam as it emanated from his mouth seemed to them as if something they had never heard before." Shukadeva's simple repetition of the Bhagavatam was appreciated by the great sages present as a profound act of interpretation. In a way perfectly suiting the time and place, Shukadeva brought the almost forgotten Bhagavatam into this world once again in a new life. A few year later, Suta Gosvami gave birth to it in yet another, even more public reincarnation, and after this, many Vaishnava commentators brought forth new interpretations for one generation after another. As the general level of culture naturally modulated over the centuries, primarily in the direction of decreasing intelligence, the acaryas adjusted their explanations for their own students' understanding. As a rule, the weaker intelligence of each new generation in Kali-yuga made necessary more and more thorough commentary. Most recently, His Divine Grace A.C. Bhaktivedanta Swami Prabhupada achieved another masterful feat of interpretation--comparable in its creative boldness only to Shukadeva's recitation--by lucidly rendering the text of the Bhagavatam and its commentaries into English, a language ordinarily not very suited for expressing the subtleties of Vedic theology. All along, Shrimad-Bhagavatam has suffered no distortion from its faithful handlers, assuming only different external appearances in the changing light of time and place.

The Vedas give instructions as a master instructs a servant. Vedic injunctions are not dictatorial commands, however. They are always given as recommendations, addressed to mature humans capable of deciding for themselves what to do. No one is forced to obey Vedic authority involuntarily, by threats of eternal hell or any other coercion. The Puranas speak in a more friendly voice than the authoritarian Vedas; by telling stories and offering reasonable arguments they patiently encourage their readers to accept their good advice. Fine poetry attempts to speak with yet another voice, that of a cherished lover. Shrimad-Bhagavatam speaks fluently and convincingly in all these three languages, in the voices of authority, of friendly persuasion and of uncritical adoration.

Various Puranas present rival claims of superiority, which may all be true relatively, in comparison to other, even less sattvic Puranas. Shrimad-Bhagavatam's status, however, is absolute. No higher authority exists with the power to relativize the teachings of the Bhagavatam.

rajante tavad anyani/ puranani satam gane
yavad bhagavatam naiva/ shruyate 'mrita-sagaram

"All other Puranic scriptures shine forth in the assembly of saintly devotees only as long as that great ocean of nectar, Shrimad-Bhagavatam, is not heard" [Bhag. 12.13.14]. The authority of other Puranas is dependent on the verification of Vedic shruti, but Shrimad-Bhagavatam is independent. Shrila Jiva Gosvami even suggests that despite the Bhagavatam's officially belonging along with the other Puranas to the secondary category of smriti, Vaishnavas can be privy to the confidential fact that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the most exalted shruti scripture. Therefore Shrila Jiva calls the Bhagavatam the pratinidhi-rupa of Shri Krishna, His direct reflection; because God and His image are nondifferent, this implies that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the full incarnation of the Supreme Personality of Godhead in sound.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam Is Self-Sufficient

Vedic tradition recognizes three ways of teaching—like a ruler, like a friend, and like a lover. The Vedas speak in an imperative voice, like an overlord: satyam vada dharmam cara. “Speak the truth and be religious” (Taittiriya Up. 1.11). The Vedas do not need to offer logical reasons for following their instructions. One is expected to obey without question. The Puranas instruct like a friend, narrating stories with moral conclusions and providing reasoned explanations when required. Kavya, or poetic literature, gives counsel like a beloved lady, speaking sweetly but indirectly. Instructions are expressed in an aesthetically pleasing way to attract the reader or hearer. Shrimad-Bhagavatam uses all three of these methods to convey its teachings.

Just as a phrase or song becomes more significant when an eminent personality quotes or sings it, so the Bhagavatam has increased in significance because the eminent Shukadeva Gosvami recited it. He narrated the Bhagavatam in such a marvelous way that both his guru, Shrila Vyasadeva, and his param guru, Shri Narada Muni, were amazed. They felt as if they had never heard it before.

The customary etiquette is that a disciple should neither sit higher than his teachers nor speak as an authority in their presence. Shukadeva Gosvami’s speaking Shrimad-Bhagavatam from an elevated seat in the presence of his gurus is one of the rare exceptions. Because his gurus consented to it, however, Shri Shuka is faultless, as Shrila Vishvanatha Cakravarti Thakura points out in his commentary on Bhagavatam 1.17.29, which describes Shuka’s accepting the speaker’s seat. From the narrations of the Mahabharata we learn that Narada and Vyasa were often called upon to address various audiences on the subjects of karma, yoga, and jnana. They rarely had an opportunity to hear such extraordinarily pure Bhagavata discourse. So they were moved to great ecstasy when the nectarlike juice of topics concerning the Supreme Personality of Godhead issued from the lips of Shri Shuka, their qualified disciple.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam’s special greatness is thus due to its unparalleled author, its eminent speaker, and its elevated audience. No other scripture in recorded history has ever had such an audience, except perhaps when Grandfather Bhishma instructed King Yudhishöhira from his bed of arrows after the Kurukshetra War. Bhishma’s main purpose, however, was to convince Yudhishöhira to begin managing his kingdom. By contrast, Shrimad-Bhagavatam was spoken in just the opposite context: King Parikshit, having renounced his kingdom, simply wanted to hear krishna-katha and in this way discharge the only duty of a dying man. Shri Shukadeva thus had no need to dilute his narration with talk of lower religious principles. Therefore Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the most perfect and complete transcendental scripture. It does not even depend on the support of the Vedas.

Indeed, the sunlike Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the very representation of Lord Krishna. The Lord possesses all good qualities, as Shrila Rupa Gosvami explains in his Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (2.1.17) while analyzing various devotional mellows:

nayakanam shiro-ratnam krishnas tu bhagavan svayam
yatra nityataya sarve virajante maha-gunah

“Lord Shri Krishna, the original Personality of Godhead, is the crest jewel of all heroes. All wonderful qualities are eternally present in Him.” Since Shrimad-Bhagavatam is nondifferent from Krishna, it is also a reservoir of all good qualities.

When Lord Krishna appeared,[DDB100] He destroyed many demons and protected His saintly devotees. In the same way, the Bhagavata Purana uproots the demoniac influence in society and protects saintly persons with its ambrosial narrations. Other scriptures speak about fruitive activities, impersonal Brahman, or yoga, and they may or may not say something about the transcendental path of love of Godhead. But the Bhagavatam kicks out all types of inferior, cheating religions like refuse. Only explanations of the absolute reality find a place in its pages.

Having established Bhagavatam as the supreme pramana, in the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains his method of analyzing it.

Gopiparanadhana: Therefore to ascertain what is actually the highest good in life we should focus our investigation on Shrimad-Bhagavatam, carefully reconciling its statements with what precedes and follows them. With this aim, in this work consisting of six Sandarbhas the introductory sentences [in each anuccheda] will serve the function of sutras. The quotations from Shrimad-Bhagavatam will be the scriptural texts under consideration. Shridhara Svami's explanation of the Bhagavatam will serve as our primary commentary.

Shrila Shridhara Svami is a perfect Vaishnava. But to entice the Advaita-vadis--nowadays prominent all over Madhya-desh and other parts of the country--to become absorbed in the glories of the Supreme Lord, he mixed some traces of their theories into his writings. We will cite Shri Svami-carana's commentary verbatim when it agrees with the conclusions of pure Vaishnava philosophy.

BBT: So it is that we shall focus our attention on studying Shrimad-Bhagavatam to determine what is the ultimate good in life. While conducting this study, we shall take into consideration how Shrimad-Bhagavatam's statements harmonize with their preceding and following texts. In these Six Sandarbhas, the statements with which we introduce our explanation of the Bhagavatam verses will serve as the sutras, the Bhagavatam verses themselves will serve as the scriptural text to be analyzed, and the explanations of these verses given by the great Vaishnava Shridhara Svami will serve as the commentary on the sutras. Sometimes he inserted Mayavadi ideas into his writings to make the glories of the Personality of Godhead more attractive to the minds of the impersonalists, who are now quite prevalent, especially in central India. When Shridhara Svami's commentary accords with strict Vaishnava principles, we shall quote it verbatim.

Gopiparanadhana: Our explanation of certain Bhagavatam verses will be based on comments given by Shridhara Svami on other verses. Sometimes our explanation will be based on statements by the exalted devotees of the Lord known as Shri Vaishnavas. They are famous throughout the Dravida-desha and in other regions, and their sampradaya was founded by the goddess Shri herself. Shrimad-Bhagavatam attests to the greatness of these devotees, affirming their numerical strength in South India and their reputation as Vaishnavas: "[In Kali-yuga there are indeed Vaishnavas] scattered here and there, but they are especially abundant in the Dravida regions" [Bhag. 11.5.39]. The statements of the Shri Vaishnavas we cite are certified by the authority of Shri Ramanuja Bhagavat-pada's opinions, found in his Shri-bhashya and other works written by him.

Sometimes we will simply follow the self-evident meaning of the original Bhagavatam texts, and sometimes we will base our explanations on other authorities. Since the explanations of the Advaita-vadis are already so well-known we will not bother to elaborate on them much.

BBT: Sometimes we shall follow the views Shridhara Svami has expressed in writings other than his Bhagavatam commentary. In other cases we shall follow the original meaning of the text by basing our explanations on the authoritative opinions of the venerable Ramanujacarya Bhagavatpada, expressed in such works as Shri-bhashya. He is the renowned leader of the Vaishnavas of the Shri-sampradaya, which originated directly with Goddess Lakshmi. These great devotees are famous throughout India's southern region (Dravida-desha) and elsewhere. Shrimad-Bhagavatam itself states that they are well known as devotees of Vishnu in the south:

"O king, a few Vaishnavas can be seen here and there in this age, but they can be found in abundance in the Dravida country" [Bhag. 11.5.39].

Since the principles of Advaita-vada are already well known, we shall not discuss them at length.

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Shri Tattva-sandarbha can be considered logically divided into two parts, although Shrila Jiva Gosvami did not specifically indicate this division. The first twenty four anucchedas prove the authority of the Bhagavatam on the basis of reason and various scriptural authorities. This having been done, the Bhagavatam itself has now become the prime source of verification, and will continue to be so throughout the rest of the Six Sandarbhas. The second part of the Tattva-sandarbha, beginning from anuccheda 25, ascertains the general nature of the Supreme Truth, or tattva, revealed in Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Panditas sometimes call the two parts of Tattva-sandarbha the Pramana-khanda and Prameya-khanda; pramana means "source of valid knowledge" and prameya means "object of pramana," so in other words the two parts deal with epistemology and ontology respectively.

In anucchedas 27 and 28 Shri Jiva Gosvami discusses some details of his methodology. The principle object of study in the Sandarbhas will be texts of the Bhagavatam, not in artificial isolation, but examining the verses with carefully consideration of the systematic intent of the whole work and the verses' immediate and extended contexts. Each Sandarbha deals with an individual main topic, and within each Sandarbha relevant secondary topics are dealt with in regular order. The choice of Bhagavatam verses to be considered is thus going to made on a topical basis.

Text 27.1 describes the formal organization of the individual anucchedas, which is modeled after the logical structure of the Vedanta-sutra. In the Vedanta-sutra, Dvaipayana Vyasa groups short, complete arguments into anukaranas of one or more sutras. The sutras themselves are usually resolutions of doubts about the correct understanding of particular statements of the Upanishads. These vishaya-vakyas, or shruti texts under consideration, are left unspoken, and are only known on the testimony of an authoritative commentary (bhashya). Each school of Vedanta relies on the bhashya of its own founder-acarya, together with any number of sub-commentaries (öikas) by followers. Shrila Jiva Gosvami plans to introduce his anucchedas with statements of his own which will serve the function of sutras. He will quote a Bhagavatam verse, or sometimes a few, as the vishaya-vakya to be discussed. Then he will comment on the meaning of the verse. As he states here, much of this commentary will be drawn directly from Shridhara Svami's Bhavartha-dipika on Shrimad-Bhagavatam, sometimes quoted verbatim.

Another principle source of explanation will be statements by teachers of the Ramanuja-sampradaya. Gaudiya Vaishnavas are in some respects closer philosophically to the Shri Vaishnavas coming from Ramanujacarya than to the Madhvites with whom they are officially affiliated. Lord Chaitanya's followers cannot agree with some of Madhvacharya's teachings on the nature of the finite souls, especially his opinion that only some jivas are constitutionally in the mode of pure goodness and that only this minority is eligible for liberation from material existence. The Chaitanya Vaishnavas only major disagreement with Shri Vaishnava opinion concerns the jivas after liberation: Shri Vaishnavas deny that individual relationships with God are fixed, on the grounds that having only one kind of relationship would impose a limitation on the freedom of liberation.

The Advaita-vadis' comments on the words of the Personality of Godhead and His pure devotees in Bhagavad-gita and Shrimad-Bhagavatam are meant to obliterate Him as an absolute person, to relativize Him to the position of another aspect of illusion. Even if this view acknowledges Him to be the highest form of illusion, it is extremely repugnant to pure Vaishnavas. Therefore Vaishnavas disparagingly refer to the Advaita Vedantists as Mayavadis, proponents of the theory that everything with name and form is a creation of Maya, even God. Without being rude, Shrila Jiva Gosvami here offers a mild excuse for not citing Advaita explanations of Shrimad-Bhagavatam in the Sandarbhas.

Methodology of the Shaö-sandarbha

Here Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains his method of analyzing Shrimad-Bhagavatam. He plans to follow a format similar to the one Shrila Vyasadeva uses in the Vedanta-sutra. In the Sandarbhas, the introductory statements are like the sutras in the Vedanta-sutra, the statements of Shrimad-Bhagavatam constitute the subject to be analyzed, and Shrila Jiva Gosvami's comments on the Bhagavatam's statements are like the commentary (bhashya) on the sutras. Jiva Gosvami also indicates that his explanations are not his personal opinion or products of his imagination but are given strictly according to the opinions of the previous Vaishnava acaryas, such as Ramanujacarya and Shridhara Svami.

Although Shridhara Svami accepted the renounced order of life in Shankara's sampradaya, which opposes the personalism of Krishna consciousness, his commentaries on Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the Bhagavad-gita, and the Vishnu Purana make it obvious that he was a great Vaishnava. He clearly states in his commentaries that the Lord's form, qualities, abode, associates, and names are all transcendental and eternal, and that devotion to the Lord continues even after liberation. These key philosophical points are opposed to Advaita monism and reveal Shridhara Svami's true stance.

Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu also accepted sannyasa in Shankara's line, but from the beginning His teachings refuted the Mayavada doctrine. Hence Shri Chaitanya's great respect for Shridhara Svami and his Bhagavatam commentary is proof enough that Shridhara Svami was not a Mayavada sannyasi at heart, any more than Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu was. Chaitanya Mahaprabhu considered all Mayavadis offenders at the lotus feet of Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, yet he would not tolerate even mild or indirect criticism of Shrila Shridhara Svami. When Vallabha Bhaööa told Lord Chaitanya he had written a Bhagavatam commentary that surpassed Shridhara Svami's, Lord Chaitanya rebuked Vallabha and refused to hear it (see Chaitanya-caritamrita, Antya 113-37). From this incident we can understand the exalted status of Shridhara Svami as a surrendered, pure devotee of the Lord. We can also be certain that Jiva Gosvami, as a loyal follower of Lord Chaitanya's, held Shridhara Svami's Bhagavatam commentary, Bhavartha-dipika, in high esteem. Thus Shrila Jiva Gosvami refers to Shridhara as parama-vaishnava, a topmost devotee.

In this Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami tells why Shridhara Svami inserted some Mayavadi ideas into his Bhavartha-dipika commentary. Some of Shankara's followers developed a taste for Shrimad-Bhagavatam after reading his devotional poems based on the Bhagavatam, but these followers still maintained their overall impersonal outlook. To attract these sannyasis toward the path of devotion, Shridhara Svami wrote a mixed commentary on the spotless Purana. Just as a fisherman uses bait to catch fish, occasionally Shridhara Svami would present monistic opinions about some Bhagavatam verses in order to attract the Mayavadis who liked to read the Bhagavatam. This was merely part of his preaching strategy; it doesn't make him a Mayavadi.

Nevertheless, although Jiva Gosvami understands Shridhara Svami's motives, in the Sandarbhas he chooses not to cite the impersonal explanations found in the Bhavartha-dipika. In fact, throughout the Sandarbhas Shrila Jiva Gosvami takes every opportunity to demolish the Mayavada view. Clearly he does not consider the Mayavadis his primary audience, as Shridhara Svami must have when he wrote his commentary. Jiva Gosvami's intended audience is apparent from his declaration in the sixth Text of the Tattva-sandarbha, where he says that no one should read this book who is averse to serving Lord Krishna's lotus feet.

Jiva Gosvami's intended audience comprises those who are already on the path of Krishna consciousness or at least interested in taking to it. Naturally, therefore, he says here that he will quote from Shridhara Svami's commentary only when it accords with strict Vaishnava principles. This statement has caused some modern scholars to criticize Jiva Gosvami for not respecting the liberal sentiments of Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, but this criticism arises from a superficial understanding of Lord Chaitanya's real attitude.

Shridhara Svami was not a Mayavadi, although for the reason mentioned above he did give a monistic slant to some parts of his Bhagavatam commentary. Considering why Shridhara Svami did this in his Bhavartha-dipika, why should Shrila Jiva Gosvami, in an entirely different work meant for an entirely different audience, cite those explanations of Shridhara's that oppose the true conclusion of the Bhagavatam and even Shridhara Svami's own convictions? Shri Jiva has already established Shrimad-Bhagavatam as the supreme authority, and from this point on in his Sandarbhas he will not deal with any opinions that contradict it. He makes his policy explicit: He respects the purports of Shridhara insofar as they follow the spirit and intent of the Shrimad-Bhagavatam itself. In this way Shrila Jiva Gosvami remains true to the Vaishnavism of Shrila Shridhara Svami and also to his own Gaudiya-sampradaya.

At the end of this Text, when Jiva Gosvami says he is not going to describe the details of the Advaita monistic doctrine because they are already well known, he implies that Mayavada, though popular, only apparently explains the meaning of the shastras and is not really worth discussing, and he also implies that he intends to refute it.

Next Shrila Jiva Gosvami describes the sources of evidence other than Shrimad-Bhagavatam that he plans to cite in the Shaṅ-sandarbha.

Gopiparanadhana: In this book I will be citing various statements from shruti, Puranas and other scriptures, quoting the exact words which I have seen written. I will do this to provide evidence for my own ideas, rather than to verify what Shrimad-Bhagavatam says. Sometimes I have not myself seen the original scriptures from which I cite passages; these citations I borrow from various works of Shri Madhvacarya-carana, including Shri Bhagavata-tatparya, Mahabharata-tatparya and Brahma-sutra-bhashya. Shri Madhva is the spiritual master of the Tattva-vada school. He is an old, standard authority. Although he originally belonged to the disciplic line directly descending from Shrimat Shankaracarya, he separated himself from Shankara's school and joined the party of the Vaishnavas. His special Vaishnava doctrine has been preached widely. Among his disciples and later followers, renowned in South India and elsewhere, are Shri Vijayadhvaja Tirtha, Brahmanya Tirtha and Vyasa Tirtha, all of whom are very eminent scholars of the Vedas and their purports.

BBT: Here in the Shaö-sandarbha I will quote from the Vedas, Puranas, and other such scriptures, just as I have seen them. I will quote these passages to verify my own interpretations, not the statements of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Some of the verses quoted here I have not seen in their original texts but have gleaned from citations in the Bhagavata-tatparya, Bharata-tatparya, Brahma-sutra-bhashya, and other works by the venerable Madhvacarya, the prolific preacher of the distinct Vaishnava philosophy of Tattva-vada. {Although coming originally in the disciplic line of Shriman Shankaracarya, he became an adherent of Vaishnavism and severed his connection with the Advaitins.}[drav101] In his line have appeared such disciples and grand-disciples as Vijayadhvaja Tirtha and Vyasa Tirtha[drav102]; very famous in the south, they are most eminent scholars of the Vedic literature and its interpretation.

Gopiparanadhana: Thus in his Mahabharata-tatparya [2.7.8] Shri Madhva says, "It is by the mercy of the Vedanta-sutra that I have correctly understood other scriptures, having engaged myself in studying many different kinds of books located in various places. Here I will speak my opinions according to the views of Bhagavan Vyasa, the Supreme Lord Narayana in person, as he has expressed them in his Mahabharata and other works." It is useful to know that Madhvacarya has cited shruti texts such as the Catur-veda-shikha, portions of the Garuda and other Puranas which are now not available everywhere, samhitas like the Maha-samhita, and tantras like the Tantra-bhagavata and Brahma-tarka.

BBT: In his Bharata-tatparya Shri Madhvacarya states:

"Having understood other scriptures with the help of the Vedanta-sutra, and having looked at various kinds of scriptures in different parts of the country, I shall give my explanation in accordance with what Shri Vyasadeva, who is none other than the Supreme Lord Narayana, has spoken in His Mahabharata and other works. In this description I will carefully adhere to His viewpoint" (Bharata-tatparyya 2.7.8).3

The texts we will cite from the works of Shri Madhvacarya will include portions from such Vedic shrutis as the Catur-veda-shikha, Puranic texts from unavailable parts of the Garuda Purana and other works, samhita texts from the Maha-samhita and similar works, and tantra texts from the Tantra-bhagavatam, Brahma-tarka, and so on.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami throughout his life was famous for his strict honesty. A life-long celibate, he was renounced in his habits even as a child. It is said that he never spoke anything which could not be verified to be true, even in his dreams. In the Sandarbhas he will carefully corroborate his interpretation of Shrimad-Bhagavatam by the trustworthy evidence of shabda-pramana. This is the standard of brahminical scholarship:

tasmac chastram pramanam te/ karyakarya-vyavasthitau
jnatva shastra-pramanoktam/ karma kartum iharhasi

"You should therefore understand what is duty and what is not duty by the regulations of the scriptures. Knowing such rules and regulations, you should execute your prescribed duty in this world" [Bhagavad-gita 16.24]. An honest brahmana will always reflect first on the opinion of shastra (scripture) before doing anything and before forming and expressing any opinion.

Whenever possible, Shri Jiva has directly consulted copies of the primary sources he cites. In some cases when this was not possible, he has borrowed citations from the works of Madhvacarya. Shri Madhva conducted extensive research in various parts of India to locate little-known texts to help elucidate the Vaishnava understanding of Vedanta theology. Over two hundred of the many scriptures which he quotes with references by name in his thirty-three works are so rare that no copy of them is known to exist anywhere today. Shrila Jiva Gosvami, however, trusts the word of Shri Madhva and has no doubt that these references are authentic.

We might ask, if Vaishnava acaryas like Ramanuja and Madhva are accepted as perfectly honest authorities, how is it that the followers of Chaitanya Mahaprabhu do not agree with some of their opinions? The answer lies in the fact that beyond the basic qualification of honesty, spiritual authorities can vary in their degree and kind of realization of the Absolute Truth. We can understand Shrila Ramanujacarya as representing the mood of Vaikunöha, where Supreme Lord Narayana is worshiped reverentially. The eternally liberated devotees of Vaikunöha mostly enjoy relationships of servitude and respectful friendship with the Personality of Godhead; they have great appreciation for the more intimate moods of equal friendship, parenthood and conjugal love, but are not themselves living in these. Thus in the Tamil poetry of the ancient Shri Vaishnava Alvars we see the poet expressing himself in emulation of the mood of a gopi on one page and in the mood of Hanuman on the next. It is natural that Vaishnavas in the spirit of Vaikunöha do not restrict themselves to meditation on only one kind of relationship of God, because while serving the Lord mostly in awe and reverence they relish contemplating His dealings with His more confidential devotees. Shrila Madhvacarya was an incarnation of one of the three sons of the wind-god Vayu, along with Hanuman and Bhima. He naturally represented the attitude of the demigods. Shri Madhva's philosophy is called Tattva-vada because he emphasized that Lord Vishnu is the Absolute Truth and that all the energies of creation which are controlled and sustained by Him are real. But, faithful to the viewpoint of the demigods, he also postulated that the demigods headed by Brahma are the best devotees of Vishnu.

Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu presents a viewpoint which transcends that of the demigods and the devotees of Vaikunöha, namely the viewpoint of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Shri Krishna Himself. With due respect to the worshipable Vaishnava acaryas who preceded Him in Kali-yuga, only Lord Chaitanya could reveal the Absolute Truth fully in its highest aspects. Aradhyo bhagavan vrajesha tanayas tad-dhama vrindavanam: He taught that the original form of God is Krishna in Vrindavana, and that Narayana and all other appearances of the Supreme Lord emanate from Him. Ramya kait upasana vraja-vadhu-vargena ya kalpita: Furthermore, purer and more elevated than the worship offered to the Lord in Vaikunöha or in this world by the demigods is the intimate service rendered Him by the young cowherd girls of Vrindavana.

The Source of References

Since Shrila Jiva Gosvami has proven Shrimad-Bhagavatam to be the supreme pramana, it needs no further validation. Therefore, as he mentions here, from this point onward he will quote scripture only to support his own interpretations, not the Bhagavatam's statements. He will cite sources he has read in his own library and elsewhere, and he will also borrow references from the writings of Shri Madhvacarya, who lived a few centuries before Jiva. Madhvacarya often quotes from books that by Shri Jiva's time had already been lost.

In Madhvacarya's time (the twelfth century A.D.) there were no printing presses. Madhvacarya traveled the length and breadth of India collecting scriptures and philosophical books and copying them by hand at the various temples and libraries he visited. He was renowned for his photographic memory, so when he was not allowed to copy the books he found, he read them and later reproduced them from memory. In this way he amassed an immense library at his headquarters in Udupi, in Karnaöaka. Some say his library had no equal. Unfortunately, it was destroyed by fire, and many of the books he refers to in his writings were lost forever. In several places in the Sandarbhas Shrila Jiva Gosvami has to make do with the references from lost works cited by Madhvacarya in his books. [DDB103]

Madhvacarya's Tattva-vada is by definition the philosophy that "everything is real": sarvam vastu satyam iti tattva-vadah. The Advaita monists say that only Brahman is real and that everything else is a manifestation of Maya. Madhvacarya soundly defeated the Mayavada philosophy with his Tattva-vada, both in his writings and in public debates with the leading Mayavadis of his time.

By relying on books by Shrila Madhvacarya and his eminent followers as a principal source of evidence, Jiva Gosvami shows his indebtedness to them. Jiva Gosvami is, however, a follower of Lord Chaitanya, whose teachings differ from Madhvacarya's. In his Sandarbhas Shri Jiva plans to draw from those ideas of Madhvacarya that agree with Lord Krishna Chaitanya Mahaprabhu's Acintya-bhedabheda philosophy. When examined impartially, the Acintya-bhedabheda philosophy proves the best and most comprehensive explanation of Vedic knowledge. It is the perfect synthesis of all the Vedic literature because its creator, Shri Chaitanya, is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. When the Supreme Lord creates a philosophy, it naturally surpasses all other systems of thought.

Here the pramana section of Shri Tattva-sandarbha ends. Having established shabda-pramana as the only independently valid means of knowledge, and having established Shrimad-Bhagavatam as the topmost form of shabda-pramana, in the next section Shrila Jiva Gosvami will begin his discussion of the prameya, or what we come to know by resorting to the topmost pramana.

Gopiparanadhana: So now let us look at a verse which offers homage to the speaker of this Shrimad-Bhagavatam and briefly defines the Bhagavatam's message by reflecting on the attitude of the speaker's heart: "Let me offer my respectful obeisances unto Shukadeva Gosvami, my spiritual master, the son of Vyasadeva. It is he who defeats all inauspicious things within this universe. Although in the beginning he was absorbed in his own happiness of Brahman realization, giving up all other types of consciousness, he became attracted by the pleasing, most melodious pastimes of Lord Ajita. He therefore mercifully spoke this supreme Purana, Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which is the bright light of the Absolute Truth and which describes the activities of the Lord" [Bhag. 12.12.69].

BBT: Such being the status of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, Suta Gosvami concisely defines its basic message by turning our attention to the disposition of the heart of its speaker while offering him obeisances:

"Let me offer my respectful obeisances unto Shukadeva Gosvami, my spiritual master, the son of Vyasadeva. It is he who defeats all inauspicious things within this universe. Gopiparanadhana: Here is Shridhara Svami's commentary on this verse: "He [Suta Gosvami] offers obeisances to his spiritual master. [Sva-sukha-nibhrita-cetah means] he whose heart was full with his own happiness. Therefore he had given up all thoughts of anything else. Even though this was his condition, the gravity of his inner happiness was deflected by the charming pastimes of Lord Ajita. I bow down to him, who expounded Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the light of the truth, that is to say, the scripture which reveals the highest goal of life."

BBT: Shridhara Svami explains in his commentary:

"Suta Gosvami pays obeisances to his spiritual master [Shri Shuka], whose mind was filled only with the bliss of the self and who had thus put aside all other thoughts. But even at that elevated stage his mind was drawn to the enchanting pastimes of Lord Ajita, and this attraction caused him to abandon his sober attachment to impersonal bliss. I offer my obeisances unto him, the speaker of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which illumines the supreme goal of life."

Gopiparanadhana: In the same regard we can examine the three verses in the Second Canto, spoken by Shukadeva himself, which begin "Most sages, O King^{1/4}" [Bhag. 2.1.7-9]. "All inauspicious things" in the verse under consideration [Bhag. 12.12.69] we can understand as meaning everything inimical or irrelevant to that mentality. Thus this verse indicates that the sambandhi-tattva, the truth with which one should establish contact, is something greater than the bliss of Brahman, namely Shriman Ajita, who is especially qualified by His charming pastimes. That this Lord is fully and literally realized by the name of Krishna is going to be shown in Shri Badarayana Vyasa's trance. The goal of human life, termed prayojana, is also described here; it is the happiness of pure love for Him, which produces strong bonding to Him. From this can be inferred the abhidheya or process for achieving this goal, specifically the practice of worshiping Him, which generates such pure love for Him. The phrase "son of Vyasa" in the verse implies, as we know from the Brahma-vaivarta Purana, that Shukadeva was free from all influence of Maya from his very birth because of Shri Krishna's benediction. The verse under discussion was spoken by Shri Suta to Shri Shaunaka.

BBT: Similarly worth examining are the three verses Shri Shuka speaks in the Second Canto that begin with the verse whose first line is prayena munayo rajan [Bhag. 2.1.7-9]. In the verse under discussion [Bhag. 12.12.69] we should understand that the words akhila-vrijinam ("all inauspicious things") indicate everything contrary or irrelevant to devotional service.

Therefore the subject of this book (sambandhi-tattva) is Shriman Ajita, who transcends the ecstasy of impersonal realization and is distinguished by His enchanting pleasure pastimes. Later, in the context of our discussion of Shri Vyasa's trance, it will be made clear that in His fullest manifestation Lord Ajita is primarily named Shri Krishna.

Similarly, the final goal (prayojana-tattva) is the happiness of love for Him, which leads to the sort of attachment to Him that Shri Shuka experienced. And thus our means (abhidheya) is service to Him, characterized by such devotional processes as hearing His divine pastimes, an activity that generates love for Him, as it did in the case of Shri Shuka. The identity of each of these three principles (sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana) follows as a natural logical consequence.

The phrase vyasa-sunum ("son of Shri Vyasa") in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 12.12.69 alludes to something described in the Brahma-vaivarta Purana—namely, that Shukadeva, because of Shri Krishna's benediction, remained untouched by Maya from his very birth.

The verse under discussion [Bhag. 12.12.69] was spoken by Shri Suta to Shri Shaunaka.

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Having demonstrated the authority of Shrimad-Bhagavatam and having outlined his methodology, Shri Jiva Gosvami now begins his exposition of the science of Krishna consciousness on the basis of statements from Shrimad-Bhagavatam. He first presents a basic conspectus of the science, touching each of the three major phases of realization in Krishna consciousness (sambandha, abhidheya and prayojana), by looking at Suta Gosvami's praise of Shri Shukadeva in the next-to-last chapter of the Bhagavatam. This verse helps us begin to understand the primary concerns of Shrimad-Bhagavatam by showing us something about the concerns of its speaker; certainly, at least, the Bhagavatam's attitude should not be contradicted by that of its speaker.

Before hearing Shrimad-Bhagavatam from his father, Shukadeva was already a self-realized impersonalist. The satisfaction he enjoyed within himself was something very few people in this world ever experience. Even a vague perception of the Supreme Lord's transcendental existence, lacking any focus on His all-attractive personality, His beauty and His charming pastimes, is still adequate to motivate impersonalists to abandon all material interests. The actual taste of God consciousness, however, is much more satisfying, as the conversion of an advanced Brahma-vadi like Shukadeva proves.

Even before birth from his mother's womb, Shukadeva had renounced the material world. In fact, he stayed in her womb for sixteen years, refusing to take birth. Finally, Vyasadeva had to ask His friend Lord Krishna to coax his son into entering this world. Krishna came over a thousand miles from His capital Dvaraka to the ashrama of Vyasa. He promised Shukadeva in the womb that if he agreed to come out, the deluding power of Maya would never touch Him. Thus assured by the Supreme Lord, Shukadeva took his birth, but then immediately left home. The measures Shrila Vyasadeva had to take to entice Shukadeva back home will be described later in Shri Tattva-sandarbha (anuccheda 49).

Suta Gosvami's characterization of Shukadeva's heart is confirmed by Shukadeva's own words in the Second Canto:

prayena munayo rajan nivritta vidhi-shedhatah
nairgunya-stha ramante sma gunanukathane hareh

idam bhagavatam nama puranam brahma-sammitam
adhitavan dvaparadau pitur dvaipayana adham

parinishöhito 'pi nairgunya uttama-shloka-lilaya
grihita-ceta rajarshe akhyanam yad adhitavan

"O King Parikshit, most topmost transcendentalists, who are above the regulative principles and restrictions, take pleasure in describing the glories of the Lord. At the end of the Dvapara-yuga I studied this great supplement of Vedic literature named Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which is equal to all the Vedas, from my father, Shrila Dvaipayana Vyasadeva. O saintly King, I was certainly situated perfectly in transcendence, yet I was still attracted by the delineation of the pastimes of the Lord, who is described by enlightened verses. Therefore I studied this narration" [Bhag. 2.1.7-9].

An Analysis of Shri Shukadeva Gosvami's Faith

In the preceding Texts, Shrila Jiva Gosvami compared and contrasted the Vedas, Vedanta, Itihasas, and Puranas to show that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the topmost pramana for all time. Now, at the commencement of his analysis of the Bhagavatam itself, he again performs mangalacarana to further invoke auspiciousness for his sacred undertaking of writing the Shaö-sandarbha. Once again he uses a Bhagavatam verse as his invocation. By quoting from Suta Gosvami's prayers to Shukadeva, Shrila Jiva Gosvami himself reveres Shukadeva Gosvami to invoke his blessings, so that Jiva may present the purport of Shrimad-Bhagavatam without any deviation. Then he points out the tattvas of sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana in the quoted verse.

Unlike commentators who twist the Bhagavatam's statements to support their own ideas, Shrila Jiva Gosvami has no interest in forcing any private opinions on us. He wants to explain Shrimad-Bhagavatam as it is. To this end he uses a flawless technique, one that leaves us no room for doubting the correctness of his conclusions. First he has us consider the heart of the original writer, Shrila Vyasadeva, and also the hearts of the speakers, Shukadeva Gosvami and Suta Gosvami. Then he analyzes the text of the Bhagavatam in light of that examination, incontrovertibly establishing the purpose of this topmost pramana.

In the verse quoted from Shrimad-Bhagavatam in Text 29.1, Suta Gosvami reveals something about the life of Shukadeva Gosvami, describing how he became enchanted by the pastimes of Krishna even while absorbed in the bliss of Brahman. Suta's purpose is to show the firm conviction Shukadeva had in Shrimad-Bhagavatam when he narrated it to Parikshit Maharaja. Shukadeva was self-realized even while in the womb. Indeed, he was so absorbed in the bliss of Brahman that he wanted to stay there to avoid being attacked by Maya. He left the womb only when Lord Krishna personally assured him that Maya would not capture him. (Shrila Jiva Gosvami informs us that this description is found in the Brahma-vaivarta Purana.) As we learn from Chapter Seven of Shrimad-Bhagavatam's First Canto and from the texts that Shrila Jiva Gosvami will quote below, as soon as Shukadeva took birth he left his father's hermitage for the forest. Later, when he heard a few of Vyasadeva's disciples reciting some selected Bhagavatam verses, his mind became so enthralled that he abandoned his impersonal meditation on Brahman and began studying the Bhagavatam under his great father. Despite all this, however, some Mayavadis insist that because Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami was attached to impersonal Brahman realization even before his birth, he must have remained fixed in this ideal. Therefore, they conclude, Shrimad-Bhagavatam in fact promotes Advaita impersonalism. The prayer of Suta Gosvami quoted here refutes this speculation.

Another reason Shrila Jiva Gosvami quotes Suta's prayer is to reveal the essential purport of Shrimad-Bhagavatam: The happiness of Krishna consciousness surpasses all other kinds, including that enjoyed by merging into God's impersonal effulgence. In the Second Canto (Bhag. 2.1.7–9), Shukadeva Gosvami himself confirms the superiority of the bliss of bhakti:

nairgunya-stha ramante sma gunanukathane hareh

idam bhagavatam nama puranam brahma-sammitam
adhitavan dvaparadau pitur dvaipayana adham

parinishöhito 'pi nairgunya uttama-shloka-lilaya
grihita-ceta rajarshe akhyanam yad adhitavan

"O King Parikshit, mainly the topmost transcendentalists, who are above the regulative principles and restrictions, take pleasure in describing the glories of the Lord. At the end of the Dvapara-yuga I studied this great supplement of Vedic literature named Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which is equal to all the Vedas, from my father, Shrila Dvaipayana Vyasadeva. O saintly King, I was certainly situated perfectly in transcendence, yet I was still attracted by the delineation of the pastimes of the Lord, who is described by enlightened verses. Therefore I studied this Purana."

This incident from Shukadeva's life demonstrates the wonderful potency of Shrimad-Bhagavatam—that it was able to captivate[DDB104] the heart of a highly advanced Brahman-realized soul.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami begins analyzing the heart of Shrila Vyasadeva.

Gopiparanadhana: The same message is also briefly defined in the description of Shri Badarayana's trance. In this meditation Vyasadeva, the earlier speaker of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, ascertained the truth (tattva) which was to be propounded in his book he was about to write: "Thus he fixed his mind, perfectly engaging it by linking it in devotional service [bhakti-yoga] without any tinge of materialism, and thus he saw the Absolute Personality of Godhead along with His external energy, which was under His full control. Due to this external energy, the living entity, although transcendental to the three modes of material nature, thinks of himself as a material product and thus undergoes the reactions of material miseries. The material miseries of the living entity, which are superfluous to him, can be directly mitigated by the linking process of devotional service. But the mass of people do not know this, and therefore the learned Vyasadeva composed this Vedic scripture [Shrimad-Bhagavatam], which is in relation to the Supreme Truth. Simply by one's giving aural reception to this Vedic scripture, the feeling for loving devotional service to Lord Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, sprouts up at once to extinguish the fire of lamentation, illusion, and fearfulness. The great sage Vyasadeva, after composing the Shrimad-Bhagavatam and revising it, taught it to His son, Shri Shukadeva Gosvami, who was absorbed in renunciation" [Bhag. 1.7.4–8].

BBT: Shri Suta Gosvami elucidates the same basic message of Bhagavatam while describing the meditative trance of its author, Shrila Vyasadeva. What Vyasadeva experienced indicates the principles he will later establish in his book, Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Shri Suta describes this trance in brief:

"Thus he fixed his mind, perfectly engaging it by linking it in devotional service [bhakti-yoga] without any tinge of materialism, and thus he saw the Absolute Personality of Godhead along with His external energy, which was under full control. Due to this external energy, the living entity, although transcendental to the three modes of material nature, thinks of himself as a material product and thus undergoes the reactions of material miseries. The material miseries of the living entity, which are superfluous to him, can be directly mitigated by the linking process of devotional service. But the mass of people do not know this, and therefore the learned Vyasadeva composed this Vedic scripture [Shrimad-Bhagavatam], which is in relation to the Supreme Truth. Simply by one's giving aural reception to this Vedic scripture, the feeling for loving devotional service to Lord Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, sprouts up at once to extinguish the fire of lamentation, illusion, and fearfulness. The great sage Vyasadeva, after composing the Shrimad-Bhagavatam and revising it, taught it to His son, Shri Shukadeva Gosvami, who was already engaged in self-realization" [Bhag. 1.7.4–8].

Gopiparanadhana: In that same passage Shaunaka asks, "Shri Shukadeva Gosvami was already on the path of self-realization, and thus he was pleased with his own self. So why did he take the trouble to undergo the study of such a vast literature?" [Bhag. 1.7.9].

To this Suta Gosvami replies, "All different varieties of atmaramas [those who take pleasure in atma, or spirit self], especially those established on the path of self-realization, though freed from all kinds of material bondage, desire to render unalloyed devotional service unto the Personality of Godhead. This means that the Lord possesses transcendental qualities and therefore can attract everyone, including liberated souls. Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami, the son of Shrila Vyasadeva, was not only transcendently powerful. He was also very dear to the devotees of the Lord. Thus, his mind captivated by the enchanting qualities of Lord Hari, he underwent the study of this great narration [Shrimad-Bhagavatam]" [Bhag. 1.7.10–11].

"In devotional service (bhakti-yogena)" [Bhag. 1.7.4] means "in pure love of God;" this is the conventional meaning of the word as used in the following verse: "My dear King, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Mukunda, sometimes grants liberation to those who are engaged in getting His favor, but He rarely grants bhakti-yoga, pure love for Him" [Bhag. 5.6.18].

BBT: Shaunaka Rishi then inquires:

"Shri Shukadeva Gosvami was already on the path of self-realization, and thus he was pleased with his own self. So why did he take the trouble to undergo the study of such a vast literature?" [Bhag. 1.7.9].

Suta Gosvami replies:

"All different varieties of atmaramas [those who take pleasure in atma, or spirit self], especially those established on the path of self-realization, though freed from all kinds of material bondage, desire to render unalloyed devotional service unto the Personality of Godhead. This means that the Lord possesses transcendental qualities and therefore can attract everyone, including liberated souls. Thus, his mind captivated by the enchanting qualities of Lord Hari, he underwent the study of this great narration [Shrimad-Bhagavatam]" [Bhag. 1.7.10–11].

The phrase bhakti-yogena ("through devotional service," [in Bhagavatam 1.7.4]) means "through love of God," since the same meaning is conveyed in the following statement:

"My dear King, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Mukunda, sometimes grants liberation to those who are engaged in getting His favor, but He rarely grants bhakti-yoga, pure love for Him" [Bhag. 5.6.18].

Gopiparanadhana: "Fixed" (pranihite) means "fixed in meditative trance" (samahite), in accordance with Narada's instruction to him [Vyasadeva], "Please remember the Lord's exceptional activities by meditating in trance (samadhi)" [Bhag. 1.5.13]. The "Absolute Person" (purna-purusha) mentioned in this passage is the original Personality of Godhead, for these reasons: The word "complete" (purna) can be understood here in its ultimate sense, free from all restrictions. The Padma Purana's Uttara-khanda offers the supporting evidence of the statement, "Both this word `Personality of Godhead' (bhagavan) and the word `Supreme Person' (purusha) refer in their literal, unconditioned sense to Lord Vasudeva, the Soul of all beings." And there are two verses: "One who desires sense gratification should worship the moon. But one who desires nothing of material enjoyment should worship the Supreme Person (purusham purnam)" [Bhag. 2.3.9], and "A person who has broader intelligence, whether he be full of all material desire, without any material desire, or desiring liberation, must be all means worship the Supreme Person [Bhag. 2.3.10]; the commentary [of Shridhara Svami] to the first of these two verses says that "Purusha means the Supersoul, the Supreme Lord when the total material nature is the single conditioning limitation (upadhi) of His manifestation," and the commentary to the second says that "the purusha here is `full' (purnam), meaning `supreme' (param), that is to say, `without any conditioning limitation.'"

BBT: The word pranihite ("fixed") means "concentrated in meditation." Previously, Narada Muni had instructed Vyasadeva to "experience the pastimes of Lord Krishna in trance" [Bhag. 1.5.13]. The word purna ("complete") should be understood here in its full, unrestricted sense, as corroborated by the Padma Purana [Uttara-khanda 226.68]:

"The words bhagavan and purusha, when free from limiting modifiers, refer to Lord Vasudeva [Krishna], the Supersoul of all."

This is further verified in Shridhara Svami's commentary on the following two verses:

"One who desires sense gratification should worship the moon, but one who desires nothing of material enjoyment should worship the Supersoul. A person who has broader intelligence, whether he be full of material desires, without any material desires, or desiring liberation, must by all means worship the supreme whole, the Personality of Godhead" [Bhag. 2.3.9–10].

Shrila Shridhara Svami states that the word purusha in the first of these two verses indicates the Supersoul, whose upadhi (apparently limiting qualification) is material nature, while the same word in the second verse indicates the complete Personality of Godhead, who is free from all upadhis. Thus the phrase purna-purusha [in Bhagavatam 1.7.4, quoted in Text 30.1] refers to the original Personality of Godhead.

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Although Shrila Vyasadeva did not compose the Bhagavatam as a new creation of his own, and Shukadeva Gosvami was not the first to recite it, nonetheless the eternal text of Shrimad-Bhagavatam immortalizes them as its author and primary speaker. Shrila Jiva Gosvami thus called Shukadeva the Bhagavatam's speaker (vakta) in the previous anuccheda, and here he calls Vyasadeva its original speaker (pravakta). These roles are their transcendental pastimes, in which they have been empowered by the supreme will to manifest for our age the perfect science of Krishna consciousness. By their grace only do we have access to the secrets of bhagavata-dharma.

Shrila Vyasadeva manifested Shrimad-Bhagavatam on the basis of his vision of the Supreme Lord and His energies. When he sat down to enter into a state of totally concentrated meditation (samadhi), he was properly qualified in several ways to do this. He was not making a whimsical attempt, but was following a direct instruction from his spiritual master, Narada. His mind was pure (amala), free from attraction to sense enjoyment and from material motives. He entered meditation in a mood of unalloyed devotion for the Supreme (bhakti-yoga). Thus prepared, he was able to see the Absolute Truth directly in his heart and record his vision in Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

Vyasadeva's experience is described in the Seventh Chapter of Shrimad-Bhagavatam's First Canto. Shrila Jiva Gosvami considers this passage [Bhag. 1.7.4–11] essential for gaining a general, preliminary understanding of the absolute tattva which is the Bhagavatam's subject. He devotes a good part of Shri Tattva-sandarbha, anucchedas 30 through 49, to analyzing these few verses.

The term bhakti-yoga, which His Divine Grace Shrila Prabhupada chose to regularly translate as "devotional service," can have two different meanings. The first is the regulated practice of service to the Supreme Lord, and the second is the perfection of ecstatic love for God. Bhakti-yoga in practice naturally develops into perfect bhakti-yoga:

smarantah smarayantash ca mitho 'ghaughaharam harim
bhaktya sanjataya bhaktya bibhraty utpulakam tanum

"The devotees of the Lord constantly discuss the glories of the Personality of Godhead among themselves. Thus they constantly remember the Lord and remind one another of His qualities and pastimes. In this way the devotees please the Personality of Godhead, who takes away from them everything inauspicious. By their devotion to the principles of devotional service, the devotees awaken to pure love of Godhead (bhaktya sanjataya bhaktya), and their bodies exhibit the ecstatic symptoms such as standing of the bodily hairs on end" [Bhag. 11.3.31].

The tattva which Vyasadeva saw in his trance is described as purusham purnam, the Complete Personality of Godhead. Both these words, "complete" (purna) and "person" (purusha), can indicate other, more ordinary senses, but Shrila Jiva Gosvami argues here that in the context of Vyasadeva's trance the two words should be allowed to express their fullest denotation. The original person (purusha) is God; all other persons only partially reflect His complete personality. Many situations can be conceived of as relatively complete (purna), but to find absolute completeness we must look to the Personality of Godhead. Even the Supersoul (Paramatma), the expanded presence of God in every creature's heart, is a less complete manifestation of the original Godhead, because this Paramatma appears to conform to the limitations of material existence. Instead of displaying His own transcendental pastimes, He serves as witness and adviser to conditioned souls in their deluded pursuit of happiness.

The comments of Shrila Shridhara Svami cited here use one difficult philosophical term, upadhi, which we will have to deal with several more times in the remaining anucchedas of Shri Tattva-sandarbha. Technically, an upadhi is an apparent rather than real qualification of some thing; it can be an apparent quality of the thing, or else a second thing which apparently belongs to the first in some sort of relationship like part and whole or cause and effect. To illustrate this idea, consider that we are examining a certain object. We can vaguely identify it as "something," but the specific existence of this thing is qualified in various ways that differentiate it from other things. First of all, we can recognize that it is some kind of stone. "Mineral" is a real category which the item belongs to. We can then determine that the substance of the stone is quartz; this is another real qualification. Any number of other real qualities can be ascertained, such as the stone's mass, specific gravity and color. But further suppose that this translucent piece of quartz appears to our eyes red, and not because that is its real color, but due to some red flower's standing behind it. The stone's redness is a merely apparent quality, an upadhi. The red color is real, but our perception of the relationship of that quality to the stone is false. Continuing to observe the stone, we might then perceive yet another upadhi, imagining that actually there is a red flower inside the stone, and conclude that this flower is an integral part of it. We might even propose a theory of cause and effect, that this kind of stone naturally gives birth to red flowers.

In the same way, God has no material qualities. His spiritual qualities--such as His personal form, names, specific desires and activities--are all real, but any material quality which may be ascribed to Him is an artificially imposed qualification, an upadhi. When Shri Krishna was present on this earth five thousand years ago, persons who envied Him saw ordinary human faults in His character; these were upadhis effecting the vision of those who misunderstood the Lord.

The verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam cited in this anuccheda show two minor differences from the text published by the Bhaktivedanta Book Trust. These are vyasash cakre instead of vidvan cakre in Text 1.4.6 and purusham purnam instead of purusham param in Text 2.3.9. Neither of these variations change the meaning in any significant way.

Analysis of Shrila Vyasadeva's Trance, Part I

To understand the meaning of a profound book like Shrimad-Bhagavatam, it is important to understand the author's faith and experience. These two factors guide his writing, and, as in this case, if the subsequent speaker of the book shares the author's faith and experience, then the author's ideas will be accurately conveyed. To understand Shrila Vyasadeva's mind, or heart, Shrila Jiva Gosvami analyzes Vyasa's trance, which is the source of Shrimad-Bhagavatam and reveals its essential idea. With this analysis accomplished, Jiva makes it the basis for his explication of the whole Bhagavatam in his Shaö-sandarbha. He has therefore dedicated twenty Texts of the Tattva-sandarbha (30–49) just to explore the inner purpose of Shrila Vyasadeva's heart and show how Shukadeva Gosvami's heart perfectly reflects it.

In the previous Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami described Shukadeva's heart even before beginning to analyze Shrila Vyasadeva's. Jiva did this to invoke the blessings of Shri Shuka, from whom even Shrila Vyasadeva was eager to hear the Bhagavatam. The description of Shukadeva in the previous Text, moreover, was based on a single verse Suta Gosvami spoke in glorification of his guru. By contrast, Vyasadeva's trance is described in six verses. It was thus also more convenient for Jiva Gosvami to discuss Shukadeva's mood before Vyasadeva's. In doing so he follows the suci-kaöaha-nyaya, or "the principle of the needle and the kettle,"⁴ which means that when faced with a complex undertaking one should execute the smaller tasks first.

In Bhagavatam 1.7.4 (quoted in Text 30.1) the term bhakti-yogena means "[DDB105]by prema, or pure love of Godhead," because only in the state of pure love of Godhead can one see the Supreme Personality of Godhead along with His potencies. That bhakti-yogena means "by prema" is confirmed by the word amala, meaning "pure" and referring to the condition of Shrila Vyasadeva's heart.

According to Shrila Rupa Gosvami in his Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (1.2.1), bhakti is of three varieties: sa bhaktih sadhanam bhavah prema ceti tridhodita. "Bhakti is of three types—sadhana, bhava, and prema." One who attains prema-bhakti realizes Krishna both within and without, and this realization vanquishes both his ignorance about the self and his material miseries. Shrila Rupa Gosvami further describes prema-bhakti as follows: sandrananda-visheshatma shri-krishnakarshini ca sa. “[Prema-bhakti] is specially characterized by the experience of intense bliss, and it can attract Shri Krishna” (Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu 1.1.17).

Shrila Jiva Gosvami concludes, therefore, that it was by the influence of this prema-bhakti alone that Shrila Vyasa realized in his trance the bhagavat-tattva along with the maya-tattva, jiva-tattva, and bhakti-tattva. In other words, he saw the original Personality of Godhead, Lord Shri Krishna, along with His external, marginal, and internal potencies. This material creation is the manifestation of Lord Krishna’s external potency, and the living entities constitute His marginal potency. The living entities tend to be overcome and bewildered by Maya, the Lord’s external potency.

In his pure state the living entity is completely free from the external potency’s influence, but when under Maya’s control he considers himself material. This attitude compels him to suffer the repetition of birth and death, an unnatural, diseaselike condition for the living being. Vyasadeva saw in his trance the solution to this predicament—bhakti-yoga, or devotional service unto Lord Adhokshaja, beginning with hearing about Him. Since most of human society is ignorant of this solution, Vyasadeva composed Shrimad-Bhagavatam to propagate it.

The term bhakti-yoga mentioned in Bhagavatam 1.7.6. refers to sadhana-bhakti, which is the stage of devotional service in practice. This stage is based on strict following of devotional regulations. In prema-bhakti, the advanced stage of bhakti-yoga, because one is free of all material contamination one surely and steadily engages in devotional service with spontaneous affection. The devotee who has reached this stage of advancement generally still follows the sadhana principles, but inwardly his heart is bathed in waves of blissful emotion rising from his spontaneous mood of loving service. Shrila Vyasadeva composed the Satvata-samhita,⁵ Shrimad-Bhagavatam, to explain the principles of bhakti-yoga in the sadhana and prema phases, along with the intermediate phase of bhava-bhakti, “devotional service with developing ecstasy.”

In the next Bhagavatam verse (1.7.7), bhakti means prema-bhakti because, as the verse states, only at that stage is one completely free from lamentation, delusion, and fear. The word utpadyate literally means “is generated,” but here it means “becomes manifest” because prema-bhakti cannot be generated, being the internal potency of the Supreme Lord; rather, it manifests within the heart of an advancing devotee by the blessings of the Lord and His pure devotee.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami goes on to explain that although there are various purusha incarnations of the Supreme Lord who create, maintain, and destroy this world, the term purusham purnam in Bhagavatam 1.7.4 indicates the original Personality of Godhead, Shri Krishna. Every word in a language has its own energy,^[DDB106] by which it conveys its meaning. Words can take on varied meanings depending on whether they exhibit their primary or their secondary energies. Each word has one primary meaning and may have several secondary meanings. When a word is not restricted by its context, one should accept its primary meaning. With the term purna-purusha in Bhagavatam 1.7.4, the unrestricted meaning (mukhya-vritti) of the word purna (literally “complete” or “perfect”) indicates Lord Shri Krishna, who is free of all limitations. Lord Vishnu’s purusha incarnations are also supreme and perfect, but They appear limited in some ways, and these limitations distinguish them from the purna-purusha. This distinction is implied in the Bhagavatam statement ete camsha-kalah pumsah krishnas tu bhagavan svayam: “All of the above-mentioned incarnations [listed in the preceding verses] are either plenary portions or portions of the plenary portions of the Lord, but Lord Shri Krishna is the original Personality of Godhead” (Bhag. 1.3.28). In the Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (2.1.43) Shrila Rupa Gosvami explains how Krishna has four qualities that none of His expansions possess, namely His wonderful pastimes, His extraordinary associates, His enchanting flute-playing, and His unsurpassed beauty. This explanation of the word purna is further supported by the use of the phrase krishne parama-purushe in Bhagavatam 1.7.7. Here parama-purushe is in apposition to the name Krishna, clearly indicating equivalence. Commenting on the use of a virtually identical term—purusham param—in the Second Canto of the Bhagavatam (2.3.10), Shridhara Svami says that it refers to the purna-purusha, or Complete Person.

Etymologically, purusha means “one who lies down in the city,” the city here being a metaphor for the body. Thus the word purusha indicates the Supersoul within each person’s body. The Supersoul is the controller of the material energy, but He is never influenced by it. Lord Shri Krishna, on the other hand, is never [DDB107]directly involved with the material nature at all, though He controls it through His purusha expansions.

Shridhara Svami uses the word nirupadhi (“free from all limiting adjuncts”) in reference to Krishna, who is not the mere purusha but the purna-purusha. Unlike the Supersoul, [DDB108]who is seemingly limited by the upadhi of involvement with the material energy, Krishna is free from all upadhis. This term, upadhi, is difficult to grasp and therefore difficult to render into English. Sometimes it is translated as “conditioning,” “limitation,” “false designation,” or “modifier.” In its strict philosophical usage it means “limiting adjunct,” because an upadhi’s effect is to apparently modify the natural state of an object by its proximity or association, though in fact it has no integral or natural relationship with the object.

For example, a naturally colorless crystal will appear reddish when held before a red flower. The reddish tinge is not part of the crystal’s nature; rather, because the crystal is near the red flower, the flower “conditions” the crystal to appear reddish. In this way the flower’s redness is an upadhi, or limiting adjunct, superimposed on the crystal. Similarly, the material body is an upadhi superimposed on the jiva soul. The soul is like a crystal in that he is easily influenced, or “colored,” by his association. Thus the soul’s proximity to the material body causes the soul to become mired in material existence and conditioned by the modes of nature. In reality both the soul and Supersoul are nirupadhi, without any limiting adjuncts, just like the Personality of Godhead.

One might conclude that this nirupadhi condition of the soul implies his absolute identity with the impersonal Supreme. This conclusion is negated by the word yajeta (“should worship”) in the statement yajeta purusham param, “One should worship the Supreme Person” (Bhag. 2.3.10). The root yaj means “to worship a Deity.” It would be absurd to advise someone to worship a Deity who is an impersonal entity devoid of attributes. Therefore the meaning of purna-purusha is clear without our resorting to the impersonal conception of the Supreme to try to explain it.

When Shridhara Svami says that the Supersoul, the purusha, has material nature as His upadhi, one should not take this statement to mean that material nature conditions the [DDB109]Supersoul as it does the jiva. The intended meaning is that He controls material nature without coming into contact with it or being influenced by it, but that His very involvement with material nature seems to be an upadhi[DDB110]. The Supersoul is always transcendental to material nature, even while residing within it, just as a head of state always remains a free man, even when he visits the state prison.

In his comment on Bhagavatam 2.3.10, Shridhara Svami interprets the word purusha to mean the Supreme Personality of Godhead, not the Supersoul, because that Supreme Person is worshiped by advanced souls desiring liberation, souls who are becoming fit to enter the spiritual planets, beyond the jurisdiction of even the Supersoul.

The word adhokshaja in Bhagavatam 1.7.6 also refers to Lord Shri Krishna. Etymologically this word means “one who is beyond sense perception,” but it is also a name Lord Krishna received after killing the demoness Putana. The Hari-vamsha Purana (Vishnu-parva 101.30–32) confirms this:

adho 'nena shayanena shakaöntara-carina rakshasi nihata raudra shakuni-vesha-dharini

putana-nama ghora sa maha-kaya maha-bala vishadigdham stanam raudram prayacchanti janardane

dadrishur niham tatra rakshasim vana-gocarah punar jato 'yam ity ahur uktas tasmad adhokshajah

"When baby Krishna was sleeping in a cradle under the axle of a cart, a demoness came as the flying witch called Putana to kill Him. She gave her poisoned breasts to baby Krishna, but Krishna killed her. The residents of Vraja saw Putana, who was gigantic, powerful, and terrible to look at, lying dead in the forest. But Lord Krishna was safe, and the people therefore called Him Adhokshaja, 'He who has taken another birth under a cart's axle.'"

The verses describing Veda-vyasa's trance (Bhag. 1.7.4–7) briefly present the quintessence of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, and with it the main elements of Gaudiya Vaishnava philosophy. Therefore Shrila Jiva Gosvami says more about these verses in the next Text.

Gopiparanadhana: If we take the alternative reading of purvam [instead of purnam in Bhag. 2.3.10], still the same Supreme Lord is being referred to, as the specific usage of shruti scripture shows in the passage "'I alone was present in the beginning (purvam).'^{1/4} This is why the purusha is called purusha." When it is said that Shri Veda-vyasa saw that Lord, it is automatically understood that he saw Him along with His internal energy. When we say that someone saw the moon, we understand that the person saw the moon along with its effulgence.

BBT: Even if we consider the alternative reading of purvam instead of purnam in the verse quoted above [Bhagavatam 1.7.4], still the reference here will be to the Personality of Godhead. This is shown by the statements of Vedic shruti: "[The Lord said,] I existed here prior (purvam) to everything else" and "That [existence prior to everything else] is the essential characteristic of the Lord (purusha)."

When it is said that Shri Vyasa saw the Lord, we should automatically understand that in addition Vyasa saw His svarupa-shakti, or internal potency, just as when it is said that a person sees a full moon, the implication is that he also sees its effulgence.

Gopiparanadhana: Therefore it is said, "You are the original Personality of Godhead, who expand Yourself all over the creations and are transcendental to the material energy. You have cast away the effects of the material energy by dint of Your spiritual potency. You are always situated in eternal bliss and transcendental knowledge" [Bhag. 1.7.23]. And thus the words "along with His external energy, which was under His full control" (mayam ca tad-apashrayam) imply that Maya is under His shelter in an inferior role. She is not His internal energy, since she runs away from Him and keeps at a distance; this is stated later in the Bhagavatam [2.7.47] "Maya, feeling ashamed, flees the Lord's direct presence."

BBT: Thus it is said:

"You are the original Personality of Godhead, who expand Yourself all over the creations and are transcendental to the material energy. You have cast away the effects of the material energy by dint of Your spiritual potency. You are always situated in eternal bliss and transcendental knowledge" [Bhag. 1.7.23].

Therefore we understand the phrase mayam ca tad-apashrayam [in Bhagavatam 1.7.4] to mean that Maya takes shelter of Him in an inferior position, hiding from His sight; thus she does not constitute His svarupa, or essential nature. As it is said later on, "Maya, feeling ashamed, runs away from the Lord's direct presence" [Bhag. 2.7.47].

Gopiparanadhana: We will describe this internal energy of the Lord's later, in our discussion of the texts "The material miseries of the living entity, which are superfluous to him, can be directly mitigated by the linking process of devotional service" [Bhag. 1.7.6] and "All different varieties of atmaramas" [Bhag. 1.7.10]. In the first of these texts, the influence of devotional service is understood to be a function of the Lord's internal energy by the fact of its overcoming the power of illusion. In the second, the qualities of the Lord prove themselves the highest functions of His internal energy by their superiority to even the bliss of Brahman. The reason why the Purusha and Brahman are not separately mentioned [in the description of Shrila Vyasadeva's trance] is that they are both implicitly included within the Personality of Godhead--the Purusha, as the predominator of Maya, is a partial appearance of the Supreme Lord, while Brahman is the manifestation of His formless, impersonal aspect. This will be fully elucidated in the second and third Sandarbhas. So thus we have again ascertained, as before [Text 29.3], the sambandhi-tattva.

BBT: We shall explain the Lord's svarupa-shakti when we discuss the two verses beginning anarthopashamam sakshad bhakti-yogam adhokshaje and atmaramash ca [Bhagavatam 1.7.6 and 10, respectively]. From the statement in the first of these two verses that devotional service can subdue the material energy, Maya, we can infer that the power of devotional service is a function of the Lord's internal energy. The second verse implies that the qualities of Lord Hari constitute the svarupa-shakti's highest function, superior even to the bliss of Brahman.

These verses do not separately mention either Paramatma, the Supreme Lord's plenary portion who controls Maya, or Brahman, the Supreme Lord's nondifferentiated aspect. The reason for this omission is that one is meant to infer that both the Paramatma and Brahman are included within the Personality of Godhead. Thus here, as before, the sambandhi-tattva, the essential topic of discussion in Shrimad-Bhagavatam, has been defined.

Purport by Gopiparanadhana prabhu

Shrila Jiva Gosvami was aware that some manuscripts of Shrimad-Bhagavatam read yajeta purusham purvam instead of yajeta purusham param in Text 2.3.10. This variant also refers to the same Personality of Godhead. The Complete Person (purusham purnam), Supreme Person (purusham param) and Primeval Person (purusham purvam) are one and the same. To substantiate this, Shri Jiva Gosvami presents two related statements of shruti. In the first, the Personality of Godhead declares that previous to the creation of this universe, He alone was present. In the second, a comment is drawn from this, that the Lord's existence prior to everything else is what distinguishes Him as the Supreme Purusha. His being "alone" does not contradict the eternal existence of His spiritual kingdom, inhabited by His countless associates and servants; it simply denies the existence of anything material in the dormant period between creations.

According to Shridhara Svami's explanations cited in Text 30.3, the title Purusha can refer to the Personality of Godhead in more than one way. In one sense the Purusha is the Godhead in His original fullness, as manifest in the spiritual world: govindam adi-purusham tam aham bhajami ("I worship Govinda [Krishna], the original Purusha."). In addition, the Purusha is also Lord Govinda's specific expansion as the creator of this world. There are three Purusha expansions of the Supreme Lord--Karanodakashayi Vishnu, Garbhodakashayi Vishnu and Kshirodakashayi Vishnu--the creators who lie in the Causal Ocean, the Fetal Ocean of the universal egg and the Milk Ocean. The first Purusha, lying on the serpent bed of Ananta Shesha within the boundary region between the spiritual and material realms, initiates the generation of the material world merely by glancing once at Maya, His personal external energy. From His body emanate the egg-like shells of numerous universes; He then expands once into each of these universes to lie down again as the second Purusha. When all forms of life are then sent forth into creation, the Lord becomes the third Purusha, entering along with each living soul into their material bodies. In this way, the Supreme Person as the Purusha expands Himself to become the Paramatma; Garbhodakashayi Vishnu is the Supersoul of the total universe (samashöi-paramatma) and Kshirodakashayi Vishnu is the Paramatma accompanying each individual soul (vyashöi-paramatma).

Shrila Radha-mohana Gosvami points out that lexicographers have explained the derivation of the word purusha in similar terms. One etymology of purusha is pura asit ("He existed previously.") and another is puri sharire shete ("He sits down in the pur, the material body."). Narada Muni also speaks like this in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.14.37):

purany anena shrishöani/ nri-tiryag-rishi-devatah
shete jivena rupena/ pureshu purusho hy asau

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead has created many residential places [pura] like the bodies of human beings, animals, birds, saints and demigods. In all of these innumerable bodily forms, the Lord resides [shete] with the living beings as Paramatma. Thus He is known as the Purusha avatara."

The impersonal conception of the Supreme is only a partial realization by those who cannot understand Him as a person, a possessor of creative energies. Two primary energies of the Supreme are discussed in this anuccheda, His internal svarupa-shakti and His external Maya. The Lord's svarupa-shakti is in essence His female counterpart, the source of His personal pleasure. She provides Him the satisfaction of loving reciprocations with Herself in Her original form of Shrimati Radharani, in Her unlimited spiritual expansions which join each of the expanded forms of Godhead, and in the devotional service of liberated jivas. When Maha-Vishnu lies down to create the material world in His mystic sleep (yoga-nidra), He is actually enjoying within Himself with His internal pleasure potency: atmana ramaya reme tyakta-kalam sishrikshaya (Brahma-samhita 5.7, "As He intends to send forth His separated energy, He continues enjoying with His internal consort.").

Maya is also a personal energy of the Lord, an expansion of Shrimati Radharani, but her function is inferior.

She creates and rules the world of illusion, where the Personality of Godhead appears to be absent. Because of her association with the contamination of rebellious souls, the Lord makes no contact with her after His initial glance, and she keeps herself out of His sight. Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana offers an analogy to the difference between the internal and external energies of the Supreme: one is like an emperor's favorite queen while the other is like a menial maidservant who always remains outside his quarters.

Some editions of Shrimad Bhagavatam have the word purvam ("existing before") in place of purnam in text 1.7.4. This difference does not change the import of the verse, however. The word purusha can also mean "He who existed prior to the creation": pura asit iti purushah. This phrase refers to the Supreme Lord as the source of everything. And this Supreme Lord is Krishna, as He confirms in the Bhagavad-gita (10.8): aham sarvasya prabhava. "I am the source of everything." Being the source of everything is the essential characteristic of the purusha. Since existing prior to everything else is the idea conveyed by the adjective purvam, the phrase purusham purvam is equivalent to purusham purnam insofar as indicating the Supreme Lord, Krishna.

Shri Vyasa saw the Lord's potencies along with the Lord Himself, just as one always sees the effulgent moonlight along with the full moon. The energies of the Lord are always present along with Him, inasmuch as an object's attributes are always present along with the object. In the Vishnu Purana (6.5.79) the attributes of Bhagavan, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, are listed:

*jnana-shakti-balaishvarya-virya-tejamsy asheshatah
bhagavac-chabda-vacyani vina heyair gunadibhih*

"The word bhagavan indicates knowledge, sensory power, strength, wealth, prowess, and valor—all without limit, and all completely devoid of material qualities and their effects." The Supreme Person has multifarious potencies, of which three are primary. As the Vishnu Purana (1.12.69) states, hladini sandhini samvit tvay eka sarva-samshraye: "The hladini, sandhini, and samvit potencies exist only in You [the Supreme Lord], who are the shelter of everything." Hladini is the Lord's pleasure potency, sandhini His supporting potency, and samvit His cognition potency. These three potencies constitute the Lord's svarupa, or His[DDB111] essential, internal nature. Shrila Jiva Gosvami will give a detailed explanation of these potencies in the Bhagavat-sandarbha.

In the spiritual sky these potencies are inherent in the Lord's own person, but they are also present in the individual personal forms of His associates. In Text 47 Shrila Jiva Gosvami will identify the form of the Supreme Lord [DDB112]seen by Shrila Vyasadeva as Krishna in Vrindavana, where the Lord is always present with His most intimate devotees. Shrimati Radharani is Lord Krishna's personified pleasure potency, and with Her the Lord performs His most intimate pastimes. Therefore it should be understood that in his trance Shrila Vyasa also saw Shrimati Radhika along with Her associates, for the Lord is never separated from His internal potencies.

Besides the Lord's three internal potencies, Vyasa saw His external potency (Maya) and His marginal potency (the jivas). Maya is not part of the Lord's svarupa. She is personally present in His entourage, but she chooses to remain out of His sight. Therefore she can never influence the Lord or His internal potencies. Generally a female influences a male by appearing before him, but Mayadevi, the female, external energy of the Supreme, cannot influence the Lord. Therefore it is said that she remains out of His view. As it is said (Bhag. 2.7.47), maya paraity abhimukhe ca vilajjamana: "Mayadevi keeps away from the Lord, feeling ashamed to come before [DDB113]Him." Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana compares Maya to a maidservant who discharges her duties outside the king's inner quarters. She does not have the same privileges as his queens, who are like the Supreme Lord's internal potencies in that they can directly associate with their master at all times.

Maya, the Lord's external energy, is inferior to both His svarupa-shakti and His marginal energy, the jivas. Still, she can subdue the jivas. This vulnerability of the jivas to illusion is stated in Bhagavatam 1.7.5:

yaya sammohito jiva atmanam tri-gunatmakam
paro 'pi manute 'nartham tat-kritam cabhipadyate

"Bewildered by that external energy, the living entity, although transcendental to the three modes of material nature, thinks of himself as a material product and thus undergoes the reactions of material miseries."

Although both the individual soul and the Supersoul are conscious and reside in the same material body, only the jiva is bewildered by Maya and suffers the material miseries. Maya cannot affect the Lord because He is her master; by His inconceivable power He remains forever beyond her influence.

In the Bhagavad-gita (7.5) Lord Krishna tells Arjuna that His marginal energy, the jiva, is superior to His separated, material energy, Maya. One may then ask, How does the superior jiva come under the control of the inferior nature, Maya? The answer is twofold: because the jiva is infinitesimal, and also because Maya can transcend logic in her actions. In the Third Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.7.9), Maitreya Muni responds to a question from Vidura as follows:

seyam bhagavato maya yan nayena virudhyate
ishvarasya vimuktasya karpanyam uta bandhanam

"The illusory energy of the Supreme Lord acts contrary to logic [i.e., her behavior cannot be understood simply through logic]; otherwise, how is it possible that the living entity, who is conscious and liberated, becomes bound and miserable?" Commenting on this verse, Shrila Vishvanatha Cakravarti Thakura gives an analogy: Although the sun is powerfully effulgent, still the cloud, generated from the sun's potency, can cover [DDB114]our vision of it. Similarly, although the jiva is by nature superior to Maya, she still has the power to cover him.

Another important point made in this section is that the description of Vyasa's trance does not explicitly mention either the Supersoul or the impersonal Brahman effulgence. The Supersoul (Paramatma) is the expansion of the Lord who presides over the affairs of the material energy. In the Bhagavad-gita (9.10) Lord Krishna says, mayadhyakshena prakritih suyate sa-caracaram: "This material nature is working under My direction, producing all moving and nonmoving beings." Here "My" means "My Paramatma expansion's," since it is through His Paramatma feature that Lord Krishna regulates the workings of the material world. Shrila Jiva Gosvami points out that since the Paramatma expands from Krishna and is entirely dependent on Him, the description of Vyasadeva's trance need not mention the Paramatma separately. The same holds true for Brahman, which is nothing but the effulgence emanating from the Lord's transcendental body. Like the Paramatma, Brahman has no existence independent of the Lord. Krishna confirms this in the Bhagavad-gita (14.27): brahmano hi pratishöham. "I am the basis of the impersonal Brahman." According to the Nirukti dictionary, pratishöhiyate asminn iti pratishöha: "Pratishöha means 'shelter' or 'basis.'" Just as the sun globe is the basis of the sunshine, so Krishna is the basis of the Brahman effulgence.

From this analysis of Veda-vyasa's trance, it is clear that the central subject of Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the Personality of Godhead, Lord Shri Krishna, and that the process for attaining Him is bhakti-yoga. Brahman and Paramatma, being dependent manifestations of the Lord, cannot be separated from Him, but these two features are not the objects of Vyasadeva's trance and so cannot be the central subjects of His greatest work, Shrimad-Bhagavatam. We should nonetheless note that one who realizes Bhagavan, Lord Krishna, automatically realizes Brahman and Paramatma, in the same way that one who acquires a million dollars automatically possesses all smaller [DDB115]sums.

In the next section Shrila Jiva Gosvami discusses how the living entity comes to be bound up by Maya.

The process (abhidheya) and the goal (prayojana), as we have defined them, are based on the essential difference between the Lord and the living entity. That Shri Vyasa saw this distinction is shown by the verse beginning yaya [Bhag. 1.7.5]. Although the living entity is by nature pure spirit, transcendental to the three inert material modes, when deluded by Maya he considers himself a product of those modes, the inert material body. This delusion causes the living entity to suffer unwanted consequences, namely the miseries of repeated birth and death.

Furthermore, not only does the living being consist of pure spiritual consciousness, but he also possesses consciousness as a component of his essential nature, just as light, which consists of nothing but illumination, also possesses the capacity to illumine itself and other things. That the living entity possesses consciousness is implied [in Bhagavatam 1.7.5] by the words yaya sammohitah ("deluded by that [Maya]") and manute ("he considers") and confirmed by the following words [in Bhagavad-gita 5.15]:

"Living beings are bewildered because their consciousness is covered by ignorance."

Thus is refuted the contrary opinion that the jiva exists only as an upadhi of Brahman and that liberation is simply the elimination of this upadhi.

Here [in Bhag. 1.7.5] the phrase yaya sammohito shows that Maya alone is responsible for deluding the living being; the Lord remains uninvolved.

Later Shrimad-Bhagavatam [2.5.13] states:

“The illusory energy of the Lord cannot stand in front of Him, being ashamed of her position, but those who are bewildered by her always talk nonsense, being absorbed in thoughts of ‘I’ and ‘mine.’”

Here we can infer from the phrase “being ashamed” (vilajjamanaya) that although Maya knows her work of bewildering the living beings does not please the Supreme Lord, still she cannot tolerate that they have turned their backs on Him because of their ignorance of Him, which is beginningless. Shrimad-Bhagavatam [11.2.37] describes the result of the jivas’ turning from the Lord: “When the living beings are attracted to something other than the Lord, they become fearful.” Therefore Maya covers their real nature and entices them to identify with matter.

COMMENTARY

The Living Entity Is Distinct from the Lord

In this Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami shows how service to the Lord is the process of self-realization (abhidheya) and how eternal love of God is the goal (prayojana). Since love of God is eternal, the Supreme Lord and the living entities must be eternally distinct, because wherever there is service or love, the server and the served or the lover and the beloved must be separate individuals.

According to the Mayavada impersonalists this distinction of individual selves exists only in the conditioned (vyavaharika) stage. In the liberated (paramarthika) stage all such distinctions dissolve because on that level Brahman alone exists. Impersonalists insist that since Brahman and the living being are absolutely one and the same, there can be no distinction of identities in the reality of Brahman. The Mayavadis go on to say that when Brahman contacts Maya, Maya acts as its upadhi and Brahman is then known as ishvara (God) and the jivas. Apart from these appearances arising from Brahman’s proximity to Maya, neither ishvara nor the jivas exist. Concerning the jivas, featureless Brahman enters into delusion and displays the jivas’[DDB117] masquerade forms and personalities birth after birth—and all for no reason other than Brahman’s adulteration by Maya. And this same deluded Brahman will be redeemed when he simply gives up his false designations on the strength of acquired knowledge of Brahman.

All this goes counter to what Vyasadeva actually saw in His trance. He saw that the jivas are intrinsically eternal spiritual entities, separate individuals in their own right. He further saw that Maya overcomes only the jivas, not Brahman (ishvara, the Personality of Godhead); indeed, He saw that Maya, far from overcoming the Supreme Lord, could not even bare to face Him. He also saw that God Himself is not directly involved with deluding the jivas. In sum, Vyasadeva realized that the Lord,[DDB118] the jivas, and Maya are all eternal, and that the Lord supports the other two.

In Bhagavatam 1.7.5 the words sammohitah (“becoming deluded”) and manute (“he then thinks”) are applied to the jiva, indicating that delusion and its effects, ignorance and misery, are not part of his original nature. These two words also indicate that the jiva is both consciousness and the possessor thereof.[DDB119] As a light bulb simultaneously illuminates itself and the objects around it, so the jiva is simultaneously conscious of himself and objects outside himself. In other words, cognition is an intrinsic aspect of his nature, not a temporarily acquired capacity, which is what the Mayavada doctrine implies by positing that the jiva’s attributes are only apparently real (as is the jiva himself) and that to gain salvation he has to acquire knowledge of his oneness with Brahman.

The theistic understanding of the jivas’ situation in this world, gleaned from analyzing Shrila Vyasadeva’s trance, is that Maya cannot tolerate the jivas’ refusal to serve her Lord, and so she covers the knowledge of such rebellious jivas and imprisons them in material bodies. Maya’s principal functions are to punish and to rectify the jivas who have turned away from the Personality of Godhead. Her motive is not to inflict suffering but to encourage the fallen jivas to accept rectification by inquiring into transcendental knowledge. Lord Krishna therefore says in the Bhagavad-gita (4.37) that transcendental knowledge burns all the bonds of karma in the same way that fire burns fuel, because once a person attains transcendental knowledge, Maya need no longer punish him.

Sometimes, from our mundane point of view there appears to be a contradiction between the writings of the great acaryas. An example of this arises from Shrila Jiva Gosvami's use in this Text of the term anadi ("beginningless") to describe Maya's bewilderment of the jivas. From the way Jiva Gosvami uses this word elsewhere in the Sandarbhas, it appears that he intends for his readers to understand the word literally—that Maya's conditioning of each jiva has no beginning but ends when a jiva becomes Krishna conscious. Shrila Prabhupada, however, took the word anadi to mean "from time immemorial" in similar scriptural contexts, indicating that he understood the jiva's conditioning to have an untraceable beginning. He expresses his understanding of this issue in his translation of and commentary on a verse in the Chaitanya-caritamrita that Lord Chaitanya spoke to Sanatana Gosvami (Cc. Madhya 20.117):

krishna bhuli' sei jiva anadi-bahirmukha
ataeva maya tare deya samsara-duhkha

"Forgetting Krishna, the living entity has been attracted by the external feature from time immemorial. Therefore the illusory energy [Maya] gives him all kinds of misery in his material existence." Purport: "When the living entity [the jiva] forgets his constitutional position as an eternal servant of Krishna, he is immediately entrapped by the illusory, external energy. The living entity is originally part and parcel of Krishna and is therefore the superior energy of Krishna. . . . [However,] he is sometimes attracted by the external, illusory energy, . . . and this is the beginning of his material life. When he enters the material energy he is subjected to the threefold time measurement—past, present, and future. Past, present, and future belong only to the material world; they do not exist in the spiritual world. The living entity is eternal, and he existed before the creation of this material world. Unfortunately he has forgotten his relationship with Krishna. The living entity's forgetfulness is described herein as anadi, which indicates that it has existed since time immemorial. One should understand that due to his desire to enjoy himself in competition with Krishna, the living entity comes into material existence."

A[DDB120] deluded jiva retains his capacity to know the Supreme Lord. His condition is somewhat like that of a covered light bulb: the bulb's light may not be visible beyond the covering, but it still shines within. Similarly, although the conditioned jiva's ability to know the Lord is covered, it still exists. In this conditioned state the jiva misuses his mind and senses and misdirects his natural propensity to serve. Thus he suffers. But when he uses his mind and senses properly by practicing sadhana-bhakti, his true nature begins to emerge, and if he continues on the path of bhakti he attains his original identity and is established in the unending bliss of prema-bhakti. In the Paramatma-sandarbha, Shrila Jiva Gosvami discusses in more detail this and other aspects of the jiva's nature.

One may ask why the all-powerful Lord does not stop Maya from bewildering the jiva. Shrila Jiva Gosvami answers this question in the next Text.

For His part, the Supreme Lord cannot withdraw His favor from Maya, whom He has delegated as the controller of the material creation and who has always been His devotee. Still, He wants the jivas to turn favorably toward Him, even if they must do so out of fear of Maya, and therefore He instructs them [in Bhagavad-gita 7.14]:

“This divine energy of Mine, consisting of the three modes of material nature, is difficult to overcome. [DDB121]Only those who have surrendered unto Me can easily cross beyond it.[DDB122]”

And [in Bhagavatam 3.25.25]:

“In the association of pure devotees, discussion of the pastimes and activities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is very pleasing and satisfying to the ear and the heart. By cultivating such knowledge a person gradually becomes advanced on the path of liberation, and thereafter he is freed, and his attraction becomes fixed. Then real devotion and devotional service begin.”

In His pastime form of Shri Vyasa[DDB123], the Lord has very explicitly instructed the living beings in this way [namely, that they should surrender to Him so they can transcend Maya]. This we shall see shortly, in our discussion of the verse beginning anarthopashamam sakshad [Bhag. 1.7.6]. Thus both the Lord and Maya have acted quite properly.

But, one may object, if Maya is only an energy and an energy is the capacity to do some work and is moreover just a quality possessed by some entity, how then can Maya feel ashamed and have other, similar characteristics?

The answer is that although Maya is in fact an energy, we do hear from the Vedic scriptures about female deities who preside over energies residing in the Supreme Lord. We see an example of this in the dialogue between Lord Indra and Maya in the Kena Upanishad. In any case, we shall now let this matter stand and return to the main topic of our discussion.

COMMENTARY

Maya Is a Devotee of the Lord

As Shrila Jiva Gosvami explained in the previous Text, the Supreme Lord is not pleased that Maya has to delude the jivas; therefore Maya feels too embarrassed to face the Lord. One may ask, “If the Lord is all-powerful, why does He not intervene?” Our answer is that the Lord has appointed Maya the presiding deity of the material creation and she has been performing this service faithfully since time immemorial. Because she is His devotee, He kindly does not interfere with her service.

But this reply may lead to a further doubt: Besides being all-powerful, the Supreme Lord is said to be unlimitedly merciful, always thinking of everyone's welfare. Why then does He fail to stop Maya from harassing the jivas? To this Jiva Gosvami replies that even though the Lord does not stop Maya, He teaches the jivas how to get free from her clutches by surrendering to Him. Maya will never again harass any jiva who has taken full shelter of the Supreme Lord.

Still a puzzle remains: Why does the Lord allow Maya to create obstacles for the jiva even when he wants to surrender to Him? Why does He allow her to repeatedly present various allurements that prevent the jiva from discriminating between proper and improper action and in this way[DDB124] baffle his attempts at surrendering?

Shrila Jiva Gosvami answers this question by citing the verse beginning satam prasangan mama virya-samvido, which Lord Kapila speaks in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.25.25). This verse explains that devotees of the Lord associate favorably with one another and always relish talking about the Lord's pastimes, which are a tonic for the hearts and ears of the sick and weak jivas. This tonic immunizes them against the disease of material illusion and gradually brings them back to the healthy condition of life, namely the Supreme Lord's devotional service. The Lord's only activity in the spiritual world is enjoying loving exchanges with His devotees, and His enjoyment would be disturbed by the intrusion of unhealthy jivas—that is, souls who have not become completely purified of material desire and reawakened their pure love for the Lord.[DDB125] Maya therefore employs various means to make sure no unfit souls bother the Lord. Because this is her assigned service to Him, He does not interfere.

The Personality of Godhead has not, however, employed Maya just to inflict miseries on the jivas. She does that, but as mentioned earlier, her real purpose is to chasten the jivas, to encourage them to turn to the Lord. The punishment she metes out serves three purposes: to give the living entities the reactions for their sinful deeds, to deter them from further transgressions, and to impel them to search for a way out of this world of suffering. Since this punishment ultimately benefits the jivas by uniting them with the Personality of Godhead, He generally does not choose to come between the jiva and Maya. The governor of a state will usually not interfere when the court system sends a criminal to prison. On the contrary, he may commend the policemen who captured the wrong-doer. People do not think the governor is cruel to employ such able policemen, and in the end, when the criminal is rehabilitated and freed on parole, the former lawbreaker himself may thank the governor.

So God's motive for creating the prison house of this material world is actually to induce the rebellious jivas to surrender to Him and take up loving service to Him. Only in this way can they gain liberation from Maya's clutches. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.87.2) Shri Shukadeva Gosvami confirms that this is the purpose of the creation:

matrartham ca bhavartham ca atmane 'kalpanaya ca

One may still object that even if the Supreme Lord is not actively cruel, He is indifferent to the plight of the jivas. This is another mistaken notion. Far from being indifferent to the jivas' suffering, the Lord frequently appears in this world to enlighten the fallen populace on the pretext of educating such intimate associates of His as Arjuna and Uddhava. Sometimes He incarnates as Veda-vyasa or as another instructor to preach the message of bhakti and uplift the wretched jivas. All this He does out of His causeless mercy upon the fallen jivas[DDB126], who, as we have learned from the pramana portion of Shri Tattva-sandarbha, can never understand anything beyond the material world by their own endeavors.

So it is out of His causeless mercy that the Supreme Lord gives the entrapped jivas access to spiritual knowledge through the Vedas. Later on, as the Kali-yuga begins and the jivas all but lose their ability to comprehend spiritual knowledge, He further helps them by explaining the same message in the Itihasas and Puranas. Finally, He reveals the essence of all knowledge in the form of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. So it can hardly be said that the Lord is indifferent to the plight of the jivas.

Once a jiva takes advantage of the Lord's arrangement for spiritual education and comes to the point of transcendental realization, he need not fear any punishment for his previous misdeeds, no matter how dreadful they were. As the Lord says in the Bhagavad-gita (4.37):

yathaidhamsi samiddho 'gnir bhasma-sat kurute 'rjuna
jnanagnih sarva-karmani bhasma-sat kurute tatha

"As a blazing fire turns firewood to ashes, O Arjuna, so does the fire of knowledge burn to ashes all reactions to material activities." Thus the Lord confirms that the punishment of the jivas is meant not for inflicting suffering on them but for awakening them to the knowledge that will lead them to freedom from all suffering and to eternal life in the spiritual world.

Yet another doubt may be raised: If the punishment inflicted on the jivas is for their ultimate good, why are they also allowed to enjoy in this world? If they were simply thrown into an ocean of ceaseless misery, they would have no choice but to quickly take complete shelter of the Personality of Godhead.

We address this doubt with a twofold reply: First, we point out that ceaseless misery is not good for developing transcendental understanding because one's mind becomes too disturbed to contemplate scriptural truths. Second, ceaseless misery is not necessary because any jiva with even a little rudimentary transcendental knowledge will realize that there is no real happiness in this material world. In the Bhagavad-gita (8.15) Lord Krishna characterizes this world as temporary and devoid of happiness: anityam asukham lokam. The so-called happiness one experiences here is nothing but a temporary cessation or diminution of misery. It is like the pleasure felt by a man who is repeatedly dunked in water and then brought to the surface just before drowning. Upon gulping down the life-giving air he feels great relief and joy, but such happiness is really only the temporary absence of continual misery. Lord Krishna therefore advises us not to strive for the so-called happiness of this material world: sama-duhkha-sukham dhiram so 'mritatvaya kalpate. "[DDB127]One who remains equipoised in both misery and happiness is qualified for liberation" (Bg. 2.15). Only such a person can taste real happiness; others experience only the illusion of happiness.

In conclusion, therefore, the Lord has designed a two-part program for both chastening and rehabilitating the jivas: On the one hand[DDB128] Maya kicks them, and on the other[DDB129] the Lord instructs them through various incarnations, the Vedic scriptures, and His pure devotees. Thus Maya's actions and the Lord's perfectly complement one another.

Although Maya is the Lord's material energy, she also exists in her own personal form. All the energies of the Lord have their personal features. (Shrila Jiva Gosvami will discuss this point in more detail in Shri Bhagavat-sandarbha.) That Maya has a personal form is evident from a dialogue between Lord Indra and Mayadevi narrated in the third chapter of the Kena Upanishad: Once there was a war between the demigods and the demons. After a long struggle, the demigods prevailed by the Supreme Lord's mercy, but they mistakenly ascribed their victory to their own valor and became proud. To humble them, the Lord appeared before them in the guise of a yaksha. Unable to identify the yaksha, they appointed Agni, the fire-god, to find out who He was. When Agni asked the yaksha to identify Himself, He placed a straw in front of Agni and said, "Burn it." With all his power Agni could not burn the straw. Then Vayu, the air-god, was sent to identify the yaksha, but he could not blow the straw away. Next Lord Indra approached the yaksha, but the mysterious personality disappeared. Finally Mayadevi appeared to Indra in the form of Uma and told him that the yaksha was in fact the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Many similar accounts in the Vedas and Puranas show that Maya and other energies of the Lord have their own personal forms. Thus the description of how Vyasa saw Maya standing behind the Lord out of embarrassment is not figurative.

One more question might be asked: If Maya, the predominating deity of the material energy, can manage all her own affairs, what need is there for the Paramatma to control this world? Lord Krishna answers in the Bhagavad-gita (14.4):

sarva-yonishu kaunteya murtayah sambhavanti yah tasam brahma mahad yonir aham bija-pradah pita

"It should be understood that all species of life, O son of Kunti, are made possible by birth in this material nature, and that I am the seed-giving father." Just as a woman cannot conceive a child without the help of a potent man, Maya cannot manage the material world without the help of the Paramatma. Maya has her innate potencies for serving the Supreme Lord, but still she needs His help in carrying out her duties. For this reason Vyasa saw that she was dependent on the Lord, a fact Krishna confirms in the Bhagavad-gita (9.10) when He says that this material nature, which is one of His energies, is ultimately working under His direction.

The next Text further explains Shri Vyasa's trance.

tatra jivasya tadrisha-cid-rupatve 'pi parameshvarato vailakshanyam tad-apashrayam iti yaya sammohita iti ca darshayati.

Like the Lord, the jiva is purely spiritual, yet still he is different from the Lord. This truth is indicated by the words tad-apashrayam ("Maya is outside Him yet supported by Him," [in Bhagavatam. 1.7.4]) and yaya sammohito ("deluded by Maya," [in Bhagavatam. 1.7.5]).

COMMENTARY

The Jiva Is Conscious and Distinct from the Lord

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.7.4 the words used to describe Maya's relationship with the Lord are tad-apashrayam. This phrase indicates that in His trance Shrila Vyasadeva saw that the Supreme Personality of Godhead supports Maya and that she has no influence over Him. The prefix apa means "separate" and "inferior." Maya is separate from the Lord in the sense that she is not one of His internal energies. That she is ashamed to appear in front of the Lord indicates she is inferior to both Him and His internal potencies. For this reason she cannot influence Him, though she is dependent on Him. Therefore, as mentioned earlier, she has been compared to a maidservant who works outside a king's inner apartments.

While unable to influence the Lord or His internal potencies, Maya can influence the jiva, as the words yaya sammohitah indicate. Being part and parcel of God, the jiva is conscious by nature, yet he is not all-powerful like God, for his potencies are limited. Thus the Lord controls Maya, and she controls the limited jivas when they are not united with Him in bhakti-yoga. Just as sparks separated from a fire lose their brilliance but not their existence, so when the living beings are separated from the Lord they forget their nature and are absorbed in illusion. The Supreme Lord, however, is never affected by illusion. Thus the[DDB131] jivas are different from the Lord, though they are qualitatively equal with Him in some respects.

Commenting on Bhagavatam 1.7.4, Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana points out that besides seeing the Personality of Godhead, Maya, and the jiva, Shrila Vyasa also saw the time energy, as indicated by such verbs as apashyat ("He saw"), sammohitah ("he is bewildered"), and manute ("he considers"). How is this? Because all these verbs indicate action, which in turn implies the influence of time. As the Bhallaveya-shruti states, atha ha vava nityani purushah prakritir atma kalah: "The Lord, material nature, the living entity, and time are certainly all eternal." Time's eternality is also mentioned by Parashara Muni in the Vishnu Purana (1.2.26):

anadir bhagavan kalo nanto 'sya dvija vidyate
avyucchinastatas tv ete sarga-sthity-anta-samyamah

"O twice-born Maitreya, supremely powerful time has no beginning or end. Thus the cycle of creation, maintenance, and annihilation continues perpetually." And in the Bhagavad-gita (13.20) Lord Krishna says :

prakritim purusham caiva viddhy anadi ubhav api vikaramsh ca gunamsh caiva viddhi prakriti-sambhavan

"Material nature and the living entities should be understood to be beginningless. Their transformations and the modes of matter are products of material nature." In commenting on this verse in his Sarartha-varshini, Shrila Vishvanatha Cakravarti[DDB132] Thakura says, maya-jivayor api mac-chaktitvena anaditvat tayoh samshlesho 'py anadir iti bhavah: "[Lord Krishna says:] 'Since both Maya and the jiva are My energies, both exist since time immemorial. Therefore the jiva has been in contact with Maya since time immemorial.'" It follows from this that the jiva's karma has been acting since time immemorial as well.

Shrila Vyasadeva acknowledges that this is the nature of karma in Sutra 2.1.35 of the Vedanta: na karmavibhagad iti cen nanaditvat. "One might object that the law of karma cannot explain the inequality in the universe because to begin with everyone must be equal. But this objection is not valid, since the cycle of creation has no beginning. Inasmuch as creation has no beginning, karma also has no beginning."

Apart from karma, the other four entities Shrila Vyasa saw—the Personality of Godhead, the jiva, material nature, and time—are eternal, without beginning or end. Of these four, the Supreme Lord and the jiva are conscious spirit, but the Lord is infinite and the jiva is atomic in size. Time is not conscious, but it is free from the control of the material modes. It is the cause of the threefold division of past, present, and future. The material energy is inert and is composed of three modes—goodness, passion,[DDB133] and ignorance. Matter thus undergoes transformations in time and is the medium through which we perceive the three divisions of time. Although karma has been controlling every conditioned soul since time immemorial, karma can be brought to a close for jivas who perfect the practice of devotional service to Lord Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. All this Shrila Vyasadeva also saw. To enlighten the conditioned jivas about these all-important topics, He compiled the Satvata-samhita, Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

In the next eight Texts, Shrila Jiva Gosvami shows that Shri Vyasa's experience refutes the popular monistic philosophy of Shri Shankaracarya.

yarhy eva yad ekam cid-rupam brahma mayashrayata-balitam vidya-mayam tarhy eva tan maya-vishayatapannam avidya-paribhutam cety ayuktam iti jiveshvara-vibhago 'vagatah. tatash ca svarupasamarthya-vailakshanyena tad dvitayam mitho vilakshana-svarupam evety agatam.

If it is indeed true that the one undivided Brahman, whose very nature is pure spirit, is the foundation of material illusion and also embodies the liberating force of knowledge, then it is illogical to say that Brahman falls under Maya's influence and is overcome by ignorance. Thus we can understand that the jiva and the Supreme Lord are separate entities. Since both their identities and their capabilities are different, the jiva and the Lord are essentially distinct.

COMMENTARY

The Jiva Is Not the Supreme Brahman

Shrila Jiva Gosvami has carefully analyzed Shrila Vyasadeva's trance, and now, on the basis of that analysis, he presents arguments against the Mayavada theory of the absolute oneness of the Supreme Soul and the jiva souls. The ideas of the Mayavadis are completely antagonistic to devotional service and are therefore one of the greatest obstacles on the path of real spiritual progress. Shrila Raghunatha dasa Gosvami compared impersonalism to a tigress who devours one's spiritual life. He said, kathah mukti-vyaghrya na shrinu kila sarvatma-gilanih: "My dear mind, never listen to talk about liberation, which is like a tigress who swallows everything, including the self" (Manah-shiksha 4).

Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu also gave a stern warning about [DDB134]Mayavada philosophy to those who aspire to understand the Personality of Godhead in truth. He said, mayavadi-bhashya shunile haya sarva-nasha: "Hearing Mayavada philosophy completely destroys one's spiritual life" (Cc. Madhya 6.153). Ultimately, He said, because the Mayavadis describe Absolute Reality as featureless they are the greatest offenders against Shri Krishna, the Supreme Lord.

Shri Madhvacarya presented forceful refutations of the Mayavada theory in a similar vein. One of his most impressive efforts in this line was his Mayava[DDB135]da-khandanam. In this and other works he exposed the way Mayavadis misuse grammatical analysis and employ faulty logic, which they resort to in their vain attempt to prove the absolute nondifference between Brahman and the jiva.

In the same mood, Shrila Jiva Gosvami will refute the Mayavada theory in the next few Texts and conclude by exhorting his readers to further investigate the Mayavadis' "unintelligible concoctions." In other words, Jiva Gosvami expects the followers of Shri Gauranga Mahaprabhu to consider it their duty to defeat the impersonalists' word jugglery in as many ways as possible. When the Mayavadis are so thoroughly exposed that not one of the pillars supporting their errant doctrine is left standing, then only fools will fall prey to their misleading ideas.

The impersonalists headed by Shri Shankaracarya base their tenets on the Vedanta-sutra and the eleven principal Upanishads, and they also try to support their arguments with statements from the Bhagavad-gita. Jiva Gosvami contends, however, that their interpretations contradict what Shrila Vyasadeva experienced in trance, which is narrated in the Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the essence of the Upanishads, the Vedanta-sutra, and the Puranas.

Mayavadis claim that ultimate reality is nondual, pure consciousness, without form or attributes. They try to define ultimate reality only in negative terms, and so they repeat the aphorism *neti neti*⁶, "Not this, not that." To support their arguments they cite such Vedic declarations as sarvam khalv idam brahma ("Indeed, all this is Brahman"; Chandogya Up. 3.14.1), ekam evadvitiam ("Brahman is one without a second"[DDB136]; Chandogya Up. 6.2.1), vijnanam anandam brahma ("Brahman is consciousness and bliss"; Brihad-aranyaka Up. 3.9.28), and neha nanasti kincana ("Ultimately no variety exists in this world"; Brihad-aranyaka Up. 4.4.19).

But then to explain the obvious variety in this world, the Mayavadis are forced to introduce the idea of some beginningless entity called Maya, or illusion. The Mayavadis say that this Maya cannot be defined as either existing or not existing. They further say that Maya has two aspects—vidya (knowledge) and avidya (ignorance). Somehow or other some part of Brahman comes in contact with Maya, and the result is illusion for that portion of Brahman. Brahman contacts both vidya and avidya. When the totality of Brahman contacts vidya, then the personal Godhead, known as the[DDB137] ishvara, comes into being. And when small parts of Brahman contact avidya, they become the jivas.

According to the Mayavada doctrine, the difference between the[DDB138] ishvara and the[DDB139] jiva is not intrinsic or eternal; it is due only to upadhis, or the apparent limitations superimposed on Brahman by Maya's vidya and avidya potencies. When a jiva acquires spiritual knowledge and thus removes these upadhis from himself, he realizes himself to be the unlimited, nonvariegated Brahman. This attainment is supposed to be the perfection of spiritual life. In support of this concept, the Shankarites quote the Vedic statement rite jnanan na muktih: "There is no liberation without knowledge."

A favorite analogy the Mayavadis use to explain how unlimited Brahman becomes limited as the jivas is that of the sky and clay pots. Just as the vast sky seems to become limited in a pot and is then known as "the sky in the pot," so the unlimited Brahman seems to become limited by the jivas' subtle and gross material bodies. When a pot is broken there is no longer a distinction between the sky in the pot and the all-pervading sky, and similarly when a jiva's false identity is dissolved the jiva no longer appears different from Brahman. Actually, the Mayavadis explain, the apparent distinction between the sky in the pot and the all-pervading sky did not really exist even when the pot was intact, and in the same way the difference between the individual self and the total Supreme is always illusory. The Advaita monists even see confirmation of all this in Shrimad-Bhagavatam, as in the final instructions to Parikshit Maharaja imparted by Shukadeva, the leader of all transcendentalists:

evam dehe mrite jivo brahma sampadyate punah

"When a pot is broken, the portion of sky within the pot remains as the element sky, just as before. In the same way, when the gross and subtle bodies die, the living entity within again becomes the Supreme" (Bhag. 12.5.5). Later in the same set of instructions, Shukadeva also says, aham brahma param dhama brahmaham paramam param

evam samikshann atmanam atmany adhaya nishkale

"I am the Absolute Truth, the supreme abode, and that Absolute Truth, the supreme destination, is I.' Meditating like this, merge yourself into that nameless universal self" (Bhag. 12.5.11).

These statements of course need proper explanation, but when the Mayavadis explain them they do so without regard to the actual context. In fact, only by taking them out of context can one translate them as shown above. In the fifty-second Text of the Tattva-sandarbha, Shrila Jiva Gosvami will briefly discuss why such verses seem to have an impersonal slant, and in Shri Paramatma-sandarbha, Texts[DDB140] 72–84, he will provide a more detailed discussion.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami here begins countering the Mayavada philosophy by establishing the essential distinction between the[DDB141] jiva and the[DDB142] ishvara. His first point, [DDB143]which we have learned from the account of Vyasadeva's trance, is that Maya controls only the jiva and not the Supreme Lord. Indeed, Maya is dependent upon the Lord and completely controlled by Him. The same Brahman cannot be the controller as well as the controlled, because ignorance and knowledge cannot exist simultaneously in the one undivided reality, just as light and darkness cannot occupy the same point in space.

The jiva's[DDB144] abilities and qualities are different from those of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This difference, moreover, is not a product of illusion. By constitution the jiva is atomic in size, and thus he is vulnerable to Maya's influence when he disassociates himself from the Supreme Lord. But by surrendering to the Lord he can free himself from the shackles of Maya. Shrila Vyasa saw all this in His trance.

In the next Text, Shrila Jiva Gosvami states that the difference between the jiva and the Lord is real and not just empirical.

na copadhi-taratamya-maya-pariccheda-pratibimbatvadi-vyavasthaya tayor vibhagah syat.

Also, the Mayavadis cannot explain this difference between the jiva and the Lord simply as a division or reflection of Brahman into a hierarchy of upadhis.

COMMENTARY

The Jiva Is Not Merely an Upadhi

The Mayavada philosophers hold that there is one reality—the formless, indivisible, non[DDB145]variegated, impersonal Brahman—and they have various theories for explaining the apparent existence of the[DDB146] jiva and [DDB147]the ishvara. The two theories mentioned in this section are the most prevalent, and both have been expressed in several modified forms. According to the pariccheda-vada, the one indivisible Brahman appears divided into many embodied jivas because of various upadhis, just as the one great sky (mahakasha) appears divided by being contained in various pots (ghaṭakasha).

This theory proposes that no real difference exists between the sky inside a pot and the sky outside. The distinction is assumed only for practical purposes. Once the pot is broken and the apparent distinction removed, the sky inside the pot and the great sky are understood to be one. Similarly, the proponents of pariccheda-vada say, there is no difference between the embodied jiva and Brahman. The jiva's limiting adjunct, his subtle body, is actually a false covering superimposed on the jiva after he comes into contact with Maya's avidya potency, and it is this false covering alone that makes him appear to be separate from Brahman. Thus when Brahman is limited by subtle bodies it becomes the jivas. But when it is limited by vidya it is called [DDB148]the ishvara. This doctrine of separation was formulated by Vacaspati Mishra, the ninth-century author of the Bhamati commentary on Shankara's Vedanta-sutra-bhashya.

According to pratibimba-vada, when the formless, undivided Brahman is reflected in the various subtle bodies made of avidya, it appears to be many, just as the one sun reflected in various receptacles of water appears to be many. In this analogy, the sun remains uninfluenced by the agitation of the water in which it is reflected, even while the reflection is influenced. Similarly, Brahman is never influenced by the changes that its reflections, the jivas, undergo. Indeed, the happiness and distress the jivas experience are only illusions resulting from their conditioned, or reflected, state. When the jiva frees himself from illusion and achieves liberation, he reverts to his original Brahman consciousness. This is one Mayavada version of how the jivas come into being.

According to the proponents of pratibimba-vada, the same Brahman that becomes the jivas when reflected in Maya's avidya potency becomes the [DDB149]ishvara, the creator Godhead, when reflected in her vidya potency. By virtue of this contact with Maya, Brahman assumes a personal but temporary form that, unlike the jiva, is immune to Maya's influence. Nonetheless, Brahman's manifestation in the personal feature of the [DDB150]ishvara is the work of Maya and is inferior to the all-pervading Brahman. The pratibimba-vadis say that all the incarnations of God described in the Vedic literature are manifestations of the [DDB151]ishvara—the results of Brahman's combining with Maya's vidya potency. Like the jivas, such personal manifestations of God have subtle and gross bodies, but unlike the jivas They neither accept [DDB152]Their bodies because of past karma nor are bound by the reactions of Their activities. Thus [DDB153]the jiva and [DDB154]the ishvara are distinct.

The Mayavadis try to support their ideas by citing scripture. For example, from the Shuka-rahasya Upanishad (2.12) they quote the statement karyopadhir ayam jivah karanopadhir ishvarah: "The jiva is a reflection [of Brahman] in the antah-karana, or heart, and the ishvara is a reflection in Maya."⁷

Also: yatha hy ayam jyotir atmaivasvan apo bhittva bahudhaiko 'nugacchan upadhina kriyate bheda-rupo devah kshetreshv evam ajo 'yam atma[DDB155]. "Just as the one effulgent sun appears to be many when reflected in many pots of water, so the one unborn atma, Brahman, appears to be many beings when reflected in many bodies."⁸ (This text is quoted by Baladeva Vidyabhushana in his Tattva-sandarbh commentary.)

Some Advaita monists also cite Shrimad-Bhagavatam in support of their pratibimba-vada and pariccheda-vada:

na hi satyasya nanatvam avidvan yadi manyate nanatvam chidrayor yadvaj jyotishor vatayor iva

"This is certain: there is no variety in the Absolute Truth. If an ignorant person thinks there is, his understanding is just like thinking there is a difference between the sky above and the sky in a pot, or between the sun and its reflection in water, or between the air outside the body and the air inside"⁹ (Bhag. 12.4.30).

Shrila Jiva Gosvami, following in Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu's footsteps, contends that Shri Vyasadeva's experience in trance contradicts both of these Mayavada doctrines—namely, pratibimba-vada and pariccheda-vada. This contradiction is evident from the analysis Jiva Gosvami has already presented, but in the upcoming Texts he will demonstrate it further by pointing out the specific defects in these doctrines.

If we assume that these upadhis are empirically real and not illusory, still, because Brahman is not affected by anything, it cannot be delimited by them. Moreover, Brahman can cast no reflection because it is devoid of attributes, all-pervading, and indivisible. Since Brahman has no attributes, it can have no relation with upadhis; since it is all-pervading, it cannot be divided into a reflected object and its reflection; and since it is indivisible and uniform, it cannot be seen. In these respects Brahman resembles the sky:[DDB156] Because the sky is invisible, reflections are cast not by the sky itself but by limited luminous parts of the sky, namely the heavenly bodies.

COMMENTARY

In Advaita monism, existence (satta) is understood on three different levels—pratibhasika (merely apparent reality), vyavaharika (ordinary, empirical reality), and paramarthika (absolute reality). Pratibhasika existence is perceived in such states as dreams and illusions but ceases when normal consciousness returns. One may, for example, mistake a rope for a snake in semidarkness, but this perception ceases as soon as light is shed on the rope. Therefore, the snake perceived in the rope was a merely apparent reality, or pratibhasika-satta. It cannot be considered an empirical reality because it is private and temporary.

According to the Mayavadis, empirical reality, vyavaharika-satta, refers to our perception of the material world in ordinary waking consciousness. Ultimate reality, paramarthika-satta, is present in all objects of the material world, pervading them as the blissful source of all manifest varieties. In his Drig-drishya-viveka (20) Shripada Shankaracarya writes:

asti bhati priyam rupam nama cety amsha-pancakam
adya-trayam brahma-rupam jagad-rupam tato dvayam

“Objects in the material world have five characteristics—existence, perceivability, attractiveness, form, and name. Of these, the first three belong to Brahman and the others to the world.” The last two items, form and name, are products of Maya and thus constitute only the empirical reality; they do not exist on the absolute level. They are manifest only as long as one has not realized Brahman. The other three are Brahman itself as perceived in empirical reality.

The Mayavadis claim that the paramathika-satta, or absolute reality, is impersonal Brahman, which, unlike the other two realities, cannot be negated by experience and scriptural authority. Just as dreams cease when one wakes, the material world will cease to exist when one becomes Brahman realized. There is no higher reality than absolute Brahman, no higher existence that can negate the real existence of Brahman in the past, present, or future. On the level of Brahman existence, there is no distinction between knowledge, the knower, and the object of knowledge. All three fuse into one absolute reality. The two lower realities, pratibhasika and vyavaharika, are not perceived on this level of consciousness.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami refutes both the pariccheda-vada (the theory of division) and the pratibimba-vada (the theory of reflection) by considering the Shankarites’ explanation of the upadhis covering Brahman as features of the two lower realities: These upadhis can never be real aspects of the absolute reality, since that would introduce duality on the nondual plane. In the case of pariccheda-vada, the upadhis can be either empirical reality (anavidyaka) or apparent reality (avidyaka). Shrila Jiva Gosvami shows the fault in both of these alternatives.

If the upadhis are empirically real, Brahman still cannot be limited by them because pure Brahman is unconditioned by anything else, empirical or otherwise. In the Bhagavad-gita (13.13) Lord Shri Krishna confirms this:

jneyam yat tat pravakshyami yaj jnatvamritam ashnute
anadi mat-param brahma na sat tan nasad ucyate

“I shall now explain the knowable, knowing which you will taste the eternal. Brahman, the supreme spirit, beginningless and subordinate to Me, lies beyond the cause and effect of this material world.” Thus no upadhis can limit Brahman.

But in the opinion of Shankaracarya, this Gita verse says, “I shall tell you that which has to be known, knowing which one attains immortality; it is the beginningless, supreme Brahman, which is said to be neither being nor nonbeing.” In commenting on this verse Shankara writes:

idam tu jneyam atindriyatvena shabdaika-pramana-gamyatvan na ghaöadi-vad ubhaya-buddhy-anugata-pratyaya-vishayam ity ato na san na asat ity ucyate. yat tv uktam viruddham ucyate jneyam tan na sat tan na asat ucyate iti. na viruddham. “anyad eva tad viditad atho aviditad adhi” iti shrute.

[DDB158]

[DDB159]“But this knowable Brahman, being beyond the reach of the senses, can be understood only by means of hearing revealed knowledge from scripture. Therefore, unlike the clay pot, etc., it can never be said to exist or not exist, and thus it can never be called sat or asat.

“Objection: But what you said about Brahman, the object of knowledge—that it is neither existent nor nonexistent—is contradictory.

“Answer: No, it is not, because the shruti states: ‘That [Brahman] is different from the known and from the unknown, for it is beyond both’ [Kena Up. 1.3[NEW160]].”[DDB161]

So according to the Mayavadis’ own version, Brahman is beyond sense perception, beyond empirical existence and nonexistence. Such being the case, if the upadhis of Brahman are empirically real they can never limit the undivided and indivisible Brahman and produce the jivas. Therefore the Vedas say, agrihyo na grihyate: “The untouchable [Brahman] cannot be perceived” (Brihad-aranyaka Up. 9.26). Brahman being neither pierceable nor divisible, it cannot be broken or delimited into jivas the way one might break a large stone into pebbles.

If we hypothetically grant that the upadhis can divide Brahman into jivas, then in that case neither the jivas nor Brahman itself should be called eternal. But the Bhagavad-gita, which the Mayavadis accept as authoritative, describes both the jiva and Brahman as eternal. In Chapter Thirteen, text 20, Lord Krishna says that the jiva is anadi, beginningless. The same is stated in texts 20–24 of the Second Chapter.

Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana states that even if the above point is overlooked, other inconsistencies abound in the Mayavada conception: The jivas and the [DDB162]ishvara move from one place to another, but Brahman is all-pervading. Somehow portions of Brahman become limited by upadhis to manifest as the jivas. When a given jiva moves from one place to another, either Brahman also moves along with him[DDB163] or it does not. But Brahman’s moving from place to place is impossible, because when something moves it leaves one location and then occupies another, where it was absent before. It is absurd to propose this situation for Brahman, since Brahman is always present everywhere.

On the other hand, if Brahman does not move with the jivas, we must assume that when a jiva is moving from place to place his[DDB164] upadhi constantly delimits new portions of Brahman, simultaneously releasing the previously delimited portions. This reduces Brahman, the absolute reality, to a toy in the hands of its upadhis, a proposal that is also absurd.

If it is instead proposed that all of Brahman is grasped by its upadhis, the problem of movement can be solved, but then there remains no Brahman free from upadhis, meaning that there is no chance for the jivas’ liberation or for useful discussion of philosophy; all of existence would consist of the deluded Brahman, and there would be no liberated domain to aspire for.

If it is countered that Brahman is not the basis for its upadhis and thus they can move independently of Brahman, this means that even at the liberated level these independent upadhis will continue to exist.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami thus[DDB165] concludes that the interpretation of pariccheda-vada in terms of Brahman’s upadhis being empirically real is invalid.

He then goes on to refute pratibimba-vada, the theory of reflection. Brahman, Shrila Jiva states, can cast no reflection in its upadhis, or subtle bodies of material existence, because Brahman is devoid of all attributes. Only an object possessing attributes like form and color can cast[DDB166] a reflection. If an object is invisible, how can it be reflected in anything?

If it is countered that the sky, although invisible, casts a reflection in water, Jiva Gosvami replies that it is in fact the stars and planets in the sky that cast reflections in water, not the sky itself. If the sky could cast a reflection, then the wind would also be able to cast one, because air is a grosser material element than sky. According to modern science, the bluish background seen behind the visible bodies in the firmament is an optical illusion created by the refracted sunlight passing through the atmosphere. No concrete, underlying object is there to cast a reflection, only the invisible firmament. Hence the analogy comparing Brahman to the sky being reflected in water is inappropriate here.

Furthermore, we have already shown that, according to the Mayavadis, Brahman is beyond empirical existence and nonexistence and thus also beyond sensory perception. [DDB167]Thus it is foolish for the Mayavadis to propose that Brahman reflects as the jivas. But Shrila Jiva Gosvami is willing to grant the opposition a respite and hypothetically accept their premise that Brahman can reflect in upadhis[DDB168]; in this case all-pervading Brahman must also exist in the upadhis, in which it supposedly reflects. But if the reflected object, Brahman, is already present in the reflecting medium, the upadhis, how will it reflect there? As a mirror cannot reflect in itself, so Brahman cannot reflect in itself. Even if somehow it manages to reflect in itself, how will it be possible to distinguish the reflected Brahman from the original Brahman already present in the upadhis? The two will be coincident, allowing no basis for distinguishing one from the other. How can the reflected Brahman be singled out to be termed jiva and made to suffer? What was His offense? Why is it that the reflected Brahman becomes affected by upadhis and not the original Brahman, although the reflection is no different from the original?

The Mayavadis have also told us that Brahman has no internal parts: nishkalam nishkriyam shantam. "Brahman contains no limbs or parts. It is inactive and peaceful" (Shvetashvatara Up. 6.79). But a formless, indivisible object cannot have a relation with any upadhi, real or imaginary, and thus it cannot reflect in any medium.

In response to this contention, the Advaita monists cite the analogy of a clear crystal that appears red when placed in front of a red flower. Just as the red color, which is formless and partless, casts its reflection on the crystal, so it is possible for Brahman to be reflected in its upadhis. But this is a faulty argument. The red color in this analogy belongs to the flower, which projects its image through the crystal, although in the crystal we perceive only the flower's color. The color exists simply as the flower's attribute and cannot sustain itself independently. A flower, moreover, has shape, parts, and attributes. In sum, neither the color nor the flower compares adequately to Brahman. Therefore, like the analogy of the reflected sky, this analogy has also been applied incongruously by the Mayavadis.

The shruti says, asango hy ayam purushah: "Brahman is free from any relation or association" (Brihad-aranyaka Up. 4.3.15). Therefore Brahman cannot engage in any relationship with a reflecting medium. The Mayavadis interpret the word asanga here as meaning "devoid of real relations." This implies that Brahman can have nonreal relations or associations, created by Maya, but we have already shown that a formless Brahman has no ability to manifest a reflection in an empirically real medium or have any other relation with such a medium, and this impossibility is even more definite with respect to unreal relations with unreal mediums. The Prashnopanishad (4.10) confirms this when it states, tad acchayam ashariram alohitam: "That Brahman casts no shadow, has no body, and is colorless." We can thus conclude that upadhis—whether real or unreal—can never impose themselves on pure Brahman. They affect only the deluded jivas.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami presents more arguments against the Mayavada doctrine, hypothetically considering Brahman's upadhis as real.

TEXT 38

Moreover, if there were empirically real upadhis delimiting Brahman (pariccheda) or acting as the medium of its reflection (pratibimba), a person could not escape from them simply by knowing he is one with the Supreme in essence. And if the Advaita monists propose that freedom from upadhis is due to the influence of the supreme entity, who is called tat, then they agree with us!

COMMENTARY

Refutations of Pratibimba-vada and Pariccheda-vada

Shrila Jiva Gosvami here exposes further complications that arise from accepting Brahman's upadhis as empirically real. The Advaita monists believe that a jiva can become free from bondage to his upadhis by becoming educated through the shrutis. This is the idea of the following shruti statements:

Tat tvam asi: "Thou art that" (Chandogya Up. 6.8.7).

Tad atmanam eva vedaham brahmasmi: "It knew Itself: '[DDB169]I am Brahman'" (Brihad-aranyaka Up. 1.4.10).

Tat tvam asy-adi-vakyebyah jnanam mokshasya sadhanam: "The means to liberation is knowledge arising from [DDB170]such dictums as 'Thou art that'" (Brihan-naradiya Pur. 35.68).

Brahma veda brahmaiva bhavati: "He who knows that Brahman becomes Brahman" (Mundaka Up. 3.2.9).

Tarati shokam atma-vit: "The knower of the Self transcends grief" (Chandogya Up. 7.1.3).

Thus, with the apparent support of Vedic scripture, the Mayavada school claims that liberation is achieved through knowledge. Indeed, the shruti says, tam eva veditva ati mrityum eti/ nanyah pantha vidyate 'yanaya: "Only by knowing that [Brahman] can one transcend death; there is no other way to cross over" (Shvetashvatara Up. 3.8., 5.15). And in the Bhagavad-gita (4.37) Lord Krishna says:

yathaidamsi samiddho 'gnir bhasma-sat kurute 'rjuna jnanagnih sarva-armani bhasma-sat kurute tatha

"As a blazing fire turns firewood to ashes, O Arjuna, so does the fire of knowledge burn to ashes all reactions to material activities." [DDB171]Continuing the idea in the next two verses (Bg. 38 and 39) the Lord says, na hi jnanena sadrisham pavitram iha vidyate: "Nothing is as purifying as knowledge"; and jnanam labdhva param shantim acirenadhigacchati: "Having attained this knowledge, one quickly attains the supreme peace."

In effect, the Mayavadis think the jiva is like a rich man's infant son who has gotten lost in a busy public place and is then found by a poor man. As a result of this misfortune, compounded by the son's ignorance of his true identity, the baby grows up in a humble setting as the child of the poor man. Later the child may be recognized by one of his father's servants. As soon as the boy comes to realize he is the son of a wealthy man, all his poverty evaporates. He does not have to toil hard to get rid of this poverty. In fact, he was never really poor, just ignorant, and thus simply coming to a proper understanding of his real identity was sufficient to reverse the situation.

Another example: A person forgets that he put his watch in his pocket and searches for hours, but without any luck. Finally, a friend comes along and sees the watch strap sticking out of his pocket and tells him, "Your watch is in your pocket." At once the person has the watch and his anxiety is gone. Knowledge alone was sufficient to relieve his distress.

Similarly, the Mayavadis say, the jiva is nothing but deluded Brahman. As soon as he realizes this by properly hearing the Vedic instructions, he becomes liberated. He then understands that Brahman is not distant from him, for in fact he himself is Brahman. His only obstacle was ignorance, which hearing the Vedas has now removed. Of course, for the process to be effective one's heart must be pure, and to achieve this purity Shripada Shankaracarya recommends the sadhana-catushöaya, or "fourfold practice," consisting of discrimination, dispassion, "the six achievements,"[DDB173] and eagerness for liberation.

According to Shankara, one of the four maha-vakyas, or essential statements of all Vedic instructions, is tat tvam asi:[DDB174] "You are that [Brahman]." This statement underlines the oneness of the jiva with Brahman. But, we have to ask, since Brahman is all-pervading and all-knowing while the jiva is atomic and limited in knowledge, how can they be the same? To this the Mayavadis reply that tat tvam asi should not be understood in its primary, literal sense but only in a secondary sense. One can recognize the actual oneness between the jiva and Brahman when one puts aside their opposing qualities—omnipresence and omniscience versus atomic size and limited knowledge—and recognizes only their mutual quality of consciousness. This process is called bhaga-tyaga-lakshana, or applying a metaphorical meaning to a phrase by avoiding part of a word's literal meaning or some of its qualifications[DDB175]. Thus one can realize the true oneness between Brahman and the[DDB176] jiva only when one puts aside the upadhi that de[DDB177]limits Brahman into becoming a jiva. To help in this realization the guru instructs the disciple, "You are that." Since the shruti statements cannot be meaningless, Shankara contends, this is the only way to understand the maha-vakya.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami answers this whole argument by pointing out that even when a jiva is absorbed in hearing the Vedic sound conveying the knowledge that he is one with Brahman, the upadhi covering the jiva, which is empirically real, will not magically dissolve. A man bound by chains will not become free just by meditating that his fetters are cut. A rabbit will not turn into an elephant just by meditating, "I am an elephant, I am an elephant." Such achievements would be possible only if the upadhis were merely apparent. An intoxicated office clerk may think he is the President of the United States, but when he becomes sober he understands he is still just an office clerk. If the upadhis covering Brahman are real, the task of removing them is not so easy. Mere knowledge is not sufficient to liberate the jiva from Maya.

If knowledge alone were actually sufficient for liberation, why do the scriptures recommend various austerities, penances, and rituals for self-purification? The Mayavadis can only say that these are preliminary steps for purifying the heart, for qualifying one to understand the meaning of the shrutis' maha-vakyas.

But according to the shastras, knowledge (vidya) and ignorance (avidya) are both products of Maya. So even if a jiva, by studying Vedic texts, gets rid of his avidya with the help of vidya, he will still be bound by vidya. How will he do away with this other upadhi, vidya? Until he is free from all upadhis he cannot realize Brahman, which is beyond both vidya and avidya. Lord Krishna discusses this point with Uddhava in the Eleventh Canto of the Bhagavatam (11.11.3):

vidyavidye mama tanu viddhy uddhava sharirinam
moksha-bandha-kari adye mayaya me vinirmite

"O Uddhava, both knowledge and ignorance, being products of Maya, are expansions of My potency. Both knowledge and ignorance are beginningless, and they perpetually award living beings [DDB178]liberation and bondage, respectively." Here the Lord explicitly states that vidya is also a product of Maya. When He says that vidya gives liberation, He does not mean that vidya alone can grant it, because no one can become free from Maya without surrendering to the Supreme Lord. He emphatically declares this to Arjuna in the Bhagavad-gita

daivi hy esha guna-mayi mama maya duratyaya mam eva ye prapadyante mayam etam taranti te

“This divine energy of Mine—Maya, consisting of the three modes of material nature—is difficult to overcome. Only those who have surrendered unto Me can easily cross beyond it.”

The term vidya means “knowledge” and also “devotion.” In Upanishadic statements such as tam eva veditva ati mrityum eti, the word veditva (“after knowing”) really means “by being devoted to Him, fully knowing His essence”; it does not mean having knowledge without devotion. Lord Krishna confirms this in the Bhagavad-gita (4.9):

tyaktva deham punar janma naiti mam eti so 'rjuna

“One who knows in truth the transcendental nature of My appearance and activities does not, upon leaving the body, take his birth again in this material world, but attains My eternal abode, O Arjuna.” Here the same root, vid (“to know”), is being used, and in this context it means “knowing with devotion.”

Material knowledge is a feature of Maya, whereas transcendental knowledge about the Lord is manifested by the illuminating power of bhakti, an aspect of the Supreme Lord’s internal potency. Spiritual knowledge is inseparable from bhakti. The process of hearing—or in other words receiving knowledge—is in fact listed first among the nine processes of devotional service. A passage from the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (4.4.21) bears out our conclusion that vidya indicates knowledge with devotion: vijnaya prajnam kurvita. “After knowing, one should practice wisdom.” Here the word used for wisdom—prajna—conveys the same meaning as vidya, and so the sentence indicates, “After knowing Him, one should practice devotion.” Also, in the Bhagavad-gita (9.2) the Lord says, raja-vidya, “This is the king of knowledge.” From the context it is evident that here vidya means “devotional service.” Thus it is devotional service and not mere knowledge that cuts the bonds of Maya, as stated in Bhagavad-gita 7.14 and confirmed later, in Bhagavad-gita 11.53–54:

naham vedair na tapasa na danena na cejyaya
shakya evam-vidho drashöum drishöavan asi mam yatha

bhaktya tv ananyaya shakya aham evam-vidho 'rjuna jnatum drashöum ca tattvena praveshöum ca parantapa

“[Lord Krishna said to Arjuna:] ‘The form you are seeing with your transcendental eyes cannot be understood simply by studying the Vedas, nor by undergoing serious penances, nor by charity, nor by worship. It is not by these means that one can see Me as I am. My dear Arjuna, only by undivided devotional service can I be understood as I am, standing before you, and can thus be seen directly. Only in this way can you enter into the mysteries of My understanding.’”

If the Mayavadis respond by suggesting that it is possible for the jiva to remove all upadhis and become Brahman by the mercy of the all-powerful and benign Brahman, Shrila Jiva Gosvami is glad to accept this idea, since it amounts to surrendering to the Vaishnava view. The Advaita monists insist that Brahman is devoid of all attributes and potencies, but if that same Brahman is now required to bless the jiva, then it has to have some potency, namely mercy. By allowing featureless Brahman to have any potency at all, the Mayavadis conform to the Vaishnava definition of Para-brahman as Bhagavan, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In that case, Shrila Jiva Gosvami says, asmakam eva mata-sammatam:[DDB179] “Their view then agrees with ours.” In the Bhagavat-sandarbha Shrila Jiva Gosvami will prove that even for Brahman realization one must take shelter of the Supreme Lord.

Next, Shrila Jiva Gosvami exposes the fallacies of the second alternative, that Brahman's upadhis are unreal.

TEXT 39

Conversely, if the upadhis are only apparently real, then Brahman's delimitation (pariccheda-vada) and reflection (pratibimba-vada) are also apparently real, since these processes would not in fact occur. Because in this case the Mayavadis' doctrine would be based on the analogy of an unreal dream state, such analogies as that of the pot and the sky, which involve real upadhis, cannot serve to establish it. No proper analogy can be drawn between something that exists and something that does not exist[DDB180]. Therefore the Mayavadis' theories of division and reflection are nothing but the play of illusion, unprovable by their faulty application of analogies.

COMMENTARY

Further Refutations of Pratibimba-vada and Pariccheda-vada

In previous Texts, Shrila Jiva Gosvami has shown that if Brahman's upadhis are empirically real one cannot satisfactorily explain the existence of either the jivas or the ishvara. Now he will consider the Shankarites' second option, that Brahman's upadhis are only apparent. In this Text the upadhis are called avidyaka, or "illusory," a specific reference to pratibhasika reality as defined in Mayavada theory. In this context the Shankarites do not intend "illusory" to mean altogether nonexistent, for nonexistence can never give rise to either the jiva or the ishvara. Rather, they say, Brahman's upadhis are "illusory" in the sense that they exist on neither the empirical nor the absolute level. They are an intangible, apparent reality, akin to dreams, misperceptions, and hallucinations.

The objects one sees in dreams, misperceptions, or hallucinations are intangible. In a dream one may eat a big feast, for example, but upon waking up one will still feel hungry; the feast appears real only while dreaming. Similarly intangible are misperceived or imagined objects, such as a "snake" that is in fact a rope; fear of the snake will persist only as long as the misperception or hallucination continues. This kind of illusory reality (pratibhasika-satta) is inferior to the empirical world and to absolute reality. Nonetheless, the Mayavadis posit that such apparent upadhis can cause Brahman to take on the characteristics of jivas and the ishvara.

The first step in refuting this erroneous theory is to point out that an effect is always dependent on its cause and that specific effects arise from specific causes. For example, one cannot make water taste sweet by adding salt. It follows, therefore, that if the upadhis imposed on Brahman are only apparent realities they cannot produce empirical reality. A daydream may be a pleasant reverie, but no one gains any real benefit by imagining he has been crowned emperor of the world. Instead, as he wastes away the time the daydreamer may lose an opportunity for gaining some practical benefit in the real world. However much he dreams, his apparent reality will never become empirically real.

In the context of discussing real upadhis, Shrila Jiva Gosvami has already refuted the two analogies the Mayavadis use to explain pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada—the analogy of the sun reflecting in many waterpots and that of the sky becoming delimited by a pot. These analogies are also inappropriate here. The Mayavadis may justifiably presume the sky to be empirically real and thus delimitable by such an upadhi as a pot. But Brahman is neither empirical nor divisible, and therefore it is impossible for empirical upadhis to delimit it. If any delimitation of Brahman can be reconciled with Brahman's transcendental nature, such delimitation can occur only on the level of mere appearance, not in empirical reality. Such a pratibhasika delimitation, unreal in the empirical sense, will not help explain how the jivas and the ishvara come into being on the empirical plane. This leaves no consistent explanation of how indivisible, formless Brahman can be divided into the jivas and the ishvara by either empirical or merely apparent upadhis.

A good analogy must be as similar as possible to what it illustrates. The greater the similarity, the stronger the analogy. But the analogy of the sky and the pot is not similar enough to the situation the Mayavadis try to apply it to: while the sky and Brahman are similar, the sky's upadhi, the pot, is empirical, while Brahman's upadhis must be merely apparent.

The impersonalists compare this world to a dream [DDB181] to show its illusory nature [DDB182]—to show that it does not really exist. But it is unjustifiable to equate the dream world (apparent reality) with the external world (empirical reality) in order to reach this conclusion. If a person commits murder in a dream he is not punished for it, but in the phenomenal world he risks punishment for such an act. So it is improper to say that the world is just a dream. Sin and piety, which pollute or purify the heart of an actor, are not applicable to acts done in dreams; they give their bitter and sweet fruits only in the phenomenal world. The analogy of a dream, therefore, is not adequate for explaining the appearance of the material world from Brahman. The Vedic scriptures present the dream analogy only to illustrate the temporary nature of this world, with a view toward inspiring a sense of detachment from materialism in those desiring to walk the path of transcendence.

The Mayavadis' only other alternative is to assign Brahman to empirical (vyavaharika) reality by placing it in the same class as the sky, to which the Vedas compare it. But that leaves us with no absolute reality, in which case the whole idea becomes absurd because, logically, absolute reality must exist, and the Vedas and numerous saintly persons confirm this.

Thus all these arguments fail to establish the doctrines of pariccheda and pratibimba, which are thus left as nothing more than mental exercises for impersonal speculators. They provide no sound explanation of how pure Brahman, by adulteration with upadhis, manifests as many, namely as the [DDB183]ishvara and the jivas.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami offers still more refutations of impersonalism in the next Text.

In this way, by basing their ideas on Brahman and avidya alone, the Mayavadis contradict themselves when they say that the one undivided Brahman, pure by virtue of being unadulterated consciousness and thus altogether free from contact with avidya, is nonetheless polluted by contacting avidya and thus becomes the jiva. Then again, say the Mayavadis, that same Brahman becomes the personal Godhead when He serves as the basis of Maya, the illusion concocted from the jiva's avidya. And under the influence of Maya, Brahman supposedly once more becomes the jiva. Here we have avidya within the pure spiritual being (Brahman), vidya within the upadhi called God, who is concocted by that avidya, and an illusory status of that same Godhead, who is the proprietor of vidya. We should carefully study how these and other similarly manufactured ideas are simply incoherent.

Inconsistencies in Advaita Monism

In the previous Texts Shrila Jiva Gosvami has refuted the two main theories of Advaita monism, pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada. He showed that neither of these consistently explains the empirical world and the presence of the jivas and God within it. Now Shrila Jiva Gosvami points out in more detail the fallacies in these theories. He argues that even if we accept either the pariccheda-vada or the pratibimba-vada as a description of how Brahman becomes divided into the many jivas, still the contradiction between Brahman's perfection and the superimposition of avidya will remain unresolved.

How can Brahman, which is indivisible,[DDB184] pure consciousness, have portions that fall under the rule of Maya and think themselves jivas? Knowledge and delusion cannot share the same location, just as light and darkness cannot both be present in exactly the same place. Being indivisible, Brahman cannot become fragmented to manifest the jivas. Moreover, the absolute existence cannot include Maya (avidya), but only Brahman alone. For Maya to be involved with Brahman, either Brahman would have to degrade itself to Maya's empirical level so it could be adulterated by upadhis, or else Maya would have to elevate herself to the absolute plane of Brahman so that she could influence it. The first of these alternatives is impossible because Brahman is without attributes and cannot change. The second alternative amounts to dualism, because then Maya and Brahman would have equal status on the plane of absolute reality. This, of course, contradicts the first principles of Advaita monism.

Under the pressure of these arguments, the impersonalists may try to placate us with the claim that the vital issue at hand is not precisely how the jiva came under the influence of Maya but simply that he is now suffering in illusion. The house of material existence is now on fire; we do not have time to search out Maya's origin but should try to escape the fire quickly before it devours us, before we lose the opportunity of human life.

Even if we grant this point, the Mayavadis still must convince us that the end they want us to seek, impersonal liberation, is in our best interest. This they cannot do. Our house may be on fire, but it does not follow that we should panic and jump out the first available window to our certain death.

As Shrila Jiva Gosvami indicates here, the Mayavadis say that after Brahman comes under the influence of avidya He is called the [DDB185]jiva. Then this jiva creates Maya by his imagination. A portion of Brahman next gives shelter to Maya and becomes known as the [DDB186]ishvara, or the Supreme Lord. From that point on Maya follows the [DDB187]ishvara's dictates and controls the jiva, who is Brahman covered by Maya. So the [DDB188]ishvara is the basis of Maya, and the jiva is her vishaya, or object of action.

This is self-contradictory. This explanation is plagued with the logical fault called anyonyashraya-dosha, or "the defect of mutual dependence": Maya's existence supposedly originates from the jiva, and the jiva's existence also originates from Maya. This means that without Maya there is no jiva and without the [DDB189]jiva there is no Maya. In addition, a part of Brahman supposedly becomes the [DDB190]ishvara by contacting Maya, but then Maya becomes subordinate to this ishvara. In this view even God cannot come into existence without the involvement of the finite living beings, who are themselves dependent manifestations of Maya. So ultimately the [DDB191]ishvara is dependent on Maya for His existence.

Another absurdity in the pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada presentations is the claim that Maya has two features—vidya and avidya. The upadhi delimiting Brahman as the [DDB192]ishvara is supposedly Maya's vidya portion, which is predominantly in the mode of goodness, while the upadhis limiting Brahman as the jivas constitute her avidya portion. In this way, the [DDB193]ishvara is the basis of the jivas' illusion despite His being the embodiment of perfect knowledge, but the Mayavadis cannot explain how such a division of Maya into vidya and avidya comes into existence. Certainly Brahman, being devoid of qualities, cannot create this division.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami advises us to study other inconsistencies like these in Mayavada philosophy. For example, we should consider the following questions: If originally only featureless Brahman and nothing else exists, where does avidya come from? Or, if avidya can bind Brahman, isn't it more powerful than Brahman? The Mayavadis compare Brahman to a spider that weaves its own web and somehow gets bound by it, but this analogy presents Brahman as possessing attributes and potencies, revealing a tacit acceptance of the Vaishnava dualistic understanding.

We should also consider the following conundrums: (1) Since Brahman is unlimited and devoid of parts, it cannot possibly cast a reflection. (2) Brahman is described as pure awareness, but in order to function, awareness needs an object apart from itself. There is no meaning to knowledge without a known object. And when there is an object, there is the multiplicity of knower, knowledge, and known. (3) The very fact of Brahman's existence proves that it is potent, because anything that exists necessarily has some kind of energy or attribute. Thus there is duality between Brahman and its potencies or attributes.

From Sankhya philosophy we understand that the primeval pradhana generates the mahat-tattva, which then gives rise to false ego. Now, suppose we grant that, as the Mayavadis say, a jiva can dissolve his false ego by cultivating spiritual knowledge. But even if one does this, the other two basic elements of material nature—mahat-tattva and pradhana—will remain undissolved. How will the egoless jiva transcend the mahat-tattva and pradhana to realize Brahman? Egolessness is not equivalent to liberation, since at the time of universal annihilation, when the conditioned jivas merge into the body of Maha-Vishnu, they are devoid of false ego but still bound by their karma.

An analysis of the word "Brahman" reveals still further problems for the Mayavadis. Every word has an inherent relationship with its meaning. According to Shrila Jiva Gosvami in his Hari-namamrita-vyakarana (2.1), a word that refers to something denotes either an object, a quality, a class, or an activity. Certainly the word "Brahman" represents neither a class nor an activity. If Brahman were a quality, there would have to be another object possessing that quality, since no quality can exist without belonging to some object. If, as the last alternative, Brahman is an object, then it must possess qualities because an eternal object cannot exist without qualities. In either case, Brahman enters into a duality.

Mayavadis explain this material world on the basis of Maya, which is neither sat (real) nor asat (unreal). They say that Maya is thus inexplicable (anirvacaniya). But in the Bhagavad-gita (2.16) Lord Shri Krishna recognizes only two categories, sat and asat:

nasato vidyate bhavo nabhavo vidyate satah
ubhayor api drishöo 'ntas tv anayos tattva-darshibhih

"Those who are seers of the truth have concluded that the unreal (asat) has no existence and that the real (sat) has no nonexistence." There is no mention here or in any other bona fide scripture of an inexplicable third mode. Thus there is no foundation for the Mayavadis' concept that Maya and the material world generated from her belong to some inexplicable third category.

To prove their contention that the material world is inexplicable (anirvacaniya or mithya), neither real nor unreal, the Shankarites cite the well-known example of the rope and the snake. If snakes were completely nonexistent (asat), they say, no one would ever mistake a rope for one in semidarkness, because a nonexistent thing can never be perceived. So the “snake” is not nonexistent, but still it cannot be considered real (sat) either, because in sufficient light no snake will be seen. Thus there must be a third category, separate from both sat and asat. This third category is anirvacaniya, inexplicable, and to it the Shankarites assign Maya.

The truth, however, is that one need not resort to the Mayavada philosophy to explain the rope mistaken for a snake. The snake and the rope are both real. A person who mistakes a rope for a snake must have previously experienced a real snake, and the conditions must be insufficient for correct perception. His experience of snakes, therefore, will cause his mind to superimpose the impression of a snake on the rope in semidarkness. By contrast, someone who has no experience of snakes will never mistake a rope for one. An infant, for example, will never mistake a rope for snake. Thus there is no inexplicable third category in material existence, as the Mayavadis claim.

Since Mayavadis accept only Brahman as the ultimate reality, they say that even scriptures that teach such statements as tat tvam asi (“You are that”) are true only empirically. Although such declarations have the power to uplift those who hear them, they are not absolutely true. In this way the Shankarites expose yet another inconsistency in their system. If the scriptures are only empirically real, how can they elevate anyone beyond Maya? By this logic even the enlightened writings of such liberated souls as Yajñavalkya and Shankara are unable to liberate their readers, for, not being absolute, they must be full of relative imperfections.

In truth the jiva is not [DDB194]merely an adulterated version of Brahman, as the Mayavadis say. As the Supreme Lord states in the Bhagavad-gītā (15.7), mamaivamśo jiva-loke jiva-bhūtaḥ sanātanaḥ: “The jiva is My eternal fragment.” Thus the jiva can never lose his identity by merging back into the Brahman it supposedly really is. When wheat berries and rice grains are mixed, they do not merge into one another and lose their separate identities. We can easily distinguish the wheat from the rice. If, however, we mix papaya seeds with some similar-looking black peppercorns, we may have difficulty distinguishing between them. Still, this does not mean they have lost their distinct identities.

Likewise, when water and ink [DDB195] are mixed, each substance retains its separate identity. Only because it is difficult for us to distinguish between them do the two liquids appear to have merged. The water molecules and the ink molecules have not merged to become all ink, all water, or something else. [DDB196]One indication that the substances do not merge is that when a glass of ink is poured into a pail of water, the total volume of liquid increases by one glass, and the same happens when a glass of water is poured into a pail of ink. In neither case do the substances merge.

Similarly, the jivas cannot merge into Brahman and lose their identity. Of course, if a jiva wants to feel that he has merged with Brahman and performs the appropriate spiritual practices, the all-merciful Supreme Lord will help that jiva imagine he has attained literal oneness with Him. In reality, God and the jivas are always distinct, and both the Lord and His pure devotees are always aware of this distinction.

Having established that the Mayavadis’ philosophy is opposed to the truths revealed in Vyāsadeva’s meditative experience, and having highlighted some of the prominent defects in their logic, Śrīla Jīva Gosvāmī next argues that the monistic conclusion also contradicts the experience of Śhukādeva Gosvāmī, the principal speaker of Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam.

Furthermore, if the jivas' absolute oneness with Brahman were the actual purport of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, Suta Gosvami would have said that Shrila Vyasadeva saw in His trance how the one Brahman becomes divided because of ignorance, and how knowledge dispels the suffering caused by this duality. And if the Supreme Lord's pastimes and qualities were unreal, what Shri Shukadeva experienced in his heart would be invalidated.

COMMENTARY

Shrila Vyasadeva's Experience Does Not Support Advaita Monism

Having presented his logical refutations of Advaita monism, Shrila Jiva Gosvami now proceeds to disprove it by reference to shabda-pramana, scriptural evidence. This is the Vedic system. Logic by itself cannot give us an understanding of the Absolute Truth, the Personality of Godhead. In transcendental matters such as this, the final authority is always scripture. Scriptural evidence is so decisive that even if a certain claim defies logic but is supported by shabda-pramana, it should be accepted as conclusively true. Any standard of truth lower than this would be inconsistent with Vedantic epistemology, which is based on the axiom that the Vedas emanate from the Absolute and are thus infallible.

Earlier, in the pramana portion of Shri Tattva-sandarbha, Shrila Jiva Gosvami showed that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the supreme authority among all types of pramanas. Now he puts Advaita monism to Shrimad-Bhagavatam's test. The essential message of the Bhagavatam is found in the verses narrating what Shrila Vyasa saw in trance—the Supreme Personality of Godhead along with His internal potencies, His marginal potency (the jivas), and His external potency (Maya). Vyasa did not see a nondifferentiated Brahman being overpowered by Maya and turning into many jivas. Rather, He saw that the jivas are distinct from the Supreme Lord and are captivated by Maya because they think themselves independent of the Lord. Vyasadeva thus saw that the cause of the jivas' suffering is their sense of false independence. At the same time, He saw that the solution to the jivas' predicament is rendering devotional service to the Supreme Person (bhakti-yogam adhokshaje), not imagining a state of oneness with Him.

In Suta Gosvami's prayers to Shukadeva Gosvami, his spiritual master, Suta confirms that merging with impersonal Brahman is an inferior goal. While speaking Shrimad-Bhagavatam to the sages at Naimisharanya, Suta Gosvami specifically mentions that originally Shukadeva was absorbed in the bliss of Brahman. Later his heart was captivated when he heard a few Shrimad-Bhagavatam verses describing the pastimes and attributes of Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Shukadeva was so entranced that he thoroughly studied the description of the Lord's pastimes in Shrimad-Bhagavatam, and later he excelled in narrating the Bhagavatam.

Therefore it is said that the Bhagavatam, which is the ripened fruit of the tree of Vedic literature, became even more relishable when it emanated from the mouth of Shukadeva. Shuka means "parrot," and Shukadeva's name alludes to the well-known fact that fruits become sweeter after being pecked by parrots. When the fruit of the Bhagavatam was touched by Shukadeva Gosvami's lips and then tasted by Parikshit Maharaja, it became sweeter than ever.

Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami's attraction to the Bhagavatam indicates that the pastimes and attributes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are both real and completely transcendental; otherwise a liberated soul like Shukadeva, who was beyond all mundane desires, would have never taken an interest in them. Shukadeva Gosvami, the most eminent of all Brahman-realized transcendentalists, demonstrated by his own behavior the falsity of the idea of absolute oneness between the Lord and the jivas.

Thus we can conclude that the keys to the Advaita doctrine of monism—namely, pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada—are supported neither by logic nor by the scriptures, especially not by the supreme scriptural pramana, Shrimad-Bhagavatam. The Mayavadis derive their opinions only from word jugglery and the distortion of scriptural truths, with the result that the innocent who hear their explanations become confused.

Next Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains the purpose of the monistic statements found in the Vedic scriptures.

tasmāt pariccheda-pratibimbatvadi-pratipadaka-shastrāny api kathancit tad-sadrishyena gaunyaiva vṛittyā pravarteran. ambu-vad-agrahanat tu na tathatvam, vṛiddhi-hrasa-bhaktatvam antar-bhavad ubhaya-samanjasyad evam iti purvottara-paksha-maya-nyayabhyam.

Therefore scriptural passages that appear to favor such doctrines as pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada must be understood in a secondary sense—that is, as expressing some sort of similarity between the Supreme’s relation to the manifest world and the ordinary processes of division and reflection. The Vedānta-sūtra confirms this idea:

“The water in a pond covers the land underneath and thus delimits it from the rest of the earth, but Brahman cannot be delimited in this way to become a jiva” (Vs. 3.2.19).

“No, the reference to delimitation is appropriate not in its primary sense but in its secondary sense, that of the water delimiting larger and smaller areas of land. This interpretation fulfills the purpose of the scriptural passages, and thus it is appropriate to compare Brahman to land” (Vs. 3.2.20).

The first of these sūtras gives an opponent’s objection, and the second replies to that objection.

The Meaning of Monistic Statements

The Mayavadis accept the Vedas as the supreme authority and cite them profusely in support of their opinions. Indeed, many of the Vedic references they quote may seem to support their theories, but here Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains how to correctly interpret the apparently monistic statements in the Vedas.

In Sanskrit, words have two kinds of meanings—primary, called mukhya-vṛitti, and secondary, called gauni-vṛitti. Vedic philosophers say that by the will of the Supreme Lord each word has some particular potency, which creates a specific relationship between the word and its meaning. For example, the word “cow” has a potency by which it refers to a particular entity having four legs, a tail, two eyes, a dewlap, an udder, and other features. Sometimes, however, in a particular context a word’s primary meaning fails to convey a relevant sense. In such cases we should conclude that the expression is figurative and accept some appropriate secondary meaning. Whenever the primary meaning of a scriptural statement is inappropriate there must be a secondary meaning intended, because scriptural statements, being apaurusheya and thus free of defects, cannot be meaningless. In the Bhagavad-gītā Lord Krishna addresses Arjuna as puruṣa-vyāghra, “tiger among men.” In its primary sense the word “tiger” refers to a ferocious animal with claws and fangs. Arjuna was certainly not such an animal, but since Lord Krishna’s words cannot be meaningless, the need arises for a figurative interpretation of puruṣa-vyāghra. Here the phrase is a metaphor, in which the Lord is calling Arjuna a tiger only to indicate his courage and prowess as a warrior. The word “tiger” in this phrase applies to these two characteristics that the tiger and Arjuna have in common, not to the primary sense of a tiger’s shape, habits, and so forth.

In the same way, Vedic texts that appear to support monistic ideas should not be abandoned as ambiguous babblings just because their primary meaning contradicts the conclusion of Shrila Vyasa’s trance. Rather, we should interpret these statements in a way consistent with the underlying purport of the Vedas. Accepting them literally will lead to confusion, and rejecting them outright may lead to contempt for the apaurusheya-shabda. In the opinion of Shrila Jiva Gosvami, one must search for secondary meanings that agree with Shrila

To support this judgment, Shrila Jiva Gosvami refers us to Sutras 3.2.19 and 20 of the Vedanta. The Vedanta-sutra is divided into four chapters (adhyayas), each having four sections (padas). These are further divided into adhikaranas. Each adhikarana includes a topic statement from the Upanishads followed by a doubt concerning that statement, then an opponent's position (purva-paksha), then the right conclusion (siddhanta), and finally sangati, a demonstration of how the adhikarana relates to other adhikaranas. Some sutras are simply antitheses that represent the opinions of various sages and philosophers. These are always followed by siddhanta-sutras.

Sutra 3.2.18 establishes that the purpose behind mentioning the jiva as a reflection of the Paramatma is not to show that the Paramatma becomes the jiva by reflection but to show that the Paramatma is different from the jiva in the same way that any real object is different from its reflection. If an object and its reflection were absolutely nondifferent, they could not be distinguished from each other. Thus the metaphor of the sun and its reflection in water is presented to establish not the oneness of the Paramatma and the jivatma but just the opposite. Sutra 3.2.18 states, ata eva copama suryakadi-vat: "Therefore, the analogy of the sun and its reflection shows the difference between the Supersoul and the soul."

A doubt is then raised: "This very analogy proves that the Paramatma reflects in avidya and appears to become the jiva. What's wrong with this interpretation?"

The next sutra (3.2.19) answers this doubt. It proves that the jiva is not a reflection of Brahman by pointing out that an upadhi cannot delimit Brahman in the same way that water can delimit land. While commenting on this sutra in his Govinda-bhashya, Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana explains that since Brahman is all-pervading, no object can possibly be distant from Him. Therefore, while the sun can cast a reflection in water because it is some distance from the water, Brahman can cast no reflection in anything because it is all-pervading. Therefore the jiva cannot be a reflection of Brahman.

Although the claim of this sutra is valid, it does not agree with those scriptural statements that seem to indicate the jiva is a reflection of Brahman. It is in this sense that Shrila Jiva Gosvami calls this sutra a purva-paksha. But if Brahman does not reflect as the jiva in the same way that the sun reflects on water, what do the shruti statements to that effect actually mean? They must have some reasonable purpose. Vyasadeva responds with the siddhanta, or conclusion, in Sutra 3.2.20[DDB197]. Although the comparison of the sun and its reflection to[DDB198] Brahman and the jiva is not valid when interpreted literally, it is valid when we consider the secondary characteristics of the analogy: The sun is great like Brahman, and its reflection is small like the jiva. Why do we give this secondary interpretation? To uphold the scripture's conclusions, which constitute the overarching, consistent message of the Vedas and their corollary literature. Other valid interpretations of this analogy are as follows: (1) The jivas' pains and pleasures do not affect Brahman, just as disturbances in a reflection of the sun do not affect the sun itself. (2) As a reflection of the sun is dependent on the sun, so the jivas are dependent on Brahman. (3) The jivas are localized like the sun's reflections, while Brahman extends everywhere,[DDB199] as the sun does through its heat and light.

If we were to similarly analyze the remaining Brahma-sutras, as well as the Vedas and Puranas, we would discover that all the scriptural statements indicating nondifference between God and the living entity, when understood in such a secondary sense, prove to be based not on absolute oneness but on some common attributes between the analogy and its subject, and thus they are faithful to the conclusion of the Vedas. The Vedic texts never propose complete oneness between Brahman and the jiva. Such a proposal would make the whole body of Vedic scripture self-contradictory; it would reduce the Vedas to babble, a waste of time for anyone wanting to study them for spiritual enlightenment. One may here raise the objection, "Instead of rejecting the primary sense of the monistic statements found in shastra, why not accept them and instead reinterpret those statements that teach dualism?" The answer is that the understanding derived from such an approach would contradict Shri Vyasa's experience, which is the nucleus of the Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the topmost pramana.

Next, Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains the nondifference between the Supreme Lord and the jiva from the Vaishnava point of view.

tata evabheda-shastrany ubhayosh cid-rupatvena jiva-samuhasya tad-ekatve 'pi durghaöa-ghaöana-paöiyasya svabhavika-tad-acintya-shaktya svabhavata eva tad-rashmi-paramanu-gana-sthaniyatvat tad-vyatirekenavyatirekena ca virodham parihriyagre muhur api tad-etad-vyasa-samadhi-labdha-siddhanta-yojanaya yojaniyani.

Therefore the scriptural statements instructing us about the nondifference between the jivas and Brahman should be reconciled so as to agree with the conclusions Vyasa came to in His trance. This is accomplished by first removing the apparent contradiction in the jivas' being both different and nondifferent from Brahman: From these statements teaching nondifference we should understand that the jivas are one with Brahman in the sense that both they and Brahman are pure spiritual entities, while by Brahman's inconceivable, natural potency, which makes even the impossible possible, the jivas are also innately distinct from Brahman by virtue of their being His parts, like the infinitesimal rays of the sun's light.

COMMENTARY

Monistic Statements Need Interpretation

Here Shrila Jiva Gosvami gives his definitive opinion about the relation between the jivas and the Supreme Lord. Both the Lord and the jivas are naturally conscious beings, and it is primarily this common trait that the Vedic literature refers to when it speaks about their oneness. The purpose of these statements is to help us understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is beyond our experience. We know we are conscious, and so to give us some idea of His nature the Vedas employ various analogies and metaphors to illustrate that the Lord is conscious like us. In the course of these descriptions, we jivas are sometimes described as nondifferent from Him.

Thus we should never misunderstand the Vedic statements about oneness to mean that the Lord and the jiva are one in all respects. When we read "He was a tiger in battle" we do not think that a man actually turned into a tiger. Rather, we accept a secondary meaning and understand that in battle the man was as ferocious as a tiger. We must accept similar secondary meanings for the statements in the Vedic literature about the jiva's and Brahman's oneness, our criterion always remaining whether our interpretation is consistent with the principles derived from Shrila Vyasadeva's trance.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami is a follower of Shrimad-Bhagavatam's acintya-bhedabheda philosophy, which he alludes to in the last sentence of this Text. Acintya-bhedabheda means "inconceivable, simultaneous oneness and difference" between the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the living entity, or in other words between the energetic source and its energy. The energy cannot exist without the energetic and is thus in one sense identical to it. At the same time, the energy can be said to be different from the energetic source because the energy's activities are perceived to be separate from the energetic. Logically, such a relation is ultimately inconceivable.

The jivas are like atomic rays of light in relation to the sunlike Lord. As the Shvetashvatara Upanishad (6.8) states, parasya shaktir vividhaiva shruyate: "The Supreme Lord has manifold energies." Just as the rays of sunlight are neither completely different from nor exactly the same as the sun, so the jivas are simultaneously one with and different from the Lord. The Vedas' descriptions of nondifference refer to the qualitative oneness of the Lord and the jivas, and the Vedas' descriptions of difference refer to their quantitative difference.

The Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (2.1.20) provides an analogy to help us understand: yathagneh visphulinga vyuccaranti evam eva asmad atmanah sarve pranah sarve lokah sarve devah sarvani bhutani vyuccaranti. "Just as sparks emanate from a fire, so all these vital airs, planets, demigods, and living beings come from the Personality of Godhead." Sparks are obviously different from the fire that manifests them, but because they possess in minute quantity such fiery qualities as heat and light, they can be said to be "one with" the fire as well. In the same way, the jivas can be said to be simultaneously different from and one with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Any apparent inconsistency in this relationship is resolved by the inconceivable creative energy of the Supreme Lord, which can make the impossible possible.

One should not confuse this inconceivable nature of the Lord with the inexplicable (anirvacaniya) nature that the Mayavadis ascribe to Maya. They say that Maya is neither sat ("real") nor asat ("unreal") and is hence indescribable. Vaishnavas, however, do not say that the Lord and His energies are indescribable, for the scriptures describe both. Instead Vaishnavas say that because the Lord's nature and qualities are inconceivable to our limited mind and intellect, the Lord can be understood only through shabda-pramana. Some of the Lord's inconceivable features are mentioned in the Ishopanishad (5):

tad ejati tan naijati tad dure tad v antike
tad antarasya sarvasya tad u sarvasyasya bahyatah

"The Supreme Lord walks and does not walk. He is far away but He is very near as well. He is within everything, and yet He is outside of everything."

Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana gives us another analogy that may help us understand acintya-bhedabheda-tattva: A fair-skinned brahmana boy and a dark-skinned brahmana boy are the same in terms of caste but are different as individuals. Similarly, the Supreme Lord and the jiva are one in that they both possess consciousness, but they are different in that the Lord is the all-pervading, all-knowing, independent controller of Maya, whereas the jiva is localized and may be the ignorant, dependent slave of Maya.

Sometimes the Vedas equate the jiva with Brahman because he is subservient to Brahman. The principle behind this idea is not unfamiliar. An ambassador, for example, is in one sense equal to the chief of state he represents, and because of this equivalence any respect or disrespect shown the ambassador redounds upon his master. The reason why people accept a rough equivalence between the two is that the ambassador has some of the master's power, but no one would ever foolishly consider them identical in all respects. The Mayavadis err by choosing to see just one side of the situation and emphasizing only the nondifference between the jiva and Brahman.

One should not deal with the Vedas according to the logic of "ardha-kukkuöi,"¹⁰ accepting only statements favorable to one's viewpoint and rejecting opposing ones. The Vedas contain statements declaring both the difference and the nondifference between Brahman and the jiva. These seemingly contradictory views can most naturally be reconciled by the application of the acintya-bhedabheda philosophy. This doctrine of Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu's is the greatest gift of philosophy to the world. His teachings do not contradict any Vedic scripture or authentic point of view; rather, they resolve the apparent contradictions in the Vedic literature in accordance with the Vedas' final conclusions. His teachings are the natural and direct explanation of the Vedic literature.

In summary, what follows are the ideas underlying the Vedic statements that speak of the oneness of Brahman and the jivas, employing the analogies of reflection and delimitation:

1. The jiva, like Brahman, is by nature purely conscious.
2. The jiva, like Brahman, is distinct from matter.
3. The jiva is one of Brahman's energies.
4. The jiva is eternally dependent on Brahman.
5. The jiva can never be absolutely one with Brahman.
6. The jiva is constitutionally the eternal servitor of Brahman.
7. The analogies of reflection and delimitation help us understand the purely spiritual nature of Brahman.

In the Paramatma-sandarbha Shrila Jiva Gosvami will further describe the living entity and his relationship with the Supreme Lord. In the next Text he summarizes the facts concerning abhidheya, the process for realizing this subject.

tad evam mayashrayatva-maya-mohitatvabhyam sthite dvayor bhedo daivi hy esha ity-adi-nyayena tad-bhajanasyaivaabhidheyatvam ayatam.

Since the Supreme Lord and the jiva thus have distinct identities, the Lord being the foundation of Maya and the jiva being deluded by her, we can conclude that devotional service to the Lord is the only recommended method for self-realization. This conclusion follows logically from such scriptural statements as the following one in the Bhagavad-gita [7.14]: "This divine energy of Mine, consisting of the three modes of material nature, is difficult to overcome. Only those who have surrendered unto Me can easily cross beyond it." [gpd200]

COMMENTARY

Devotional Service Is the Abhidheya

Shrila Vyasadeva saw that the Supreme Lord is the foundation of Maya: mayam ca tad-apashrayam (Bhag. 1.7.4). He also saw that only the living entity is deluded by Maya: yaya sammohito jivah (Bhag. 1.7.5). Thus the Supreme Lord and the jiva are naturally distinct, for the Lord never comes under Maya's spell. The Lord can never turn into a jiva, and no jiva can ever make himself God. Shrila Vyasadeva also saw that the means for the jiva's release from bondage is devotional service to the Supreme Lord: bhakti-yogam adbhutah (Bhag. 1.7.6).

In this Text the word eva in the phrase tad bhajanasya eva means "only" and indicates that no process other than bhakti-yoga can cut the bonds of Maya. No other method, not even jnana-yoga or ashöanga-yoga, is potent enough to permanently relieve the jivas' miseries. As Lord Krishna declares in the Bhagavad-gita (7.14): daivi hy esha guna-mayi mama maya duratyaya/ mam eva ye prapadyante mayam etam taranti te. Maya, the divine energy of the Lord, cannot possibly be overcome by anyone except the person who surrenders unto Him. Other paths may at best elevate a person to the mode of goodness by purifying his heart of the lower modes, but they cannot elevate him to full transcendence without the merciful help of bhakti.

Narada Muni confirms this in his teachings to Yudhishöthira Maharaja (Bhag. 7.15.28–29):

shad-varga-samyamaikantah sarva niyama-codanah tad-anta yadi no yogan avaheyuh shramavahah

yatha vartadayo hy artha yogasyartham na bibhrati anarthaya bhaveyuh sma purtam ishöam tathasatah

“Ritualistic ceremonies, regulative principles, austerities, and the practice of yoga are all meant to control the senses and mind, but even after one is able to control the senses and mind, if he does not come to the point of meditation upon the Supreme Lord, all such activities are simply labor in frustration. As professional activities or business profits cannot help one in spiritual advancement but are a source of material entanglement, the Vedic ritualistic ceremonies cannot help anyone who is not a devotee of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.”

In this Text the word bhede (“difference”) is also significant. By using it Shrila Jiva Gosvami emphasizes that unless the jiva clearly understands he is both different from and subordinate to the Supreme Lord, he will not become interested in pursuing devotional service. This conviction is essential for advancement in spiritual life. The natural tendency of a conditioned soul is to think himself the controller, the lord of all he surveys, and this delusion makes him loathe the very idea of surrendering to the Lord. Indeed, this tendency to control remains a great peril even for those actively engaged in bhakti-yoga, since the jivas’ desires to control are very deep-rooted and can sprout forth at any time, choking off the tender creeper of devotion. Unless a candidate for unalloyed bhakti vigilantly guards against residual desires to be the master of all, these desires will likely manifest themselves and slow his progress toward pure Krishna consciousness.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami concludes this part of his discussion with a reference to the prayojana, or final goal, of bhakti-yoga.

TEXT 45

From the above discussion we can see that the Personality of Godhead is the most deserving recipient of perfect love because He instructs all people about their ultimate welfare, He removes all sorrows, He is everyone’s Supreme Self (like the sun in relation to its rays), and He is perfectly endowed with all wonderful qualities. Thus is established the final goal of all endeavor (prayojana).

COMMENTARY

Love of God Is the Goal of Life

The Vedas provide education in religious practice (dharma), economic development (artha), regulated sense enjoyment (kama), and ultimately liberation from the cycle of birth and death (moksha). These four are known as the purusharthas, or goals of human life. On the basis of logic or scriptural authority, every school of Indian philosophy tries to direct the jivas toward liberation, which puts an end to all miseries.

Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu’s teachings, however, lead beyond liberation. When Sanatana Gosvami approached Shri Chaitanya to inquire about spiritual life, his first question was “What is my duty after liberation?” This question was revolutionary. Before this, almost no one would inquire about a fifth purushartha; liberation was considered the ultimate goal. But Lord Chaitanya explained to Sanatana that prema, love of God, is the fifth and ultimate goal of life (pancama-purushartha): prema pum-artho mahan. Lord Chaitanya established this purushartha with reference to the Vedas, and in the course of doing so He relied especially on “the spotless Purana,” Shrimad-Bhagavatam, promoting it as the ultimate scriptural authority. Along with the final goal of pure love of God, Shri Chaitanya also established that Lord Krishna is the most complete manifestation of God and therefore the most perfect object of loving devotional service.

Prior to Lord Chaitanya, Vaishnavas generally rendered reverential devotional service to the Supreme Lord in His opulent feature. Only a few rare souls knew the true conclusion of the Vedic teachings. Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, however, revealed to all His followers the fifth goal—love of God—and ordered them to propagate it everywhere. If a person makes prema his ultimate goal in life, he will not detest the material world (as impersonalists do), because he will appreciate it as the creation of his beloved Lord. Following the example of Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, a devotee should see everything in this world in relation to the Supreme Lord and use whatever he can in His devotional service. One who adopts this correct outlook will quickly be endowed with all good qualities. The evil traits of lust, greed, envy, and so on will depart from him. Treating every living being as part and parcel of the Lord, he will become everyone’s well-wishing friend and not think of harming or exploiting anyone, even in his dreams.

With the followers of Lord Chaitanya able to cultivate such an attitude, it is clear that His teachings are the most sublime, practical, and versatile of all spiritual philosophies. Although these teachings emphasize giving up this world and going to the spiritual world, following them also improves the quality of life here. Lord Chaitanya’s teachings are thus suitable for all people to study and practice, regardless of caste, creed, or nationality.

By contrast, when a spiritual practitioner makes liberation his final objective, he will almost never develop a loving relationship with the Supreme Lord. Rather, he will attempt to use the Supreme Lord to achieve his goal. It is not uncommon to find liberationists who at first worship the Deity forms of Radha-Krishna and then discard these forms at a supposedly higher stage of development, when they imagine they have advanced to the level of Brahman realization. Such deluded souls think that because they have achieved oneness with the Supreme they no longer need the Deity forms.

For the Mayavadis, then, the Lord is nothing more than a means to liberation, and thus their impersonalistic philosophy is the ultimate form of selfishness and blasphemy. Based on detachment and introversion, their doctrine cannot bring warmth and sympathy, compassion and serenity, into human society. It only depersonalizes human life.

A pure devotee advancing on the path of loving devotional service is not inclined to demand anything of his Lord, not even liberation. He desires only to please his worshipable Lord eternally. To that end he cheerfully tolerates any tribulation. Such unconditional love is in fact the prayojana, or goal of life, promoted by Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Although in the previous Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami said that a jiva should worship the Lord to get free from the clutches of Maya, here he goes further: he rejects liberation as the prayojana and hints at a new goal—love of Godhead, prema-bhakti. Shri Jiva will present his full discussion on prema-bhakti later, in Shri Priti-sandarbha.

In this Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami gives four reasons why the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the most suitable object of love. The first reason is that the Supreme Lord is always thinking of every jiva’s welfare. Therefore He frequently teaches the conditioned souls various ways to better themselves. He comes Himself to give direct instruction, as He did when He taught Arjuna on the Battlefield of Kurukshetra and, as Veda-vyasa, compiled the Vedic literature. To preach His message He also sends His devotees to this material world as good-will ambassadors. Even on the material level the Supreme Lord takes care of all living beings by impartially supplying them with such essentials as light, air, water, and food. Even atheists and agnostics are provided for.

The second reason why the Supreme Lord is the most worthy object of love is that He relieves the miseries of the conditioned souls by helping to liberate them from illusion. To take advantage of this help, however, the jivas must surrender to Him:

“[Lord Krishna said to Arjuna:] ‘Abandon all varieties of religion and just surrender unto Me. I shall deliver you from all sinful reactions. Do not fear’” (Bg. 18.66).

The third reason why Shri Krishna is the most lovable object is that He is the ultimate svarupa, or Self, of all beings, just as the sun globe is the ultimate basis of the sun’s rays. The sun’s rays always depend on the sun, and they are glorious only in relation to the sun. In the same way, the jivas perpetually depend on the Personality of Godhead and become glorious only when they reawaken their true relationship with Him through bhakti-yoga. Even material objects find peace only when they are united with their source: rivers all naturally seek the ocean and become finally calm when they reach that goal; similarly, an earthy object separated from the earth, such as an apple thrown into the air, will be spontaneously attracted to return to the earth. We also see that human beings naturally want to revere those they consider superior. Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is the ultimate superior being, and therefore He is the ideal person in whom all jivas may repose their reverence and love.

The last reason why Shri Krishna is the best object of love is that He possesses all wonderful, matchless qualities to their fullest extent. Of all the Supreme Lord’s own direct manifestations, His original two-handed form as a cowherd boy is the most beautiful and attractive. Thus Shrila Rupa Gosvami writes in his Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (1.2.59)11:

siddhantatas tv abhede ’pi krishna-shrisha-svarupayoh
rasenotkrishyate krishna-rupam esha rasa-sthitih

“Although in principle there is no difference between the personalities of Lord Krishna and Lord Narayana, the husband of the goddess of fortune, still Shri Krishna’s form is the unparalleled reservoir of rasas. This, indeed, is the law of rasas.”

Shrila Vyasa saw this same Krishna in trance, along with all His personal attributes and potencies. He saw that love of Krishna is the ultimate goal of life: krishne parama-purushe bhaktih (Bhag. 1.7.7). Thus we can conclude by both logic and scriptural analysis that Lord Krishna is the supreme object of love. He is the actual prayojana, the ultimate goal of life.

Next Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains the importance of sadhana-bhakti, devotional service in practice.

TEXT 46

In trance Shrila Vyasadeva also perceived the process of self-realization (abhidheya), as described above [in Text 44]. Then, to propagate it He composed for the saintly Vaishnavas this scripture called Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Shri Suta Gosvami describes all this in the verse beginning anartha- [Bhag. 1.7.6]. In this verse the word bhakti-yoga refers to sadhana-bhakti, regulated devotional service, which is characterized by hearing, chanting, and so on, and not to prema-bhakti, devotional service in pure love of God. This is the correct interpretation because sadhana-bhakti depends on instruction, while love of God depends only on the Lord’s grace.

tathapi tasya tat-prasada-hetos tat-prema-phala-garbhatvat sakshad evanarthopashamanatvam, na tv anya-sapekshatvena yat karmabhir yat tapasa jnana-vairagyayatash ca yat ity-adau sarvam mad-bhakti-yogena mad-bhakto labhate 'njasa svargapavargam ity-adeh. jnanades tu bhakti-sapekshatvam eva shreyah-shritim bhaktim ity-adeh. atha va anarthasya samsara-vyasanasya tavat sakshad avyavadhanenopashamanam sammohadi-dvayasya tu premakhya-sviya-phala-dvarenety arthah. atah purva-vad evatrabhidheyam darshitam.

Even so, sadhana-bhakti, being the means for gaining the Lord's grace, ultimately matures into love of Godhead. Thus it is said that sadhana-bhakti directly removes the jiva's miseries (anarthopashamam sakshad), without depending on anything else. As the Lord states in the Shrimad-Bhagavatam [11.20.32–33], "Everything that can be achieved by fruitive activities, penance, knowledge, detachment, mystic yoga, charity, religious duties, and all other means of perfecting life is easily achieved by My devotee through loving service unto Me. If somehow or other My devotee desires promotion to heaven, liberation, or residence in My abode, he easily achieves such benedictions." By contrast, such methods as cultivating knowledge depend on devotional service for success, as shown in such statements as the following [Bhag. 10.14.4]: "My dear Lord, devotional service unto You is the best path for self-realization. If someone gives up that path and engages in the cultivation of speculative knowledge, he will simply undergo a troublesome process and will not achieve his desired result. As a person who beats an empty husk of wheat cannot get grain, one who simply speculates cannot achieve self-realization. His only gain is trouble."

Or else the meaning of anarthopashamam sakshad is that sadhana-bhakti, without relying on any intermediate process, directly counteracts the material miseries but that only pure love of God, the mature fruit of sadhana-bhakti, can counteract the two fundamental faults of bewilderment and misidentification. Thus the abhidheya is expressed here [Bhag. 1.7.6] as it was before [Texts 29 and 32].

COMMENTARY

The Definition of Abhidheya

In Text 44 Jiva Gosvami concluded from his analysis of Shrila Vyasa's trance that Shrimad-Bhagavatam's abhidheya-tattva is devotional service to the Supreme Lord. Vyasadeva also saw in His trance that the miseries of the jivas can be vanquished by bhakti-yoga alone, and that this practice of bhakti-yoga will further lead to pure love of Godhead, which brings one direct realization of the Lord. To broadcast this knowledge He compiled the beautiful Bhagavatam and taught it to His son, Shukadeva Gosvami.

The word bhakti-yoga is used twice in the Bhagavatam verses describing Shrila Vyasadeva's trance. Shrila Jiva Gosvami says that the first occurrence of this word (Bhag. 1.7.4) refers to spontaneous devotional service in full realization of prema, because only on that level of pure love can one have direct personal realization of the Supreme Lord. The second occurrence (Bhag. 1.7.6) refers to devotional service in practice, sadhana-bhakti. Unlike sadhana-bhakti, prema-bhakti does not depend on instruction because at that stage a devotee offers devotional service to the Lord spontaneously.

Sadhana-bhakti must be learned from scripture and from saintly persons; it is motivated for the most part by scriptural injunctions. As the devotee performs the regulated practice of bhakti, his heart is gradually purified and he becomes fit for spontaneous devotional service in love of God. Only in this sense can it be said that sadhana-bhakti matures into prema-bhakti. But in fact prema, the internal potency of the Lord, manifests in the aspiring devotee's heart by the grace of the Lord and His pure devotee.

In the Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu Shrila Rupa Gosvami states that devotional service which is executed by the senses and which matures into bhava-bhakti is called sadhana-bhakti. When bhava-bhakti intensifies it is called prema-bhakti. The only difference between the two is the degree of intensity: bhava-bhakti is the immature state of prema-bhakti. Bhava-bhakti is like the dawn, prema-bhakti like high noon. Thus Shrila Rupa Gosvami defines prema-bhakti as follows:

samyan-mashrinita-svanto mamatvatishayankitah
bhavah sa eva sandratma budhaih prema nigadyate

“When bhava becomes very dense and the devotee’s heart melts completely out of intense love for the Lord and great attachment to Him, that state of bhava is called prema by learned scholars” (Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu 1.4.1).

Because devotion belongs to the internal potency (svarupa-shakti) of the Supreme Lord, it is as potent as He is and can certainly fulfill all a devotee’s desires. A pure devotee has no desire except to render the Lord service, but if somehow he does have some other desire, to fulfill it he need not take to any process other than bhakti. This is the supreme independence of pure devotional service.

On the other hand, other progressive processes, such as jnana-yoga or ashöanga-yoga, depend on the grace of bhakti for success. Without the merciful glance of devotion, none of these processes can ever give their practitioners their own intended fruits, what to speak of love of God. Just as the body and the senses are worthless without the soul, so these paths are worthless without devotion. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam, therefore, after Shukadeva Gosvami lists various demigods one may worship to fulfill material desires, he concludes:

tivrena bhakti-yogena yajeta purusham param

“A person who has broader intelligence, whether he is full of material desires, without any material desires, or desiring only liberation, must by all means worship the supreme whole, the Personality of Godhead” (Bhag. 2.3.10). This statement reveals that bhakti-yoga is the key to fulfilling all desires, whether spiritual or mundane. Shrila Rupa Gosvami confirms this in his Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (1.2.251): kintu jnana-virakty-adi-sadhyam bhaktyaiva sidhyati. “Indeed, only with the aid of bhakti can one attain the fruits available through the cultivation of knowledge, detachment, and so on.” The knowledge and detachment mentioned here are not those related with the Lord and His devotional service. Indeed, the Bhagavatam verse quoted in this Text (10.14.4) makes it explicit that knowledge of impersonal Brahman is certainly among those items not related to the Lord and His devotional service.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.7.6 states, anarthopashamam sakshad bhakti-yogam: “Bhakti-yoga directly mitigates the miseries of the conditioned soul.” Shrila Jiva Gosvami gives two explanations of the word sakshad (“direct”) in this context. He says that bhakti in the first sense is sadhana-bhakti, which, unaided by any other process, directly removes all such worldly miseries as mental and physical disturbances caused by the dualities of heat and cold. However, to dispel the underlying delusion of bodily attachment we need bhakti in the second sense—namely, prema-bhakti, love of God, the fruit of sadhana-bhakti,

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami discusses the prayojana-tattva as Vyasadeva realized it.

Next, to clarify the final goal (prayojana), as described above [in Bhag. 1.7.4–6], and to affirm that the purna-purusha mentioned above [in Bhag. 1.7.4] is in fact Lord Krishna, Suta Gosvami speaks the verse beginning yasyam [Bhag. 1.7.7]. While describing the effect of hearing Shrimad-Bhagavatam in this verse, he reveals another of Shrila Vyasadeva's realizations. In this verse the word bhakti refers to pure love of Godhead, because that is the goal achieved through executing the devotional practice of hearing. The word utpadyate ("is generated") here means "becomes manifest." And the manifestation of pure love of Godhead is shoka-moha-bhayapaha—that is, it destroys all lamentation, illusion, and fear, the implication being that even their subtle remnants are destroyed. This is confirmed by the words of Shri Rishabhadeva:

"Therefore, until one has love for Lord Vasudeva, who is none other than Myself, he is certainly not delivered from having to accept a material body again and again" [Bhag. 5.5.6].

In this verse [Bhag. 1.7.7] the word parama-purushe ("for the Supreme Person") refers to the same purna-purusha ("complete person") mentioned earlier [Bhag. 1.7.4]. What is His form? To this Shri Suta Gosvami replies, "Krishna." In other words, for those whose hearts are enriched with thousands of scriptural statements such as krishnas tu bhagavan svayam ("Krishna is the original Personality of Godhead"; [Bhag. 1.3.23]), and for those who are attracted to His glories and fame by hearing through a bona fide disciplic succession, as soon as they hear His name their minds are filled with His presence. And as soon as such persons chant the first syllable of His name while uttering His mantra, the Lord's attention is also drawn to the chanter. That is the form denoted by the word Krishna in this verse [Bhag. 1.7.7]. This is confirmed by the author of Nama-kaumudi: "The conventional meanings of the name Krishna are 'one who is black like a tamala tree,' 'He who was breast-fed by Shri Yashoda,' and 'the Supreme Brahman.'"

COMMENTARY

Devotional Service Completely Frees One from Material Miseries

In Text 45 Shrila Jiva Gosvami summarized Shrila Vyasadeva's realizations concerning prayojana-tattva. Suta Gosvami reaffirms these realizations in Bhagavatam 1.7.7, where he states that just by listening to the Bhagavatam one will attain love of Godhead. Bhakti here must refer to love of Godhead and not sadhana-bhakti, devotional service in practice, since hearing Shrimad-Bhagavatam is itself the sadhana. In this verse the verb utpadyate ("is generated") means not that love of God is created anew but that it becomes manifest in the heart. Because love of God is His internal potency, it is never created.

As a concomitant effect of love of God, the devotee is freed from all lamentation, illusion, and fear. Indeed, even their dormant seeds are destroyed, so powerful is love of Krishna. The root cause of a jiva's misery is his forgetfulness of the Lord, but when he attains love of God He never forgets the Lord.

One who attains love for Krishna loses interest in all kinds of other pleasures, including even the bliss of impersonal realization. All his doubts are vanquished and all his desires completely satisfied. Nothing can disturb him or deviate his mind from devotional service. In this regard Shrila Rupa Gosvami writes (Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu 1.2. 58):

tatrapy ekantinam shreshöha govinda-hrita-manasah
yesham shrisha-prasado'pi mano hartum na shaknuyat

"Among the various kinds of unalloyed devotees of the Lord, the best are those whose hearts have been captivated by Lord Govinda. Indeed, such devotees have no attraction or desire even for the favor of Lord Narayana, the husband of the supreme goddess of fortune."

A side benefit of such pure love for Krishna, as Shrila Jiva Gosvami mentions in text 47.1, is that even the seeds of lamentation, illusion, and fear are destroyed. These seeds are rooted deeply in the soil of bodily attachment. B[DDB201]y quoting Lord Rishabhadeva here,[DDB202] Shrila Jiva Gosvami emphasizes that there is no way to eradicate this bodily attachment other than by becoming attached to Krishna. And one can easily attain this prayojana of attachment to Krishna by hearing Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Vyasadeva saw all this in His trance.

Krishna, referred to in Bhagavatam 1.7.7 as parama-pu[DDB203]rusha, the Supreme Person, is identical with the purna-purusha whom Vyasa saw along with His potencies. In Text 30 Shrila Jiva Gosvami has already explained that this purna-purusha is the original Personality of Godhead. Now he identifies that Supreme Person as Lord Shri Krishna.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami next explains who that Krishna is. History records various Krishnas. For example, Arjuna was also called Krishna, as shown in Bhagavatam 1.8.43, where Shrimati Kuntidevi addresses Lord Krishna as Krishna-sakha, "the friend of Krishna [Arjuna]." And Vyasadeva was also sometimes called Krishna. Nonetheless, as soon as Vaishnavas coming in the authorized lines of disciplic succession hear the word "Krishna," the form that immediately comes to mind is Lord Krishna's, not Arjuna's or Vyasa's or that of any other ancient or modern person of the same name. According to Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana, this is the spontaneous experience of eminent personalities like Suta Gosvami, Shaunaka Rishi, and Jayadeva Gosvami. Thus the normal, conventional meaning of the name Krishna is the two-handed Lord Krishna who appeared as a cowherd in Vraja.

As we have described above, words may have various secondary meanings in addition to their primary ones. The primary meaning of a word is the image that comes to [DDB204]mind upon first hearing or reading it, before any related thought or analysis can modify its meaning. Thus the primary meaning of the name "Krishna" is Lord Shri Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Shri Lakshmidhara Pandita, while commenting on the meanings of various names of the Lord in his Nama-kaumudi, defines "Krishna" as "He who is black like the tamala tree." In Vaishnava literature Krishna's bodily hue is often likened to the color of the tamala tree, which is commonly found in the Vrindavana area. Just defining Krishna's complexion, however, leaves open the possibility that the Krishna referred to is the son of Devaki in Mathura and Dvaraka. Therefore Lakshmidhara further specifies the meaning as "the one who was suckled by Shrimati Yashoda." This fixes the primary meaning of "Krishna" as the young cowherd son of Yashoda in Vrindavana, since the older Krishna of Mathura does not drink Mother Yashoda's breast milk. If doubts still linger about this Krishna's being the Supreme Lord—since there could always be someone else named Krishna from Vrindavana who has a blackish complexion and a mother named Yashoda—Lakshmidhara further limits the meaning of "Krishna" to "the Supreme Brahman," the Personality of Godhead.

In Sanskrit, words have a derived meaning (yaugika), which may sometimes differ from their conventional usage (rudhi). The rudhi, or conventional meaning, is always the primary meaning. In cases where the primary, conventional meaning differs from the derived meaning, the primary meaning always takes precedence: yogad rudhir baliyasi. In the case of the name "Krishna," the derived meaning is also the Supreme Person, as the Mahabharata (Udyoga-parva 70.5) explains:

krishir bhu-vacakam shabdo nash ca nirvriti-vacakah vishnus tad-bhava-yogac ca krishno bhavati shashvatah

"The syllable 'krish' denotes existence, and the syllable 'na' denotes bliss. The eternal Lord Krishna is also always Vishnu in both these senses."

The Amara-kosha Sanskrit dictionary (1.18) states, vishnur narayanah krishno vaikunöha vishöara-shravah: "The names Vishnu, Narayana, Krishna, and Vaikunöha are synonymous." One may say that these are names of Vishnu, but after listing thirty-nine such names, the Amara-kosha states, vasudevo 'sya janakah: "His father is Vasudeva." By way of further confirmation that Krishna is supreme, the author then immediately lists the names of Lord Balarama, Krishna's brother.

Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana quotes the following verse in his commentary on Shri Vishnu-sahasra-nama (20), while defining the name "Krishna":

krishir bhu-vacakah shabdo nash ca nirvriti-samjnakah tayloraikyam param brahma krishna ity abhidhiyate

"The syllable 'krish' means 'existence,' and the syllable 'na' means 'bliss.' The combination of these two is 'Krishna,' the name of the Supreme Personality of Godhead" (Gopala-tapani Up., Purva 1.1). In this way both the conventional and the derived meanings of the name "Krishna" are the same—the two-handed cowherd boy who is the son of Mother Yashoda and also the Supreme Godhead. Since Vyasadeva saw this particular Krishna in His trance, the ultimate goal of life must be to attain love of Krishna.

The next point Shrila Jiva Gosvami makes is that when the word Krishna is uttered in a mantra, as in the Hare Krishna maha-mantra, this sound attracts the attention of Lord Krishna Himself the very moment the first syllable is vibrated. This is so because the name "Krishna" is identical with the person Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. For verification we can examine the experience of many realized souls who attained perfection by chanting the Hare Krishna mantra.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains that the bliss derived from love of Godhead is far superior to that derived from impersonal realization.

Shrila Vyasadeva experienced that this final goal [the bliss of pure love of God] is superior to even brahmananda, the happiness derived from realizing the impersonal aspect of the Supreme. This we know because Vyasadeva taught Shukadeva Gosvami Shrimad-Bhagavatam so he could taste the special bliss derived from love of Godhead, even though Shukadeva was already absorbed in brahmananda. Suta Gosvami states this in the verse beginning sa-samhitam [Bhag. 1.7.8]. In this verse the phrase kritvanukramya ("after compiling and revising") indicates that Vyasadeva first wrote Shrimad-Bhagavatam in an abbreviated form and that later on, after being instructed by Shri Narada Muni, He expanded and rearranged it. Thus two apparently contradictory statements are reconciled—one found here [in the Bhagavatam] saying that the Bhagavatam was composed after the Mahabharata, and the other found elsewhere [the Skanda Purana, Prabhasa-khanda 2.94], saying that the Mahabharata was compiled after the eighteen Puranas. The word nivritti-nirata ("attached to renunciation") implies that because of his absorption in the bliss of Brahman, Shri Shukadeva was living a life of complete renunciation, from which he never deviated.

COMMENTARY

Love of God Is Superior to the Bliss of Brahman

One of Shrila Vyasadeva's most profound realizations described in Shrimad-Bhagavatam was that bhakty-ananda, the bliss derived from rendering loving devotional service to Krishna, is superior to brahmananda, the bliss derived from merging into the impersonal Brahman. Shrila Rupa Gosvami confirms this superiority in his Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (1.1.38):

brahmanando bhaved esha cet parardha-guni-kritah
naiti bhakti-sukhambhodheh paramanu-tulam api

"Even if the happiness of Brahman realization is multiplied trillions of times, it would not equal even a single drop of the ocean of the bliss derived from devotional service." Indeed, the bliss of pure devotional service always minimizes the happiness of Brahman realization.

A father naturally wants to give His son the best thing he has. Thus Shrila Vyasadeva taught Shrimad-Bhagavatam to Shukadeva Gosvami. But being Vyasadeva's son was not [DDB205]the only qualification Shukadeva possessed. Perfectly fixed in renunciation, he had no material desires (nivritti-niratam). In other words, he had no ulterior motive that would have led him to misconstrue the meaning of Shrimad-Bhagavatam for material gain, either gross or subtle. It is for this reason that Shrila Vyasadeva regarded Shukadeva as the most qualified of His disciples to hear the Bhagavatam, and by choosing him for this great honor Vyasadeva set the standard for all future students and speakers of Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

In this Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami also resolves a controversy concerning the order in which the Shrimad-Bhagavatam and the Mahabharata were composed. In the passage beginning with the following two verses, the Bhagavatam itself says it was composed after the Mahabharata:

stri-shudra-dvija-bandhunam trayi na shruti-gocara
karma-shreyasi mudhanam shreya evam bhaved iha
iti bharatam akhyanam kripaya munina kritam

evam pravrittasya sada bhutanam shreyasi dvijah sarvatmakenapi yada natushyad dhridayam tatah

"Out of compassion, the great sage thought it wise to do something that would enable even those who were ignorant of how to act for their own welfare to achieve the ultimate goal of life. Thus He compiled the great historical narration called the Mahabharata for women, laborers, and friends of the twice-born because they do not have access to the Vedas. O twice-born brahmanas, still His mind was not satisfied, although He engaged himself in working for the total welfare of all people" (Bhag. 1.4.25–26).

When Vyasa was thus feeling dissatisfied, Narada Muni came and requested Him to compose Shrimad-

Bhagavatam. Elsewhere, however, it is stated that the Mahabharata was spoken after all eighteen Puranas. Shri Baladeva Vidyabhushana, in his commentary on this Text of the Tattva-sandarbha, cites the Matsya Purana (53.70):

ashōadasha-puranani kritva satyavati-sutah
cakre bharatam akhyanam vedarthair upabrimhitam

“After compiling the eighteen Puranas, Vyasadeva, the son of Satyavati, composed the great history called the Mahabharata, which serves as a commentary on the Vedas.”

To resolve this apparent contradiction in the chronology, Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains that Shrila Vyasadeva originally composed the Bhagavatam in an abbreviated form. Later He compiled the great history called Mahabharata out of compassion for those who cannot study the Vedas. But even after completing this great epic, Vyasa still felt a void in His heart. Thereafter Narada Muni instructed Him to produce a new, expanded edition of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the one currently available.

Moreover, from Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.3.43, quoted below, we can understand that this later edition was composed after Lord Krishna’s disappearance from the earth. Earlier Vyasa had composed the Mahabharata for the welfare of people in the grip of Kali. Parikshit Maharaja’s chastisement of Kali occurred after the dialogue between Narada Muni and Shrila Vyasadeva, since it was the spread of Kali’s influence that had saddened Vyasa. Prior to Kali’s appearance Vyasadeva had no reason to feel dissatisfied, since Lord Krishna was still present along with all religious principles. The Bhagavatam (1.3.43) confirms that this later edition of Shrimad-Bhagavatam manifested before the brahmana boy Shringi had cursed Maharaja Parikshit, an event that occurred after the disappearance of Lord Shri Krishna:

kalau nashōa-drisham esha puranarko ’dhunoditah

“This Bhagavata Purana is as brilliant as the sun, and it has arisen just after the departure of Lord Krishna to His own abode, accompanied by religion, knowledge, etc. Persons who have lost their vision due to the dense darkness of ignorance in the Age of Kali shall get light from this Purana.” In this connection we can also refer to the statements of Suta Gosvami in the First Canto, Chapter Four.

We can summarize the chronology of the Vedic literature in Kali-yuga as follows: First Shrila Vyasadeva edited the one Veda, the original Yajur Veda, into four Vedas. He then abridged the one billion verses of the Puranas into eighteen Puranas consisting of a total of four hundred thousand verses. These included Shrimad-Bhagavatam in its original, abbreviated form. Then Vyasa composed His epic work, Mahabharata, after which He distilled the essence of the Vedas, Puranas, and Mahabharata into the Vedanta-sutra. Finally He composed His most significant work of all, [DDB207]the full Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which is Vyasadeva’s own commentary on the Vedanta-sutra.

Some traditional scholars believe there were two versions of the Mahabharata. They say it was first compiled soon after the Vedas in one hundred sections, and later Veda-vyasa reduced it to a hundred thousand verses in eighteen sections after compiling the eighteen Puranas. The Mahabharata’s Adi-parva (10.5) states that Shrila Vyasa compiled a samhita with six million verses, of which He gave one hundred thousand to human beings. This Mahabharata was first recited by the sage Vaishampayana to King Janmejaya, Parikshit’s son. Another reference traditional scholars give to support their contention that there were two versions of the Mahabharata is the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad verse cited in Text 12 (B.a. Up. 2.4.10) This verse lists the scriptures that the Supreme Lord breathed out, including the Itihasas, which are listed before the Puranas.

Next Shrila Jiva Gosvami shows that Shrila Vyasadeva’s realization in trance constitutes the epitome of all philosophies, as confirmed by Suta Gosvami.

In reply to a question posed by Shri Shaunaka [Bhag. 1.7.9], Suta Gosvami speaks the verse beginning atmaramash ca [Bhag. 1.7.10], further explaining what Shrila Vyasadeva experienced in trance and showing logically how it is consistent with the experience of all sages who take pleasure in the self. In this verse the word nirgranthah ("free from bondage") means either "beyond the rules and regulations described in the scriptures" or "free from the knot of false ego." The word ahaitukim ("causeless") means "not desiring any results." And to put an end to all doubts, Shri Suta says, "Indeed, the nature of Lord Hari is such that even atmaramas feel attracted to Him."

In the next verse (beginning harer guna; [Bhag. 1.7.11]), Suta reiterates this idea by relating Shukadeva Gosvami's experience. First, when Shukadeva Gosvami heard Shrila Vyasadeva recite a few selected Bhagavatam verses describing Lord Hari's attributes, Shukadeva's attention was drawn away from the bliss of impersonal Brahman and his heart was captivated. Later Shukadeva studied the complete Bhagavatam, despite its vast size. And thereafter Lord Vishnu's devotees became very dear to him, his affection for them growing as he daily discussed the Lord's pastimes with them. Or else the word vishnu-jana-priya means that he became dear to them.

The purport is as follows: The Brahma-vaivarta Purana¹² relates how Shri Shukadeva, even while in the womb of his mother, realized that Lord Shri Krishna could completely dispel Maya's influence by virtue of His independence. Subsequently, on Shukadeva's request, Vyasadeva brought the Lord to His hermitage, and when Shukadeva saw Lord Krishna before him even as he lay within the womb, he became free from Maya's influence. Considering his life successful, Shukadeva at once departed alone. Thereafter Shrila Vyasadeva, knowing that He could control Shukadeva only with Shrimad-Bhagavatam, somehow made him hear some selected Bhagavatam verses describing Lord Krishna's superexcellent characteristics. In this way He captivated Shukadeva's heart, and later He taught him the entire narrative. Thus is declared the supreme glory of Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

From the above we can see that the speaker (Shukadeva Gosvami) and Shrila Vyasadeva had the same realizations. And therefore we should always study the message of Shrimad-Bhagavatam in the light of Shukadeva's realizations, not otherwise. By implication, we should consider any other interpretation merely speculative and thus deviant from the correct understanding.

The verse under discussion [Bhag. 1.7.11] was spoken by Shri Suta Gosvami.

COMMENTARY

Shrimad-Bhagavatam Attracts Even Atmaramas

To explain the essence of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, in Text 29 Jiva Gosvami first analyzed the Bhagavatam's description of Shukadeva's heart. Then he analyzed Shrila Vyasadeva's experience in trance, on the basis of which Vyasa wrote Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Jiva Gosvami concludes the discussion of the present Text by confirming the outcome of these analyses with the words of Shri Suta Gosvami in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.7.10, the famous "atmarama verse." What follows is a list of the major points to be derived from his analysis:

1. The Personality of Godhead is endowed with multifarious potencies in three categories—internal, external, and marginal.
2. The chief and original form of the Lord[DDB209] is Shri Krishna, but Krishna also manifests countless other expansions.
3. Neither the Supreme Lord's Supersoul manifestations nor the impersonal Brahman are independent of Him.
4. The finite living entities are different from the Supreme Lord in their personal identity; they can never be one with Him in an absolute sense.
5. Maya is the external energy of the Lord, deluding those living entities who turn their backs on Him.
6. Maya is a devotee of the Lord and is always subservient to Him.
7. Maya cannot influence the Lord and His internal potencies.
8. The jivas can become free from the bondage of Maya only by surrendering to the Lord and engaging in His devotional service.
9. Hearing the Shrimad-Bhagavatam is devotional service to the Lord and can thus end the jiva's miseries.
10. The bliss one derives by engaging in devotional service to the Lord is so superior to the happiness derived from the realization of impersonal Brahman that even self-satisfied sages (atmaramas) become attracted to the Lord's attributes and pastimes.
11. The purpose of human life is to attain love of God, the mature fruit of devotional service in practice (sadhana-bhakti).
12. Devotional service is supremely independent, like the Personality of Godhead; it does not need the support of any other method of self-realization.

When Suta Gosvami finished describing Shrila Vyasadeva's trance, Shaunaka Rishi asked him, "If Shukadeva Gosvami was completely renounced, having no interest in anything by virtue of being absorbed in the bliss of the self, what caused him to study this lengthy Bhagavata Purana?"

Suta Gosvami replied with these two verses (Bhag. 1.7.10–11): "All different varieties of atmaramas (those who take pleasure in the atma, or spirit self), especially those established on the path of self-realization, though freed from all kinds of material bondage, desire to render unalloyed devotional service unto the Personality of Godhead. This means that the Lord possesses transcendental qualities and therefore can attract everyone, including liberated souls. The heart of the transcendently powerful Shri Shukadeva Gosvami was captivated when he heard a description of Lord Hari's attributes and pastimes, and therefore he undertook the study of this great narration, Shrimad-Bhagavatam. This made him very dear to the devotees of Lord Vishnu.”

By this answer Suta Gosvami confirms all the realizations of Shrila Vyasadeva and Shukadeva Gosvami. First Suta states a general principle[DDB210]—that many self-satisfied persons, although liberated from material bondage, are still eager to engage in Krishna consciousness. Then he mentions Shukadeva Gosvami as a specific instance of this principle’s application. Thus Suta Gosvami establishes that Shukadeva Gosvami was not the only liberated person who became attracted to the Personality of Godhead’s service. On the contrary, Shukadeva’s experience is corroborated by that of many other atmaramas, demonstrating that the only reason why one would reject the bliss of Brahman realization and take up devotional service must be the wonderful, all-attractive attributes of Lord Hari.

By this explanation Shrila Jiva Gosvami shows conclusively that Shukadeva Gosvami, Shrila Vyasadeva, and Suta Gosvami shared the same realizations. Therefore these realizations should form the basis of any genuine study and interpretation of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Interpretations based on something else must be considered deviant from the scripture’s intended meaning.

In Text 27 Shrila Jiva Gosvami disclosed that Shridhara Svami inserted some impersonalistic ideas into his commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Shridhara Svami did this as a preaching strategy to attract the Mayavadis to the Bhagavata philosophy. Jiva Gosvami said there that in such instances he would give his own explanations.

A recent scholar has criticized Shrila Jiva Gosvami for this policy, labeling him an opportunist who accepted only those statements that supported his opinion and belittled others by declaring that they were made with ulterior motives and did not actually express Shridhara Svami’s opinions. This scholar suggests that Jiva Gosvami is not a true follower of Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, who highly revered Shridhara Svami’s Bhavartha-dipika.

But in this Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami further clarifies his policy: He accepts any explanation that complements the realization of Shrila Vyasadeva, Shukadeva Gosvami, and Suta Gosvami—namely that pure devotional service to Lord Krishna is the ultimate goal of life. That this policy reflects the real desire of Lord Chaitanya will be recognized by everyone who knows that Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu was the leading opponent of impersonalism in His time. In debate He defeated two of the leading Mayavadis of His time, Prakashananda Sarasvati and Vasudeva Sarvabhauma, and He frequently condemned the Mayavada interpretation of the Vedanta-sutra. In light of His teachings and example, for Him to embrace a Mayavad[DDB211]a commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam is unlikely and not at all credible.

Vaishnavas coming in disciplic succession do not have the slightest confusion on this point. Lord Chaitanya revered Shridhara Svami’s commentary for two reasons: first, because Shridhara was in fact a great Vaishnava, and second, because his commentary kept the natural sense of the Bhagavatam and with its conclusions supported the Vaishnava siddhanta. Therefore it should be obvious to anyone who reads his commentary that whatever impersonal explanations Shridhara Svami gave did not express his true heart. For example, while commenting on the first verse of the Bhagavatam he states, shrimad-bhagavad-guna-anuvarnana-pradhanam bhagavata-shastram: “Shrimad-Bhagavatam was written chiefly to provide descriptions of the Supreme Lord’s qualities.” In the next verse, while commenting on the word vastavam, he writes, vastava-shabdena vastuno ’msho jivah, vastunah shaktir maya ca, vastunah karyam jagat, tat sarvam vastv eva: “The word vastava indicates that the jiva is part of the Absolute, that Maya is the energy of the Absolute, and that the material world is the creation of the Absolute. All this is real.” This and many similar statements throughout Shridhara Svami’s Bhagavatam commentary make foolish any doubt about his status as a pure Vaishnava. And it is equally foolish to criticize Shrila Jiva Gosvami for not using the impersonalistic portions of Shridhara’s commentary here in his Shaö-sandarbha.

One can fathom the true essence of Shrimad-Bhagavatam only from the viewpoint of Shri Vyasa and Shukadeva Gosvami. Because Shrila Jiva Gosvami held this opinion, he is a true scholar of the Bhagavatam and a true follower of Shri Chaitanya, who desired to see the Bhagavatam established as the final word in philosophy throughout the world. Jiva Gosvami was neither a blind follower of Shri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu nor a blind scholar foolishly trying to understand the supreme scripture without accepting the standard authorities in disciplic succession.

Jiva Gosvami was the leading disciple of Shrila Rupa Gosvami and Shrila Sanatana Gosvami, two principal followers of Shri Chaitanyadeva. The Lord personally instructed them in the science of devotional service and ordered them to write books setting forth His precepts. This they did in a most wonderful way, explaining the intricacies of bhakti-yoga so that no follower in their line would have to speculate or misinterpret the teachings of Lord Chaitanya. Rupa and Sanatana personally trained Shrila Jiva Gosvami in Krishna consciousness. They were so pleased with him that they made him the editor of many of their books. We have no reason, therefore, to doubt that Shrila Jiva Gosvami loyally followed in the footsteps of Shrila Rupa and Sanatana Gosvamis and therefore of Lord Chaitanya. The ultimate proof of this is that one can find no contradictions between the writings of Rupa and Sanatana and those of Jiva Gosvami. Indeed, earlier in Shri Tattva-sandarbha Jiva Gosvami declared that he was writing this work under their order. Moreover, he succeeded Shrila Rupa and Sanatana Gosvamis as leader of the Gaudiya Vaishnavas in Vrindavana, Bengal, and Orissa. This universal recognition of his leadership was explicit acknowledgment of his stature as a dedicated follower of Lord Chaitanya Mahaprabhu.

We learn from Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.2) that Shukadeva Gosvami left his father's house immediately after his birth. According to the Brahma-vaivarta Purana, when Shukadeva was still in his mother's womb he could understand the peril of living in the material world, the risk of being captivated by Maya. He also knew that Krishna can counter Maya's charms, and therefore he [DDB212] had his father, Vyasadeva, bring Lord Krishna from Dvaraka. [DDB213] Only when the Lord Himself promised to protect Shukadeva from Maya did he agree to take birth, and even then he immediately left home to enter the forest. Out of natural affection for His son, Shrila Vyasadeva followed him, calling him to come back. But Shukadeva was completely unattached to material life and paid his father no heed. Vyasadeva was deeply disappointed, since He wanted to teach Shukadeva Shrimad-Bhagavatam. To entice him to return home, Vyasa had some of His disciples recite verses from the Bhagavatam whenever they went to the forest to collect firewood. Once when they were singing these verses, Shukadeva Gosvami heard them. At once his heart was captivated, and he followed the students back to Shri Vyasa. Then Shukadeva, who had already put aside his attachment to the impersonal Brahman, learned the complete Shrimad-Bhagavatam from Shrila Vyasadeva.

At present there is no scriptural reference indicating which verses Shri Shukadeva heard that captivated him, but some Vaishnava scholars state that they included the following three:

yam manyase matuleyam priyam mitram suhrit-tamam akaroh sacivam dutam sauhridam atha saratham

"O King, that personality whom, out of ignorance only, you thought to be your maternal cousin, your very dear friend, well-wisher, counselor, messenger, benefactor, etc., is that very Personality of Godhead, Shri Krishna" (Bhag. 1.9.20).

aho baki yam stana-kala-kuöam jighamsayapayayad apy asadhvi lebhe gatim dhatry-ucitam tato 'nyam kam va dayalum sharanam vrajema

"Alas, how shall I take shelter of one more merciful than He [Krishna], who granted the position of mother to the she-demon Putana although she was unfaithful and she prepared deadly poison to be sucked from her breast?” (Bhag. 3.2.23)

barhapidam naöa-vara-vapuh karnayoh karnikaram bibhrad vasah kanaka-kapisham vaijayantim ca malam randhran venor adhara-sudhayapurayan gopa-vrindair vrindaranyam sva-pada-ramanam pravishad gita-kirtih

“Wearing a peacock-feather ornament upon His head, blue karnikara flowers on His ears, a yellow garment as brilliant as gold, and a Vaijayanti garland, Lord Krishna exhibited His transcendental form as the greatest of dancers as He entered the forest of Vrindavana, beautifying it with the marks of His footprints. He filled the holes of His flute with the nectar of His lips, and the cowherd boys sang His glories” (Bhag. 10.21.5).

These verses describe Lord Krishna’s love for His devotees, His mercy even toward His enemies, and His incomparable charm and beauty.

The history of Shukadeva Gosvami described in the Mahabharata differs from that narrated above. Baladeva Vidyabhushana explains that the two accounts describe events from different days of Lord Brahma.

Having ascertained the prameya of Shrimad-Bhagavatam—that is, what one should learn from it—Shrila Jiva Gosvami next says something about the format of Shri Shaö-sandarbha.

Hereafter, to delineate systematically and thoroughly the message of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, we shall explain in these six Sandarbhas the principles of sambandha, abhidheya, and prayojana, one after the other. This first book, the [DDB214]Tattva-sandarbha, discusses the connection between the subject being described and the text describing it. This connection is mentioned in general terms in Bhagavatam 1.1.2 with the words vedyam vastavam atra vastu: “Here the [DDB215]real reality is to be known.” Commenting on this part of the verse, Shrila Shridhara Svami writes, “Here in this beautiful Bhagavatam the ultimate reality in its highest manifestation is to be known, not reality in terms merely of substance, qualities, and so on, as taught by the Vaisheshikas and others.”

This verse [Bhag. 1.1.2] is spoken by Shri Veda-vyasa.

COMMENTARY

The Subject of the Shaö-sandarbha

Here Shrila Jiva Gosvami informs us that in the six Sandarbhas he will explain in great detail the same sambandha-, abhidheya-, and prayojana-tattva that Shri Vyasadeva and Shukadeva Gosvami realized. He briefly mentioned them in Texts 8 and 9, and now he will elaborate on them on the basis of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. The Tattva-, Bhagavat-, Paramatma-, and Krishna-sandarbha treat the sambanda-tattva, [DDB216]the Bhakti-sandarbha discusses the abhidheya-tattva, and the Priti-sandarbha explains the prayojana-tattva.

The Tattva-sandarbha introduces the subject matter of the six Sandarbhas by establishing the authority of Shrimad-Bhagavatam and saying something about its origin and content. As mentioned earlier, the relationship of a subject with its description is technically called the vacya-vacakata sambandha. The subject of Shrimad-Bhagavatam is revealed in its very second verse: vedyam vastavam atra vastu. "The absolute reality is made understandable herein." As we have already discussed, reality manifests on various levels, but Shrimad-Bhagavatam enlightens us about the ultimate reality, Shri Krishna, who encompasses and reconciles all other realities.

In contrast to Shrila Vyasadeva's presentation in the Bhagavatam, the philosophies formulated by other ancient sages, such as Gautama and Kanada, incompletely describe reality. Gautama, in his system of Nyaya philosophy, says that by understanding the empirical means and objects of knowledge one can free oneself from material miseries. And Kanada, in his system of Vaisheshika philosophy, which was briefly alluded to at the end of this Text, recognizes seven categories of existence: dravya (substances), guna (qualities), karma (motions), samanya (general categories), vishesha (particularities), samavaya (inherence), and abhava (nonexistence). With these seven categories the Vaisheshikas try to explain all of reality. But although the scientific study embodied in philosophies like Nyaya and Vaisheshika may lead to realization of reality on some level, this is far different from realization of the absolute reality, which Shrimad-Bhagavatam makes available. Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains the nature of this reality in the next Text.

"What is the nature of this [DDB218]absolute reality?"

Suta Gosvami answers [Bhag. 1.2.11]:

"The knowers of that absolute reality[DDB219] call it nondual consciousness."

Here the word jnana refers to that entity whose nature is exclusively pure consciousness. This pure spirit is called nondual for the following reasons: (1) there is nothing else, either similar or dissimilar, that is self-existent; (2) it takes support only from its own potencies; and (3) these potencies can have no existence without it as their absolute foundation.

The term tattva here implies the idea of the supreme goal of human life. Thus we understand that this tattva, or absolute reality[DDB220], is the embodiment of the highest bliss and is therefore also eternal.

The verse under discussion was spoken by Shri Suta Gosvami.

COMMENTARY

Absolute Reality Is Nondual Consciousness

In the last Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami stated that the absolute reality[DDB221] is to be known from Shrimad-Bhagavatam. This naturally raises the question, "What is the essential nature of this absolute reality[DDB222]?" In reply Jiva Gosvami quotes Shrimad-Bhagavatam's statement that the absolute reality[DDB223] is nondual (advayam), or in other words one without a second. There cannot be more than one absolute reality[DDB224], because if a second one were to be found the first one would immediately cease to be absolute. That the absolute reality[DDB225] is nondual, however, does not mean that nothing else exists. Rather, the word “nondual” indicates two further things (in addition to the meaning stated above): first, the absolute reality[DDB226] is self-existent, meaning that it is grounded in itself and depends on no external support; second, nothing else can exist independent of this nondual reality’s support.

In Vedic philosophy, an object is considered nondual if it is free of three kinds of differences—those between[DDB227] objects of the same class, those between[DDB228] objects of different classes, and those between an object and its parts. A difference between objects of the same class is called sajatiya-bheda. Even though two chairs may look the same, function the same, and belong to the [DDB229]same class, called “chair,” they still differ as individual chairs. A change in one will not directly affect the other. A difference between objects of different classes is called vijatiya-bheda. For example, in its appearance and function a chair is different from a table. Finally, a difference between an object and its parts is called sva-gata-bheda. For example, if all the parts of a chair are scattered, the chair will no longer exist. In this way the chair is not self-existent.

These three kinds of differences give rise to the duality we observe throughout material nature. They do not exist, however, on the absolute plane; thus Suta Gosvami calls the pure consciousness (absolute reality[DDB230]) jnanam advayam, nondual consciousness.

Even when the Supreme Personality of Godhead expands into forms such as Ramacandra and Balarama, these svamsha (selfsame) expansions remain nondifferent from the Lord’s original self. Still, while He is not dependent on Them, They are dependent on Him. Since the Lord and His svamsha expansions belong to the same class, no difference of the sajatiya-bheda type is found in Him.

Material nature, being inert, belongs to a class of existence different from that of the transcendental Personality of Godhead. This might lead one to conclude that there is vijatiya-bheda between Him and material nature. Nevertheless, since material nature’s existence is not independent or separate from Him, there is ultimately no difference of vijatiya-bheda between Him and His material expansions.

Finally, the Lord’s body and its limbs are each fully conscious and potent and therefore nondifferent from Him Himself. For this reason it is said that in Lord Krishna there exists no difference of the svagata-bheda type.

The finite living entities belong to the marginal potency of the Supreme Lord. Thus one may view them in two ways, both as belonging to the same class as the Lord because they are conscious like Him, and as belonging to a different class because their size and potency is very small. From both viewpoints the jivas are fully dependent on the Supreme Lord, so that there exist none of the three types of differences between them and the Lord. Shrila Jiva Gosvami concludes, therefore, that although the Lord’s energies render Him service in various ways, they have no existence separate from Him (tam vina tasam asiddhatvat).

Just as a spider weaves a web with a special substance it produces and then makes the web its home, so Shri Krishna, the personified nondual absolute reality[DDB231], employs His own energies to manifest the spiritual realm, where He resides. These energies are part of His internal nature and have no independent existence.

In the verse under discussion (Bhag. 1.2.11), the word jnanam means “consciousness.” Its significance here is that the nondual reality is consciousness and also conscious, just as the sun is light and also luminous. Because the word jnanam refers to the absolute reality[DDB232], this nondual consciousness must have perpetual existence (sat) as a characteristic. And because the word tattvam indicates the supreme objective of life, it follows that this nondual reality must also be characterized by bliss (ananda), since all living beings seek pleasure, whether they know it or not. Indeed, direct perception, logical analysis, and scriptural authority all confirm that the pursuit of happiness is the ultimate motivation in all activities. This is the basic purpose underlying creative and destructive processes and all personal relationships. As the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (2.4.5) states, na va are patyuh kamaya patih priyo bhavaty atmanas tu kamaya patih priyo bhavati: “My dear, the husband is [DDB233]loved not for his own sake[DDB234] but for the sake of the self.”

Here the word “self” refers to either the jiva or the Supreme Lord. In our conditioned state, the self we perceive is [DDB235] the jiva. We become attached to someone or something because we derive happiness from loving that person or thing. This feeling of happiness comes from our sense of possession—the notion that the object of love is “ours”—not from the person or the object itself. The truth of this principle is shown by the common experience that our happiness naturally decreases when our sense of possession diminishes.

By contrast, in the liberated state we realize that our ultimate Self is the Supreme Lord. When we act solely on the basis of this understanding we become the Lord’s pure devotees, and then we render service only for His pleasure and desire nothing in return. Even if the all-attractive Lord treats us roughly we are still happy, for we have abandoned all fears and cares in our loving relationship with Him. Lord Chaitanya demonstrated this standard in His Shikshashöaka, where He prayed:

ashlishya va pada-ratam pinashöu mam adarshanan marma-hatam karotu va yatha tatha va vidadhatu lampaöo mat-prana-nathas tu sa eva naparah

“I know no one but Krishna as my Lord, and He shall remain so even if He handles me roughly in His embrace or makes me broken-hearted by not being present before me. He is completely free to do anything and everything, for He is always my worshipful Lord, unconditionally.”

In conditioned life we do not know that Krishna is the supreme object of love and the source of all bliss. Rather, we mistake ourselves for the source of bliss. To enlighten us about Himself, Krishna instructs us in the Bhagavad-gita (10.8—9):

aham sarvasya prabhavo mattah sarvam pravartate iti matva bhajante mam budha bhava-samanvitah

mac-citta mad-gata-prana bodhayantah parasparam kathayantash ca mam nityam tushyanti ca ramanti ca

“I am the source of all spiritual and material worlds. Everything emanates from Me. The wise who perfectly know this engage in My devotional service and worship Me with all their hearts. The thoughts of My pure devotees dwell in Me, their lives are fully devoted to My service, and they derive great satisfaction and bliss from always enlightening one another and conversing about Me.”

Thus there is an inherent relationship between jnana (knowledge), sat (eternal existence), and ananda (bliss). This relationship is clearly indicated in such shruti statements as vijñanam anandam brahma: “Brahman is pure consciousness and bliss” (Brihad-aranaya Up. 3.9.34). Thus the nature of the nondual consciousness described in this verse has been designated sac-cid-ananda, “permanent existence, knowledge, and bliss.”

In this Text Jiva Gosvami presented his thesis, that jnana is eternal. In the next Text he will explain the purva-paksha, that jnana is momentary.

One may question, But events of consciousness are seen to exist only briefly, taking the shape, say, of a blue object one moment and a yellow object the next. How then can consciousness be called the nondual and eternal theme of this scripture [Shrimad-Bhagavatam]?

Suta Gosvami replies:

"This Bhagavatam is the essence of all Vedanta philosophy because its subject matter is the Absolute Truth, which, while nondifferent from the spirit soul, is the ultimate reality, one without a second. The goal of this literature is exclusive devotional service unto that Supreme Truth" [Bhag. 12.13.12].

The shruti has defined the nature of this Absolute Truth (Brahman): "The Supreme Brahman is infinite truth and knowledge" [Taittiriya Up. 2.1.1]. That Brahman is the sole cause of the entire creation is shown by such shruti statements as "By hearing about which [Brahman] everything is heard" [Chandogya Up. 6.1.3], "By knowing which [Brahman] everything is known," and "My boy, in the beginning there was only sat, the eternal reality" [Chandogya. Up. 6.2.1]. That the Supreme Brahman achieves everything simply by His desire is shown by the statement "He glanced and desired, '[DDB237]Let Me become many'" [Chandogya.Up. 6.2.3].

In the statement "Along with this individual living entity I shall manifest name and form" [Chandogya Up. 6.3.2], the living entity (jiva) is mentioned in connection with and as belonging to the Supreme, which is called Brahman because it is greater than all else in essence and potencies; here the pronoun idam ("this") differentiates the jiva from Brahman, but the word atmana ("self") indicates that the jiva is part and parcel of Brahman. According to what was revealed in Shrila Vyasadeva's trance, the living entity is one with the Supreme Brahman in the sense of not being completely different from Him. Such shruti statements as tat tvam asi ("You are that"; [Chandogya Up. 6.8.7]) reveal that the oneness of the Supreme Brahman with the jiva consists of their both being purely spiritual by virtue of the jiva's status as a particle of the Supreme Brahman. Understanding this idea helps one acquire preliminary knowledge of the Supreme Brahman.

The entity thus designated as the Supreme Brahman, who is the essence of all the Upanishads and is one without a second, is the focus of interest, the exclusive subject matter, of this Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Here we understand "this Shrimad-Bhagavatam" to be implied by the syntactic connection with that same phrase in one of the preceding verses [12.13.10][NEW238].

The following analogy helps clarify the above idea. Suppose a person has been kept in a dark room from birth and has never seen the sun. When he wants to know what the sun is, someone points to a ray of sunlight passing through a window grating and says, "That is the sun. Try to understand that the sun is a great orb of light, of the same substance as this ray, which is a portion of it." In the Paramatma-sandarbhā we will establish that the jiva is similarly a fractional portion of the Supreme Brahman, manifested by one of His inconceivable potencies.

tad-etaṁ-jivādi-lakṣaṇaṁśha-viśiṣhāṭayaivopaniśhadas tasya samśhatvam api kvaśid upadiśhanti. niraṁśhatvopadiśhika śhrutis tu kevala-taṁ-niśhōha. atra kaivalyaika-prayojanaṁ iti caturtha-padaśha ca kaivalya-padaśhya śhuddhatva-matra-vacanaṭvena śhuddhatvasya ca śhuddha-bhaktiṭvena paryavaśhana priti-sandarbhē vyakhyasyate. śhri-sutaḥ.

Thus when the Upanishads say that the Supreme Brahman has parts, they mean that one of His characteristics is to be endowed with the part-and-parcel living beings and other energies. Conversely, when the śhrutis speak of Him as having no parts, they are focusing on His exclusive essence.

In the fourth line of Bhagavatam 12.13.12, namely kaivalyaika-prayojanam, the word kaivalya ("oneness") simply means "purity." Later, in the Priti-sandarbhā, we will demonstrate that this purity is none other than pure devotional service.

The verse under discussion [Bhag. 12.13.12] was spoken by Śhri Suta Gosvami.

COMMENTARY

The Meaning of Monistic Statements [DDB242] in the Scripture

In the last Text Śhri Jiva Gosvami established that the Absolute Truth is eternal, nondual consciousness. One sect of Buddhists, the Kṣhanika-vijñāna-vadis, raise an objection to this conclusion. Their doctrine states [DDB243] the following:

There is only one reality, consciousness, which is changing at every moment, and [DDB244] there is no difference between knowledge and the object of knowledge. Just as in our dreams the things we see do not exist outside our consciousness, so also in our waking life distinctions between knowledge and the object of knowledge are not real. When we see a blue object our consciousness is blue. If we next see a yellow object, the blue consciousness is destroyed and our consciousness changes to yellow. How, then, can consciousness be called eternal?

[DDB245] This is the objection the Vijñāna-vadis raise [DDB246] against Jiva Gosvami's conclusion that the Absolute Truth, [DDB247] the nondual consciousness, is eternal. [DDB248][DDB249]New[DDB249] They reason that an eternal object cannot be the cause of anything since in general a cause transforms into its effect. For example, since milk transforms into yogurt, it cannot be eternal. Similarly, the nondual consciousness, being the cause of everything, must undergo transformation and therefore cannot be eternal. Further, they say, everything is changing at every moment, although we may not notice the moment-by-moment change, just as we do not notice the moment-by-moment growth of plants or our bodies.

To the Vijñāna-vadis' argument Śhri Jiva Gosvami replies not with a logical refutation but by quoting Śhri mad-Bhagavatam, the supreme pramāṇa. The Bhagavatam verse given here (12.13.12) explains that the nondual reality is characterized by oneness of the Supreme with the individual selves. Thus the oneness of reality is not the Buddhists' oneness of momentary consciousness and its objects. This reality is advaya-jñāna, the essence of all the Upanishads and the subject matter of Śhri mad-Bhagavatam; [DDB250] it is not momentary but eternal, conscious, and blissful by nature; it is the cause of everything in this universe; and it can achieve everything simply by its will. All this implies that the advaya-jñāna is endowed with multifarious potencies. It is called Brahman because it is the greatest and because it can make others great: brihadvad brimhanatvac ca yad brahma paramam viduḥ (Vishnu Pur. 3.3.21). The various śhruti statements cited in this Text describe all these characteristics of Brahman. So the theory of consciousness [DDB251] put forward by the Kshanika-vijnana-vadis does not agree with either shruti or Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

The Vijnana-vadis' theory of reality is based on their assumption that there is no absolute, pure consciousness. The Vijnana-vadis do not know that the absolute reality is a person possessing acintya-shakti, inconceivable potencies, through which He causes everything while remaining unaffected. As the Ishopanishad declares in its opening verse, om purnam adah purnam idam purnat purnam udacyate purnasya purnam adaya purnam evavashishyate

"The Personality of Godhead is perfect and complete, and because He is completely perfect, all emanations from Him, such as this phenomenal world, are perfectly equipped as complete wholes. Whatever is produced of the Complete Whole is also complete in itself. Because He is the Complete Whole, even though so many complete units emanate from Him, He remains the complete balance."

The Vijnana-vadis' view is based on a material conception of changing consciousness. Their understanding does not apply to the absolute realm. While in our ordinary experience material energy is in a constant state of flux, the Lord and His internal energies are not under the same system of natural laws that govern material nature. The example of the spider cited in the previous Text also applies here: from within itself the spider produces a special substance and then weaves its web with it, and later it draws the substance back within itself, all without undergoing any transformation. To understand the Absolute Truth, we must first shed all our misconceptions based on material conditioning and simply hear from authentic spiritual authorities in disciplic succession. The Vedic literature therefore recommends that even if a person is highly qualified by good birth, good education, and so forth, he still should present himself as ignorant and foolish at the feet of a bona fide spiritual master, inquire from him submissively, and render service to him. This is the correct process for cleansing one's heart and mind of material contamination, and a sincere candidate for spiritual life who follows this process can gradually gain full realization of the Absolute Truth. The Vijnana-vadis, being followers of Lord Buddha, reject the [DDB252] Vedic literature, and consequently they end up with the hopelessly muddled explanation of transcendental reality outlined above. They say consciousness is momentary. If this were true, then consciousness could not be the cause of anything, because according to the Nyaya school of logic a cause has to exist for at least two moments. It must exist as the cause for the first moment and then transform or produce the result in the next moment. And if our consciousness were existing for only one moment at a time, we could not remember our past experiences, since there would be no continuity from one moment's consciousness to another moment's consciousness. A person who has experienced something can recall it later on, but if consciousness were momentary there would be nothing to recall in the next moment's consciousness. This is certainly contrary to everyone's experience.

Nor can the Vijnana-vadis' idea of the external world withstand the test of logic. They say that the external world is a manifestation of momentary consciousness. Here a question may be asked: Are things perceived as external one with momentary consciousness or different from it? If the Vijnana-vadis claim that the external objects are separately real, then they are agreeing with our Vaishnava opinion and are contradicting their own statement that the apparently external objects are only a manifestation of internal consciousness. On the other hand, if they say that the external objects are one with internal consciousness, in practice there would be no way to distinguish between the momentary, internal consciousness and the objects it perceives. Also, there would be no standard to separate, say, blue consciousness from yellow consciousness, and thus our perceptions would be rife with confusion.

As is known from both reason and direct experience, consciousness always has a subject (one who is conscious) and an object (what one is conscious of). If momentary consciousness alone were real, where would its subject and object be? To this the vijnana-vadis offer no satisfactory answer. If neither external objects nor such internal objects as happiness and distress are different from the perceiver, then who is doing the perceiving? Everyone's common experience is that the perceiver, the perceived, and the perception are distinct.

In this Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami again clarifies that the oneness of the jiva and Brahman spoken of in shruti should not be understood as absolute oneness. After all, shruti contains such statements as anena jivenatmananupravishya nama-rupe vyakaravani: "Along with this jiva I shall enter as Paramatma and create name and form" (Chandogya Up. 6.3.2). Here the pronoun anena ("this"), referring to the jiva, implies that the jiva is different from "I," the speaker (God). Nonetheless, elsewhere the jiva is described as part and parcel of Brahman, a conclusion confirmed by Shrila Vyasa's trance. The reconciliation of this apparent contradiction is that, as we have discussed before, the jiva and Brahman are one in the sense of their sharing the common characteristic of consciousness but are different in their individual identities and potencies. When someone says that Texans and New Yorkers are one, we understand him to mean they are from the same country, the United States, not that they have no separate identities.

The jivas are parts of Brahman, the whole. This is the oneness of Brahman with its parts, its energies, which is the fundamental teaching of the Upanishads and also of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. The idea is that in general the part is dependent on the whole and helps it function. When separated from the whole, the part becomes useless, just as a finger lopped off a hand becomes useless. In the same way, the relation between the jivas and the Supreme Lord, who is known as Brahman in the Upanishads, is that of the servants and the served. The jivas have no independent existence. All their problems begin when they start considering themselves independent of the Supreme Lord.

Correctly understanding the oneness between Brahman and the jivas is a fundamental step in understanding the nature of Brahman. Every jiva directly experiences his own consciousness, and the Upanishads, on the basis of the oneness of Brahman and the jivas, instruct the jivas to extrapolate from that experience some idea of the nature of Brahman. To illustrate this process, Shrila Jiva Gosvami gives the analogy of a man born and bred in a cave-like room who has never seen the sun. To educate this man about the sun, someone may point to a ray of sunlight shining into his dark room through a tiny opening and tell him, "This single ray of light is from the sun, an enormous sphere that emanates countless similar rays." From this information the man can get some idea of what the sun is like. The Upanishads use this same method to instruct the jivas about Brahman's status as pure consciousness. Indeed, the jivas are like atomic rays emanating from the sunlike Brahman. The sun's rays are not completely different from the sun, for they originate from the sun, nor are they absolutely one with the sun, since they can be seen apart from the sun and they lack the complete potency of the sun. Similarly, the jivas are neither completely one with Brahman nor completely different from Brahman. In his Sarva-samvadini, Shrila Jiva Gosvami calls this relationship between the jiva and Brahman acintya-bhedabheda, "inconceivable, simultaneous oneness and difference." Owing to this relationship, Brahman is described as advaya-jnana, or nondual consciousness, which is the subject of Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

Thus the word Brahman—as the Upanishads and also Shrimad-Bhagavatam use it—should not be misunderstood to mean impersonal Brahman without qualities. The Mayavadis insist on this wrong understanding, but according to logic such an impersonal Brahman cannot exist, because if it did it would possess the attribute of existence, which implies potency, which in turn implies duality—Brahman plus attributes. But Mayavadis abhor duality in the absolute realm. Therefore in no Vedic scripture does the word Brahman mean impersonal Brahman in the sense that the Mayavadis intend.

The true conception of Brahman is stated by Suta Gosvami in Shrimad-Bhagavatam(1.2.11): brahmeti paramatmeti bhagavan iti shabdyate. "This nondual consciousness is called Brahman, Paramatma, and Bhagavan" Here Suta Gosvami does not say that the Absolute Truth is also called jiva. He includes only the above-mentioned three designations—three names of the same nondual consciousness, which Shrimad-

Bhagavatam identifies as Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The Absolute Truth appears differently to the practitioners of various spiritual processes, but the Absolute Truth itself does not change. This is the significance of the word shabdyate ("it is designated") here. The Brahman described in the Vedic scriptures is Bhagavan, the Supreme Person, Krishna.

In the shruti we find two types of statements concerning the relationship between the jivas and Brahman: those statements designating the jiva as part of Brahman and those indicating his oneness with Brahman. The real distinction between these kinds of statements is only one of emphasis on either difference (bheda) or nondifference (abheda). Statements in the Vedic scripture such as nityo nityanam cetanash cetananam ("That one eternal conscious being is the support for the many eternal conscious beings"; Kaöha Up. 2.2.13) belong to the bheda class. Statements such as sarvam khalv idam brahma ("Indeed, all this is Brahman") belong to the abheda class.

The word kaivalya in Bhagavatam 12.13.12 properly means "pure devotion." Although impersonalists commonly use this term to mean final emancipation, or merging into Brahman, Brahman is not ultimately impersonal, as the Mayavadis claim. Their usage of kaivalya is therefore absurd. Kaivalya means liberation, but the real mark of liberation is pure devotional service, not merging into Brahman. Shrila Jiva Gosvami will explain this more fully in the Priti-sandarbha.

To summarize, each statement in the Vedic scriptures describing the oneness of Brahman and the jivas serves one or more of the following purposes:

1. To distinguish both Brahman and the jivas from inert matter by pointing to consciousness as their common quality.
2. To show that the jivas are fractional parts of the Supersoul.
3. To teach that the jivas are dependent on the Supersoul.
4. To indicate that by becoming an unalloyed devotee of the Lord a jiva can become powerful like the Supreme Lord.
5. To show that living in the material world is not the natural, healthy condition of the jiva.
6. To show that the jiva, whether in conditioned life or in liberation, is dependent on the Lord.
7. To establish that Brahman is the only self-existent reality.

One should not think that any statement in the Vedic scriptures about the oneness of Brahman and the jivas asserts their absolute oneness.

To know the Supersoul, one must first understand the nature of the individual self, the jiva. Thus in the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami begins explaining the characteristics of the self.

The jiva is designated tvam ("you") in the statement tat tvam asi ("You are that."). If one first understands that this “you” is conscious and eternal, then one can easily understand how the Supreme Brahman (tat) has a similar nature. To make just this point, in accordance with the reasoning of Vedanta-sutra 1.3.20—“One contemplates the jiva in order to know the other, the Supreme”—sage Pippalayana describes the jiva as having the same nature as tat when he says to King Nimi [Bhagavatam 11.3.38]:

“The soul was never born and will never die, nor does it grow or decay. It is actually the knower of the youth, middle age, and death of the material body. It can thus be understood to be pure consciousness, existing everywhere at all times and never being destroyed. Just as the life air within the body, although one, becomes as many in contact with the various material senses, so the soul appears to assume various material designations in contact with its material bodies.”

Here atma means “the pure self,” and na jajana means “he was never born.” Since he has no birth, the self is also free from the next transformation, sustained existence. Naidhate means “he does not increase”; since he does not increase, he does not undergo transformation. The word hi means “because,” the idea of logical reason. Vyabhicarinam means “of all impermanent things,” namely the living entity’s various bodies in childhood, adolescence, and so on, or else the living entity’s bodies in the various species of life—demigods, humans, and others. The self is the savana-vit, the witness of each of these stages of life. Certainly this witness is not subject to the varying conditions of what he merely observes. In answer to the question “Who is this unchanging self?” Pippalayana says, “He is pure consciousness, nothing but awareness.” How does it exist? “It is eternally present everywhere throughout the body.”

“But how can we consider consciousness ever-present, since we experience that after our consciousness of something blue disappears our consciousness of something yellow appears?” Pippalayana answers, indriya-balena (“by the power of the senses”), indicating that although consciousness is always present and is one, the power of the senses causes it to appear variegated. In other words, it is not consciousness itself that appears and disappears; rather, what appear and disappear are the various mental states in the form of perceptions of something blue and so on.

Thus the first argument [presented to help identify the absolute reality[DDB256]] is based on the difference between the things that appear and disappear and that which is not subject to such changes. The second argument is based on the difference between the observer and the objects he observes. The example of the life air shows how something unchanging can exist in the midst of ephemeral objects.

COMMENTARY

Characteristics of the Soul

As mentioned above, the Vedic statements that describe nondifference between the jiva and Brahman do so in reference to the common attributes of both. One popular example of such a statement is tat tvam asi, “You are that.” Here the word tat and tvam signify Brahman the jiva, respectively, who both possess the attribute of consciousness. The idea behind this statement is that one who clearly understands the jiva’s spiritual nature can easily grasp the nature of Brahman. The same idea lies behind the analogy Shrila Jiva Gosvami gave in the previous Text, in which a man in a cave learns about the sun by being instructed about a sun-ray.

This technique has also been used in the Vedanta-sutra (1.3.20): anyarthash ca paramarshah. “One reflects [on the jiva] for the sake of understanding the other [Paramatma].” Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana comments: “This sutra refers to the dahara-vidya portion of the Chandogya Upanishad (8.1), which describes meditation on the Supersoul in the small space (dahara) within the heart. The body of the worshiper is considered the city of Brahman, in which lies the Supersoul, the worshipable Lord within the dahara. The worshiper is supposed to meditate on the eightfold qualities belonging to the Supersoul. These eight qualities are listed in the Chandogya Upanishad (8.7.1): ‘[DDB257]The Supersoul is free from sin, old age, death, sorrow, hunger, and thirst. He has unfailing desires and unfailing determination.’ But further along (Chandogya Up. 8.12.13), mention is made of a blissful one who rises out of the body, attains to the light, and becomes situated in his own real nature. He is called the purushottama.” This purushottama, according to Baladeva Vidyabhushana, is the jiva who has attained perfection by acquiring transcendental knowledge of the Lord.

This raises an obvious doubt: Why in the midst of this description of the dahara, dealing with meditation on the Supersoul, is the jiva mentioned? To answer this doubt, the above sutra (Vs. 1.3.20) is quoted. The reference to the jiva in the dahara-vidya is not simply to convey knowledge about the jiva but to lead to knowledge about the Supersoul, and by knowing the Supersoul the jiva attains his real nature. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.3.38, Pippalayana Yogendra similarly instructs King Nimi about the jiva to educate him about the nature of the Lord.

The purpose of the above-mentioned verse spoken by Pippalayana is to distinguish the self from the body. The body undergoes six types of changes. These are listed in the Nirukta (1.1.2): jayate ‘sti vardhate viparinamate ‘pakshiyate nashyati ca. “The body takes birth, exists for some time, grows, undergoes changes, dwindles, and finally dies.” The soul, however, does not undergo any of these changes, as Lord Krishna confirms in Chapter Two of the Bhagavad-gita.

The argument for the soul not undergoing these changes is that he is their continuous observer. A man sitting in a moving airplane and unable to look out the window cannot understand how fast it is going, but an observer on the ground can easily understand. Similarly, we do not feel the earth rotating because we are riding on it, but the astronauts can easily see this from their space vehicles.

The objection of the Kshanika-vijnana-vadis discussed in the previous Text—namely, that consciousness is only momentary—is repeated here (in Text 53.3) and answered differently. The momentary consciousness of which they speak actually consists of changes in one’s mental state. It is produced by the senses interacting with the external world. Consciousness itself is constant. The Vedanta explains that when a person looks at an object there arises a particular mental state, called a vritti, which the soul perceives. The mental state itself is not the perceiver. But the Buddhists, who are totally ignorant about the soul, mistake this temporary, ever-changing vritti for the real consciousness.

This point is further clarified with the analogy of the life air. Air is one, but air within the body has various names, such as prana, apana, and samana, according to the function it performs. Similarly, the soul is one, but on account of the senses, the consciousness the soul manifests while in the body appears many-branched and ever-changing. This phenomenon is similar to the way in which sweetened milk gives rise to different mental states when perceived with different senses: to the eyes it is white, to the tongue sweet, and so on.

So it is not the self but only the mental state affected by varieties of sense perception that appears and disappears, or undergoes changes. The living entity is a fractional part of the Supreme Lord, and since the Lord is conscious and eternal the living entity must share these qualities, just as a tiny gold nugget shares the qualities of the mother lode. And the purpose of explaining the conscious and eternal quality of the soul with logic and personal experience is to help us develop an understanding of the Supersoul.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami derives two arguments from the words of Pippalayana (Bhag. 11.3.38), both of which serve to distinguish the soul from the material body. The first argument is based on the changes that occur in the material body. We see these changes as time progresses, but with some reflection we can understand that we ourselves have not changed but are the same person. Since the attributes of changelessness and transformation cannot be attributed to the same object, the unchanging soul must be distinct from the changing body.

Shri Jiva's second argument is based on the distinction between the perceiver and the perceived. The body and mind cannot be the observer, because they are objects of perception. Thus the perceiver, the soul, must be different from them.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami presents further logic to help distinguish the self from the body.

Expanding further on this example, Pippalayana Rishi uses the analogy of the senses' dissolution to demonstrate the soul's changelessness:

"The spirit soul is born in many different species of life within the material world. Some species are born from eggs, others from embryos, others from the seeds of plants and trees, and others from perspiration. But in all species of life the prana, or vital air, remains unchanging and follows the spirit soul from one body to another. Similarly, the spirit soul is eternally the same despite its material condition of life. We have practical experience of this. When we are absorbed in deep sleep without dreaming, the material senses become inactive, and even the mind and false ego are merged into a dormant condition. But although the senses, mind, and false ego are inactive, one remembers upon waking that he, the soul, was peacefully sleeping" [Bhag. 11.3.39].

Here andeshu means "among those born from eggs," peshishu means "among those born from wombs," tarushu means "among those born from plants," avinishciteshu means "among those born from perspiration or heat," and upadhavati means "follows."

Having thus shown the changeless quality of the life air, sage Pippalayana now compares the soul to it and in this way demonstrates that the soul is also changeless. How is this? The soul appears to be changing either when he is in contact with his senses during waking consciousness or when he is connected only with his ego while sleeping and dreaming, at which time his ego is filled with impressions from the waking state. But when the soul is in deep sleep, the senses and ego become temporarily submerged or dissolved, and only the changeless, essential soul remains. How does he remain? Ashayam rite: without the “containing vessel,” the limitation of the subtle body. That is to say, he is free from the upadhis that impose changes upon him.

But, one may object, when everything up to and including the ego is dissolved, only a void should remain. Why then is it said that even at this time the changeless soul is present? Pippalayana answers, tad-anusmritir nah: “We remember it[DDB262].” When we, the perceivers of waking life, wake up from deep sleep, we each remember [DDB263]our self as the constantly existing soul who witnessed the condition of deep sleep. We say, “I slept happily for so long and was not aware of anything.” Since a person cannot remember what he has not experienced, the soul must perceive the experience of deep sleep, though this experience is indistinct because he is cut off from the objects of external sensation.

We can therefore conclude that the soul, who is pure awareness, is also aware of himself[DDB265], just as an entity such as the sun, which is in substance pure light, also reveals itself by that light. We find the following confirmation in shruti: “It is true that he [the soul] is not seeing—or rather that although seeing, he does not see externally visible objects. But it is not possible to remove the seer’s sight altogether” (Brihad-aranyaka Up. 4.3.23).

This [idea that the soul is aware even during deep sleep] constitutes the third argument [presented to help us identify the absolute reality[DDB266]]; it is based on the distinction between the witness and the objects witnessed. We can also understand the fourth argument, which is based on the distinction between the unhappy sufferer and the focus of ecstatic love.

COMMENTARY

The Soul Is Distinct from the Body

In the previous Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami cited the analogy of the life air given in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.3.38 to show the changeless nature of the soul. The following verse (Bhag. 11.3.39) develops this analogy further. There Sage Pippalayana explains that the life air continuously follows the soul into various species,[DDB267] which fall into four categories based on their source of birth. The life air enters the various bodies and seems to undergo transformations, but in fact it remains unchanged. For example, the soul’s life air may occupy the body of an ant in one life and that of an elephant in a different life, yet all the while the life air remains unchanged. Similarly, the soul appears to undergo changes in association with the many states and shapes of his successive bodies, but in fact he remains unchanged.

The soul experiences three states of consciousness while in the body: the waking state, the dreaming state, and the state of deep, dreamless sleep. During the waking state a jiva is conscious of his gross body, gross senses, and mind, and his consciousness seems divided and channeled by the mind and senses. In the dreaming state the gross senses become inactive, or, to be more precise, the mind loses contact with them, and thus the jiva is also not aware of the gross senses or the gross body. Through dreams the jiva in this state perceives the various impressions created in the subconscious mind during the waking state, and because of the jiva's attachment to these impressions, his consciousness seems to undergo transformation. In the state of deep, dreamless sleep the soul loses contact even with the mind, and thus he is not conscious of either his gross or subtle body.

According to shruti, in the state of dreamless sleep the mind enters into the puritat nerve in the heart: atha yada sushupto bhavati yada na kasyacana veda hita nama nadyo dva-saptatih sahsrani hridayat puritatom abhipratishohante, tabhih pratyavashripya puritati shete. "When [the soul] is fast asleep, he does not know anything. At that time the mind removes itself from the seventy-two thousand nerves (hita) spreading out from the heart and enters into the nerve called puritat, where it rests[DDB268]" (Brihad-aranyaka Up. 2.1.19).

Feelings of happiness and distress are states of the mind and therefore part of the "field" of the subtle body. This is described in the[DDB269] Bhagavad-gita (13.7): "Desire, hatred, happiness, distress, the aggregate [the physical body], the life symptoms, and convictions—all these are considered, in summary, to be the field of activities and its interactions." As mentioned above, in deep sleep the soul loses contact with the mind and feels no material happiness or distress, no desires or hatred. He tastes only the bliss of the self. But this does not mean the soul becomes liberated in deep sleep. He is still bound by his subtle desires, which return him to the dreaming and waking states.

From the Buddhists comes an objection that the soul cannot exist in deep sleep. When there is no experience of the senses or the mind, why not assume that only the "void" remains during deep sleep? The answer is "Because we recollect the experience of deep sleep." After waking from deep sleep a person may declare, "I have slept happily and wasn't aware of anything." Since someone cannot recollect something without having experiencing it, the person who perceived himself in deep sleep and the person who remembers this experience must be identical. Thus the happiness of deep sleep was experienced by the same person who recalls it upon awakening, but his recollection is hazy because during deep sleep his link with the mind and senses was broken.

The implication here is that although there is no false ego manifest during deep sleep, the soul's real ego remains, for this is his true and inseparable identity. So there is no possibility of voidness during deep sleep, as the Buddhists claim, nor is it possible that the soul becomes mere consciousness without individuality, as the Mayavadis claim.

This argument establishes that the soul's quality of cognition is an essential aspect of his[DDB270] nature. It is thus not true that the soul acquires cognition only when conditioned, nor that he remains solely as pure consciousness in the unconditioned state. As the sun illuminates both itself and other things as well, the soul can always know both himself and other things. The soul does not need help from the gross external senses to know himself[DDB271], just as one does not need a lamp to see the sun. This quality of cognition stays with the soul throughout all his states of existence, even when he inhabits lower species, just as a light bulb continues to emit light even when enveloped by a nearly opaque covering. The covering simply limits and distorts the light's diffusion. Of course, it is the Supreme Lord who grants the soul his self-luminous nature, and so from the above we should not wrongly conclude that the jiva is a completely independent entity.

The passage from the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad quoted in this Text states, “He [the soul] certainly does not see.” This statement refers to the soul in deep sleep. At that time the soul does not perceive anything because he is detached from the mind and senses; this does not mean, however, that his power of perception is lost. Thus the passage further says, “Although seeing, he does not see externally visible objects.”

In the previous Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami showed that the soul is distinct from the body. He substantiated this conclusion by citing the analogy of the life air. Here he has further shown that the soul is distinct both from the body and from the Supersoul. He presented four arguments. We have discussed the first two in our commentary on Text 53. The third argument is based on the difference between the witness and the witnessed. During deep sleep, when the soul ceases to identify with the mind and senses, he witnesses his own self, and he can recollect this experience upon awakening. This phenomenon demonstrates the changeless nature of the soul by showing that it is distinct from the ever-changing body and senses.

The fourth argument is based on the fact that it is not the Supersoul but the jiva who suffers the material tribulations, although both dwell in the same body. The Supersoul is the witness of both the soul and the activities of the soul’s material body. As we have pointed out, in the state of dreamless sleep the soul becomes temporarily dissociated from [DDB272]both his subtle body and his gross body, but still the gross[DDB273] body does not die. This indicates that the breathing, heartbeat, blood circulation, and other vital functions continue by the grace of the Supersoul. Another inference we can draw is that the soul is dependent on the Supersoul, because if the soul were completely independent he would not choose to revert to a state beset with suffering. But in fact he cannot stop this reversion, being caught up in the states of material existence—waking consciousness, dreaming, and deep sleep. Therefore, Shrila Jiva Gosvami concludes, the Supreme Lord is the fitting object of love, since he is totally free from material bondage.

[These arguments] can be summed up as follows:

Here we have four kinds of arguments in the modes of both exclusion and inclusion. The first argument is based on the difference between what takes birth and dies and what does not. The second is based on the difference between the seer and the seen. The third is based on the difference between the witness and the witnessed. The fourth argument, given to aid our understanding, is based on the difference between the miserable sufferer and the focus of pure love.

The verse under discussion [Bhag. 11.3.39] is spoken by Shri Pippalayana to King Nimi.

COMMENTARY

Summary of Shri Pippalayana's Teachings

Here Shrila Jiva Gosvami summarizes the conclusions of the last two Texts. According to Shrila Baladeva Vidyabhushana, in this Text the word tarka (literally "reasoning" or "logic") means "inference," which is one topic of epistemology. In the reasoning presented in this Text, Jiva Gosvami uses inference both positively and negatively. Positively, there is the general principle that when a soul and a body combine, changes occur that the soul perceives. Negatively, one never perceives changes in the soul or changelessness in the body. Thus by both positive and negative analysis we can infer that the body and the soul are distinct. We can apply a similar analysis to the other three arguments set forth in this Text.

Here we use logic to infer the difference between the body and the soul; understanding this difference is the first rung on the ladder of transcendental realization. We can also use logic to infer the difference between the soul and the Supersoul; understanding this difference is the necessary foundation of bhakti-yoga. Here we are not employing dry logic, which is based on a limited mortal's mental wrangling, but rather transcendental logic, which is founded on the authority of Shrimad-Bhagavatam's statements and is designed to help raise one to a complete understanding of the Absolute Truth. The scriptures and saintly sages encourage sincere souls who seek to distinguish reality from illusion to use their intellect for this purpose.

Only the body takes birth, grows old, becomes diseased, and dies. The soul perceives all these changes, and when he identifies himself with his body he experiences them as miseries. Although distinct from his body, because of false ego the jiva becomes attached to his body and its by-products and thus experiences the body's happiness and distress. The Supersoul witnesses the soul's miseries in his material body but does not experience them as His own. Unperturbed by the actions and reactions of material bodies, He is always distinct from the jiva souls and is the suitable object of their love. We can infer the existence of the Supersoul from the fact that the soul does not create the elements needed for the maintenance of his body and that material nature, being inert, cannot create anything without the help of a sentient being. What's more, the soul takes no part in maintaining the material body during deep sleep, when he is completely aloof from it.

In this way, knowing the characteristics of the jiva and his relationship to the body can help us understand something of the Supersoul, Brahman. And taking into account the common quality of consciousness shared by the jiva and Brahman, the latter can be identified as the nondual reality, the subject of Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

All these conclusions are based on an analysis of the individual jiva's situation. Now Shrila Jiva Gosvami begins a new analysis, one based on the total situation of the universe.

By describing these characteristics of the jiva souls, whose inner nature is pure consciousness, we have in effect described the Supreme Brahman, the subject of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, from the individual (vyashöi) viewpoint. This is so because the Supreme Brahman is nondifferent from the jiva souls, being the complete whole from whom they emanate in the form of His individual partial expansions. Indeed, He is called the ashraya, the fountainhead of all existence. The same nondual reality, Brahman, is also characterized in aggregate (samashöi),[DDB277] cosmic terms in the list of a major Purana's ten topics, beginning with primary creation. This list is given in the following two verses:

"This Shrimad-Bhagavatam describes ten subjects: sarga (primary creation), visarga (secondary creation), sthana (maintenance), poshana (mercy), uti (desires), manv-antara (reigns of Manus), ishanukatha (pastimes of the Lord and His devotees), nirodha (annihilation), mukti (liberation), and ashraya (the substratum or ultimate shelter). To clarify the meaning of the tenth subject, the great souls describe the characteristics of the first nine subjects by prayers, and also by indirect and direct explanations" [Bhag. 2.10.1–2].

Manvantareshanukathah is a compound of manv-antara ("periods of Manus") and ishanukathah ("narrations of the Lord's pastimes").

This Shrimad-Bhagavatam discusses ten topics, beginning with creation, but the sages' real purpose in describing the characteristics of the first nine is to give us systematic, lucid knowledge of the tenth topic. One might object here that the presentation of the other nine topics does not seem to explain the tenth topic; we reply that in the Bhagavatam the sages explain the tenth topic both directly, by the explicit utterance of prayers and other statements, and also indirectly, through the implied purport of various historical accounts.

COMMENTARY

The Purpose of the Ten Topics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam
Is to[DDB279] Describe the Supreme Lord

In previous Texts Shrila Jiva Gosvami defined the central focus of Shrimad-Bhagavatam by examining the faith and spiritual experiences of Suta Gosvami, Shukadeva Gosvami, and Shrila Vyasadeva. In the course of this exposition he explained the nature of the jiva. He then went on to analyze the second verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which declares that the Absolute Reality is the Bhagavatam's subject matter. To further define that reality he also referred to the Bhagavatam verse beginning vadanti tat tattva-vidah (1.2.11), which names the three main aspects of the one nondual, supreme consciousness (advaya-jnana). He proposed that to understand this nondual consciousness we should first understand the individual jiva, and therefore he discussed the jiva's position on the basis of two Bhagavatam verses spoken by Pippalayana Rishi.

[DDB280]The basic ideas established so far concerning the jiva are that he is conscious, able to know himself and other things, distinct from the material energy, and free of the six types of bodily transformations. The analysis up to this point has thus been from the vyashöi perspective, focusing on the situation of the individual jivas.

Now Jiva Gosvami begins explaining the [DDB281]absolute reality from the viewpoint of the aggregate—the samashöi perspective—and he bases his explanation on the ten topics treated in the Bhagavatam's twelve cantos. First he quotes two verses spoken by Shukadeva Gosvami (2.10.1–2), the second of which states that the reason why scripture describes such topics as creation, maintenance, annihilation, and liberation is to help us understand the ultimate topic, the Supreme Lord. Indeed, these other topics are but descriptions of the Supreme Lord's manifold potencies. The Lord is the fountainhead of all these phenomena, and Shrimad-Bhagavatam explains them just to illustrate His special characteristics. In some places the Bhagavatam introduces prayers to the Supreme Lord in the course of describing one or more of the other nine topics, and in these prayers the Supreme Person Himself is the object of [DDB282]glorification. In other places the Lord is described directly, as in the dialogue between Vidura and Maitreya and that between Kapila and Devahuti. In yet other places, the Bhagavatam glorifies the Lord indirectly through historical episodes, such as the accounts of how the Lord saved Parikshit Maharaja from Ashvatthama's atomic weapon and of how Shukadeva Gosvami was captivated when he heard verses about Lord Krishna's attributes.

In this way Shrila Jiva Gosvami shows that the purpose of the nine preliminary subjects discussed in the Bhagavatam is to explain the tenth subject, the advaya-jnana, which is also called the ashraya and is the fountainhead of everything.

Every person has two types of characteristics[DDB283], svarupa (personal) and taöa-stha (marginal), and the Supreme Personality of Godhead is no exception. In our present conditioned state we have no experience of His personal features, and so if we hear these described without proper commentary we may misconstrue them [DDB284]on account of our strong material conditioning. But whether we adopt the aggregate or the individual viewpoint, we can more easily understand the Lord's marginal characteristics manifested within the material nature, for they are within the scope our of our personal experience.

Shrila Vyasadeva uses the same approach in the Vedanta-sutra. After designating Brahman the subject of the book in the first sutra—athato brahma-jijnasa: "Now, therefore, inquire into Brahman"—he begins discussing the Lord's marginal characteristics in the next sutra—janmady asya yatah: "From Him come the creation, maintenance, and destruction of the universe."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam similarly discusses ten topics, presenting the first nine to help us understand the tenth topic, the ashraya. (Later in the Sandarbhas this ashraya will be identified more fully as Lord Shri Krishna.) The first nine topics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam deal with various potencies of the Lord, such as His creative potency, sarga-shakti. Understanding these topics helps us appreciate the Supreme Lord as the possessor of these potencies. Then we can come to properly apprehend His personal features and pastimes, which are narrated in the Bhagavatam's Tenth Canto. Without studying the nine preliminary topics of the Bhagavatam, we run the risk of viewing His form and pastimes superficially, of concluding that Krishna is an ordinary human being endowed with some extraordinary powers. But this is far from the truth. Lord Krishna therefore says in the Bhagavad-gita (9.11):

avajananti mam mudha manushim tanum ashritam
param bhavam ajananto mama bhuta-maheshvaram

"Fools deride Me when I descend in the human form. They do not know My transcendental nature as the Supreme Lord of all that be." By contrast, [DDB285]the Lord describes those who do understand [DDB286]His transcendental nature [DDB287]as follows:

tyaktva deham punar janma naiti mam eti so 'rjuna

"One who knows in truth[DDB288] the transcendental nature of My appearance and activities does not, upon leaving the body, take his birth again in this material world, but attains My eternal abode, O Arjuna" (Bg. 4.9).

Therefore, wishing to lead us to the highest plane of transcendence through a proper understanding of the Bhagavatam's tenth subject, the summum bonum, Shukadeva Gosvami first explains the first nine subjects.

Clearly, then, we should study Shrimad-Bhagavatam in the order Shukadeva Gosvami presented it, from the first verse onward.

Unfortunately, unscrupulous persons do not study the Bhagavatam verse by verse, Canto by Canto, but rather jump to the Tenth Canto. Yet they pose themselves as learned scholars of the Bhagavatam. Another failing of these false Bhagavatam scholars is their neglect of the mandatory requirement that one must hear the Bhagavatam at the feet of a bona fide guru coming in Vaishnava disciplic succession. Because of this omission they cannot properly relish the ripened fruit of the Vedic tree of knowledge. To all such persons Lord Krishna declares in the Bhagavad-gita (7.25):

naham prakashah sarvasya yoga-maya-samavritah
mudho 'yam nabhijanati loko mam ajam avyayam

The most basic requirement for spiritual study, stipulated in all the Vedic scriptures, is that one must respectfully approach a bona fide spiritual master, humbly serve him, and submissively inquire from him. Then all the secrets of the Vedic teachings will be revealed. This injunction applies to every student, even those who are great intellectuals. The Shvetashvatara Upanishad (6.28) therefore states:

tasyaite kathita hy arthah prakashante mahatmanah

"Only unto those great souls who have implicit faith in and devotion to both the Supreme Lord and the spiritual master are all the imports of Vedic knowledge revealed." Nothing is revealed to the student without the grace of the spiritual master. Therefore to disregard the principle that one must approach a spiritual master to understand the Absolute Truth is to disrespect the Vedic teachings from the outset and ensure failure. Lord Krishna confirms this in the Bhagavad-gita (16.23):

yah shastra-vidhim utshrija vartate kama-karatah
na sa siddhim avapnoti na sukham na param gatim

"He who discards scriptural injunctions and acts according to his own whims attains neither perfection, nor happiness, nor the supreme destination."

Therefore, to unravel the mystery of Shrimad-Bhagavatam one should follow in the footsteps of the previous acaryas and refrain from jumping to the esoteric pastimes described in the Tenth Canto.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami begins explaining each of the ten topics by quoting their definitions from Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

TEXT 57

To elucidate the tenth subject, Shri Shukadeva Gosvami speaks seven verses defining each of the ten subjects. [Four of the seven verses are as follows:]

“The primary creation of the five gross elements, the five subtle sense objects, the five senses, the mahat-tattva, and the false ego, resulting from the disturbance in the material modes’ equilibrium caused by the Supreme Lord, is known as sarga. The secondary creation, effected by Lord Brahma, is called visarga” [Bhag. 2.10.3].

The bhutas mentioned here are the five gross material elements, beginning with ether. The matras are the subtle elements—sound and so on. The indriyas are the perceptive senses. The word dhi (“intelligence”) indicates the totality of unmanifest matter, together with false ego. Brahman, the supreme controller, generates these physical and nonphysical elements by causing the modes of material nature to become unbalanced and produce transformations. This is called sarga (“creation.”) The secondary creation, by Lord Brahma, is called visarga. Since he is the vairaja-purusha, or “universal person,” his creation is also called paurusha. Visarga is the sending forth of moving and nonmoving living beings.

“Sthiti is the victory of Lord Vishnu, and poshana is the grace He bestows on His devotees. The word manv-antara indicates the principles of transcendental religion, while uti refers to desires for material activities. Ishanukatha indicates the various descriptions of the Lord’s pastimes in His incarnations, and also the descriptions of His faithful devotees’ activities” [Bhag. 2.10.4–5].

Sthiti (“maintenance”) is vaikunöha-vijaya, the victory of Lord Vaikunöha, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In other words, sthiti indicates the supreme glory of the Lord shown by His maintaining all created beings in their respective situations under His laws. Poshanam (“sustenance”) indicates how He maintains His devotees by bestowing His grace on them. Manv-antarani (“periods of Manus”) indicates the histories of the Manus and other saintly kings who ruled during the Manus’ reigns, and also the histories of other saintly people who lived during those periods and received the Supreme Lord’s special favor. The deeds of these saints are themselves religious standards, establishing the sad-dharma (“transcendental religion”) of worshiping the Lord. With regard to universal maintenance, uti (“impetuses for action”) are desires for various fruitive activities. Ishanukathah (“narrations about the Lord”) are historical accounts of the Lord’s pastimes in His various incarnations, as well as accounts of His faithful followers’ activities.

"The merging of the living entity, along with his conditioning, with the mystic lying down of [DDB292]Maha-Vishnu is called the winding up of the cosmic manifestation [nirodha]. Liberation [mukti] is the permanent situation of the form of the living entity after he gives up the changeable gross and subtle material bodies" [Bhag. 2.10.6].

When annihilation occurs after a period of universal maintenance, Lord Hari goes to sleep and the jivas follow Him along with their energies, their upadhis. This is called nirodha ("winding up"). Lord Hari's "going to sleep" consists of His closing His eyes to the material creation, and the jivas' "going to sleep" consists of their merging into Lord Hari. If a jiva in that merged state has freed himself from his false, acquired nature—the ignorance and other qualities superimposed on him by material illusion—he attains his original nature; this is called mukti ("liberation").

COMMENTARY

The Definition of the Shrimad-Bhagavatam's First Nine Topics

Understanding the Supreme Lord means knowing Him along with His potencies, just as understanding the sun means knowing it along with its potency, sunshine. According to the Second Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, tenth chapter, the material world is a creation of the Lord and reflects His personality. This world perpetually goes through cycles of creation, maintenance, and annihilation. During annihilation all the material elements are unmanifest because they have merged into the original, dormant state of material nature, called prakriti or pradhana. In this phase the three modes of nature are in balance and thus inactive. At the end of the period of annihilation the Supreme Lord agitates the modes of nature by glancing upon them, and then the first[DDB293] stage of creation begins. This agitated state of the material modes is called the mahat-tattva, which, when further activated by the time factor, gives rise to material ego, ahankara. From ahankara come the five gross material elements (earth, water, fire, air, and ether), the five subtle elements (smell, taste, form, tactility, and sound), and the five perceptive senses (the senses of smell, taste, vision, touch, and hearing). This phase of creation is called sarga, or the primary creation. The subsequent creation is conducted by Lord Brahma and is called visarga, or the secondary creation. Brahma is also called Purusha or Vairaja.

Lord Vishnu oversees the maintenance of the rules and regulations governing universal affairs, and this maintenance is called sthiti or sthanam. The maintenance function shows Vishnu's preeminence over Lord Brahma and Lord Shiva, who are in charge of the secondary creation and of destruction, respectively. To carry out the function of sthiti the Lord incarnates in every millennium, as He states in the Bhagavad-gita (4.8):

paritranya sadhunam vinashaya ca dushkritam dharma-samsthapanarthaya sambhavami yuge yuge

"To deliver the pious and to annihilate the miscreants, as well as to re-establish the principles of religion, I advent myself millennium after millennium." And the grace the Lord showers on the pious is called poshana.

Each day of Lord Brahma contains fourteen periods, each of which is ruled over by a Manu. The Manus are godly persons empowered to look after the welfare of all human beings. The activities of each Manu, along with the deeds saintly people perform during the Manus' reigns, constitute manv-antara. How these saintly persons behave and worship is called sad-dharma.

Impelled by their karma, living beings perform various material activities during the sthiti, or maintenance, of the creation, and these activities give rise to various desires for further material activities. These desires, in the form of impressions within the mind, are called uti. The descriptions of the Lord's pastimes with His associates during His incarnations in this material world are called ishanukatha.

The creation cycle begins when the Lord glances at material nature: sa ikshata lokan nu shrijeti, sa imal lokan ashrijata. "He glanced and desired to create people. Indeed, He created them" (Aitareya Up. 1.1).

When it is time for annihilation, the Lord turns His eyes away from the creation, and this turning away is called His sleep, or cosmic rest. Next all the material elements become unmanifest in the reverse order in which they appeared, and the material nature then exists in equilibrium. At that time the jivas give up their gross bodies, but they remain conditioned by their subtle bodies, which are composed of their karmic impressions. This inactive state of the jivas is called sleep, corresponding to the Lord's sleep, and this phase of existence is called nirodha. When the time comes for the creation cycle, the jivas receive bodies according to part of the karma they accrued in the previous cycle.

During the maintenance period, if a living being takes to the devotional service of the Lord and attains perfection,[DDB294] he is freed from both his subtle and gross bodies and is situated in his original nature. This condition is called mukti, which is also a type of nirodha. However, in contrast to the nirodha that occurs at the time of universal annihilation, when the jiva attains mukti he is not compelled to take birth again in the material world. Rather, all his miseries come to an end and he enters the spiritual planets, where he eternally resides in his original, spiritual form. One can attain this state of eternal liberation only by practicing devotional service to Lord Krishna, as Shrila Vyasadeva saw in His trance.

The Supreme Lord, the tenth topic discussed in Shrimad-Bhagavatam, is the foundation of the other nine topics. The events that occur under the headings of these topics all take place by His potency; indeed, the very reason why the Shrimad-Bhagavatam describes these topics is to help us come to know the Supreme Personality of Godhead, for a person is known by His works and attributes.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami defines the ashraya-tattva, the fountainhead of all existence, who is the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

TEXT 58

"The supreme one, who is celebrated as the Supreme Being or the Supreme Soul, is the supreme source of the cosmic manifestation, as well as its reservoir and winding up. Thus He is the Supreme Fountainhead, the Absolute Truth" (Bhag. 2.10.7).

In this verse the abhasa ("appearance") is material creation, and the nirodha ("cessation") is its dissolution. The word yatah refers to the one from whom the creation emanates, by whom it is made perceivable to the jivas' senses (adhyavasiyate), and in whom it is dissolved. That renowned fountainhead of existence—the ashraya—is known as Brahman (the Supreme Truth) and Paramatma (the Supersoul). Here the word iti expresses the idea of a complete category, thus implying that Bhagavan, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is included as well. Later we shall explain the ashraya in detail.

COMMENTARY

Defining Shrimad-Bhagavatam's Tenth Topic

The Shrimad-Bhagavatam's description of the aforementioned ten topics culminates in the description of the ashraya-tattva. A book that treats too many subjects will bewilder the reader and make it difficult for him to ascertain its ultimate purpose. This is clearly not the case with the Bhagavatam, however, for as stated here, the shelter of all the topics is the Supreme Lord. None of the other topics can be described without reference to the Lord, and indeed the whole reason why Shrila Vyasadeva included them was to throw light on the Lord's energies and activities. In other words, Shrimad-Bhagavatam is really about only one topic—the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

The Lord creates the world, maintains it, and supplies the living beings with the senses and intelligence to perceive it. He blesses these suffering jivas with the Vedic instructions so that the seriously inquisitive can understand Him, and also with the association of His devotees to guide them. Despite these blessings, most jivas remain engaged in material activities, but some develop a desire to know the Lord. These can receive His grace and eventually attain mukti, liberation, which entails becoming situated in one's own svarupa, or original nature. This is possible only by the Lord's mercy, which is available to one who understands in truth the ashraya-tattva described in Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Thus it is rightly said that the purpose of the other nine topics is to explain the tenth topic, the ashraya, who is the source of creation and annihilation. (The ashraya is called Brahman by followers of jnana-yoga, and Paramatma by followers of ashöanga-yoga.)

The word ca ("and") in this verse (Bhag. 2.10.7) indicates the topics of the Bhagavatam not explicitly mentioned in the verse, such as poshana. The word iti indicates Bhagavan, the term that the followers of bhakti-yoga use to designate the ashraya. Thus this verse echoes one quoted earlier, namely the verse beginning brahmeti paramatmeti bhagavan iti shabdyate (Bhag. 1.2.11), which states that the nondual supreme consciousness is called Brahman, Paramatma, and Bhagavan.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami gives further arguments to support the proposition that the Supreme Lord is the ashraya, or shelter of everything.

Shukadeva Gosvami next discusses the divisions of adhyatmika, adhidaivika, and adhibhautika. He does this to clarify the nature of the ashraya, which he describes by referring to the direct, common experience of the individual microcosm:

"This adhyatmika-purusha is the same as the adhidaivika-purusha, and he who creates the differentiation between these two is called the adhibhautika-purusha. In the absence of any one of these we do not perceive the other two. He who knows these three is the Lord, who, being independent of everything else, is the support of His own self and is the true ashraya" [Bhag. 2.10.8–9].

The jiva, the seer, who identifies himself as the owner of his eyes and other senses, is the adhyatmika person. He is indeed also the adhidaivika person, the sun and other deities presiding over the eyes and other senses. Before the physical body is created, the senses have nowhere to reside and so cannot act. Consequently at this point the adhyatmika and adhidaivika persons are indistinguishable, since there has yet to appear a distinction between the functions of the ordinary jivas, who consider themselves independent actors and the illuminators of their senses, and the deities who help them.

And that person because of whom there arises the conception of duality between the presumed owner of the senses and their presiding deities is called adhibhautika, the visible body consisting of the eyeball and other physical sense organs. This physical body is said to be a "person" because it is an upadhi superimposed upon the real person, the jiva. The shruti states, "This [adhibhautika] person consists of food and vital fluids" [Taittiriya Up. 2.1.1].

COMMENTARY

The Lord Is the Ultimate Shelter

In the previous Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami showed that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the ashraya-tattva, the support of everything, even from the macrocosmic viewpoint. Now he further explains that the Lord is the support of each individual in his day-to-day sensory experiences.

The originally pure living being who misidentifies himself with the senses is called the adhyatmika-purusha, the presiding deities of the senses are called the adhidaivika-purusha, and the visible physical body, along with the sense objects, is called the adhibhautika-purusha.

The adhibhautika-purusha creates the distinction between the adhyatmika-purusha and the adhidaivika-purusha. Before the birth of one's body, one cannot distinguish the latter two purushas because they are merged as if they are the same jiva. In this regard Shripada Baladeva Vidyabhushana writes, dehotpatteh purvam api jivena sardham indriyani tad-devatash ca santy eva: "Even before the creation of the gross body, the senses and their presiding deities are present with the jiva." At this stage there is no distinction between the deities and the jivas, because no physical body exists yet. When the physical body comes into existence the senses come and sit in it, and their respective presiding deities take charge of them. At that time one can distinctly perceive the activities of the presiding deities. The eyes, ears, and other senses that we see in the physical body are not the real senses: rather, they are the seats for the actual senses, which are subtle. Lord Krishna confirms this in the fifteenth chapter of the Bhagavad-gita. After asserting that the living entity is His eternal fragmental part, the Lord states that the jiva attracts the mind and five senses, which are situated in material nature, meaning that the jiva accepts them as his own. Krishna then says that when the soul quits his body he carries his five senses and his mind from their seats into his next body, just as the air carries aromas.

Obviously, at the time of death the visible ears and eyes do not disappear. Rather, the subtle senses situated in them, along with the mind, are carried away by the soul.

Another reason why the physical body is called purusha, or “person,” is that the soul identifies himself with it. This illusion prompts a person to say “I am sick” when actually his body is sick. All bodily designations, such as “small man,” “tall man,” “American,” “Indian,” “boy,” and “girl,” are based on the jiva’s illusion that he is the material body. The Vedic statement Shrila Jiva Gosvami quotes in this Text confirms the usage of the term purusha for the body.

In the next Text Jiva Gosvami explains the second of the two Bhagavatam verses he quoted in Text 59.1, namely 2.10.9.

The verse beginning ekam ekatarabhava [Bhag. 2.10.9] shows how the fact that all of these [purushas] are mutually dependent in effect means that none of them is the ashraya. The explanation is as follows: Without the presence of the visible object there is no basis for the existence of either the sense organ (whose presence is inferred from perception of the object) or the seer. And without the seer, the sun-god and other presiding deities of perception also have no basis for existing. Without the presiding deity of sight, the sense of sight cannot act, and without the sense of sight there can be no perception. Thus in the absence of any one [of the three purushas] we cannot find either of the others. Such being the case, the one who knows all three of these, perceiving them visually as their witness—namely the Supersoul—is indeed the actual ashraya, or shelter. In refutation of the idea that the three purushas are shelters for one another, the Supersoul is specifically characterized as svashraya, His own shelter, meaning that He has no other shelter and is consequently the shelter of all others. In this context the living entity is also called ashraya, but only in the sense of emphasizing the partial nondifference between the pure jiva and the Supersoul, who are related as part and whole, respectively.

The pure jiva is designated as the witness in such statements as “Although transcendental, he considers himself a material product” [Bhag. 1.7.5]; “Waking awareness, dream, and deep sleep are the functions of the mind, caused by the modes of material nature. The individual soul has been ascertained to be distinct from these functions, as their witness” [Bhag. 11.13.27]; and “The pure one witnesses the actions of the impure agent, the mind” [Bhag. 5.11.12]. The pure jiva being characterized thus, it cannot reasonably be proposed that this jiva, known as the witness, is the ashraya.[DDB300]

Alternatively, one might propose that the aspects of adhyatmika[DDB301] and so on are also ashrayas. We answer that this is true, but still, since they are dependent on one another, none of them is exclusively the ashraya; as the verse beginning ekam states, it is not in the direct, literal sense that they are referred to as ashrayas .

“Then let the witness (the jiva) be the shelter.”[DDB303] In answer the words beginning tritayam are spoken: The witnessing self, the jiva, is called svashraya (“his own shelter”), but in fact his ashraya is the Supersoul, who has no other ashraya; this is the difference between the two. Similarly, the Hamsa-guhya prayers [Bhag. 6.4.25] say, “A person who knows the modes of nature may know everything about them, but he does not know the all-knowing one. I worship that unlimited Lord.” Thus it is that the Supersoul, described in such statements as the one beginning abhasash ca [Bhag. 2.10.7], is alone the ashraya.

The verse under discussion [Bhag. 2.10.9] was spoken by Shri Shuka.

COMMENTARY

The Jiva Is Not the Ultimate Shelter

Shrila Jiva Gosvami shows here that except for the Lord none can be the ashraya, Shrimad-Bhagavatam’s tenth topic. From a cursory look, the jivas and presiding deities appear to be the ashrayas. The jiva, or conditioned soul, is the ashraya for his gross body, and the presiding deities are the ashraya for the senses. But none of them can be ashrayas independent of the others. For example, without a gross body the conditioned jiva would be unable to see a flower because the distinction between the presiding deity of the eyes and the jiva would not then be manifest. Conversely, when the body is manifest, then the senses come and sit in their respective seats and are presided over by their respective demigods. Still, if the demigods do not provide support, the senses cannot perceive. The presiding deity of the eye, for example, is the sun. Without the sun’s light the eye cannot perceive visible objects, even with the jiva’s support. For proper perception all three supports must be present: the jiva (the adhyatmika-purusha), the gross body (the adhibhautika-purusha), and the demigods (the adhi[DDB304]daivika-purusha).

The one who witnesses all the activities of these three purushas is the Paramatma, who is the ashraya for Himself as well as the jiva. He is the ultimate ashraya. Although the jiva witnesses his own various mental states, he is not their ultimate basis. Sometimes the jiva is referred to as the ashraya in consideration of his being a minute fraction of the Lord and thus nondifferent from Him, but the jiva is never the ashraya in the primary sense.

The jiva is the marginal energy of the Supreme Lord, the energetic, and as such the jiva is always dependent on Him. Still, because the jiva is part and parcel of the Lord he has some of His characteristics in very minute degree, just as a drop of ocean water has some of the ocean's qualities. But only some: The ocean has waves, tides, and storms, none of which a single drop can accommodate. Also, unlike the drop of ocean water, the ocean shelters the whole oceanic world and is suitable for sailing or surfing. Similarly, the Supreme Lord is the shelter and source of happiness for all existence, a position no sane jiva can claim. Thus the jiva, although one with the Lord in some respects, should not be considered the object of worship independent of the Lord, the basis of all existence. The Lord is the Supreme substratum or shelter for Himself as well as others. This is the import of Shukadeva Gosvami's statements explaining the various topics treated in Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

Jiva Gosvami will now quote Shrila Suta Gosvami as the latter draws the same conclusion from a slightly different angle while explaining the characteristics of a Maha-purana.

TEXT 61

antarani manv-antarani.

In the following two verses Shri Suta Gosvami describes in a different way the characteristics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam that qualify it as a Maha-purana, and in so doing he affirms that the Supreme Lord alone is the ashraya:

"O brahmana, authorities on the matter understand a Purana to contain ten characteristic topics: sarga, the creation of this universe; visarga, the subsequent creation of worlds and beings; vritti, the maintenance of all living beings; raksha, the sustenance of all living beings; antarani, the rule of various Manus; vamsha, the dynasties of great kings; vamshanucarita, the activities of such kings; samstha, annihilation; hetu, motivation; and apashraya, the supreme shelter. Other scholars state that the great Puranas deal with these ten topics while lesser Puranas may deal with five" [Bhag. 12.7.9–10].

Here the word antarani refers to periods of Manus.

TEXT 61.2

According to some, a Purana has five characteristics:

"The five characteristics of a Purana are sarga, creation; pratisarga, annihilation; vamsha, genealogy; manv-antarani, the reign of Manus; and vamshanucaritam, the activities of dynasties of kings and successions of saints" [Matsya Pur. 53.65].

This difference of opinion is due to the different topics that characterize greater and lesser Puranas. Although Puranas such as the Vishnu Purana discuss all ten topics, these Puranas are still considered lesser because they discuss only five of the topics in depth.

TEXT 61.3

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam there is no intention of discussing the ten topics consecutively, one per canto; after all, the Bhagavatam has twelve cantos. Nor should one think that because the ten topics are listed in the Second Canto they can be found one after another from Canto Three to Twelve, because the three topics of nirodha, mukti, and ashraya can all be found in the Tenth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Cantos. Nor will one find the remaining topics in order in the other cantos, with the exception of the Eighth Canto.

Shrila Shridhara Svami also indicates this [absence of a strict correspondence between the Bhagavatam's topics and cantos]:

"To spread Lord Krishna's glories, the Tenth Canto describes how unrighteous rulers suffered annihilation (nirodha) because they deviated from religious principles."

The four types of annihilations of the total material nature were already described earlier in the Bhagavatam, so here Shridhara Svami's intention is to show that the Tenth Canto primarily discusses the ashraya, the form of Shri Krishna. As Shridhara Svami himself states, "The subject of the Tenth Canto is the tenth topic, the Supreme Lord, who shelters His dependent devotees."

We can draw similar conclusions about the other cantos.

TEXT 61.5

Thus Shridhara Svami would agree with us that virtually every canto touches on all ten topics, either directly or indirectly. It is in the same light that we should understand the statement "these topics are described here either directly or indirectly" [Bhag. 2.10.2], since we actually do find these topics discussed both directly and indirectly throughout the Bhagavatam. And for the same reason we should recognize that the First and Second Cantos also belong to this Maha-purana. Therefore we do not accept the idea that these topics are discussed in a strict sequence.

Shri Suta Gosvami Lists the Ten Topics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam

Previously Shrila Jiva Gosvami showed that Suta Gosvami, Shukadeva Gosvami, and Shrila Vyasadeva [DDB310] are all in agreement concerning the essential message of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Here Shrila Jiva Gosvami reiterates this conclusion by citing Suta Gosvami's statements regarding the characteristics of a Maha-purana. Although the ten topics Shri Suta lists seem to differ from those listed by Shukadeva Gosvami, Shrila Jiva Gosvami shows that in essence they are the same. In the Bhavartha-dipika, while commenting on verse 12.7.9 of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, Shridhara Svami offers the following reconciliation between Shukadeva's list and Suta's list: "Sarga and visarga are found in both lists. Sthanam in the first list is called vritti in the second, poshana is called raksha, uti is called hetu, manvantara is called antara, and ishanukatha is called vamsha and vamshanucaritam. Nirodha and mukti are both called samstha in the second list." (Mukti can also be counted as one of the four types of annihilations mentioned in Text 63). [DDB311] Below is a table comparing the two lists of ten topics:

TOPICS IN THE BHAGAVATAM

Listed by Shri Shukadeva Gosvami

1. Sarga (primary creation)
2. Visarga (secondary creation)
3. Sthanam (maintenance)
4. Poshana (sustenance)
5. Uti (material desires)
6. Manv-antara (reigns of Manus)
7. Ishanukatha (acts. Lord + devotees)
8. Nirodha (annihilation)
9. Mukti (liberation)
10. Ashraya (the supreme shelter)

Listed by Shri Suta Gosvami

- Sarga
- Visarga
- Vritti
- Raksha
- Hetu
- Antara
- Vamsha, Vamshanucarita
- Samstha
- Samstha
- Apashraya

A Maha-purana deals extensively with these ten topics, while a lesser Purana deals with only five—sarga, creation; pratisarga, dissolution; vamsha, the genealogies of kings or sages; manv-antaras, the reigns of Manus; and vamshanucarita, the histories of various sages, kings, and incarnations. In the course of discussing these five topics, a lesser Purana will discuss all ten topics of a Maha-purana, but will treat only these five in depth. This difference in how extensively the ten topics are treated constitutes the principal distinction between a Maha-purana and a lesser Purana. The following table illustrates in what context a lesser Purana discusses the ten characteristics of a Maha-purana:

- | | |
|--------------------|------------------------------------|
| 1. Sarga | Sarga, Visarga, Ashraya |
| 2. Pratisarga | Nirodha, Mukti |
| 3. Vamsha | Ishanukatha |
| 4. Manv-antara | Manv-antara, Sthanam |
| 5. Vamshanucaritam | Ishanukatha, Poshana, Uti, Ashraya |

Shrimad-Bhagavatam contains twelve cantos, but the [DDB312] first list of a Maha-purana's topics is in the Second Canto. From this, plus the fact that the first two cantos seem in some ways introductory, some scholars conclude that the Bhagavatam explains these ten topics successively in each canto from the Third Canto onwards. Shrila Jiva Gosvami has no regard for this theory. Since a Maha-purana treats ten topics, if the first two cantos of the Bhagavatam described none of these, then the Bhagavatam proper would have only ten cantos. It is obvious enough, however, that the First and Second Cantos discuss at least sarga, visarga, and raksha.

Earlier Shrila Jiva Gosvami listed the defining characteristics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, and among these were its having eighteen thousand verses and twelve cantos and its beginning with a reference to the Gayatri mantra. If the first two cantos are not really part of the Bhagavatam, then what remains no longer meets the criteria for being the Bhagavatam. Other scholars say that because Shukadeva speaks only from the Second Canto on, the First Canto is not part of the Bhagavatam proper. But their opinion is countered by the same reply.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami additionally argues that the ten topics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam are not described in strict sequence, one per canto. First of all, there are twelve cantos and only ten topics. If we try to resolve this dilemma by excluding two of the cantos, Shrimad-Bhagavatam will be reduced to less than the stipulated eighteen thousand verses. Shrila Jiva Gosvami further says that although nirodha is the eighth topic, it is discussed profusely in the Tenth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Cantos.

This opinion is confirmed by Shridhara Svami, one of the earliest and most respected authorities on Shrimad-Bhagavatam. According to the adherents of a successive description of the ten topics beginning from the Third Canto, the Tenth Canto should describe the eighth topic, nirodha, and the Twelfth Canto the tenth topic, ashraya. Undoubtedly the Tenth Canto discusses nirodha, but its principal topic is the ashraya, whom it establishes to be Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

In Shrila Jiva Gosvami's opinion, which finds support in Shridhara Svami writings, all twelve cantos of the Bhagavatam describe all ten topics, though some cantos place more emphasis on certain topics and less on others. In his Sarva-samvadini, Shrila Jiva Gosvami specifies which topics are covered extensively in each canto:

Topic	Cantos Primarily Discussed In
1. Sarga	2, 3
2. Visarga	2, 3, 4
3. Vritti	3, 7, 11
4. Raksha	throughout
5. Manvantara	8
6. Vamsha	4, 9
7. Vamshanucarita	4, 9
8. Samstha	11, 12
9. Hetu	3, 11
10. Apashraya	10

As mentioned before, the ultimate purpose of Shrimad-Bhagavatam is to explain the tenth subject, the ashraya, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. It is therefore illogical to expect that the Bhagavatam will deal with the other nine subjects strictly successively, as if presenting mathematical theorems. Instead, the Bhagavatam presents these other subjects primarily to establish and explain the glories of the Supreme Lord. We have no reason to insist on a consecutive order of the ten subjects or to depreciate the first two cantos. From the very start of the Tattva-sandarbha, Shrila Jiva Gosvami has proposed that Shrimad-Bhagavatam focuses entirely on Lord Shri Krishna, the supreme shelter of all existence. The Bhagavatam describes Shri Krishna in its beginning, middle, and end, and not just in the last canto. Shri Jiva will explain this matter in more detail in Shri Krishnasandarbha.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami presents Suta Gosvami's definitions of the first seven of the ten topics.

Suta Gosvami then describes the features of the ten topics, beginning with creation:

"From the agitation of the original modes within the unmanifest material nature, the mahat-tattva arises. From the mahat-tattva comes the element false ego, which divides into three aspects. This threefold ego further manifests as the subtle elements, as the senses, and as the gross sense objects. The generation of all of these is called creation (sarga)" [Bhag. 12.7.11].

The mahat-tattva comes into being when the original, dormant material nature (pradhana) is agitated, and from the mahat comes false ego in each of the three material modes. From this threefold ego come the subtle elements, the senses, and the physical elements. The appearance of the elements implies the appearance of their presiding deities as well. All together, the appearance of these constitutes sarga, the manifestation of the subtle causes of creation.

Suta Gosvami continues:

"The secondary creation (visarga), which exists by the mercy of the Lord, is the manifest amalgamation of the desires of the living entities. Just as a seed produces additional seeds, activities that promote material desires in the performer produce moving and nonmoving life forms" [Bhag. 12.7.12].

Here the word purusha ("person") refers to the Supersoul, and etesham ("of these") indicates the elements, beginning with the mahat. The primary reason the elements combine is the karma the jivas have accumulated from their previous lives. Thus the moving and nonmoving living beings take their births in a perpetual cycle, like the generation of one seed from another. This constant flow of generated products is called visarga, secondary creation. In other words, visarga is the creation of the individual organisms, and thus this discussion of visarga includes the topic of uti ("impulses for activity").

"Vritti means the process of sustenance, by which the moving beings live upon the nonmoving. For a human being, vritti specifically means acting for one's livelihood in a manner suited to one's personal nature. Such action may be carried out either in pursuit of selfish desire or in accordance with the Vedic injunctions" [Bhag. 12.7.13].

Mobile living beings generally thrive on immobile ones, but the word ca ("and") in this verse hints that, when the desire impels them, moving creatures will also subsist on other moving creatures. For human beings, however, the means of livelihood is prescribed according to their individual natures, on the basis of either selfish desire or scriptural injunction. All this is called vritti.

Here the word yaih ("by them") means by the incarnations. This definition of "protection" (raksha) also incorporates the three topics isha-katha ("narrations about the Supreme Lord"), sthana ("maintenance"), and poshana ("nourishment").

From the mention here of the activities of the Manus and the others, it is understood that the topic of sad-dharma ("progressive religious principles") is also covered. In this way this list of ten topics is equivalent to the one given earlier in the Bhagavatam.

The activities of the vamsha-dharah (prominent members of those dynasties) constitutes vamshanucaritam ("dynastic history").

COMMENTARY

Shri Suta Gosvami Defines the Bhagavatam'[DDB320]'s Topics

At the end of the Second Canto Shukadeva Gosvami lists and defines the ten topics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, and in the Twelfth Canto Suta Gosvami does the same. The first topic is sarga, primary creation. As we have already pointed out, during total dissolution everything in the material universe becomes unmanifest, a state called prakriti or pradhana. In this state the three modes of nature remain in a state of equilibrium. Not until the modes are agitated and put out of balance can creation begin again. This same principle applies to human beings: When a person is satisfied, peaceful, and equipoised he will not initiate some new activity; some stimulus must disturb his equilibrium and motivate him to act. One engages in sex, for example, when one's mind and body are stimulated by lust or the desire to procreate.

The original disturbance in the pradhana is caused by the glance of the Supreme Lord, with which He impregnates prakriti, or material nature, with all the conditioned jivas. Lord Krishna confirms this in the Bhagavad-gita (14.3): mama yonir mahad brahma tasmin garbham dadamy aham. "The total material substance, called Brahman, is the source of birth, and it is that Brahman that I impregnate." Here the word Brahman means prakriti, not the Lord's impersonal feature.

The impregnated or disturbed state of prakriti is called the mahat-tattva. When further impelled by kala, the Lord's time potency, the mahat-tattva gives rise to the three kinds of ahankara, or false ego. These include vaikarika ahankara, false ego in the mode of goodness,[DDB321] taijasa ahankara, false ego in the mode of passion,[DDB322] and tamasa ahankara, false ego in the mode of ignorance.

Vaikarika ahankara gives rise to manas, the elemental substance of mind, and also to the presiding deities of material creation. Taijasa ahankara gives rise to buddhi, the intelligence, and also to the senses, which are of two types, perceptive and working. When the kala potency acts on the tamasa ahankara, sound comes into being, followed by ether and the ear. Under the impulse of time, ether then gives rise to tactility, and then air and the skin evolve. Similarly, air gives rise to form, after which fire and the eye evolve; fire gives rise to taste, and then water and the tongue evolve; and finally water gives rise to smell, after which earth and the nose evolve. The Lord Himself performs this primary phase of creation (sarga), which includes the creation of the abovementioned elements' presiding deities. This is indicated here (in Bhag. 12.7.11) by the word artha.

These are the stages of material creation in its primary phase (sarga):

PRAKRITI OR PRADHANA

(Balanced state of Nature)

Glance of the Lord (with Kala)

MAHAT-TATTVA (Citta)

(Pradhana becomes disturbed)

AHANKARA (False Ego)

VAIKARIKA TAIJASA TAMASA

(In Goodness) (In Passion) (In ignorance)

MIND AND INTELLIGENCE TAN-MATRAS PRESIDING DEITIES AND SENSES (Sound, Touch, Form, Taste, Smell) and 5 material elements.

As mentioned previously, the Bhagavatam distinguishes between the senses and the physical sense organs, the latter being the seats of the former. The above chart shows that false ego in the mode of passion gives rise to intelligence and the senses. These senses are not the sense organs but rather the subtle senses, which accompany the jiva from body to body. The physical sense organs, of course, are dissolved along with the rest of the gross body at death.

Each of the five tan-matras, the subtle manifestations of the material elements, becomes mixed with the time energy of the Lord and gives rise to its corresponding gross element and the seat of the corresponding sense organ:

TAN-MATRA MATERIAL ELEMENTS SEATS OF SENSES

SOUND — SKY — EARS

TOUCH — AIR — SKIN

FORM — FIRE — EYE

TASTE — WATER — TONGUE

SMELL — EARTH — NOSE

The mahat-tattva, ahankara, mind, and intelligence are considered internal senses. These four, plus the five working senses (legs, hands, anus, voice[DDB323], and genitals), the five perceptive senses (ears, eyes, nose, skin, and tongue), the five gross material objects (sky, air, fire, water, and earth), and the five subtle elements (sound, tactility, form, taste, and smell) total twenty-four elements, and the jiva and Paramatma can be counted as the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth. Time (kala) is not counted separately, being an energy of the Paramatma.

Because pure elements cannot be employed in the process of creation, the five gross material elements listed above must be further combined by the process called panci-karanam. In this process each of the elements is mixed with the other four according to a certain ratio. Then Lord Brahma, using these mixed elements, proceeds with the secondary phase of creation, called visarga. He creates the bodies of the myriad living beings according to the stored-up karmic impressions of their previous lives. Visarga includes the manifestation of Brahma's mind-born sons—Atri, Vasishöha, Daksha, Manu, and others. Some of these sons are Prajapatis, progenitors, whose offspring populate the universe. The phases of creation continue in cycles, one phase giving rise to the next, like one seed giving rise to another seed. The seeds in this creative process are the living entities' fruitive activities.

After sarga and visarga come vritti, sustenance. As stated in Shrimad Bhagavatam (1.13.47), one living being is generally sustained by eating others:

ahastani sa-hastanam apadani catus-padam

phalguni tatra mahatam jivo jivasya jivanam

"Those who are devoid of hands are prey for those who have hands; those devoid of legs are prey for the four-legged. The weak are the subsistence of the strong, and the general rule holds that one living being is food for another."

Usually, immovable beings are food for those that move, but some moving beings, such as tigers, prey on other moving beings. Human beings are special because they can choose what kind of food they will eat. In this matter they can be guided either by their own desires or by Vedic scriptural injunction. Those who eat according to whim glide down to hellish species, while those who follow scripture progress toward liberation.

Since Lord Vishnu accepts the responsibility of maintaining Vedic culture in the universe, He incarnates in every millennium to protect His devotees and curb the demoniac. This is called raksha, protection. The Lord does not restrict His appearances only to the human species. As Prahlada Maharaja says in his prayers to Lord Nrisimha, ittham nri-tiryag-rishi-deva-jhashavatarair lokan vibhavayasi hamsi jagat pratipan: "My Lord, You appear in various incarnations as a human being, an animal, a great saint, a demigod, a fish, or a tortoise, thus maintaining the entire creation in different planetary systems and killing the demoniac principles" (Bhag. 7.9.38).

The material creation is manifest for the duration of Lord Brahma's life, one hundred years according to his time scale. His one day lasts for one thousand cycles of the four yugas—Satya, Treta, Dvapara, and Kali. By human calculation, therefore, a day of Brahma lasts 4,320,000,000 years. For managerial purposes he divides each of his days into fourteen periods called manv-antarās. The person who rules during each of these periods is called Manu, who is assisted by his sons,[DDB324] by demigods such as Candra and Varuna,[DDB325]by Lord Indra,[DDB326]by the seven great sages, called sapta-rishis,[DDB327] and by a special partial expansion of the Supreme Lord who incarnates for each particular manv-antara. The demigods and sages are all appointed for the period of one manv-antara, and the activities of these great personalities constitute sad-dharma, or progressive religious principles.

At present ([DDB328]A.D. 1994[DDB329]) we are in the period of the seventh Manu, Vaivasvata Manu, more exactly in the 5,092nd year of Kali-yuga, in the twenty-eighth yuga cycle of the day of Brahma called the Shvetavaraha-kalpa, during his fifty-first year. Shrimad-Bhagavatam names the fourteen Manus, the corresponding incarnations special to their periods, and the names of Indra in these periods:

MANU	MANU'S FATHER	NAME OF AVATAR	INDRA
1. Svayambhuva	Brahma	Yajna	Yajna
2. Svarocisha	Agni	Vibhu	Rocana
3. Uttama	Priyavrata	Satyasena	Satyajit
4. Tamasa	Priyavrata	Hari	Trishikha
5. Raivata	Priyavrata	Vaikunöha	Vibhu
6. Cakshusha	Cakshu	Ajita	Mantradruma
7. Vaivasvata	Vivasvan	Vamana	Purandara
8. Savarni	Vivasvan	Sarvabhauma	Bali
9. Daksha-savarni	Varuna	Rishabha	Adbhuta
10. Brahma-savarni	Upashloka	Vishvaksena	Shambhu
11. Dharma-savarni	Upashloka	Dharmasetu	Vaidhrita
12. Rudra-savarni	Upashloka	Svadhama	Ritadhama
13. Deva-savarni	Upashloka	Yogeshvara	Divaspati
14. Indra-savarni	Upashloka	Brihadbhanu	Shuci

Two prominent dynasties of kings come from Lord Brahma—the sun dynasty and the moon dynasty. The description of the deeds performed by the kings appearing in these dynasties is called vamshyanucaritam.

In the next Text Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains the definitions of the remainder of the Bhagavatam's ten topics and concludes Shri Tattva-sandarbha by explaining their purpose.

In this verse the word asya ("His") refers to the Parameshvara, the Supreme Lord, while svabhavatah ("due to nature") means "by His energy." The term atyantikah ("ultimate") implies that mukti (liberation) is included in this kind of dissolution.

Some authorities call the living being the personality underlying the material creation, while others say he is the unmanifest self" [Bhag. 12.7.18].

The hetu ("cause") here is the nimitta, or efficient cause. Asya ("of this") refers to this universe, the existence of which is due to the jivas, who act in ignorance. Some call that same cause the anushayi ("underlying personality"), highlighting the principle of consciousness, while others call him the avyakrita ("unmanifest"), focusing attention on the jivas' upadhis.

"The Supreme Absolute Truth is present throughout all the states of awareness—waking consciousness, sleep, and deep sleep—throughout all the phenomena manifested by the external energy, and within the functions of all living entities, and He also exists separate from all these. Thus situated in His own transcendence, He is the ultimate and unique shelter" [Bhag. 12.7.19].

It cannot be said that the jiva is the ashraya, even in his pure state. That would go against what Shrila Vyasadeva experienced in trance. Rather, the correct understanding is as follows:

The Supreme Brahman is alone in His original identity. He is always aloof from the states of consciousness known as waking awareness and so on, and also from the manifestations of matter, beginning with the mahat-tattva. All these are products of the external energy, that is to say, creations of His Maya potency. While remaining aloof from all these manifestations, He simultaneously associates with them in His feature as the Supersoul, the supreme witness. Therefore He is the basis for the jiva's activities in both his pure and his conditioned state[DDB331]. But in this context the word apashraya indicates that even while He is the foundation for the jiva's activities He still remains transcendental to everything; the prefix apa refers to "abandonment," which here amounts to the idea of transcending.

Such knowledge of the pure nature of the jiva, who is here designated the cause of material existence, leads to realization of the apashraya, or transcendental fountainhead of existence, as Suta Gosvami states in two verses:

"Although a material object may assume various forms and names, its essential ingredient is always present as the basis of its existence. Similarly, both conjointly and separately, the jiva is always present with the created material body throughout its phases of existence, beginning with conception and ending with death.

"Either on the strength of one's own power of discrimination or because of one's regulated spiritual practice, one's mind may stop functioning on the material platform of waking consciousness, sleep, and deep sleep. Then the jiva understands the Supreme Soul and withdraws from material endeavor" [Bhag. 12.7.20–21].

We can consider the substances earth, water, and so on to be either associated with their products having names and forms—such as pots—or separate from them. After all, we can identify these substances even apart from their products. In the same way, although by the force of ignorance the originally pure spirit soul becomes involved with the nine stages of life from conception to death, he can nonetheless become indifferent by understanding that he is in fact distinct from all this by virtue of his being a pure self. Thus becoming aloof, he is then qualified to inquire about the ashaya. That is the purport of the verse beginning virameta [Bhag. 12.7.21].

The vritti-trayam ("three functional states") are the states of waking, dreaming, and deep sleep. Atmanam ("Self") here means the Supersoul. Svayam ("by oneself") means by carefully studying the illusory nature of the world, as the sage Vamadeva did. Yogena ("by yoga") indicates that one may conduct this study by means of the kind of meditation Shrimati Devahuti and others practiced. Iyahah nivartate ("he becomes free from all actions") means that he refrains from all activities other than the practice of God-realization.

This is our explanation of sambandha, the connection between Shrimad-Bhagavatam and the subject it discusses.

COMMENTARY

Conclusion

The dissolution of the material creation is called samstha, of which Suta Gosvami says there are four kinds—naimittika, prakritika, nitya, and atyantika. The dissolution that comes at the end of Lord Brahma’s day is called the naimittika, or occasional. The dissolution of the universe at the end of Lord Brahma’s life is called prakritika, or complete. The inexorable moment-by-moment progression of everything in the material world toward annihilation is called the nitya, or continuous, dissolution. And when an individual jiva gets free from both his subtle and gross bodies and enters the spiritual sky, that is called the atyantika, or ultimate, dissolution, namely liberation. Having attained this state, one does not have to take birth again in this material world. Thus Shrila Jiva Gosvami says that atyantika-laya includes mukti, the ninth topic among the ten topics of Shrimad-Bhagavatam Shukadeva Gosvami enumerated in [DDB335]a verse quoted in Text 56 (Bhag. 2.10.1)

In his Sarva-samvadini Shrila Jiva Gosvami states that, in addition to the dissolutions mentioned above, there is also a partial dissolution at the end of each manv-antara. To substantiate this statement he cites the Vishnu-dharmottara Purana, Shrimad-Bhagavatam, and the Bharata-tatparya of Shri Madhvacarya. Part of the reference from the Vishnu-dharmottara Purana (1.75.1, 2) states:

vajra uvaca
manv-antare parikshine yadrishi dvija jayate samavastha maha-bhaga tadrishim vaktum arhasi

markandeya uvaca
manv-antare parikshine deva manv-antareshvarah mahar-lokam athasadya tishohanti gata-kalmashah

“King Vajra asked, '[DDB336]O brahmana, what is the situation of the world when a manv-antara ends? Please explain this to me.’

“Markandeya replied, '[DDB337]At the end of a manv-antara, the demigods appointed for that particular manv-antara, being free from sins, attain to Maharloka and reside there.'”

Markandeya goes on to explain that the seven sages, Manu, and Indra go to Brahmaloka while the earth becomes submerged in a deluge. This description of the general annihilation at the end of each manv-antara is similar to the one given in the Twenty-fourth Chapter of the Bhagavatam’s Eighth Canto. Shrila Jiva Gosvami comments that the existence of a dissolution at the end of each manv-antara is further substantiated by the Hari-vamsha Purana and commentaries on its chapters dealing with the subject of universal dissolution. Thus the dissolution at the end of a manv-antara can be categorized as naimittika, or occasional, because it occurs repeatedly with the changes of Manus.

The hetu, or efficient cause of creation, is the jiva. The Supreme Lord has nothing to gain by creating this material world. He has His own transcendental abode, where He engages in loving pastimes with His dear devotees. But for the welfare of those living beings who have turned their backs on Him, He has created this universe, where the jivas are avidya-karma-karaka, acting out of ignorance and sustaining the universe. In that sense the jivas are the efficient cause behind the creation, even though they neither design nor produce it. As Lord Krishna states in the Bhagavad-gita (7.5), jiva-bhutam maha-baho yayedam dharyate jagat: The living entities sustain the whole material world.

The Lord’s ultimate purpose in creating the material world is to enable the jivas to attain liberation from the cycle of repeated birth and death. Shukadeva Gosvami states this explicitly in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.87.2):

matrartham ca bhavartham ca atmane 'kalpanaya ca

From this we can see that the jiva is certainly not the ashraya of the universe. According to Shrila Vyasadeva's realization in trance, that position belongs to the Supreme Lord. But if the Lord is the ashraya of this material world, wouldn't He also necessarily be in contact with Maya and her creation? Shri Suta Gosvami replies that the Supreme Lord is apashraya, the transcendental shelter. In other words, He is the ashraya, but He is apart from Maya. In the Bhagavad-gita (7.4) the Lord describes His own material nature as bhinna prakriti, His separated energy. In His original form the Supreme Personality of Godhead is completely aloof from His creation, but as the Supersoul He witnesses and controls the activities of both the jivas and Maya. Thus by His inconceivable potency He both associates with the creation and remains aloof from it. This He also confirms in the Bhagavad-gita (9.4):

maya tatam idam sarvam jagad avyakta-murtina
mat-sthani sarva-bhutani na caham teshv avasthitah

"By Me, in My unmanifested form, this entire universe is pervaded. All beings are in Me, but I am not in them." Yet even though as the Supersoul the Lord pervades the universe and controls it, He is neither in physical contact with it nor influenced by it.

In Text 53 Shrila Jiva Gosvami showed that knowledge of the pure nature of the jiva is the first step in the science of God-realization. Here in Text 63 he substantiates this statement with two verses spoken by Shri Suta Gosvami (quoted in Text 63.4).

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam [DDB338]11.22.47 Lord Krishna mentions the nine states of bodily existence the jiva experiences: conception, gestation, birth, infancy, childhood, youth, middle age, old age, and death. Although in his conditioned state the jiva seems to associate with these nine states, he never actually does. Just as clay is the essential constituent of a pot yet still exists independent of the pot, so the jiva animates his body but still exists independent of the body and its nine states.

When a person knows that[DDB339] whether [DDB340]he is awake, dreaming, or merged in deep sleep[DDB341] he is always distinct from his body during all the nine states, he is qualified to walk on the path of God-realization. That is the stage of athato brahma-jijnasa: One who knows he is distinct from the body is qualified to inquire into the Absolute Truth (V.s. 1.1.1).

This Text gives two processes for self-realization. The word svayam ("by oneself") implies the path of jnana, in which one meditates on the self as different from everything else in the realm of Maya. The Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad relates the history of a sage named Vamadeva who followed this path, and the Eleventh Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam tells of another practitioner, Dattatreya.

The second process is implied by the word yogena, which means the path of bhakti. On this path one considers oneself different from the three states of existence—the waking state, the dreaming state, and deep sleep—and meditates on the Supersoul. This path is exemplified by Lord Kapiladeva's mother, Shrimati Devahuti, whose story is told in the Third Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

Shrila Jiva Gosvami concludes that the ashraya of everything is Lord Shri Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead; He alone is the subject (sambandhi-tattva) of Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

The following is a summary of Shri Tattva-sandarbha: The first eight Texts, which are in verse form, make up the invocation, or mangalacarana. In these verses Shrila Jiva Gosvami prays to his teachers and his worshipable Deity; [DDB342]he also tells why he is writing the book and defines its subject and the qualifications one must have to read it.

In Texts 9 through 26 Jiva Gosvami discusses Gaudiya Vaishnava epistemology. He first points out that all human beings are subject to four defects that prevent them from acquiring perfect knowledge independently. Of the ten means of gaining knowledge,[DDB343] Shrila Jiva accepts shabda, revealed scripture, as supreme, for it alone can give one perfect knowledge. Since the Vedas are shabda-brahman, knowledge revealed by the Supreme Lord, they are the highest authority. But because they are now unavailable in their complete form, because they are cryptic, and because they can no longer be learned from representatives of a proper disciplic succession of teachers, Shrila Jiva Gosvami recommends the Puranas, which, along with the Ramayana and Mahabharata, constitute the fifth Veda. Next Shrila Jiva shows that the Puranas have the same source, authority, and nature as the Vedas, and that, for us in this age, their simple language and universal accessibility render them an even better source of knowledge than the other four Vedas.

But the Puranas seem to contradict one another in various ways—for example, by glorifying different deities as [DDB344]worthy of the highest worship—and most of them lack a proper disciplic succession. By the process of elimination, therefore, in Text 18 Shrila Jiva Gosvami proposes Shrimad-Bhagavatam as the most suitable Purana for investigation. From Text 19 to 26 Shrila Jiva reveals the supreme qualities of Shrimad-Bhagavatam and shows how it is the most authoritative Vedic scripture, the ripened fruit of the desire tree of Vedic knowledge. He shows that the Bhagavatam is based on the Gayatri mantra, the essence of the Vedas, and that it is the natural commentary on the Vedanta-sutra. In Texts 27 and 28 Shrila Jiva describes the basic scheme of the Sandarbhas, what sources he plans to refer to, and his method of analysis.

From Texts 29 to 63 he establishes the following principles:

1. The subject matter of Shrimad-Bhagavatam is Lord Krishna.
2. Lord Krishna is the original personality of Godhead.
3. He has multifarious potencies, which are divided into three main categories—internal, external, and marginal.
4. Maya, His external energy, works under Him but cannot control Him.
5. The jivas have been bound by Maya since time immemorial.
6. The jivas cannot transcend Maya by their own power.
7. Surrender to the Lord is the jivas' only means of liberation.
8. The goal of life is to attain prema, love of Krishna.

To establish these eight principles, Shrila Jiva Gosvami first examines the inner mood of Shri Shukadeva Gosvami, the speaker of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. In Text 29 he quotes and analyzes Shri Suta Gosvami's prayers[DDB345] that describe Shukadeva's realization and exalted position. Then, from Texts 30 to 49 he examines the [DDB346]Bhagavatam's description of what Shrila Vyasadeva realized in trance, [DDB347]this realization [DDB348]being the basis upon which [DDB349]Vyasa composed Shrimad-Bhagavatam. While describing Vyasa's trance, Shrila Jiva Gosvami uses logic and scriptural reference in Texts 34 to 43 to decisively smash the two primary doctrines of the Mayavadis, pariccheda-vada and pratibimba-vada.

From Texts 50 to 52 [DDB350]Shri Jiva shows that Shrimad-Bhagavatam's subject is the nondual [DDB351]supreme reality by analyzing the second verse of its first chapter. In Texts 53 to 55 he explains the nature of the jiva—namely, that the jiva, being a fractional part of Brahman, is conscious like Brahman but can never be equal to Brahman. Shrila Jiva Gosvami explains that understanding this similarity between the jiva and Brahman is the initial step toward realizing the Absolute Truth.

From Text 56 on he examines the subject matter of Shrimad-Bhagavatam from another angle. Here he analyzes the Bhagavatam's ten topics, citing Shukadeva Gosvami's list in the Second Canto and Suta Gosvami's in the Twelfth. He shows that there is no clash of either spirit or content between these two great Bhagavatam authorities. In their descriptions of the first nine topics, both Shukadeva and Suta convey an understanding of the multifarious potencies and activities of the tenth topic, the shelter of all, Lord Shri Krishna.

Thus from various angles Jiva Gosvami [DDB352] establishes that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the ultimate scriptural authority and that it teaches the following: Shri Krishna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, devotional service is the process for attaining the supreme goal of life, and this supreme goal is unalloyed love of Godhead.

In the next three Sandarbhas, Shrila Jiva Gosvami will further elaborate on the sambandhi-tattva.

HARI OM TAT SAT

Thus ends the Shri Jiva Toshani[DDB354] Commentary on Shri Tattva-sandarbha, the first book of Shri Shaö-sandarbha, by Shrila Jiva Gosvami Prabhupada.

Shrila Gopala Bhatta Gosvami, the great philosopher from the southern provinces who greatly pleased Shrila Rupa Gosvami and Shrila Sanatana Gosvami, left many valuable notes that defeat various philosophical misconceptions. Systematically arranging these notes, and considering their content, Jiva Gosvami writes this book.

Anuccheda 1

Now the Priti-sandarbha will be written. The Supreme Truth, as He is revealed in the scriptures, was described in the first four sandarbhas. The worship of the Supreme Truth was described in the next, the fifth sandarbha. Those topics already explained, the true need of mankind will be now described. The need of mankind is to end suffering and attain happiness. When the Supreme Personality of Godhead is pleased, then one attains happiness and ends all sufferings. In the previous sandarbhas many passages from scripture were quoted to describe the nature of the Supreme Truth. There it was proved that the Supreme Truth is perfect with eternal, limitless, transcendental bliss. In Taittiriya Upanishad (2.8.1) it is said that the Prajapatis enjoy happiness thousands of times greater than the happiness of human beings, and the great souls who know the Supreme enjoy happiness hundreds of times greater still. In Taittiriya Upanishad (2.4.1) it is said that happiness is limitless and very extraordinary. In Taittiriya Upanishad (2.7.1) it is said that the Supreme is the source of all bliss experienced by the living entities. In the same way the Supreme is also the source of the sun's light and all other light also. When he is ignorant of the Supreme Lord, the individual soul finds himself defeated by maya (material illusion). In that condition, his awareness of his original form is taken away from him and he is covered by an external form created by maya. In this way he is imprisoned in the world of birth and death and shackled by a host of material sufferings. This was already explained in the Paranmatma-sandarbha. Therefore when one has direct knowledge of the Supreme Truth, one attains the greatest bliss. Attaining that bliss is the true goal of life. When ignorance is dispelled, one understands his true spiritual nature. Then sufferings end. The first (understanding one's true spiritual nature) of these is attained when the Supreme Truth is directly manifest before one. The second (the end of sufferings) of these is attained when one attains his spiritual form, which never dies. Then one is situated in eternity. The first of these is the highest goal of life. It is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.9-12):

dharmasya hy apavargasya. . .

tac chraddadhana munayo
jnana-vairagya-yuktaya pashyanty atmani catmanam
bhaktya shruta-grihitaya

"All occupational engagements are certainly meant for ultimate liberation. They should never be performed for material gain. Furthermore, according to sages, one who is engaged in the ultimate occupational service should never use material gain to cultivate sense gratification.*

"Life's desires should never be directed toward sense gratification. One should desire only a healthy life, or self-preservation, since a human being is meant for inquiry about the Absolute Truth. Nothing else should be the goal of one's works.*

"Learned transcendentalists who know the Absolute Truth call the non0dual substance Brahman, Paramatma, or Bhagavan.*

"The seriously inquisitive student or sage, well equipped with knowledge and detachment, realizes that Absolute Truth by rendering devotional service in terms of what he has heard from the Vedanta-shruti."*

The stage where all sufferings end is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.21):

bhidyate hridaya-granthih. . .

"Thus the knot in the heart is pierced, and all misgivings are cut to pieces. The chain of fruitive actions is terminated when one sees the self as the master."*

This is also described in these words of Shri Vishnu Purana (6.5.59):

nirastatishayahlada-

sukha-bhavaika-lakshana bheshajam bhagavat-praptir ekantatyantiki mata

"Attaining the Supreme Lord is the medicine to cure the suffering soul. That medicine fills the taker with transcendental bliss."

In the Taittiriya Upnaishad (2.4.1) it is said:

anandam brahmano vidvan
na bibheti kutashcana

"A soul who knows the bliss that comes from the Supreme Brahman never fears."

The word "mukti" (liberation) is defined as: "The state that comes after the shackles of birth and death are cut". Shrila Suta Gosvami describes liberation in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (12.4.34):

yadaivam etena viveka-hetina maya-mayahankaranatma-bandhanam chittvacyutatmanubhavo 'vatishtate tam ahur atyantikam anga samplavam

"Cutting the bonds of false ego with the sword of knowledge, the soul sees the infallible Supreme Personality of Godhead. My dear friend, then the soul's bondage in matter is completely destroyed."

This verse means, "When the soul sees the infallible Supreme Personality of Godhead, that state is called liberation."

The same explanation is given in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.10.6):

muktir hitvanyatha-rupam
svarupena vyavasthitih

"Liberation is the permanent situation of the form of the living entity after he gives up the changeable gross and subtle material bodies."*

These words mean that even though the soul may still reside in the world of birth and death, he may still directly see his original spiritual form. These words also mean that the soul's misidentification with the external material body (anyatha-rupam) is then destroyed. In this verse the primary meaning of the word "svarupa" is "the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead". However, because the individual spirit souls are fragmental parts of the Supreme Personality of Godhead in the same way rays of sunlight are fragmental parts of the sun planet, the word "svarupa" may also refer to the individual soul.

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.9.33) Lord Garbhodakashayi Vishnu tells the demigod Brahma:

yada rahitam atmanam bhutendriya-gunashayaih svarupena mayopetam
pashyan svarajyam ricchati

"When you are free from the conception of gross and subtle bodies, and when your senses are free from all influences of the modes of material nature, you will realize your pure form in My association. At that time you will be situated in pure consciousness."*

In this verse the word "upetam": means "it is attained without any trouble". The happiness of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is most important. The happiness of the individual souls is secondary. The individual souls' relationship with the Supreme is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.55):

tasmat priyatamah svatma. . . .

krishnam enam avehi tvam
atmanam akhilatmanam
jagad-dhitaya so 'py atra dehiva. . . .

"Therefore it is his own self that is most dear to every embodied living being, and it is simply for the satisfaction of this self that the whole material creation of moving and nonmoving entities exists.*

"You should knowe Krishna as the original soul of all atmas (living entities). For the benefit of the whole universe He has, out of His causeless mercy, appeared as an ordinary human being."*

The idea that the individual souls are not in any way different from the Supreme has already been refuted in the Paramatma-sandarbha. The Taittiriya Upanishad (2.7.1) gives this conclusive opinion:

raso vai sah. rasam hy evayam labdhvanandi bhavati.

"When one understands the Personality of God, the reservoir of pleasure, Krishna, he actually becomes transcendently blissful."*

The individual souls are the fragmental parts and the Supreme is whole, within which the parts are contained. That is their relationship. This relationship is manifested in two ways. In the first manifestation one becomes free from the illusions presented by maya and attains the impersonal Brahman. In this way one attains knowledge of the power of impersonal Brahman manifested in the material world. Then one gradually passes beyond the coverings of the material world. Then one very intently worships the impersonal Brahman. In the second manifestation of liberation one attains the Supreme Personality of Godhead. One attains Him because, even though He is not openly present everywhere in the material world, by His inconceivable potency the Supreme Personality of Godhead is openly present everywhere in the spiritual world of Vaikuntha, and then one also attains Him because one is able to stay near His lotus feet. One may attain liberation at the moment of death, and one may also be liberated even during the time one lives in the material world. At the time of death one may become free from having to take another material body and one may directly see the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Also, even as one lives in the material world, one may know that he is not the external material body created by maya and one may also see the Supreme Personality of Godhead directly. That liberation is the highest goal of life is explained in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.22.35), where Sanatkumara tells KIng Prithu:

tatrapi moksha evārtha atyatikāyēśhyate traivargyo 'rtho yato nityam kritānta-bhaya-samyutah

"Out of the four principles-namely religion, economic development, sense gratification, and liberation-liberation has to be taken very seriously. The other three are subject to destruction by the stringent law of nature-death."*

In the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (2.4.3) it is also said:

yenāham namritah syam kim aham tena kuryam

"What shall I do to become free of death?"

Attaining the liberation where one directly sees the Supreme Truth is the highest goal of life. This is explained again and again. The Supreme Truth has two features. In one feature He is seen indistinctly, and in the other feature He is seen distinctly. In His feature as the impersonal Brahman He is seen indistinctly, and in His feature as Paramatma (the Supersoul) and Bhagavan (the Supreme Personality of Godhead) He is seen distinctly. Thus His feature as Bhagavan and Paramatma is superior to His feature of impersonal Brahman. This I have already explained in Bhagavat-sandarbhā (anuccheda 80) in my explanation of this verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.5.4):

jijñāsitam adhitam ca
brahma yat tat sanatanam tathāpi śhocasy ātmanam
akṛitārtha iva prabho

"You have fully delineated the subject of impersonal Brahman as well as the knowledge derived therefrom. Why should you be despondent in spite of all this, thinking that you are undone, my dear prabhu?"*

With further explanations I will now again show how that is true. Direct perception of Bhagavan, who appears as Paramatma and in many other forms also, is the highest kind of liberation. In that highest liberation the most exalted spiritual activities are known by names like "bhakti" (devotional service) and "priti" (spiritual love). Spiritual love is considered the highest of all spiritual sentiments. Priti completely ends all sufferings. Without priti the highest stage of spiritual life is not attained. Priti is not dependent on anything else. To the extent one has priti, one is fortunate. Priti is present as one is making progress toward liberation and it is also present when one has attained liberation. That is the correct understanding.

The form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is full of transcendental bliss. transcendental bliss is the abode of priti. Therefore priti is most important in experiencing transcendental bliss. Therefore, the spirit souls should always try to attain priti. Priti is the greatest need, the highest goal of the spirit souls.

Some examples of the exalted nature of priti will now be given. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.20.33) the Supreme Personality of Godhead explains:

sarvam mad-bhakti-yogena
mad-bhakto labhate 'njasa svargapavargam mad-dhama
kathancid yadi vanchati

"If he desires them, by serving Me with devotion My devotee easily attains Svargaloka, liberation, or My own abode."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.5.6) Lord Rishabhadeva explains:

priti na yavan mayi vasudeve
na mucyate deha-yogena tavat

"Therefore, until one has love for Lord Vasudeva, who is none other than Myself, he is certainly not delivered from having to accept a material body again and again."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.14.21) the Supreme Personality of Godhead explains:

bhaktyaham ekaya grahyah
shraddhayatma priyah satam

"Being very dear to the devotees and sadhus, I am attained through unflinching faith and devotional service."*

In the Mathara-shruti it is said:

bhaktir evainam nayati. bhaktir evainam darshayati. bhakti-vashah purusho bhaktir eva bhuyasi.

"Devotional service brings one to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Devotional service reveals to one the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Devotional service brings the Supreme Personality of Godhead under its control. Devotional service is stronger than the Supreme Personality of Godhead."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.2.42) Kavi-yogeshvara explains:

bhaktih pareshanubhavo viraktir anyatra caisha trika eka-kalah

"Devotion, direct perception of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and detachment from the material world, these three appear simultaneously."

Priti manifest as one makes progress toward liberation is described in these words of Vasudeva Upanishad:

mad-rupam advayam brahma
madhyady-anta-vivarjitam sva-prabham sac-cid-anandam bhaktya janati cavyayam

"Only by devotional service can one understand my glorious, eternal, blissful, all-knowing spiritual form."

Chandogya Upanishad's declaration "tat tvam asi" (You are that) actually describes the individual soul's natural love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Love is seen even in the ordinary dealings of the material world love. Love is natural for all living beings. It is seen even among the least spiritual of materialists, among they who have destroyed their spiritual life. How can the soul give up its nature? Therefore every soul seeks someone to love. That search for love finds its final culmination when one falls in love with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Therefore rfalling in love with the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the highest goal of life. This the saintly devotees say. That love will be written about in this Priti-sandarbha.

In this sandarbha will be shown, one after another, many proofs that love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the highest goal of life. The scriptures declare that liberation is the true goal of life. for example, in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (12.13.12) it is said:

sarva-vedanta. . .kaivalyaika-prayojanam

"Shrimad-Bhagavatam is accepted as the essence of all Vedic literature and Vedanta philosophy. Shrimad-Bhagavatam explains that liberation is the true goal of life."

This verse means: "Shrimad-Bhagavatam explains that liberation is the true goal of life." Ignorance of the Supreme Truth, the Supreme Lord, is the root of all problems that beset the individual soul. This is explained in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.2.37):

bhayam dvitiyabhiniveshatah syad ishad apetasya. . .

"When the living entity is attracted by the material energy, which is separate from Krishna, he is overpowered by fear."*

The word "kaivalya" used in the previously quoted verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (12.13.12) thus means "the purity that comes from knowing the Supreme Personality of Godhead". Or, the word "kaivalya" may also mean, "the highest state of liberation, which is manifested in the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself". This second meaning is seen in these words of Skanda Purana:

brahmeshanadibhir devair
yat praptum naiva shakyate sa yat-svabhavam kaivalyam sa bhavan kevalo hare

"O Lord Hari, Your exalted position is far above the material world. Even Brahma, Shiva, and all the demigods cannot attain Your exalted position of the highest liberation."

Sometimes the word "kaivalya" means, "the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is situated in the highest state of liberation. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.9.1), in the teachings of Dattatreya, the word is used in that way:

paravaranam parama
aste kaivalya-samjnitah kevalanubhavananda-sandoho nirupadhikah

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead is greater than all other beings, both high and low. His form is not material. He is filled with spiritual bliss. He is situated in the highest stage of liberation."

Thus the word "kaivalya" may mean either "directly seeing the Supreme Personality of Godhead" or "the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is situated in the highest state of liberation". Both meanings are employed in the scriptures. The verse quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Suta Gosvami.

Anuccheda 2

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.16.63) it is said:

etavan eva manujair yoga-naipunya-buddhibhih svarthah sarvatmana jneyo
yat paratmaika-darshanam

"Persons who try to reach the ultimate goal of life must expertly observe the Supreme Absolute Person and the living entity, who are one in quality in their relationship as part and whole. This is the ultimate understanding of life. There is no better truth than this."*

In his commentary on this verse Shrila Shridhara Svami explains:

"The gist of this verse is: 'There is no higher goal of life than this.' This verse says: 'They whose intelligence is expert at yoga see that they are one in quality with the Supreme.'"

These words may also mean: "They fix their gaze on the supremely liberated Personality of Godhead." This verse was spoken by Lord Sankarshana to King Citraketu.

Anuccheda 3

Liberation attained at the moment of death is of two kinds: immediate and gradual. The first kind of liberation, Immediate liberation, is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.2.15-21):

sthiram sukham casanam. . .vishrijet param gatah

"O king, whenever the yogi desires to leave this planet of human beings, he should not be perplexed about the proper time or place, but should comfortably sit without being disturbed and, regulating the life air, should control the senses by the mind.*

"Thereafter, the yogi should merge his mind, by his unalloyed intelligence, into the living entity, and then merge the living entity into the Superself. And by doing this the fully satisfied living entity becomes situated in the supreme stage of satisfaction, so that he ceases from all other activities.*

"In that transcendental state of labdhopasanti, there is no supremacy of devastating time, which controls even the celestial demigods who are empowered to rule over mundane creatures. (And what to speak of the demigods themselves?) Nor is there the mode of material goodness, nor passion, nor ignorance, nor even the false ego, nor the material Causal Ocean, nor the material nature.*

"The transcendentalists desire to avoid everything godless, for they know that supreme situation in which everything is related with the Supreme Lord Vishnu. Therefore a pure devotee who is in absolute harmony with the Lord does not create perplexities, but worships the lotus feet of the Lord at every moment, taking them into his heart.*

"By the strength of scientific knowledge, one should be well situated in absolute realization and thus be able to extinguish all material desires. One should then give up the material body by blocking the air hole (through which stool is evacuated) with the heel of one's foot and by lifting the life air from one place to another in the six primary places.*

"The meditative devotee should slowly push up the life air from the navel to the heart, from there to the chest and from there to the root of the palate. He should search out the proper places with intelligence.*

"Thereafter the bhakti-yogi should push the life air up between the eyebrows, and then, blocking the seven outlets of the life air, he should maintain his aim for going home, back to Godhead. If he is completely free from all desires for material enjoyment, he should then reach the cerebral hole and give up his material connections, having gone to the Supreme."*

The second kind of liberation, gradual liberation, is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.2.22-31):

yadi prayasyan nripa parameshthyam. . .tenatmanatmanam upaiti shantam

"However, O king, if a yogi maintains a desire for improved material enjoyments, like transference to the topmost planet, Brahmaloaka, or the achievement of the eightfold perfections, travel in outer space with the Vaihayasas, or a situation in one of the millions of planets, then he has to take away with him the materially molded mind and senses.*

"The transcendentalists are concerned with the spiritual body. As such, by the strength of their devotional service, austerities, mystic power, and transcendental knowledge, their movements are unrestricted, within and beyond the material worlds. The fruitive workers, or the gross materialists, can never move in such an unrestricted manner.*

"O king, when such a mystic passes over the Milky Way by the illuminating Sushumna to reach the highest planet, Brahmaloka, he goes first to Vaishvanara, the planet of the deity of fire, wherein he becomes completely cleansed of all contaminations, and thereafter he goes still higher, to the circle of Shishumara, to relate with Lord Hari, the Personality of Godhead.*

"This Sisumara is the pivot for the turning of the complete universe, and it is called the navel of Vishnu (Garbhodakashayi Vishnu). The yogi alone goes beyond this circle of Shishumara and attains the planet (Maharloka) where purified saints like Bhrigu enjoy a duration of life of 4,300,000,000 solar years. This planet is worshipable even for the saints who are transcendently situated.*

"At the time of the final devastation of the complete universe (the end of the duration of Brahma's life), a flame of fire emanates from the mouth of Ananta (from the bottom of the universe). The yogi sees all the planets of the universe burning to ashes, and thus he leaves for Satyaloka by airplanes used by the great purified souls. The duration of life in Satyaloka is calculated to be 15,480,000,000,000 years.*

"In that planet of Satyaloka there is neither bereavement, nor old age, nor death. There is no pain of any kind, and therefore there are no anxieties, save that sometimes, due to consciousness, there is a feeling of compassion for those unaware of the process of devotional service, who are subjected to unsurpassable miseries in the material world.*

"After reaching Satyaloka, the devotee is specifically able to be incorporated fearlessly by the subtle body in an identity similar to that of the gross body, and one after another he gradually attains stages of existence from earthly to watery, fiery, glowing, and airy, until he reaches the ethereal stage.*

"The devotee thus surpasses the subtle objects of different senses like aroma by smelling, the palate by tasting, vision by seeing forms, touch by contacting, the vibrations of the ear by ethereal identification, and the sense organs by material activities.*

"The devotee, thus surpassing the gross and subtle forms of coverings, enters the plane of egoism. And in that status he merges the material modes of nature (ignorance and passion) in this point of neutralization and thus reaches egoism in goodness. After this, all egoism is merged in the mahat-tattva, and he comes to the point of pure self-realization.*

"Only the purified soul can attain the perfection of associating with the Supreme Personality of Godhead in complete bliss and satisfaction in his constitutional state. Whoever is able to renovate such devotional perfection is never again attracted by this material world, and he never returns."*

It is also seen that one may be liberated even while living in this material world. How, by directly seeing the Supreme Personality of Godhead, one may be liberated while still living in the material world is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.3.33):

yatrema sad-asad-rupe pratishiddhe sva-samvida avidyayatmani krite
iti tad brahma-darshanam

"Whenever a person experiences, by self-realization, that both the gross and subtle bodies have nothing to do with the self, at that time he sees himself as well as the Lord."*

This verse says: "A person learns, by self-realization, the truth about the gross and subtle material bodies." What kind of truth does the soul learn? The soul learns that "both the gross and subtle bodies have nothing to do with the self". At that time the soul directly sees the Supreme. Then the soul understands his own true nature. The soul understands liberation. But that does not mean that the soul ceases to exist. When he understands that the idea that he is identical with the gross and subtle material bodies is an illusion, and when he then directly sees the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the soul attains liberation, even though he may remain alive in the material world. That is the meaning of this verse. This verse was spoken by Shrila Suta Gosvami.

Lord Kapila describes liberation in these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.28.35-38):

muktaashrayam. . .

"When the mind is thus completely freed from all material contamination and detached from material objectives, it is just like the flame of a lamp. At that time the mind is actually dovetailed with that of the Supreme Lord and is experienced as one with Him because it is freed from the interactive flow of the material qualities.*

"Thus situated in the highest transcendental stage, the mind ceases from all material reaction and becomes situated in its own glory, transcendental to all material conceptions of happiness and distress. At that time the yogi realizes the truth of his relationship with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. He discovers that pleasure and pain as well as their interactions, which he attributed to his own self, are actually due to the false ego, which is a product of ignorance.*

"Because he has achieved his real identity, the perfectly realized soul has no conception of how the material body is moving or acting, just as an intoxicated person cannot understand whether or not he has clothing on his body.*

"The body of such a liberated yogi, along with the senses, is taken charge of by the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and it functions until its destined activities are finished. The liberated devotee, being awake to his constitutional position and thus situated in samadhi, the highest perfectional stage of yoga, does not accept the by-products of the material body as his own. Thus he considers his bodily activities to be like the activities of a body in a dream."*

In these verses it is said, "When the mind is freed from material contamination, one sees the Supersoul. That is liberation." Then it is said, "The mind is situated in its own glory. Then the yogi realizes the truth of his relationship with the Supreme Personality of Godhead." Then it is said, "Then the soul understands his own form and the form of the Supreme Brahman." Then it is said, "Then the liberated devotee is awake to his constitutional position." Simply by beginning these spiritual activities, the soul begins to understand what is liberation. This is described in the following words of Ishopanishad (mantra 7):

tatra ko mohah kah shoka
ekatvam anupashyatah

"One who always sees all living entities as spiritual sparks, in quality one with the Lord, becomes a true knower of things. What, then, can be illusion or anxiety for him?"*

At the end one sees the Supreme Personality of Godhead directly. This is called liberation. It is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.3.34):

yady eshoparata devi
maya vaisharadi matih sampanna eveti vidur
mahimni sve mahiyate

"If the illusory energy subsides, and the living entity becoems fully enriched with knowledge by the grace of the Lord, then he becomes at once enlightened with self-realization and thus becomes situated in his own glory."*

This verse says, "When, even while living in this material world, an individual spirit soul is situated in the state of liberation, the expert Supreme Personality of Godhead gives to him glorious intelligence, intelligence filled with knowledge given by His spiritual potency (maya), intelligence in the mode of pure goodness. That intelligence enables the soul to become detached from the material world. Then, all obstacles surmounted, the soul attains transcendental bliss. The sages know this is liberation. Attaining this good fortune, the soul is situated in the glory of his own original spiritual form. Then he is worshiped. Then he is gloriously manifest." This verse was spoken by Shrila Suta Gosvami.

Anuccheda 5

In the previous sandarbhas, the Tattva, Bhagavat, and Paramatma sandarbhas, many passages from the Sruti-sastra and other scriptures were quoted to prove that the individual spirit souls are all parts and parcels of the Supreme Truth. As particles of sunlight emanate from the sun planet, the the individual spirit souls are particles of spirit emanating from the Supreme Spirit. Because He is all-pervading, the Supreme Spirit is also present within each indiovidual spirit soul. That the Supreme has not material form does not refute that the idea that the Supreme is also localized, staying in only one place. Because the individual souls have emanated form Him, the Supreme is their shelter. When this knowledge of the Supreme is absent, the particles of light that are the individual spirit soul are covered by the dark shadow of material illusion (maya). When they try to understand the Supreme and take shelter of Him, the individual souls are situated in the light. This has been explained in the previous sandarbhas. Because they are manifest from the Supreme Lord Himself and because they are meant to help the Lord in His pastimes, the individual souls are the Lord's potency. The individual spirit souls are atomic in size, for that is the scriptures' description of them. Like spots of sandalwood anointing the Lord's body, the individual souls are manifested from the Lord's potencies. Because the Lord's potencies are inconceivable, there is no contradiction in any of this. This is also confirmed by these words of Vedanta-sutra (2.1.27):

shrutes tu shabda-mulatvat

"There is contradiction, for that is the explanation of the scriptures."

It is also confirmed by these words of Vishnu Purana (1.22.53):

eka-desha-sthitasnyagner
jyotsna vitarini yatha parasya brahmanah shaktis
tathedam akhilam jagat

"Just as the illumination of fire, which is situated in one place, is spread all over, the energies of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Parabrahman, are spread all over this universe."*

In this way it is seen that the individual souls and the Supreme Lord are simultaneously one and different. In Chandogya Upanisads (6.8.7) statement "tat tvam asi" (You are that) it is seen that because they are His parts and parcels, the individual spirit souls are not different from the Supreme Lord. In the Shruti-shastra it is said that the Supreme is not divided into parts. This statement may be interpreted in two ways. The primary interpretation is that the Supreme is liberated and full of bliss. The secondary interpretation is that the Supreme is blissful and has spiritual potencies, and when He manifests parts and parcels, His parts and parcels are never material in nature. In Bhagavad-gita it is said that the Supreme has all potencies and everything that exists is part and parcel of Him. The individual spirit souls are His parts and parcels eternally, eternally like rays of light emanating from the sun that is the Supreme Lord. In this way it is proved that the Supreme Lord is always the supreme controller, the supreme enjoyer, and supreme in all other ways. The Supreme Lord's potency has the power to do anything. Manifesting His maya potency, the Lord creates the various transformations of the material nature. By the touch of the maya potency the world of birth and death is manifest. With the help of the Lord's internal potency the soul is able to see himself, the impersonal Brahman, and the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavan). That one needs the help of the Lord's internal potency to see the Lord is hinted by this rhetorical question spoken in Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (2.4.14):

yatra tasya sarvam atmaivabhut. . . tat kena kam pashyet

"If everything is the Supreme, then how will one be able to see Him? Whom will one see?"

Without the help of the Lord's internal potency no one has the power to see the Supreme. That one's needs the Lord's help in order to see Him is also confirmed by these words of Katha Upanishad (1.2.23):

yam evaisha vrinute tena labhyah

"The Lord is obtained only by one whom He Himself chooses. To such a person He manifests His own form."

In this way, by the touch of the Supreme Lord's internal potency, the illusory potency (maya) disappears, and the cycle of birth and death is stopped. Persons who do not think liberation is a situation of happiness do not attain the true goal of life. In the absence of liberation all that they have is worthless. No one desires, "I will become happiness itself". Rather, everyone desires, "I will experience happiness." Therefore for a person who does not try to become happy by attaining liberation, the meaning of the scriptures is lost. A person who does not feel unhappy to be deprived of the bliss of liberation is not able to attain the true goal of life. Narada Muni explained this goal of life to King Pracinabarhi in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.25.4):

duhkha-hanih sukhavaptih
shreyas tan neha ceshyate

"The chief aim of life is to get rid of all miseries and enjoy happiness, but these two things cannot be realized by fruitive activity."*

This is also seen in the following words of Taittiriya Upanishad (2.7.1):

rasam hy evayam labdhvanandi bhavati.

"When one understands the Personality of God, the reservoir of pleasure, Krishna, he actually becomes transcendently blissful."*

It is also seen in these words of Chandogya Upanishad (7.25.2):

atma-ratih atma-kridah

"The liberated souls enjoy the Supreme Lord's company. They enjoy pastimes with the Lord."

It is also seen in these words of Vishnu-dharma Purana:

bhinne dritau yatha vayur naivanyah saha vayuna kshina-punyagha-bandhas tu tathatma brahmana saha

"As the air within a blacksmith's bellows is not different from the air outside, so a soul whose bonds of piety and sin are cut is not different from the Supreme.

"His sins destroyed, his spiritual virtues, beginning with spiritual knowledge, are manifest. Those spiritual qualities were not born at that moment. They had always existed within him.

jnanam vairagyam aishvaryam

"O great king, knowledge, renunciation, opulence, and piety, these four glories always reside in a liberated soul.

etad advaitam akhyatam esha eva tavoditah
ayam vishnur idam brahma
tathaitat satyam uttamam

"It is said he is not different from the Lord. He is Vishnu. He is the impersonal Brahman. That is the truth."

In this passage the example of the air within and without the bellows is given to show how the individual spirit soul is the part and the Supreme Lord is the whole. Although he is by nature the Supreme Lord's part and parcel, the individual soul can still turn his face away from the Lord. When he turns his face away from the Lord, the individual soul, now in the grip of the Lord's illusory potency, maya, no longer understands his true, his original nature. However, when he turns his face again towards the Lord, by the Lord's mercy the soul attains liberation. This is described in these words of Taittiriya Upanishad (2.4.1):

anandam brahmano vidvan

"One who knows the bliss of the Supreme eventually attains liberation."

This is also described in these words of Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (2.4.1):

na tasmāt prāṇa utkrāṁanti. ātraiṇa samavaliyante. brahmaiva saṁ brahmapyēti.

"He does not truly die. He goes to the spiritual world. He attains a spiritual form and then he meets the Supreme."

Here it is clearly said that one attains a spiritual nature and then one meets the Supreme. In this passage the first use of the word "brahma" refers to the soul's nature, which is like that of the Supreme. The second use of the word "brahma" refers to the Supreme Himself. In this way the phrase "brahmaiva saṁ" means "attaining a spiritual nature like that of the Supreme". This is so because the soul's nature is spiritual, like that of the Supreme. The soul and the Supreme do not have different natures, one spiritual and the other something else. This is also described in these words of Mundaka Upanishad (3.2.9):

brahma veda brahmaiva bhavati

"One who knows the Supreme attains a spiritual nature like that of the Supreme."

In some places in the scriptures it is said that the individual soul's spiritual nature like that of the Supreme. For example, in the Mundaka Upanishad (3.1.3) it is said:

nirāṇaṇaḥ paramaṁ samyama upaiti

"A soul untouched by matter becomes like the Supreme."

In Bhagavad-gita (14.2) the Supreme Lord declares:

idam jñānam samashritya
mama sadharmyam agatah

"By becoming fixed in this knowledge one can attain to the transcendental nature, which is like My own nature."*

The individual soul and the Supreme are both clearly described in these words of Katha Upanishad (2.1.15):

yathodakam shuddhe shuddham asiktam tadrig eva bhavati evam muner vijānata
ātma bhavati gautama

"As clear water poured into clear water becomes like the water into which it is poured, so the individual soul who attains liberation becomes like the Supreme."

In this example the soul does not become identical with the Supreme. Also, the soul's nature is not different from the Supreme's nature. In the Skanda Purana it is said:

udakam tudakam siktam mishram eva yatha bhavet tad vai tad eva bhavati
yato buddhih pravartate

"When water is poured into water, the two waters become mixed together.

evam evam hi jivo 'pi tad-atmyam paramatmana prapto 'pi nasau bhavati
svatantryadi-visheshanat

"However, the individual soul never becomes mixed together with the Supreme in that way, for the Supreme always remains a distinct person with distinct qualities, like His supreme independence."

In some places it is said that the individual spirit soul is like a reflection of the Supreme. In Vedanta-sutra (3.2.19-20) it is said:

ambuvad agrahanat tu na tathatvam

"The individual soul is not like a reflection of the Supreme, like the sun reflected in the water."

vriddhi-hrasa-bhaktvam antar-bhavad ubhaya-samanjasyad evam darshanac ca

"Even though He stays in the conditioned soul's heart, the Supreme does not find His fortunes rise and fall with the rise and fall of the conditioned soul. This is so because both examples show it and because it is seen to be so."

That the individual spirit soul is different from the Supreme is also confirmed by these words of Chandogya Upanishad (8.12.2):

evam esha samprasado 'smac charirat samutthaya param jyoti-rupam sampadya svena rupenabhinishpadyate

"Attaining liberation, the soul leaves the material body. Then the soul attains its own effulgent spiritual form. Manifesting that form, the soul meets the Supreme Person."

In the Vishnu Purana (6.7.94) it is said:

vibheda-janake 'jnane nasham

"When the false idea of difference is destroyed, then one attains liberation."

The difference here is the different species of life, such as the demigods and others. Who will say that the individual souls do not continue to remain different from the Supreme Lord? No one can say it. In this way the passage of Vishnu Purana is explained. In his commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam, Shrila Shridhara Svami also says that after they attained liberation, the cowherd people of Vraja saw the spiritual world of Vaikuntha. In this way the statement of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.3.34 (previously quoted in this book) should be understood. This is the proper understanding of what liberation means. This proper understanding is also confirmed by Jada Bharata's explanations to King Rahugana, explanations recorded in the Vishnu Purana. In the following four verses Jada Bharata explains that directly seeing the Supreme is the highest goal of life, and the materialistic goals attained by ordinary yajnas are not the highest goal of life: He says (Vishnu Purana 2.14.21-24):

rig-yajuh-sama-nishpadyam
yajna-karma matam tava paramartha-bhutam tatrapī shrūyatam gadato mama

"If you think the yajnas described in the Rig, Yajur, and Sama Vedas are the highest goal of life, then please hear my words.

yat tu nishpadyate karyam mrida karana-bhutaya tat-karananugamanaj
jayate nripa mrin-mayam

"Duties in relation to things made of clay bring as their results other things made of clay.

evam vinashibhir dravyaih samid-ajya-kushadibhih nishpadyate kriya ya tu
sa bhavitri vinashini

"Thus the rituals employing perishable things, like firewood, ghee, and kusha straw, bring only perishable results.

anashi paramarthash ca
prajñair abhyupagamyate

tat tu nashi na sandeho nashi-dravyopapaditam

"The wise agree that the true goal of life is eternal and imperishable. Perishable things bring only perishable results. Of this there is no doubt."

This example does not refer to the processes of worship followed by the devotees of the Lord, for this description does not refer to their method of worship. The method of worship described in these verses is within the realm of the modes of material nature. The devotees' worship, however, is beyond the modes of nature. The Supreme Personality of Godhead personally affirms that the devotees' method of worship is beyond the modes of material nature. He says (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.25.24):

kaivalyam sattvikam jnanam. . .

"Knowledge of impersonal Brahman is in the mode of goodness. The great bewildering variety of conflicting philosophies is in the mode of passion. The knowledge that knows only what is made of the material elements is in the mode of ignorance. However, devotion to Me is beyond the touch of the modes of material nature."

When, by the action of the Lord's internal potency, the Lord's mercy is present, then the process of devotional service is manifest. Because devotional service is limitless in nature, it brings a result that is also limitless. This is confirmed by the Vedic scriptures. When they do not take shelter of the Supreme Lord, the individual spirit souls imagine that their external material bodies are their true selves. Devotional service is not given when violence, sin, or mental speculation are still present. That is why devotional service is not described in the jnana-khanda (philosophical speculation) portion of the Vedic scriptures. Only ordinary yajnas and other ordinary activities are described there. Affirming that yajnas and other like activities bring only perishable results and therefore cannot be the true goal of life, Jada Bharata explains that only a person who has no material desires can perform the spiritual activities that lead to the true goal of life. Only such a person attains true liberation. Jada Bharata says (Vishnu Purana 2.14.25):

tad evaphaladam karma paramartha matas tava
mukti-sadhana-bhutatvat
paramartha na sadhanam

"If you think ordinary material activities are the true goal of life, then you must also think that spiritual activities, activities that bring final liberation, are not the true goal of life."

One should not think the spiritual activities of devotional service are like yajnas or ordinary material activities. The perfect liberated souls never turn away from the pastimes of devotional service to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Therefore the truth is the explanation already given here. Here someone may protest: "Is it not so that meditation one's own original spiritual identity is the true goal of life? After all, in the state of liberation the pure soul is eternally manifest. It is only because he does not know his own nature that the soul is now covered over by matter. That is the only reason the material world of repeated birth and death even exists." To this protest Jada Bharata gives the following answer (Vishnu Purana 2.14.26):

dhyanam ced atmano bhupa paramarthartha-shabditam bheda-kari-parebhyas tat paramartho na bhedavan

"O king, if you say that meditation on one's own original spiritual identity is the highest goal of life, that cannot be, for the highest goal of life is not something that can exclude the Supreme Personality of Godhead."

In the Sruti-sastra it is said that when the Supreme is understood, then everything else is understood also. Liberation should be known in that way. Because He is the Supersoul present everywhere, the Supreme is naturally filled with all knowledge. He is the great fire of all knowledge. From Him come the flames and sparks that are different branches of knowledge. Each individual spirit soul is fragmental part of His jiva-sakti potency. Therefore the liberation of that individual part and parcel cannot be considered separately from its relationship with the Supreme Whole. Here someone may again protest: "Is it not true that the individual soul is the same as the Supreme Personality of Godhead? Therefore the individual soul is himself the all-pervading Supersoul. The individual soul's identity as the Supreme is never destroyed. Therefore he has all knowledge. Therefore the individual soul's becoming one with the Supreme is the highest goal of life." to this protest the following answer is given in Vishnu Purana (2.14.27):

paramatmatmanor yogah
paramartha itishyate mithyaitad anyad dravyam hi naiti tad-dravyatam gatah

"If someone says, 'the individual soul's becoming the Supreme is the true goal of life', then that person indeed speaks a lie. The individual soul can never become the Supreme."

This verse means: "When they describe the goal of life in that way, they speak lies." Here the word "hi" means "It is concluded in this way", "yatah" means "because", and "anyad dravyam na tad-dravyatam gatah" means, "the individual soul never becomes the Supreme Personality of Godhead". Therefore this verse means, "The merging of the very weak individual spirit soul into the all-powerful Supreme Personality of Godhead is not the true goal of life." Or, the word "yogah" may also be interpreted to mean "oneness" and the remainder of the verse interpreted as it was before. If someone argues that the verse should be interpreted in that way, with "yoga" meaning "oneness", then this idea is refuted in the following words of Vishnu Purana (2.14.28):

tasmat shreyamsy asheshani nripaitena na samshayah paramarthas tu bhupala sankshepac chayatam mama

"In this way one attains the true goals of life. Of this there is no doubt. O king, now I will briefly describe the true goal of life."

Here the word "shreyamsi" means "the way to attain the true goal of life". The true goal of life is then described in the following three verses (Vishnu Purana (2.14.29-31):

eko vyapi samah shuddho
nirgunah prakriteh parah janma-vriddhy-adi-rahita
atma sarva-gato 'vyayah

"The one supreme soul is all-pervading, equipoised, pure, free from the material modes, beyond the touch of matter, free from the material cycle that begins with birth and growth, eternal, and present everywhere.

para-jnana-mayo 'sadbhir nama-jaty-adibhir vibhuh na yogavan na yukto 'bhun
naiva parthiva yokshyati

"He is situated in transcendental knowledge. Never has He been touched by false material names, material birth, or anything else material. O king, He will never be touched by them.

tasyatma-para-deheshu sato 'py ekamayam hi yat vijnanam paramartho 'sau
dvaitino 'tathya-darshinah

"Only materialists, fools who have no power to see the truth, think the Supreme Personality of Godhead has an external material body, a body like the bodies of the conditioned souls."

In the first of these verses the use of the word "ekah" (one) shows that the soul described here is not the individual spirit souls, for the individual souls are many, not one. As a fire is present over a large area by the means of its sparks, so the Supreme Personality of Godhead is present everywhere by the means of His potencies. That is why He is described here by the word "vyapi (all-pervading). The all-pervasiveness of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is not like that of the individual spirit soul, who is all-pervasive only within his external material body. The individual spirit souls residing in the material world are different from their external material bodies. However, the Supreme Personality of Godhead does not have an external material body that is different from Him. He and His spiritual body are identical. He is the supreme goal of life because He is imperishable, all-knowing, present within everything, and the final goal of life. Persons who, seeing that they themselves are different from their external material bodies, think the Supreme Personality of Godhead must also be different (dvaitinah) from His own spiritual body, and who therefore also think that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is neither all-pervading nor all-knowing, are fools who have no power to see the truth (atathya-darshinah). An example to show how the individual spirit souls, souls who are part and parcel of the Supreme, are different from their external material bodies, and are also simultaneously different and not-different from the Supreme Personality of Godhead is given in these two verses of Vishnu Purana (2.14.32-33):

venu-randhra-vibhedena

bhedah shadjadi-samjnitah abheda-vyapino vayos
tatha tasya mahatmanah

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead is not different from His body. He is like the air, air that never becomes broken, even when blowing through the holes of a flute and making various melodies in the shadja and other scales.

ekatvam rupa-bhedash ca bahya-karma-pravritti-jah devadi-bheda-madhyas te nasty evavarano hi sah

"Thus the Supreme Personality of Godhead is identical with His body. Because of their various material activities, the individual souls in the material world have various external bodies, demigod bodies, and the bodies of other forms of life also. However, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is never covered by an external material body."

The meaning of these verses is: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is identical with His body." This verse says: "Because of their material activities (karma-pravritti), the individual souls residing in the external (bahya), the material world, souls who are all tiny particles of spirit, take birth in various material bodies (rupa-bheda) because of their various material activities. These bodies are all different from the souls themselves. Manifesting His form as the Supersoul, the Supreme Personality of Godhead stays in those material bodies, the bodies of demigods and other species of life. However, the Supreme Personality of Godhead does not identify with those external bodies. Therefore it is said that He is never covered (nasty avaranam) by a material body. Sometimes the Supreme Personality of Godhead may assume the form of a demigod or other being, but His body is never material. These are His forms of His own transcendental pastimes. That is the meaning here.

To directly see the Supreme Personality of Godhead is to attain liberation. This is explained in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.6.18):

tato vidurat parihritya daitya daityeshu sangam vishayatmakeshu upeta narayanam adi-devam
sa mukta-sangair ishito 'pavargah

"Therefore, although you are sons of demons, keep aloof from such (materialistic) persons and take shelter of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Narayana, the origin of all the demigods, because the ultimate goal for the devotees of Narayana is liberation from the bondage of material existence."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"This verse explains: 'Liberation is the ultimate goal'."

Directly seeing the Supreme Personality of Godhead eventually leads to liberation. This is so because the great bliss one attains by seeing Him destroys one's continued residence in the world of repeated birth and death. Simply by the Supreme Lord's presence, the cycle of birth and death is destroyed. This verse was spoken by Shri Prahlada.

Anuccheda 6

It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.9.17):

satyashisho hi bhagavams tava pada-padmam asis tathanubhajatah purushartha-murteh apy evam arya bhagavan paripati dinan vashreva vatsakam anugraha-kataro 'sman

"My Lord, O Supreme Lord, You are the supreme personified form of all benediction. Therefore, for one who abides in Your devotional service with no other desire, worshiping Your lotus feet is better than becoming king and lording it over a kingdom. That is the benediction of worshiping Your lotus feet. To ignorant devotees like me, You are the causelessly merciful maintainer, just like a cow, who takes care of the newly born calf by supplying milk and giving it protection from attack."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"This verse means: `O Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavan), Your form (murteh) is the supreme bliss that is the highest goal of life (purushartha). Your lotus feet (pada-padmam) are the true benediction (satya asih), a benediction far greater than other benedictions (ashishah), benedictions such as ruling over a kingdom. That is the right conclusion (hi). Why is that the right conclusion? It is like this (tatha): For the devotees who worship You (anubhajatah) without any ulterior motive You are the highest goal of life. O master (arya), even though this is so, You still maintain and protect poor (dinan) people like us (asman).' " This verse was spoken by Dhruva to Shri Dhruvapriya (the Supreme Lord's incarnation who was dear to Dhruva).

Anuccheda 7

The Supreme Personality of Godhead appears before His devotees in two ways: 1. He appears within their hearts, and 2. He appears outside their hearts. The first of these is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.6.33):

pragayatah sva-viryani
tirtha-padah priya-shravah
ahuta iva me shighram
darshanam yati cetasi

"The Supreme Lord, Shri Krishna, whose glories and activities are pleasing to hear, at once appears on the seat of my heart, as if called for, as soon as I begin to chant His holy activities."*

The second of these is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.38):

te 'cakshataksha-vishayam sva-samadhi-bhagyam. . .

"The sages, headed by Saunaka Rsi, saw that the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Vishnu, who was formerly visible only within their hearts in ecstatic trance, had now actually become visible to their eyes."*

How one becomes qualified to see the Supreme Personality of Godhead in one's heart is described in these words from the Shri Rudra-gita (the Song of Lord Shiva, Shrimad-Bhagavatam 4.24.59):

na yasya cittam bahir-artha-vibhramam tamo-guhayam ca vishuddham avishat yad-bhakti-yoganugrihitam anjasa munir vicashte nanu tatra te gatim

"The devotee whose heart has been completely cleansed by the process of devotional service and who is favored by Bhaktidevi does not become bewildered by the external energy, which is just like a dark well. Being completely cleansed of all material contamination in this way, a devotee is able to understand very happily Your name, fame, form, activities, etc."*

This verse means: "The previously described devotee, whose (yasya) heart (cittam) has been completely cleansed (vishuddham) by the process of devotional service and who is favored by Bhaktidevi (bhakti-yoganugrihitam) does not become bewildered by the external energy, which is just like a dark well (tamo-guhayam). Such a person is a sage (munih)."

The way one becomes qualified to see the Supreme Personality of Godhead outside one's heart is described in these words spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead to Narada (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.6.21):

hantasmin janmani bhavan
na mam drashtum iharhati avipaksha-kashayanam
durdarsho 'ham kuyoginam

"O Narada (the Lord spoke), I regret that during this lifetime you will not be able to see Me any more. Those who are incomplete in service and who are not completely free from all material taints can hardly see Me."*

To have a pure heart is not the only qualification here. What other qualification is needed? With great devotion one must yearn to see the Lord. That is the root from which directly seeing the Supreme Personality of Godhead grows. By seeing the Lord in this way one attains all perfection. Seeing the Supreme Personality of Godhead within one's heart is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.21):

bhidyate hridaya-granthih. . .

"Thus the knot in the heart is pierced, and all misgivings are cut to pieces. The chain of fruitive actions is terminated when one sees the self as the master."*

Seeing the Supreme Personality of Godhead outside one's heart is described in these words spoken by Citraketu to Lord Sankarshana (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 6.16.44):

na hi bhagavann aghatitam idam
tvad-darshanan nrinam akhila-papa-kshayah

"My Lord, it is not impossible for one to be immediately freed from all material contamination by seeing You."*

Lord Nrisimhadeva tells Prahlada (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 7.9.53):

mam aprinata ayushman
darshanam durlabham hi me drishtva mam na punar jantur atmanam taptum arhati

"My dear Prahlada, may you live a long time. One cannot appreciate or understand Me without pleasing Me, but one who has seen or pleased Me has nothing more for which to lament for his own satisfaction."*

The Personified Vedas tell the Supreme Personality of Godhead (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.86.49):

sa tvam shadhi sva-bhrityan nah kim deva karavama he etad-anto nrinam klesho
yad bhavan akshi-gocarah

"You are the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Please order us. We are Your servants. O Lord, what may we do for You? When You come before the people's eyes, their sufferings all come to an end."

With the help of the potency that makes Him visible, the Supreme Personality of Godhead appears in the pure hearts of His devotees. Then the devotees can see Him. The potency that makes Him visible is the potency of devotional service. This is explained in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.12):

tac-chraddadhana munayah

"The seriously inquisitive student or sage, well equipped with knowledge and detachment, realizes that Absolute Truth by rendering devotional service in terms of what he has heard from the Vedanta-shruti."*

Many words may be used to describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead. For example, He may be called "icchamaya" (He whose every desire is at once fulfilled). The words Bhagavan and Brahman both describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead. That these two words are both names of the Lord is seen in the following words spoken by Lord Matsya to Satyavrata, words that again show devotional service's power to reveal the Lord (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 8.24.38):

madiyam mahimanam ca
param brahmeti shabditam vetsyasy anugrihitam me samprashnair vivritam hridi

"You will be thoroughly advised and favored by Me, and because of your inquiries, everything about My glories, which are known as param brahma, will be manifest within your heart. Thus you will know everything about Me."*

Speaking to the demigod Brahma, the Supreme Personality of Godhead gives a similar instruction of the power of devotional service to reveal the Lord in these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 2.9.22):

manishitanubhavo 'yam
mama lokavalokanam

"The highest perfectional ingenuity is the personal perception of My abodes, and this has been possible because of your submissive attitude in the performance of severe penance according to My order."*

In the Shri Narayanadhyatma it is also said that devotional service enables one to see the Lord:

nityavyakto hi bhagavan
ikshyate nija-shaktitah tam rite pundarikaksham
kah pashyetamitam prabhum

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead is always invisible. However, with the help of His transcendental potency, one may see Him. Without the help of the Lord's potency, who has the power to see the lotus-eyed Supreme Lord?"

In the Katha Upanishad it is also said (1.2.23):

Œ
yam evaisha vrinute tena labhyas
tasyaisha atma vivrinute tanum svam

"The Lord is obtained only by one whom He Himself chooses. To such a person He manifests His own form."*

The Lord does this by reflecting His internal potency on the pure senses of the devotee. Even persons who had committed sins, such as King Mucukunda who had committed the sin of hunting, were able to see the Lord because of their great devotion to Him. The Lord personally praised these devotees when they directly saw Him. Fearing that they would be deprived of the sight of the Lord, these devotees felt their love for Him increase. When Yudhishtira and his brothers, who were devotees that dearly loved the Supreme Lord, saw hell, that hell was only an illusion, a magic trick. That is clearly described in the Svargarohana-parva of Mahabharata. In the Vishnu-dharma Purana it is said that after three births they gave grains and cows to a brahmana, and because of this pious deeds they were freed from hell and allowed to enter Svargaloka. However, Shrimad-Bhagavatam does not accept that account. Shrimad-Bhagavatam declares that they attained the abode of the Supreme Lord. When the Supreme Lord descends to the material world as an avatara, even persons with impure hearts are able to see Him with their own eyes. Still, their seeing Him is not direct. They see the reflection (abhasa) of Him. That is explained in the scriptures. Otherwise, the people have no power to see Him. The Supreme Lord Himself declares in Bhagavad-gita (7.25):

naham prakashah sarvasya
yoga-maya-samavritah

"I am never manifest to the foolish and unintelligent. For them I am covered by My eternal creative potency (yogamaya)."

In the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda, it is also said:

yogibhir drishyate bhaktya nabhaktya drishyate kvacit drashtum na shakyo roshac ca matsarac ca janardanah

"Because of their devotion the yogis see the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Without devotion no one sees Him. he angry and envious have no power to see Him."

During the times when He is not manifest as an avatara, the Lord cannot be seen, even though He is present everywhere. At the time of the Lord's appearance as an avatara, the people do not see His true nature. They think He is the opposite of what He really is. In this way, even though He is the source of great bliss, some people think He makes others suffer. Even though He is the most handsome and charming, some people think He is ferocious and horrible. Even though He is the friend of everyone, some people think He is their enemy. At that time the Lord's Yogamaya potency is the root cause of his manifestation before the people. Still, the people who have offended the Lord's devotees feel uneasy at heart when the Lord is present. Even though in truth the Lord is always present everywhere, these people have made their hearts as hard as stone to Him. Persons who do not have the qualities of a liberated soul, qualities described in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 2.10.6, see only the reflection of the Lord when He is present in this world. The word "liberation" cannot be used to describe the status of these people. In the prose description that begins in Vishnu Purana 4.15.8 it is said that although in the beginning he saw Lord Krishna in this indirect way, at the end Shishupala saw Lord Krishna purely. In Vishnu Purana 4.15.9 it is said:

atma-vinashaya bhagavad-asta-cakramshu-malojjvalam akshaya-tejah-svarupam parama-brahma-bhutam
apagata-dveshadi-dosho bhagavantam adrakshit

"At the moment of his death, Shiupala, now cleansed of hatred and every other vice, gazed at the Supreme Personality of Godhead, whose eternal form was filled with power and glory, and who was garlanded with light from the Sudarshana-cakra."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.86.49) it is said:

etad-anto nrinam klesho
yad bhavan akshi-gocarah

"O Lord, when You come before the people's eyes, their sufferings all come to an end."

This means that the people whose hearts are pure, the people whose hearts are contaminated by offenses to the Lord's devotees, the people who eagerly turn their faces to the Lord, as well as the people who have turned their wyes away from the Lord all find that their sufferings are all destroyed. This is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.86.21):

tebhayah sva-vikshana-vinashta-tamisra-drigbhyah kshemam tri-loka-gurur artha-drisham ca yacchan

"To them, their eyes destroyed by darkness, Lord Krishna, the master of the three worlds, gave auspiciousness. He gave them eyes to see the truth."*

This is also described in the previously quoted prose passage of Vishnu Purana. Persons whose hearts are impure are of two kinds: they who have turned their faces away from the Lord (bhagavad-bahir-mukha), and they who hate the Lord (bhagavad-vidveshi). The persons who have turned their faces away from the Lord are of two kinds: persons who see the Lord and insult Him, and persons who at the time of the Lord's incarnation in this world think the Lord is an ordinary demigod, human being, or other like being. This is described in the following insult spoken by the demigod Indra (Shrimad-Bhagavatam(10.25.3):

krishnam martyam upashritya

"The people of Vraja have taken shelter of Krishna, who is only a human being."

The Supreme Lord's rescue of persons with impure hearts is described by the Personified Vedas in these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.87.35):

dadhati sakrin manas tvayi ya atmani nitya-sukhe na punar upasate purusha-sara-haravasathan

"O Supreme Personality of Godhead full of spiritual bliss, anyone who once places his thoughts in You will never again worship materialistic household life, which who rob a man of his dearest spiritual wealth."

This is also affirmed by the Supreme Lord Himself in these words spoken to the demigod Indra (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.27.16):

mam aishvarya-shri-madandho danda-panim na pashyati tam bhramshayami sampadbhyo
yasya cecchamy anugraham

"A man blinded by pride of wealth and power does not see the hand that waits to punish him. If I am kind to him, I make him fall from his fortunate position."

This description of people with impure hearts does not apply to the cowherd people of Vraja, who dedicated their everything to serve Lord Krishna. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.35):

yad-dhamartha-suhrit-priyatma-tanayapranashayas tvat-krite

"O Lord, these residents of Vrindavana have given You everything: Their bodies, their minds, their love, their homes."*

This is also confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.10):

krishne 'rpitatma-suhrid-artha-kalatra-kamah

"The men of Vraja dedicated their friends, wealth, wives, desires, and their own selves to Lord Krishna."

It is also confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.65.6):

krishne kamala-patrakshe
sannyastakhila-radhasah

"To lotus-eyed Krishna the cowherd people offered all that they had."

Even though their relationship with Him was only like a reflection of the intimate relation the people of Vraja have with Him, the Yadavas and Pandavas also dedicated their everything to Lord Krishna's service. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.90.46):

shayyanatanalapa-krida-snanadi-karmasu
na viduh santam atmanam

"Their love of Krishna was so intense that in their regular activities-in sitting, sleeping, traveling, talking, sporting, cleansing, and bathing-the members of Yadu dynasty were simply absorbed in thoughts of Krishna and paid no attention to bodily activities."*

This is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.12.6):

kim te kamah sura-sparha
mukunda-manaso dvijah
adhijahur mudam rajnah
kshudhitasya yathetare

"O brahmanas, the opulence of the king was so enchanting that the denizens of heaven aspired for it. But because he was absorbed in the service of the Lord, nothing could satisfy him except the Lord's service."*

However, Dhritarashtra and the others like him are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.13.17):

evam griheshu saktanam
pramattanam tad-ihaya

"They are too much attached to family affairs and are always engrossed in their thought."*

In the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.13.18) is described the instruction Dhritarashtra received, an instruction that was not given to the others, an instruction that begins with these words:

viduras tad abhipretya

"Vidura knew all this, and therefore he addressed Dhritarashtra, saying: My dear king, please get out of here immediately. Do not delay. Just see how fear has overtaken you."*

To increase the Lord's sweetness, the Lord's pastime potency (lila-shakti) manifests among friends and among enemies also. Even the reflection of that potency of the Lord attracts the senses of the dear devotees. That this reflected potency attracts the devotees is seen in this description of Putana (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.6.6):

valgu-smitapanga-visarga-vikshitair mano harantim vanitam vrajaukasam

"She was glancing at everyone with very attractive looks and smiling face, and all the residents of Vrindavana were captivated."*

Here the word "mano-harantim" has a double meaning. It means both, "with a reflection of the Lord's potencies Putana attracted the hearts of the residents of Vrindavana" and "Putana was charming and beautiful'." In the same passage it is also said (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.6.6):

The power of the Lord's potency is then described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.3):

na yatra shravanadini raksho-ghnani sva-karmasu kurvanti satvatam bhartur yatudhanyas ca tatra hi

"Wherever the chanting of the holy name of Krishna is done, even negligently, all bad elements-witches, ghosts, and dangerous calamities-immediately disappear."*

Of Putana it is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.6.6):

amamsatambhoja-karane rupinim
gopyah shriyam drashtum ivagatam patim

"The innocent cowherd women thought that she was a goddess of fortune appearing in Vrindavana with a lotus flower in her hand. It seemed to them that she had personally come to see Krishna, who is her husband."*

Here the word "shriyam" means "a girl who brings material prosperity and good fortune" and "patim" means "an appropriate pious man". There it is also said (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.6.9):

tam tikshna-cittam. . .tat-prabhayavaradharshite janani atishthatam

"When Putana was taking baby Krishna on her lap, both Yashoda and Rohini were present, but they did not forbid her because she was so beautifully dressed and because she showed motherly affection towards Krishna. They could not understand that she was a sword within a decorated case."*

In this way the people of Vraja were defeated by the Lord's illusory (maya) poyency. Even Lord Balarama and others were defeated by that illusory potency, as is seen in these words spoken by Lord Balarama Himself (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.13.27):

prayo mayastu me bhartur
nanya me 'pi vimohini

"It was arranged by Krishna, and even I could not check His mystic power."*

The power of the Lord's illusory potency is also seen in the activities that led Jaya and Vijaya to take birth as demons. The Lord's illusory potency acted only very slightly on Lord Balarama. However, it acted very powerfully on Jaya and Vijaya. This is because Lord Balarama was full of love for Lord Krishna, but Jaya and Vijaya were not. Jaya and Vijaya did not become demons merely by the sages' curse, but rather by the will of the Supreme Lord Himself. The Lord confirms this in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.16.29):

matam tu me. . .

"The Lord then said to His attendants, Jaya and Vijaya: Depart this place, but fear not. All glories unto you. Though I am capable of nullifying the brahmanas' curse, I would not do so. On the contrary, it has My approval."*

Jaya and Vijaya's acceptance of the role of enemies of the Lord was not their own doing. Rather, it was personally arranged by the Lord. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.2) it is said:

svecchamayasya. . .

"O Lord, whatever You desire is at once fulfilled."

Still, the Lord was merciful to Jaya and Vijaya, who were His devotees. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.11.23):

traivargikayasa-vighattam asmat-
patir vidhatte purushasya shakra

"Our Lord, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, forbids His devotees to endeavor uselessly for religion, economic development, and sense gratification. O Indra, one cannot thus infer how kind the Lord is. Such mercy is obtainable only by unalloyed devotees, not by persons who aspire for material gain."*

That the Supreme Lord continued to protect Jaya and Vijaya is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.2.33):

tatha na te madhava tavakah kvacid bhrashyanti margat tvayi baddha-sauhridah

"O Madhava, Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord of the goddess of fortune, if devotees completely in love with You sometimes fall from the path of devotion, they do not fall like nondevotees, for You still protect them."*

Jaya and Vijaya did not choose to take birth as demons because then they could quickly be rid of the curse. Rather, they accepted that birth because a devotee will not accept residence on same planet where the Lord lives or any other auspicious condition of life if in that condition the devotee has no opportunity to serve the Lord. On the other hand, the devotee will accept life in hell if there he may serve the Lord. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.48):

natyantikam viganayaty api. . .

"Persons who are very expert and most intelligent in understanding things as they are engage in hearing narrations of the auspicious activities and pastimes of the Lord, which are worth chanting and worth hearing. Such persons do not care even for the highest material benediction, namely liberation, to say nothing of less important benedictions like the material happiness of the heavenly kingdom."*

It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.49):

kamam bhavah sva-vrijinair nirayeshu nah stat. . .

"O Lord, we pray that You let us be born in any hellish condition of life, just as long as our hearts and minds are always engaged in the service of Your lotus feet, our words are made beautiful (by speaking of Your activities) just as tulasi leaves are beautiful when offered unto Your lotus feet, and as long as our ears are always filled with the chanting of Your transcendental qualities."*

Jaya and Vijaya also offered the following prayer (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.15.36):

ma vo 'nutapa-kalaya bhagavat-smriti-ghno moho bhaved iha tu nau vrajator adho 'dhah

"But we pray that due to Your compassion at our repentance, the illusion of forgetting the Supreme Personality of Godhead will not come upon us as we go progressively downward."*

In they had been real enemies of the Lord, Jaya and Vijaya would not have brought happiness to the devotees. They brought happiness to devotees because they were friends with many devotees. Therefore their enmity to the Lord was only the reflection of enmity, an enmity assumed to enable the Lord and the other devotees to taste certain rasas. For this we may assume that the Lord wished to enjoy pastimes of fighting, and to please Him the devotees Jaya and Vijaya, employing their mystic powers, manifested certain spiritual forms and assumed the role of His enemies. Then, meditating on the Lord as their enemy, they eventually relinquished that role of being the Lord's enemy. Therefore thei being the Lord's enemy was only an external show. This is confirmed by Lord Narayana Himself when he told them (0 3.16.29:

yatam ma bhaishtam astu sham

"Depart this place, but fear not. All glories unto you."*

In its description of the Lord's battle with Hiranyaksha, Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.18.9) explains that the Lord was not really angry with Jaya and Vijaya when they were playing the parts of demons:

paranushaktam. . .

"The demon, who had a wealth of ornaments, bangles, and beautiful golden armor on his body, chased the Lord from behind with a great mace. The Lord tolerated his piercing ill words, but in order to reply to them, He expressed His terrible anger."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments: "

"The Lord's terrible anger is here only an external show, a show intended to relieve the fears of the demigods, who were frightened by the demon's insults. The Lord did not really become angry by hearing those insults."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.19.8-9) again explains:

karala. . . .

"The demon, who had fearful tusks, stared at the Personality of Godhead as though to burn Him. Springing into the air, he aimed his mace at the Lord, exclaiming at the same time, 'You are slain!'"*

"O saintly Vidura, while His enemy looked on, the Lord in His boar form, the enjoyer of all sacrificial offerings, playfully knocked down the mace with His left foot, even as it came upon Him with the force of a tempest."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments: "All of this shows that the Lord was not really angry."

In the story of the Syamantaka Jewel, the story of Maha-kala-pura, the story of the mace, and other stories, it is seen that the Lord's anger towards Lord Balarama, Arjuna, Narada Muni, and others is only a pretense, a pale reflection of true anger. Here there are two groups. In one group are Lord Balarama, Arjuna, and others who did not understand Lord Krishna's intention at the time, and in the second group are Narada Muni and others who did understand Lord Krishna's intention at the time. This second group is described in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.3.24), where Uddhava says:

kopita munayah shepur
bhagavan-mata-kovidah

"Once upon a time, great sages were made angry by the sporting activities of the princely descendants of the Yadu and Bhoja dynasties, and thus, as desired by the Lord, the sages cursed them.* The sages were aware that this was the Lord's desire."

Persons who in these situations understand the Lord's true intention, see the Lord directly. However, if their hearts are impure, even persons who understand the Lord's true intention do not see Him directly. They see only the reflection of Him. Even though the Lord may come before their eyes, they see only the reflection of His form. These persons with impure hearts are persons who have turned their faces away from the Lord. Even though they see Him, they do not see Him as He really is. Persons who hate the Lord are of two kinds. Some see the handsomeness, sweetness, and other virtues of the Lord, but still they hate Him. Kalayavana and other demons fall into this category. Others see the Lord only as ferocious and terrible, and therefore they hate Him. Kamsa's wrestlers and other demons fall into that category. Thus there are four categories: the two kinds of people who have turned their faces away from Krishna and the two kinds of people who hate Krishna. These four kinds of people are like persons who, because of a disease of the tongue cannot perceive the true taste of various foods. Some persons, because of an imbalance of bile and air in the body, do not experience the taste of various foods as pleasurable. Some persons, although they cannot experience the true taste, do not hold the food at fault for that. Other persons, persons who are proud, hold the food at fault and criticize it. Still other persons can indeed taste the sweetness of delicious food. But because they prefer the taste of bitter and sour things, they hate food that is sweet. Still other persons perceive sweet food as being bitter, and for that reason they hate sweet food. Thus these four kinds of people, by their own fault, do not see the Supreme Lord directly. They see only His reflection. They do not know the Lord's true nature. Because they have neither knowledge, devotion, nor pure spiritual love, they have no power to understand the Lord's true nature and His glorious qualities, such as His eternity, omniscience, bliss, supreme power and opulence, and supreme sweetness. Still, as a person who has a disease of the tongue may eventually become cured, so these persons may eventually become delivered. This is described in the following words of Vishnu Purana (4.15.9):

tatas tam evakrosheshuc cavayan. . .apagata-dveshadi-dosho bhagavantam adrakshit

"Although at first he hated the Lord, eventually his hatred and other vices were all removed. Then he saw the Supreme Personality of Godhead directly."

Therefore, they who have pure hearts see the Supreme Personality of Godhead directly. That is called liberation. That seeing the Supreme Personality of Godhead directly is better than seeing the impersonal Brahman is described in the Bhagavat-sandarbha (anucchedas 78-80), in the description of the four Kumaras' seeing Vaikuntha, and in Shri Vyasa's and Shri Narada's conversation about the relative importance of impersonal Brahman and the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.43) it is said of the Four Kumaras:

tasyaravinda-nayanasya. . .

"When the breeze carrying the aroma of tulasi leaves from the toes of the lotus feet of the Personality of Godhead entered the nostrils of those sages, they experienced a change both in body and mind, even though they were attached to the impersonal Brahman understanding."*

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is superior to the impersonal Brahman is hinted in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.5.4):

jijnasitam adhitam ca. . .

"You have fully delineated the subject of impersonal Brahman as well as the knowledge derived therefrom. Why should you be despondent in spite of all this, thinking that you are undone, my dear prabhu?"*

The superiority of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is also confirmed by these words of Dhruva Maharaja (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 4.9.10):

ya nirivrtis tanu-bhritam. . .

"My Lord, the transcendental bliss derived from meditating upon Your lotus feet or hearing about Your glories from pure devotees is so unlimited that it is far beyond the stage of brahmananda, where one thinks himself merged in the impersonal Brahman as one with the Supreme. Since brahmananda is also defeated by the transcendental bliss derived from devotional service, then what to speak of the temporary blissfulness of elevating oneself to the heavenly planets, which is ended by the separating sword of time? Although one may be elevated to the heavenly planets, he falls down in due course of time."*

About the author of Shrimad-Bhagavatam it is said (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 12.12.69):

svasukha-nibhrita-cetas tad-vyudastanya-bhavah. . .

"I offer my respectful obeisances unto Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami, the son of Vyasadeva. He is the destroyer of all sinful reactions and is full in self-realization and bliss. Because of this, he has no other desire. Still, he was attracted by the transcendental pastimes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and out of compassion for the people, he described the transcendental historical literature called Shrimad-Bhagavatam. This is compared to the light of the Absolute Truth."*

In Bhagavad-gita (18.54) the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself declares:

brahma-bhutam prasannatma. . .

"One who is thus transcendently situated at once realizes the Supreme Brahman. He never laments nor desires to have anything. He is equally disposed to every living entity. In that state he attains pure devotional service unto Me."*

Simply by seeing the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Shri Prahlada became free from all sins. First he saw the impersonal Brahman, then he saw the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and then he became filled with transcendental bliss. In this way he attained the supreme goal of life. Of him it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.9.6):

sa tat-kara-sparsha-dhutam-khilashubham sapady abhivyakta-paratma-darshanam tat-pada-padman hridi nirvrito dadhau hrishyat-tanuh klinna-krid-ashru-lochanam

"By the touch of Lord Nrisimhadeva's hand on Prahlada Maharaja's head, Prahlada was completely freed of all material contaminations and desires, as if he had been thoroughly cleansed. Therefore he at once became transcendently situated, and all the symptoms of ecstasy became manifest in his body. His heart filled with love, and his eyes with tears, and thus he was able to completely capture the lotus feet of the Lord within the core of his heart."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

When one directly see the Supreme Personality of Godhead, seeing Him outside the heart is better than seeing Him within the heart. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (12.9.5) it is said:

grihitvajadayo yasya
shrimat-padabja-darshanam manasa yoga-pakvena
sa bhavan me 'kshi-gocarah

"O Lord whom Brahma and the demigods saw in their hearts advanced in yoga, You have now come before my eyes."

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"This verse means: `O Lord whom Brahma and the demigods saw in their hearts advanced in yoga, You have now come before my eyes. What boon is greater than this?"

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.12) it is also said:

yat-pada-pamshur bahu-janma-kricchratah. . .

"Who can estimate the transcendental fortune of the residents of Vrindavana? They were personally visualizing the Supreme Personality of Godhead face to face, He whom many yogis cannot find even after undergoing severe austerities, although He is sitting within the heart."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.6.33) Shrila Narada Muni says:

pragayatah sva-viryani
tirtha-padah priya-shravah
ahuta iva me shighram
darshanam yati cetasi

"The Supreme Lord Shri Krishna, whose glories and activities are pleasing to hear, at once appears on the seat of my heart, as if called for, as soon as I begin to chant His holy activities."*

Even though one can always see the Lord within his heart, Shrila Narada Muni preferred to see Him outside the heart. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.2.1):

govinda-bhuja-guptayam dvaravatyam kurudvaha avatsin narado 'bhikshnam krishnupasana-lalasa

"Eager to worship Lord Krishna, Narada stayed, O best of the Kurus, at Dvaraka, which is always protected by Lord Krishna's arms."

This verse was spoken by Markandeya Muni to Shri Narayana Rishi.

Anuccheda 9

A person who directly sees the Supreme Personality of Godhead is liberated, even if that person is still living in the material world. This is described in the following words spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.14.13):

akincanasya dantasya shantasya sama-cetasah maya santushta-manasah
sarvaha sukha-maya dishah

"For a person who is penniless, peaceful, self-controlled, and equipoised in every situation, and whose heart is satisfied with Me as its only possession, every direction is full of bliss."

In this verse the word "akincana" means, "one who has the Supreme Personality of Godhead as his only possession. He has no other possession." Because he has the Supreme Personality of Godhead as his only possession, such a person has the three virtues of being peaceful, self-controlled, and equipoised in every situation. Because he does not wish to possess unworthy things, things that are not the Supreme Personality of Godhead, he is equipoised in every situation. Because he directly sees the Supreme Personality of Godhead everywhere, for him every direction is full of bliss. This verse was spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 10

That directly seeing the Supreme Personality of Godhead in this way is the highest condition of life is affirmed by Prahlada Maharaja in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.9.16):

. . .ushattama te 'nghri-mulam
prito 'paravga-sharanam hvayase kada nu

"O most powerful insurmountable Lord, . . .when will that moment come when You will call me to the shelter of Your lotus feet, which are the ultimate goal for liberation from conditional life?"*

There are five kinds of liberation. They are: salokya, sarshti, sarupya, samipya, and sayujya. In salokya liberation one resides in Vaikuntha, the planet where the Supreme Personality of Godhead also resides. In sarshti liberation one possesses opulences like those of the Lord. In sarupya liberation one has a spiritual form like the Lord's. In samipya liberation one is able to stay close to the Lord. In sayujya liberation one some souls enter the Lord's form. To each of these five words (salokya, sarshti, sarupya, samipya, and sayujya) the word "mukti" (liberation) may be affixed. In salokya, sarshti, and sarupya liberation one generally sees the Supreme Personality of Godhead within one's heart. In samipya liberation one generally sees the Supreme Personality of Godhead outside one's heart. In sayujya liberation one generally sees the Supreme Personality of Godhead within one's heart. Even though the Supreme Personality of Godhead is personally present before him, in sayujya liberation the individual soul is in a state of trance that is like a dreamless sleep. In that condition the soul cannot see the Supreme Personality of Godhead present before him. The highest state of liberation is described in these words of Chandogya Upanishad (7.25.2):

sa va evam pashyann evam manvana evam vijanann atma-ratir atma-krida atma-mithuna atmanandah. sa svarad bhavati sarveshu lokeshu kama-caro bhavati.

"In this way the liberated soul directly sees the Supreme Personality of Godhead, thinks of Him, understands Him, delights in Him, enjoys pastimes with Him, becomes His companion, and enjoys bliss with Him."

By his own will a liberated soul can manifest many different forms. This is described in these words of Chandogya Upanishad (7.26.2):

sa ekadha bhavati, dvidha bhavati, tridha bhavati.

"The liberated soul may manifest one form, two forms, three forms, or more forms than that."

The spiritual world of Vaikuntha is far beyond the touch of the illusory potency maya. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.9.10):

na yatra maya. . .

"In that personal abode of the Lord, the material modes of ignorance and passion do not prevail, nor is there any of their influence in goodness. There is no predominance of the influence of time, so what to speak of the illusory external energy? It cannot enter that region. Without discrimination, both the demigods and demons worship the Lord as devotees."*

One who enters the spiritual world never returns to the material world. This is described in these words of Vedanta-sutra (4.4.23):

anavrittih shabdat

"By spiritual sound one attains the spiritual world, from which one never returns."

In the Chandogya Upanishad (8.15.1) it is said:

na sa punar avartate

"One who enters the spiritual world never returns to the material world of birth and death."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.4.22) the demigods harrassed by Hiranyakashipu pray:

tasyai namo 'stu kashthayai yatratma harir ishvarah
yad gatva na nivartante
shantah sannyasino 'malah

"Let us offer our respectful obeisances unto that direction where the Supreme Personality of Godhead is situated, where those purified souls in the renounced order of life go, and from which, having gone, they never return."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.25.38) Lord Kapiladeva explains:

na karhycin mat-parah shanta-rupe
nankshyanti no me 'nimisho ledhi hetih

"My dear mother, devotees who receive such transcendental opulences are never bereft of them. Neither weapons nor the change of time can destroy such opulences."*

Bhagavad-gita (8.16) Lord Krishna declares:

a-brahma-bhuvanal lokah
punar avartino 'rjuna mam upetya tu kaunteya
punar janma na vidyate

"From the highest planet in the material world down to the lowest all are places of misery wherein repeated birth and death take place. But one who attains to My abode, O son of Kunti, never takes birth again."*

In Bhagavad-gita (15.6) Lord Krishna declares:

yad gatva na nivartante
tad dhama paramam mama

"That abode of Mine is not illumined by the sun or moon, nor by electricity. One who reaches it never returns to this material world."*

In Bhagavad-gita (18.62) Lord Krishna declares:

tat-prasadat param shantim sthanam prapsyasi shashvatam

"By His grace you will attain transcendental peace and the supreme and eternal abode."*

In Padma Purana, Shrishti-khanda it is said:

a-brahma-sadanad eva doshah santi mahi-pate
ata eva hi necchanti
svarga-praptim manishinah

"Even up to Brahmaloaka, all the material worlds are filled with a host of faults. That is why, O king, they who are truly wise do not desire to go even to Svargaloka.

a-brahma-sadanad urdhvam
tad vishnoh paramam padam shubhram sanatanam jyotih para-brahmeti tad viduh

"They who are wise know that above Brahmaloaka and all the material worlds is the supreme abode of Lord Vishnu, an effulgent, glorious, eternal, spiritual abode.

na yatra mudha gacchanti purusha vishayatmakah dambha-lobha-bhaya-droha-krodha-mohair abhidrutah

"Fools, hedonists, and persons conquered by pride, greed, fear, hatred, anger, and illusion do not go to that spiritual abode.

nirmama nirahankara nirdvandvah samyatendriyah dhyana-yoga-ratah caiva
tatra gacchanti sadhavah

"Only saintly devotees who are free from false ego, false possessiveness, and the duality of material illusion, who control their senses, and who are rapt in spiritual meditation go to that spiritual abode."

In Padma Purana, Shrishti-khanda, King Subahu says:

dhyana-yogena devesham
yajishye kamala-priyam bhava-pralaya-nirmuktam
vishnulokam vrajamy aham

"In a trance of meditation I will worship the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is the master of the demigods and the husband of the goddess of fortune. In this way I will go to the spiritual world of Lord VIsHnu, a world that is not destroyed when the material worlds perish."

The pure devotees of the Lord are not even interested in attaining the five kinds of liberation. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.4.67):

mat-sevaya pratitam te salokyadi-catushtayam necchanti sevaya purnah
kuto 'nyat kala-viplutam

"My devotees, who are always satisfied to be engaged in My loving service, are not interested even in the four principles of liberation (salokya, sarupya, samipya, and sarshti), although these are automatically achieved by their service. What then is to be said of such perishable happiness as elevation to the higher planetary systems?"*

Because everything in the material world will eventually be destroyed by time, and because they have heard that once going to the spiritual world they will never return, the devotees aspire to go to the spiritual abode of the Supreme Lord. They also aspire to join the Supreme Lord in His transcendental pastimes. The devotees' attainment of salokya liberation, where they reside in the same planet as the Lord, is described in these words of Bhavishya Purana, Uttara-khanda:

evam kaunteya kurute yo 'ranya-dvadashim narah sa dehante vimana-stho
divya-kanya-samavritah

"O son of Kunti, a person who resides in this twelve-forest land of Vrindavana, at the time of his death finds himself in a celestial airplane surrounded by glorious gopis.

yati jnati-samayuktah shvetadvipam hareh puram
yatra loka pita-vastrah

"Accompanied by his relatives, he goes to Lord Krishna's realm of Shvetadvipa, where the residents are all dressed in yellow garments.

There it is also said:

tishthanti vishnu-sannidhye
yavad ahuta-samplavam

tasmad etya maha-viryah prithivyam nripa-pujitah
martya-loke kirtimantah sambhavanti narottamah

tato yanti param sthanam
moksha-margam shivam sukham yatra gatva na shocanti
na samsare bhramanti ca

"On this earth are many saintly heroes and many glorious saints worshiped by many kings. These saintly persons stay always near to Lord Vishnu. When this material world is destroyed by floods, these saints travel on the path of liberation. They go to the auspicious and blissful spiritual abode. Going there, they never lament. Going there, they never again wander in this world of birth and death."

In the story of Jaya and Vijaya, where salokya liberation is described, it is seen that the liberated souls are free from the influence of the modes of material nature. In the same way the devotees aspiring for liberation also are free from the material modes. This Lord Krishna explains in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.25.26):

sattvikah karako 'sangi. . .
. . .nirguno mad-apashrayah

"A worker free from attachment is in the mode of goodness, a worker blinded by desire is in the mode of passion, a worker who forgets right and wrong is in the mode of ignorance, and a worker who takes shelter of Me is always untouched by the modes of material nature."

In final liberation the devotees attain a spiritual nature and form like those of the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.14):

vasanti yatra purushah
sarve vaikuntha-murtayah ye 'nimitta-nimittena
dharmenaradhayan harim

"In the Vaikuntha planets all the residents are similar in form to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. They all engage in devotional service of the Lord without desires for sense gratification."*

Here "nimitta" means "result", and "animitta" means "without cause". These two words together mean, "without the desire for material sense gratification". "Dharmena" means "by devotional service to the Supreme Personality of Godhead". Here the word "vaikuntha" means "the Supreme Personality of Godhead". "Vaikuntha-murtayah" means "numberless forms of the individual souls who reside in Vaikuntha and who are manifest from tiny fragments of the effulgence of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. There are many liberated souls, each with his own form, and there is one Supreme Personality of Godhead, who has His own form. Still, the liberated souls have forms that are like the form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This verse was spoken by the demigod Brahma to the demigods.

Anuccheda 11

Liberation is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.6.28):

prayujyamane mayi tam
shuddham bhagavatim tanum arabdha-karma-nirvano
nyapatat panca-bhautikah

"Having been awarded a transcendental body befitting an associate of the Personality of Godhead, I quit the body made of five material elements, and thus all acquired fruitive results of work (karma) stopped."*

It is again described in these words of the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.6.23):

hitvavadyam imam lokam
ganta maj-janatam asi

"By service of the Absolute Truth, even for a few days, a devotee attains firm and fixed intelligence in Me. Consequently he goes to become My associate in the transcendental world after giving up the present deplorable material worlds."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.6.28 the Supreme Personality of Godhead promises to give the devotee a spiritual form like His own. Here "tam bhagavatim" means "a form that is a fragment of the spiritual effulgence of the Supreme Lord", "shuddham" means "untouched by matter", "tanum" means "a form given by the Supreme Personality of Godhead", and "mayi prayujyamane" means "attained by me when the results of karma came to an end". This happened when the material body made of five elements fell away (nyapatat panca-bhautikah). Here it is seen that the subtle material body of mind, intelligence, and false ego is also destroyed. Because of his faith in the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the devotee's past karma also comes to an end. In his commentary on this verse Shrila Shridhara Svami explains:

"The bodies of a personal associates of the Supreme Lord are eternal, pure, and free from karma." This verse was spoken by Shri Narada to Shri Vyasa.

Anuccheda 12

The body of a liberated soul is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (8.3.19):

yam dharma-kamartha. . . raty api deham avyayam

"After worshiping the Supreme Personality of Godhead, those who are interested in the four principles of religion, economic development, sense gratification and liberation obtain from Him what they desire. What, then, is to be said of other benedictions? Indeed, sometimes the Lord gives a spiritual body to such ambitious worshipers."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"In this way the Supreme Lord gives the devotee an eternal spiritual body."

Anuccheda 13

The bodies of the liberated souls are also described in these words of Chandogya Upanishad (8.13.1):

ashva iva romani vidhuya. . . dhutva shariram akritam krita brahmalokam abhisambhavani

"As a horse sheds its hairs, . . . so will I shed this external material body and go to the spiritual abode of the Supreme Lord."

Thus, by the intervention of the Supreme Lord's inconceivable potency, the devotee leaves behind his material body and attains a spiritual body like that of the Lord. This is described in the following narration of Dhruva Maharaja's activities (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 4.12.29):

bibhrad rupam hiranmayam

"Before getting aboard, Dhruva Maharaja worshiped the airplane, circumambulated it, and also offered obeisances to the associates of Vishnu. In the meantime he became as brilliant and illuminating as molten gold. He was thus completely prepared to board the transcendental plane."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"This means he attained a form brilliant and illuminating as molten gold."

Sarshti liberation is described in these words of the Supreme Lord (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.29.34), which I have already discussed in Bhakti-sandarbha (anuccheda 309):

martyo yada tyakta-samasta-karma. . .
. . .mayatma-bhuyaya ca kalpate vai

"A human being who renounces all fruitive activities, offers himself to Me, and yearns to serve Me, becomes immortal. He becomes glorious like Me."

Sarshti liberation is also described in these words of Chandogya Upanishad (8.12.3):

sa tatra paryeti jakshan kridan ramamanah

"In the spiritual world the liberated soul walks, plays, and enjoys life."

Sarshti liberation is also described in these words of Taittiriya Upanishad (1.6.2):

apnoti svarajyam

"The liberated soul attains a kingdom in the spiritual world."

In the Taittiriya Upanishad (1.5.3) it is said:

sarve 'smai deva balim aharanti

"All the demigods place offerings before the liberated soul."

In Chandogya Upanishad (7.25.2) it is said:

tasya sarveshu lokeshu kama-caro bhavati

"The liberated soul can travel to whatever world he wishes, simply by wishing to be there."

In Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (4.4.22) it is said:

sarveshvarah. . .

"The liberated soul becomes glorious like the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself."

Still, the liberated soul does not have all the powers of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. For example, the liberated soul has no power to create universes. How, then, can the liberated souls become the rulers of the spiritual world of Vaikuntha? This is described in the following words of Vedanta-sutra (4.4.22):

jagad-vyapara-varjam

"Although he has powers and glories like those of the Supreme Lord, the liberated soul has no power to create universes."

Lord Krishna tells Devaki (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.3.41):

adrishtvanyatamam loke. . .

"Since I found no one else as highly elevated as you in simplicity and other qualities of good character, I appeared in this world as Prishnigarbha, or one who is celebrated as having taken birth from Prishni."*

In this way, in having saintly qualities, the devotee is in some ways equal to the Lord. Whatever the yogis attain by their eight mystic powers, powers that begin with anima siddhi, is only a small fraction of the glories and powers attained by the liberated devotee.

The great treasure that the devotee attains by the Supreme Lord's mercy is eternal and imperishable. Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.23.7-8) explains:

ye me svadharma-niratasya tapah-samadhi-vidyatma-yoga-vijita bhagavat-prasadah tan eva te mad-anusevanayavaruddhan drishtim prapashya vitaramy abhayan ashokan

"Kardama Muni continued: I have achieved the blessings of the Lord in discharging my own religious life of austerity, meditation, and Krishna consciousness. Although you have not yet experienced these achievements, which are free from fear and lamentation, I shall offer them all to you because you are engaged in my service. Now just look at them. I am giving you the transcendental vision to see how nice they are."*

anye punar bhagavato bhruva udvijrimbhavibhramshitartha-racanah kim urukramasya siddhasi bhunkshva vibhavan nija-dharma-dohan divyan narair duradhigan nripa-vikriyabhih

"Kardama Muni continued: What is the use of enjoyments other than the Lord's grace? All material achievements are subject to be annihilated simply by a movement of the eyebrows of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. By your principles of devotion to your husband, you have achieved and can enjoy transcendental gifts very rarely attained by persons proud of aristocracy and material possessions."*

Here the words "tapah-samadhi-vidya" refer to the activities of devotional service. "Atma-yoga" means "concentration of the mind". The rhetorical question, "What is the use of enjoyments other than the Lord's grace?" is answered with the words, "They are of no use." Then it is said, "All material achievements are subject to be annihilated simply by a movement of the eyebrows of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Personality of Godhead." This verse was spoken by Kardama Muni to Devahuti.

Anuccheda 14

Sarupya liberation is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (8.4.6):

gajendro bhagavat-sparshad vimukto 'jnana-bandhanat prapto bhagavato rupam
pita-vasash catur-bhujah

"Because Gajendra, king of the elephants, had been touched directly by the hands of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, he was immediately freed of all material ignorance and bondage. Thus he received the salvation of sarupya-nukti, in which he achieved the same bodily features as the Lord, being dressed in yellow garments, and possessing four hands."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 15

Samipya liberation is described in these verses (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.24.43-47), verses I have already discussed in Bhagavat-sandarbha (anuccheda 84), verses that describe Kardama Muni's attainment of liberation:

mano brahmani yunjanah. . .
. . .labdhatma mukta-bandhanah. . .
. . .bhagavad-bhakti-yuktena
prapta bhagavati gatih

"He fixed his mind upon the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Parabrahman, who is beyond cause and effect, who manifests the three modes of material nature, who is beyond those three modes, and who is perceived only through unfailing devotional service.*

"Thus he gradually became unaffected by the false ego of material identity and became freed from material affection. Undisturbed, equal to everyone, and without duality, he could indeed see himself also. His mind was turned inward and was perfectly calm, like an ocean unagitated by waves.

"He thus became liberated from conditioned life and became self-situated in transcendental devotional service to the Personality of Godhead, Vasudeva, the omniscient Supersoul within everyone.*

"He began to see that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is situated in everyone's heart, and that everyone is existing on Him, because He is the Supersoul of everyone.*

"Freed from all hatred and desire, Kardama Muni, being equal to everyone because of discharging uncontaminated devotional service, ultimately attained the path back to Godhead."*

Now we will discuss sayujya liberation, which was attained by Aghasura and other demons. Shrimad-Bhagavatam clearly explains that sayujya liberation is not auspicious and desirable. It is not like salokya and the other kinds of liberation. Some individual souls may desire to taste bliss by merging into the Lord's existence. In these situations the Lord may by His potency allow them to thus taste a small particle of the remnants of the bliss He has already tasted. However, the souls that merge into the Lord in this way do not become Him. Neither do they attain all His powers. For example they do not attain His power to create universes. This is described in the following words of the Brihat-shruti:

yadainam mukto nu pravishati modate ca kamansh caivanubhavati

"The liberated soul then merges into the Lord. Then he is happy. Then his desires are fulfilled."

In the Madhyandinayana-shruti it is said:

brahmabhisampadya brahmana pashyati brahmana shrinoti

"Then the soul merges into Brahman. When Brahman sees, the soul also sees. When Brahman hears, the soul also hears."

This state of merging into the Lord is attained by a very slight intervention of the Lord's potency. The scriptures explain:

adatte hari-hastena

"With His own hand Lord Krishna gives sayujya liberation."

Sometimes, if the Lord wishes to enjoy pastimes with that individual soul, the Lord may send him out of that merged condition and make him a personal associate of the Lord. Shishupala and Dantavakra are examples of this. First they attained sayujya liberation, and then afterwards they became personal associates of the Lord. Shri Narada describes them in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.1.47):

vairanubandha-tivrena dhyanenacyuta-satmatam nitau punar hareh parshvam
jagmatur vishnu-parshadau

"These two associates of Lord Vishnu-Jaya and Vijaya-maintained a feeling of enmity for a very long time. Because of always thinking of Krishna in this way, they regained the shelter of the Lord, having returned home, back to Godhead."*

In this way we have described how, by directly seeing the Supreme Lord, the individual soul may quickly attain salokya or the other kinds of liberation. Now we will show how the soul may gradually attain liberation and meet the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This gradual attainment of liberation is also described in the scriptures. For example, Ajamila's attainment of perfection is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.2.40-44):

sa tasmin deva-sadana
asino yogam asthitah pratyahritendriya-gramo
yuyoja mana atmani

"In Hardwar, Ajamila took shelter at a Vishnu temple, where he executed the process of bhakti-yoga. He controlled his senses and fully applied his mind in the service of the Lord.*

tato gunebhya atmanam viyujyatma-samadhina yuyuje bhagavad-dhamni
brahmany anubhavatmani

"Ajamila fully engaged in devotional service. Thus he detached his mind from the process of sense gratification and became fully absorbed in thinking of the form of the Lord.*

yarhy uparata-dhis tasmin adrakshit purushan purah upalabhyopalabdhan prag vavande shirasa dvijah

"When his intelligence and mind were fixed upon the form of the Lord, the brahmana Ajamila once again saw before him four celestial persons. He could understand that they were those he had seen previously, and thus he offered them his obeisances by bowing down before them.*

hitva kalevaram tirtha gangayam darshanad anu sadyah svarupam jagrihe
bhagavat-parshva-vartinam

"Upon seeing the Vishnudutas, Ajamila gave up his material body at Hardwar on the bank of the Ganges. He regained his original spiritual body, which was a body appropriate for an associate of the Lord.*

sakam vihayasa vipro mahapurusha-kinkaraih haimam vimanam aruhya
yayau yatra shriyah patih

"Accompanied by the order-carriers of Lord Vishnu, Ajamila boarded an airplane made of gold. Passing through the airways, he went directly to the abode of Lord Vishnu, the husband of the goddess of fortune."*

The meaning of these verses is clear. Of the two, the quick attainment of liberation is better than the gradual attainment of liberation.

Anuccheda 16

Samipya liberation is the best kind of liberation, better than salokya or the others. That is because the Supreme Lord is directly manifest outside the devotee's heart and before the devotee's eyes. This kind of liberation is described in this question posed by Vajra Maharaja in the Vishnu-dharma Purana, Uttara-khanda:

kalpanam jiva-samye hi muktir naivopapadyate kadacid api dharma-jna
tatra pricchami karanam

"Kalpa after kalpa the number of individual souls in the material world remains the same. Do the individual souls never attain liberation? O knower of religion, I ask you what is the reason for this.

ekaikasmin nare muktim
kalpe kalpe gate dvija abhavishyaj jagac chunyam kalasyader abhavatah

"One by one, kalpa after kalpa, the individual souls attain liberation. O brahmana, would not the material world become gradually empty in the course of time?

To this question, Shri Markandeya gave this answer:

jivasyanyasya sargena
nare muktim upagate
acintya-shaktir bhagavan
jagat purayate sada

"When one individual soul attains liberation, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who has inconceivable potencies, replaces him by creating another soul. In this way the Lord keeps the material world always filled.

brahmana saha mucyante brahma-lokam upagatah shriyante ca maha-kalpe

tad-vidhash capare janah

"The souls who reside on Brahmaloaka attain liberation along with the demigod Brahma. When, in the next maha-kalpa, the material worlds are created again, these souls are replaced with other souls like them."

In the numberless material universes there are numberless individual souls whose karma is not awakened and who are as if asleep, merged in material nature. When the Supreme Lord awakens these souls and gives them external material bodies, this is called "creation of the souls". In truth the souls do not have a beginning in time, a moment in time when they were created. Each individual soul always existed. No individual soul will ever cease to exist. Every individual soul exists eternally.

Now we will explain how pure love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is better than mere liberation. Although the liberated souls are not without pure love for the Lord, still, some souls wish to attain samipya or the other kinds of liberation so thatb they may become free from sufferings. This does not make pure love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead any the less important. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (12.13.12):

kaivalyaika-prayojanam

"And that one thing is the only goal of life."

The "one thing" referred to here is pure love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The preceding three quarters of this stanza all describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Therefore this last quarter should be understood to refer to Him also. That the verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead has already been revealed in the Tattva and Bhagavat sandarbhas. In the preceding stanze it is said (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 12.13.11):

hari-lila-katha-vrata-
mritanandita-sat-suram

"Shrimad-Bhagavatam is filled with nectarean descriptions of Lord Krishna's transcendental pastimes, descriptions that delight the saintly devotees."

These words affirm that pure love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the primary topic of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. The words "hari-lila-kathamrita" mean "The descriptions of Lord Krishna's pastimes are nectar", and the words "sat-suram mean "The self satisfied (atmarama) devotees.

The glory of pure love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.11):

ittham satam brahma-sukhanubhutya

"Lord Krishna, who awards the impersonal brahman realization by His bodily effulgence, also gives pleasure to the devotees as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Those who are under the spell of external energy, maya, take Him only as a beautiful child. Yet He gave full transcendental pleasure to the cowherd boys who played with Him. Only after accumulating heaps of pious activities, those boys were promoted to personally associate with the Supreme Personality of Godhead."*

It is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.1.9):

parinishthito 'pi naigunye

"O saintly king, I was certainly situated perfectly in transcendence, yet I was still attracted by the delineation of the pastimes of the Lord, who is described by enlightened verses."*

Therefore the word "kaivalya" in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 12.13.12 should be interpreted according to these explanations of the true purpose of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. The true meaning of "kaivalya", then, is "pure love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead". However, even if the word "kaivalya" is interpreted to mean "purity", it still refers to love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, for that love is the purest thing that exists. That the word "shuddha" (pure) may be used to describe the unalloyed devotees of the Lord has already been established in the Bhakti-sandarbha. Others, persons who are not devotees of the Lord, have many faults. These persons are criticized in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.1.2):

dharma-projjhita-kaitavo 'tra paramah

"Completely rejecting all religious activities which are materially motivated, this Bhagavata Purana propounds the highest truth."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"In this verse the preposition 'pra' in the word 'projjhita' indicates that the desire for liberation is also rejected in this book."

Therefore this verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam declares that the desire for liberation is actually materially motivated (kaitava). Although the word "kaivalya" may be used to describe the Supreme Personality of Godhead, or the spiritual nature of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the devotees who love the Supreme Lord still say (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.15.49):

ś
kamam bhavah sva-vrijinair nirayeshu nah stac ceto 'livad yadi nu te padayo rameta

"O Lord, we pray that You let us be born in any hellish condition of life, just as long as our hearts and minds are always engaged in the service of Your lotus feet, our words are made beautiful (by speaking of Your activities) just as tulasi leaves are beautified when offered to Your lotus feet, and as long as our ears are always filled with the chanting of Your transcendental qualities."*

Here it is seen that the devotees give their love to the Supreme Personality of Godhead alone. If the word "kaivalya" may be interpreted to mean "liberation". Still, the best meaning of that word is "pure love for the Premadasa". That is the interpretation that should be accepted. In truth the word "kaivalya" and other like words primarily refer to pure devotional service. This is seen in the following prose passage of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.19.19-20):

yatha-varna-vidhanam apavargash capi bhavati. . .yo 'sau bhagavati sarva-bhutatmany anatmye 'nirukte 'nilayane paramatmani vasudeve 'nanya-nimitta-bhakti-yoga-lakshano nana-gati-nimittavidya-granthi-randhana-dvarena yada hi maha-purusha-purusha-prasangah.

"If one's position is ascertained by a bona-fide spiritual master and one is properly trained to engage in the service of Lord Vishnu according to the four social divisions (brahmana, kshatriya, vaishya, and shudra) and the four spiritual divisions (brahmacari, grihastha, vanaprastha, and sannyasa), one's life becomes perfect.*

"After many, many births, when the results of one's pious activities mature, one gets an opportunity to associate with pure devotees. Then one is able to cut the knot of bondage to ignorance, which bound him because of varied fruitive activities. As a result of associating with devotees, one gradually renders service to Lord Vasudeva, who is transcendental, free from attachment to the material world, beyond the mind and words, and independent of everything else. That bhakti-yoga, devotional service to Lord Vasudeva, is the real path of liberation."*

In the first paragraph here it is said: "One who follows the varnashrama system (varnasya yad vidhanam) and, following his own nature, engages in devotional service, offering the results of his work to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, will gradually attain liberation (apavargas ca bhavati). The nature of that liberation is described in the second paragraph. The word "atmya" here means material passion and other vices", and therefore the word "anatmya" means "freedom from those vices". The person described here strives to attain the happiness felt by the devotees. He does not try to become happy separate from the Lord. He wishes to be happy as the devotees are happy. Here the word "anirukte" means "the Supreme Personality of Godhead's form and qualities are beyond the descriptive power of words". The word "anilayane" means "the Supreme Personality of Godhead never dies (nilayana). He exists eternally". Here the word "bhakti-yogah" (devotional service) is modified by the adjective "ananya-nimitta", which means "free from liberation or any other material motivation". The word "laksanah" means "that is the nature of devotional service". The activities by which one attains what is described by the word "apavargah" are described in the words: "nana-gati-nimittavidya-granthi-randhana", which mean "Then one is able to cut the knot of bondage to ignorance, which bound him because of varied fruitive activities." In this way (dvarena) one attains what is called "apavarga". That is the meaning here. The word "apavarga" comes from the verb "vrij" preceded by the preposition "apa". It is derived in that way. It is said in the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda:

vishnor anucaratvam hi
moksham ahur manishinah

"The wise say that devotional service to Lord Vishnu is true liberation."

In the same way it is said in the Skanda Purana, Reva-khanda:

nishcala tvayi bhaktir ya
saiva muktir janardane mukta eva hi bhaktas te tava vishno yato hareh

"O Lord Krishna, unwavering devotion to You is true liberation. O Lord Vishnu, Your devotees are already liberated."

Reassuring Queen Rukmini, Lord Krishna said (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.60.50-53):

santi hy ekanta-bhaktayas tava. . .

. . .mam prapya maniny apavarga-sampadam vanchanti ye sampada eva tat-patim

"O most beautiful Rukmini, you are My dearmost wife. I am greatly pleased to understand how much love you have for Me. Please take it for granted that no matter what ambition and desire you might have and no matter what you might expect from Me, I am always at your service. And it is a fact also that My devotees, My dearmost friends and servitors, are always free from material contamination, even though they are not inclined to ask from Me such liberation. My devotees never desire anything from Me except to be engaged in My service.

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.3.12) it is said:

kaivalya-sammata-pathas tv atha bhakti-yogah

"Transcendental knowledge in relation with the Supreme Lord Hari is knowledge resulting in the complete suspension of the waves and whirlpools of the material modes. Such knowledge is self-satisfying due to its being free from material attachment, and being transcendental it is approved by authorities. Who could fail to be attracted?"*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"This verse means: `Devotional service is the true path of liberation."

The word "pathah" (path) here means "the way to attain association with the Supreme Personality of Godhead." This is described in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 5.19.20 (quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda) in the passage beginning with the words "yada hi". That verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 17

in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.10.1) it is said:

atra sargo visargash ca. . .

"In the Shrimad-Bhagavatam there are the divisions of statements regarding the following: the creation of the universe, subcreation, planetary systems, protection by the Lord, the creative impetus, the change of Manus, the science of God, returning home, back to Godhead, liberation, and the summum bonum."*

In the this description of the ten topic of a maha-purana, the word "mukti" (liberation) comes toward the end. Therefore, before attaining liberation one must first attain "poshana", which precedes it in this list. "Poshana" here means "mercy". The greatest mercy is the gift of pure love (priti) for the Lord. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.6.18):

muktim dadati karhicit sma na bhakti-yogam

"Those engaged in getting the Lord's favor attain liberation from the Lord very easily, but He does not very easily give the opportunity to render direct service unto Him."*

This is also confirmed by the following words, where Supreme Personality of Godhead tells King Prithu (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 4.20.16):

varam ca mat kancana manavendra vrinishva. . .

"My dear king, I am very captivated by your elevated qualities and excellent behavior, and thus I am very favorably inclined toward you. You may therefore ask from Me any benediction you like."*

King Prithu spoke these words in reply to the Lord (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 4.20.31):

yatha cared bala-hitam pita svayam tatha tvam evarhasi nah samihitum

"My Lord, due to Your illusory energy, all living beings in this material world have forgotten their real constitutional position, and out of ignorance they are always desirous of material happiness in the form of society, friendship, and love. Therefore please do not ask me to take some material benefits from You, but as a father, not waiting for the son's demand, does everything for the benefit of the son, please bestow upon me whatever You think best for me."*

The Supreme Lord then said to King Prithu (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 4.20.32):

tam aha rajan mayi bhaktir astu

"The Lord, the seer of the universe, after hearing Prithu Maharaja's prayer, addressed the king: 'My dear king, may you always be blessed by engaging in My devotional service'."*

The word "bhakti" here means "devotional service filled with pure love for the Lord". This last verse was spoken by Lord Vishnu.

Anuccheda 18

By hearing Shrimad-Bhagavatam one attains pure love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, love that is the true goal of life. This has already been briefly explained in Tattva-sandarbha. This truth about pure love for the Supreme Lord was revealed to Lord Vyasadeva is a mystic trance of samadhi and it was also revealed to Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami in his heart. That one attains love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead by hearing Shrimad-Bhagavatam is confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.7.7):

yasyam vai shruyamanayam. . .

"Simply by giving aural reception to this Vedic literature, the feeling for devotional service to Lord Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, sprouts up at once to extinguish the fire of lamentation, illusion, and fearfulness."*

It is also confirmed by these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 12.12.69):

svasukha-nibhrita-cetas tad-vyudastanya-bhavah. . .

"I offer my respectful obeisances unto Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami, the son of Vyasadeva. He is the destroyer of all sinful reactions and is full in self-realization and bliss. Because of this, he has no other desire. Still, he was attracted by the transcendental pastimes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and out of compassion for the people, he described the transcendental historical literature called Shrimad-Bhagavatam. This is compared to the light of the Absolute Truth."*

It is also confirmed by these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.1.2):

dharma-projjhita-kaitavo 'tra paramah. . .

. . . kim va parair ishvarah

sadyo hridy avarudhyate 'tra kritibhih shushrushubhis tat-kshanat

"Completely rejecting all religious activities which are materially motivated, this Bhagavata Purana propounds the highest truth, which is understandable by those devotees who are fully pure in heart. The highest truth is reality distinguished from illusion for the welfare of all. Such truth uproots the threefold miseries. This beautiful Bhagavatam, compiled by the great sage Vyasadeva (in his maturity), is sufficient in itself for God-realization. What is the need of any other scripture? As soon as one attentively and submissively hears the message of Bhagavatam, by this culture of knowledge the Supreme Lord is established within his heart."*

In the four most important verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.9.33-36) the word "rahasya" (secret) refers to this truth: that by hearing Shrimad-Bhagavatam one attains love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This has already been described in Bhagavat-sandarbha's explanation of the third of these four most important verses. Love for the Supreme Lord is true liberation, is the Lord's greatest mercy, and is the greatest goal of life. Simply by hearing Shrimad-Bhagavatam one attains it. As Shri Vyasa was about to write Shrimad-Bhagavatam, Shri Narada rebuked him and gave him this instruction (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.5.9):

yatha dharmadayash cartha
muni-varyanukirtitah na tatha vasudevasya
mahima hy anuvarnitah

"Although, great sage, you have very broadly described the four principles beginning with religious performances, you have not described the glories of the Supreme Personality, Vasudeva."*

In this verse the word "ca" means "although". Shri Narada spoke these words because he knew that the description of the Supreme Lord's glories would awaken love for Him. This verse was spoken by Shri Narada.

Anuccheda 19

Devotional service eclipses all kinds of liberation. Opening their throats, the scriptures loudly proclaim this truth. Sometimes liberation is offered by the Supreme Lord Himself, and sometimes it is given by the Lord's personal associates. In either case liberation is eclipsed by devotional service. That liberation offered by the Supreme Lord Himself is eclipsed by devotional service is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.6.17):

yasyam eva kavaya atmanam aviratam vividha-vrijina-samsara-paritapopatapyamanam anushavanam snapayantas tayaiva paraya nivritya hy apavargam atyantikam parama-purushartham api svayam asaditam no evadriyante bhagavadiyatvenaiva parisamapta-sarvarthah.

"Devotees always bathe themselves in devotional service in order to be relieved of the various tribulations of material existence. By doing this, the devotees enjoy supreme bliss, and liberation personified comes to serve them. Nonetheless, they do not accept that service, even if it is offered by the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself. For the devotees, liberation (mukti) is very unimportant because, having attained the Lord's transcendental loving service, they have attained everything desirable and have transcended all material desires."*

In this passage the word "yasyam" means "devotional service, which was described in the previous paragraph". Liberation and all other kinds of good fortune follow as by-products of devotional service. This is also confirmed by the following words of Shri Narada-pancaratra:

hari-bhakti-maha-devyah
sarva mukty-adi-siddhayah bhuktayash cadbhutas tasyash cetika-vad anuvratah

"Liberation and all other perfections, as well as all kinds of wonderful enjoyments are the followers and servants of the goddess of devotional service."

Still, the devotees disdain all these offered perfections and enjoyments. This is described in the following words spoken by King Indra to Shri Vritra Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.12.22):

yasya bhaktir bhagavati
harau nihshreyaseshvare vikridato 'mritambhodhau
kim kshudraih khatakodakaih

"A person fixed in the devotional service of the Supreme Lord, Hari, the Lord of the highest auspiciousness, swims in the ocean of nectar. For him, what is the use of water in small ditches?"*

The verse quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 20

That devotional service eclipses the liberated attained by serving great devotees and by hearing the descriptions of the Lord's glories is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.87.21):

duravagamatma-tattva-nigamaya tavatta-tanosh carita-mahimamritabdhi-parivarta-parishramanah na parilashanti kecid apavargam apishvara te carana-saroja-hamsa-kula-sanga-vishrishta-grihah

"Dear Lord, it is very difficult to understand spiritual knowledge. Your appearance here, just as You are, is to explain to us this most difficult subject of knowledge of the spirit. As such, Your devotees who have left their domestic comforts to associate with the liberated acaryas (teachers) are now fully merged in the devotional service of Your Lordship, and thus they do not care for any so-called liberation."*

In this verse the words "atma-tattvam" mean "the truth of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, whose form is eternal and full of knowledge and bliss, "nigama" means "knowledge", "atta-tanoh" means "whose form is manifest", "pari" means "for renouncing", "carita-mahamritabdheh parivarta" means "by diving into the nectar of Your pastimes, they become free of all fatigue", "carana-saroja-hamsanam" means "the great souls like Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami", "kulani" means "the disciples and granddisciples", "sanga-vishrishta" means because of that association they have renounced their homes", and "apavargam na parilashanti" means "Because they are like swans at the lotus flowers of Your feet, they do not desire even liberation". What more need be said of these great souls? In this way the meaning of this verse is explained. This verse was spoken by the Personified Vedas.

In this way devotional service eclipses even the liberation attained by serving the Lord and also the liberation attained by chanting and hearing the Lord's glories. This has already been discussed in the Bhakti-sandarbha, where Lord Kapiladeva was quoted as saying Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.25.24):

naikatmatam me sprihayanti kecit. . .

"A pure devotee, who is attached to the activities of devotional service and who always engages in the service of My lotus feet, never desires to become one with Me. Such a devotee, who is unflinchingly engaged, always glorifies My pastimes and activities."*

In this verse the word "ekatmatam" means either "the liberation of merging into the impersonal Brahman" or "the liberation of merging into the Supreme Personality of Godhead". That devotional service eclipses even the liberation attained by serving the Lord is affirmed by Lord Vishnu Himself in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.4.67):

mat-sevaya pratitam te. . .

"My devotees, who are always satisfied to be engaged in My loving service, are not interested even in the four principles of liberation (salokya, sarupya, samipya, and sarshti), although these are automatically achieved by their service. What then is to be said of such perishable happiness as elevation to the higher planetary systems?"*

This is also affirmed by Lord Kapiladeva in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.29.13):

salokya-sarshti. . .

"A pure devotee does not accept any kind of liberation-salokya, sarshti, samipya, sarupya, or ekatva- even though they are offered by the Supreme Personality of Godhead."*

In this way the scriptures say that liberation is to be rejected, as the other goals of life are also. In this way it is seen that all these goals are eclipsed by devotional service. That ordinary liberation is eclipsed by devotional service is affirmed by these words previously quoted in Bhakti-sandarbhā and other places (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.20.34):

na kincit sadhavo dhīrah. . .

"My dear Uddhava, the devotees who have completely taken shelter of My service are so steadfast in devotional service that they have no other desire. Even if they are offered the four kinds of spiritual opulences, they will refuse to accept them. So what to speak of their desiring anything within this material world!"*

This truth is also affirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (12.10.6):

naiveccchaty ashishah kvapi brahmarshir moksham apy uta bhaktim param bhagavati
labdhavan purushe 'vyaye

"My dear Devi, this great brahmana sage Markandeya has attained unflinching faith and devotion unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and as such he does not aspire after any benedictions, including liberation from the material world."*

Liberation is also eclipsed by attachment to the Lord, an attachment that frees one from the material pleasures and sufferings destined by one's past karma. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.17.28):

narayana-parah sarve
na kutashcana bibhyati svargapavarga-narakeshv
api tulyartha-darshinah

"Devotees solely engaged in the devotional service of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Narayana, never fear any condition of life. For them, the heavenly planets, liberation, and the hellish planets are all the same, for such devotees are interested only in the service of the Lord."*

Because their only goal is to attain the Supreme Personality of Godhead, these devotees see every place in the material world, from Svargaloka down to the lower worlds, as equally abominable. In this way they see with equal vision. This verse was spoken by Lord Shiva to Goddess Durga.

Anuccheda 22

Liberation is also eclipsed by the intense longing to serve the feet of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.4.15):

ko nv isha te pada-saroja-bhajam
sudurlabho 'rtheshu caturshv apiha
tathapi naham pravrinomi bhuman
bhavat-padambhoja-nishevanotsukah

"O Lord, devotees who engage in the transcendental loving service of Your lotus feet have no difficulty in achieving anything within the realm of the four principles of religiosity, economic development, sense gratification, and liberation. But, O great one, as far as I am concerned, I have preferred only to engage in the loving service of Your lotus feet."*

In this verse the word "isha" means "O Supreme Personality of Godhead". This verse was spoken by Shri Uddhava to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 23

Liberation is also eclipsed by the desire to worship the Lord by offering everything to Him. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.14.14):

na parameshthyam na mahendra-dhishnyam
na sarvabhaumam na rasadhipatyam
na yoga-siddhir apunar-bhavam va
mayy arpitatmecchatī mad vinanyat

"My dear Uddhava, a person whose consciousness is completely absorbed in My thought and activities does not aspire to occupy the post of Brahma, or the post of Indra, or the post of lordship over the planets, or the eight kinds of mystic perfections, or even liberation itself."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"Here the word 'rasadhipatyam' means 'lordship over Patalaloka and the other lower worlds', 'apunar-bhavam' means 'liberation', 'mad-vina anyan icchati' means 'he does not desire anything but Me' The meaning here is 'I am most dear to him'. That is the meaning."

Here the word "sarvabhaumam" means "a great kingdom, like that of Maharaja Priyavrata and other great kings". In this verse the rulership of four planets, beginning with Brahmaloṁka (parameshthya) and going down from there to lesser worlds, is described. If the rulership of Brahmaloṁka is rejected here, then what need be said about the rulership of other, lesser worlds? Liberation and yogic powers are also rejected here. Devotional service is superior to them both. This verse was spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 24

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.11.25):

na naka-prishtham na ca parameshthyam
na sarvabhaumam na rasadhipatyam
na yoga-siddhir apunar-bhavam va
samanjasa tva virahayya kankshe

"O my Lord, source of all opportunities, I do not desire to enjoy in Dhruvaloka, the heavenly planets, or the planet where Lord Brahma resides, nor do I want to be the supreme ruler of all the earthly planets or the lower planetary systems. I do not desire to be master of the powers of mystic yoga, nor do I want liberation if I have to give up Your lotus feet."*

Here the word "naka-prishtham" means "Dhruvaloka". If Dhruvaloka is rejected, then what need be said about the four other worlds described in the previous verse quoted here. Those four worlds are all inferior to Dhruvaloka. Dhruvaloka is superior because it is near the spiritual world of Lord Vishnu. This verse was spoken by Shri Vritra.

Anuccheda 25

That liberation is also eclipsed by attaining close association with the Lord is confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.37):

na naka-prishtham na ca parameshthyam
na sarvabhaumam na rasadhipatyam
na yoga-siddhir apunar-bhavam va vanchanti yat-pada-rajah-prapannah

"Dear Lord, the dust of Your lotus feet is very wonderful. Any person who is fortunate enough to achieve this dust does not care for heavenly planets, lordship over all the planetary systems, the mystic perfections of yoga, or even liberation from material existence."*

This verse says: "He does not care for heavenly planets, what to speak of lordship over Brahmaloaka, what to speak of lordship over Patalaloka." In the second half of this stanza the word "va" (or) shows the relationship of all these. There the word "pada-rajah" (the dust of Your lotus feet) indicates close devotional association with the Lord. This verse was spoken by the Nagapatnis to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 26

Liberation is also eclipsed by the activities of chanting the glories of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.6.25):

tushte ca tatra kim alabhyam ananta adye kim tair guna-vyatikarad iha ye sva-siddhah dharmadayah kim agunena ca kankshitena saram jusham caranayor upagayatam nah

"Nothing is unobtainable for devotees who have satisfied the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is the cause of all causes, the original source of everything. The Lord is the reservoir of unlimited spiritual qualities. For devotees, therefore, who are transcendental to the modes of material nature, what is the use of following the principles of religion, economic development, sense gratification, and liberation, which are all automatically obtainable under the influence of the modes of nature? We devotees always glorify the lotus feet of the Lord, and therefore we need not ask for anything in terms of dharma, kama, artha, and moksha."*

In this verse the word "agunena" means "by liberation", and "saram-jusham" means "of the saintly devotees who taste the sweetness of glorifying the Lord". This verse was spoken by Shri Prahlada to the sons of the demons.

Anuccheda 27

Liberation is also eclipsed by hearing the glories of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is confirmed by the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.20.23-24):

varan vibho tvad varadeshvarad budhah katham vrinite guna-vikriyatmanam ye narakanam api santi dehinam tan isha kaivalya-pate vrine na ca

"My dear Lord, You are the best of the demigods who can offer benedictions. Why, therefore, should any learned person ask You for benedictions meant for living entities bewildered by the modes of material nature? Such benedictions are available automatically, even in the lives of the living entities suffering in hellish conditions. My dear Lord, You can certainly bestow merging into Your existence, but I do not wish to have such a benediction.*

na kamaye natha tad apy aham kvacin na yatra yushmac-caranambujasavah mahattamantar-hridayan mukha-cyuto vidhatsva karnayutam esha me varah

"My dear Lord, I therefore do not wish to have the benediction of merging into Your existence, a benediction where there is no existence of the nectarean beverage of Your lotus feet. I want the benediction of at least one million ears, for thus I may be able to hear about the glories of Your lotus feet from the mouths of Your pure devotees."*

In this verse the words "tad api" mean "even liberation". These verses were spoken by King Prithu to Lord Vishnu.

Anuccheda 28

Liberation is also eclipsed by the desire to become a servant of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is confirmed by the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.14.44):

yo dustyajan kshiti-suta-svajanartha-daran prarthyam shriyam sura-varaih sadayavalokam naicchan nripas tad-ucitam mahatam madhudvitsevanurakta-manasam abhavo 'pi phalguh

"My dear king, the activities of Bharata Maharaja are wonderful. He gave up everything difficult for others to give up. He gave up his kingdom, his wife, and his family. His opulence was so great that even the demigods envied it, yet he gave it up. It was quite befitting a great personality like him to be a great devotee. He could renounce everything because he was so attracted to the beauty, opulence, reputation, knowledge, strength, and renunciation of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krishna. Krishna is so attractive that one can give up all desirable things for His sake. Indeed, even liberation is considered insignificant for those whose minds are attracted to the loving service of the Lord."*

In this verse the word "yah" (who) refers to Rishabhadeva's son Bharata. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 29

Liberation is also eclipsed by the desire to serve the Lord by becoming a demigod and ruling a planet on the Lord's behalf. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.8.42):

pratyanitah parama bhavata trayata nah sva-bhaga daityakrantam hridaya-kamalam tad-griham pratyabodhi kala-grastam kiyad idam aho natha shushrushatam te muktis tesham na hi bahumata narasimhaparaih kim

"O Supreme Lord, You are our deliverer and protector. Our shares of sacrifice, which are actually Yours, have been recovered from the demon by You. Because the demoniac king Hiranyakashipu was most fearsome, our hearts, which are Your permanent abode, were all overtaken by him. Now, by Your presence, the gloom and darkness in our hearts have been dissipated. O Lord, for those who always engage in Your service, which is more exalted than liberation, all material opulence is insignificant. They do not even care for liberation, not to speak of the benefits of kama, artha, and dharma."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the demigod Indra to Lord Nrsimha.

Anuccheda 30

Liberation is also eclipsed by associating with great devotees of the Lord. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.24.57):

kshanardhenapi tulaye
na svargam napunar-bhavam
bhagavat-sangi-sangasya
martyanam kim utashishah

"If one by chance associates with a devotee, even for a fraction of a moment, he no longer is subject to attraction by the results of karma or jnana. What interest, then, can he have in the benedictions of the demigods, who are subject to the laws of birth and death?"*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"A person who has attained the feet of a great devotee becomes free of all fear. What remains to be attained by him? Association with a devotee of the Lord dances on the heads of all other goals of life."

This verse was spoken by Lord Shiva to the Pracetas.

Anuccheda 31

This is also confirmed by the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.30.33-34):

yavat te mayaya sprishta bhramama iha karmabhih
tavat bhavat-prasanganam sangah syan no bhava bhava

"Dear Lord, as long as we have to remain within this material world due to our material contamination and wander from one type of body to another and from one planet to another, we pray that we may associate with those who are engaged in discussing Your pastimes. We pray for this benediction life after life, in different bodily forms and on different planets.*

tulayama lavenapi
bhagavat-sangi. . .

"Even a moment's association with a pure devotee cannot be compared to being transferred to heavenly planets, or even merging into the Brahman effulgence in complete liberation. For living entities who are destined to give up the body and die, association with pure devotees is the highest benediction."*

Afraid that they will turn their faces away from the Lord and become non-devotees, the devotees offer this prayer, to protect themselves from becoming non-devotees. By associating with devotees, they save themselves from becoming non-devotees. In the second of these verses is described the limitless glory of the devotees. In the first of these verses the devotees say they wish to love the lotus feet of the Lord and stay near them. The devotees do not desire samipya-mukti or any other kind of liberation. These two verses were spoken by the Pracetas to the eight-armed Purusha-avatara.

Anuccheda 32

Similar verses are seen in many different places in the scriptures. That devotional service is the highest attainment is also confirmed in the following words from the Brihat-tantra, words quoted by Shrila Madhvacarya in his commentary:

yatha shrir nitya-muktapi prapta-kamapi sarvada upaste nityasho vishnum
evam bhakto bhaved api

"Even though she is eternally liberated, and even though her every desire is at once fulfilled, Goddess Lakshmi still worships Lord Vishnu eternally. The devotees also act in that way."

In the Brahma-vaivarta Purana it is said:

na hraso na ca vriddhir va muktanam vidyate kvacit vidvat-pratyaksha-siddhatvat karanabhavato 'numa

"For the liberated souls there is not improvement and no diminution. Because their knowledge is perfect, they are free from cause and effect.

harer upasana catra sadaiva sukha-rupini na ca sadhana-bhuta sa
siddhir evatra sa yatah

"In the spiritual world they have forms of bliss. There they worship Lord Hari eternally. They do not make gradual advancement in devotional service, for their devotion is always perfect."

In the Sauparna-shruti it is said:

sarvadaitam upasita, yavad vimuktir mukta hy etam upasate

"The liberated souls worship Lord Hari eternally. The goddess of liberation herself worships Lord Hari."

In his Bharata-tatparya commentary on Mahabharata, Shrila Madhvacarya quotes these words from another place in the Shruti-shastra:

muktanam pai bhaktir hi paramananda-rupini

"The liberated souls also engage in devotional service. It brings them great bliss."

This truth is also confirmed by the following words of the Gautamiya Tantra:

evam diksham cared yas tu purusho vita-kalmashah sa loke vartamano 'pi
jivan-muktah pramodate

"A sinless person initiated by a bona-fide spiritual master becomes liberated. Even as he lives in the material world he is both liberated and happy.

uditakritir anandah sarvatra sama-darshakah purnahanta-mayi sakshad
bhaktih syat prema-lakshana

"He becomes bliss personified. He sees with equal vision. Retaining his individual identity, he serves the Lord with great love and devotion."

The equal vision mentioned here means that the devotees are equal in both loss and gain. In the Gautamiya Tantra the sages ask this question:

katham bhaktir bhavet premna jivan-muktasya narada jivan-mukta-shariranam
cit-satta-nihspriha yatah virakteh karanam bhaktih
sa tu muktes tu sadhanam

"Why would a soul liberated in this life serve the Supreme Lord with love and devotion? The souls already liberated in this life have already attained eternal liberated life. Therefore they have no material desires. Devotional service is only a means to attain an end, to attain renunciation, or to attain liberation."

To this question Shri Narada gives the following answer:

bhadra-mukta bhavadbhish ca muktis turya parat para niraham yatra cit-satta
turya sa muktir ucyate

"You are all perfectly liberated. Liberation is beyond the material world. It is higher than the highest. Spiritual existence where individual identity no longer exists is called liberation.

purnahanta-mayi bhaktis turyatita nigadyate krishna-dhamamayam brahma
kvacit kutrapi bhasate

"However, individual identity continues to exist in devotional service, which is said to be above even liberation. The impersonal Brahman effulgence that is the goal of liberation is only the effulgence of Lord Krishna's limbs.

nirvijendriya-gam tat tu
atma-stham kevalam sukham krishnas tu paripurnatma sarvatra sukha-rupakah bhakti-vritti-kritabhyasat
tat-kshanad gocari-kritah

"Spiritual bliss is perceived only by spiritual senses. Lord Krishna is the original form of the Supreme. He is always full of bliss. By regularly serving Him with devotion one can come to see Him directly."

Even the impersonalist philosophers accept the supreme position of the Lord's personal form. In the Nrisimha-tapani Upanishad (2.4) it is said:

yam vai sarve deva amananti mumukshavo brahma-vadinash ca

"The demigods, the brahmavadis, and the jnanis who long for liberation all bow down before the Supreme Personality of Godhead."

In his commentary on that verse Shri Shankaracarya says:

yatha mukta api lilaya vigraham kritva bhagavantam bhajante

"The liberated souls attain spiritual bodies, worship the Supreme Personality of Godhead and participate in His pastimes."

The word "brahma-vadinah" here means "liberated souls". This is supported by these words of Panini (Ashtadhyayi 7.2.7):

vada sthairye

That the impersonalist jnanis eventually become devotees is also confirmed by these words (Bhagavad-gita 7.17):

tesham jnani nitya-yukta
eka-bhaktir vishishyate

"Of these, the wise one who is in full knowledge in union with Me through pure devotional service is the best."*

That the mercy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the highest attainment is confirmed by the following words of the Narada-pancaratra, Jitanta-stotra:

moksha-salokya-sarupyan
prarthaye na dharadhara icchami hi maha-bhaga
karunyam tava suvrata

"O Lord, O maintainer of the worlds, I do not pray for liberation, or to live on Your planet, or to have a form like Your form. I wish only for Your mercy."

That devotional service eclipses all other goals of life is confirmed by these words of Shri Hayashirsha-pancaratra, Shri Narayana-vyuha-stava:

na dharmam kamam artham va moksham va varadeshvara prarthaye tava padabje
dasyam evabhikamaye

"O Supreme Personality of Godhead, O giver of boons, I do not pray for piety, sense pleasure, or wealth. I wish only service to Your feet."

punah punar varan ditsur vishnur muktim na yacitah bhaktir eva vrita yena
prahladam tam namamy aham

"I offer my respectful obeisances to Shri Prahlada. Even though Lord Vishnu again and again offered boons to him, he never asked for liberation. The boons he chose were only devotional service."

yadricchaya labdham api vishnor dasharathes tu yah naicchan moksam vina dasyam tasmai hanumate namah

"I offer my respectful obeisances to Shri Hanuman. Even though Lord Ramacandra offered him liberation, he would not accept it without devotional service."

In the Jitanta-stotra it is also said:

dharmartha-kama-moksheshu neccha mama kadacana
tvat-pada-pankajasyadho

jivitam diyatam mama

"O Lord, never I will wish for material piety, sense pleasure, or money. Please give me only a place under Your lotus feet."

It is not surprising that love for the Supreme Lord eclipses all other goals of life. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.18.12) it is said:

yasyasti bhaktir bhagavaty akincana
sarvair gunais tatra samasate surah

"All the demigods and their exalted qualities, such as religion, knowledge, and renunciation, become manifest in the body of one who has developed unalloyed devotion for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Vasudeva."*

Devotional service brings the virtue of compassion. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.21.12) King Rantideva says:

na kamaye 'ham gatim ishvarat param
ashtarddhi-yuktam apunar-bhavam va artim prapadye 'khila-deha-bhajam antah-sthito yena bhavanty aduhkhah

"I do not pray to the Supreme Personality of Godhead for the eight perfections of mystic yoga, nor for salvation from repeated birth and death. I want only to stay among all the living entities and suffer all distresses on their behalf, so that they may be freed from suffering."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. Because he was a great hero of compassion (daya-vira), King Rantideva would not abandon the people in general. Neither did he consider who was worthy and who was not worthy to receive charity from him. In the same way, persons who are heroes of charity (dana-vira), persons who, because of their earnest love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, have renounced even liberation, have nothing to fear. Such persons, persons like Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami, persons who know the truth, persons who have faith that love for the Supreme Lord is the highest goal of life, are described in this verse. Such persons choose love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead over any kind of liberation. This verse was spoken by King Rantideva.

Anuccheda 33

Love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is ultimate result obtained by following the spiritual practices described in the Vedas. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.9.41):

purtena tapasa yajnair
danair yoga-samadhina
raddham nihshreyasam pumsam

"It is the opinion of expert transcendentalists that the ultimate goal of performing all traditional good works, penances, sacrifices, charities, mystic activities, trances, etc. is to invoke My satisfaction."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"In this verse the Supreme Personality of Godhead says: `Nothing is more important than satisfying Me.' He says: `It is the opinion of expert transcendentalists (tattvavin-matam) that the ultimate goal (raddham nihshreyasam) of performing all traditional good works (beginning with purta) is to invoke My satisfaction (mat-pritih)'."

The meaning here is that persons who are not great transcendentalists, persons who do not know the real truth, think other results are more important than satisfying the Supreme Personality of Godhead. These persons think devotional service is only a tool that one uses to perform these other activities.

Anuccheda 34

What is the opinion of the advanced transcendentalists, the persons who know the real truth? The Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself explains (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.9.42):

aham atmatamanam dhatah preshthah san preyasam api ato mayi ratim kuryad
dehadir yat-krite priyah

"I am the Supersoul of every individual. I am the supreme director and the dearest. People are wrongly attached to the gross and subtle bodies, but they should be attached to Me only."*

In this verse the Supreme Personality of Godhead says: "I (aham) am the Supersoul (atma). I am like the sun, and the of individual souls (atmanam), are like the rays of My sunlight."

This is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.55):

krishnam enam avehi tvam
atmanam akhilatmanam

"You should know Krishna as the original soul of all atmas (living entities)."

in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.9.42.the Supreme Personality of Godhead declares: "I am supremely pure. I am the dearest (preshtha) of all dear things (preyasam). People are wrongly attached to the gross and subtle bodies (krite dehadibhir priyah), but they should be attached to Me only." These words mean: "They who have the fault of not understanding Me do not do everything for Me." This verse was spoken by Shri Garbhodakashayi Vishnu to the demigod Brahma.

From this it may be understood that pure love (shuddha-priti) for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the best of all spiritual attainments. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.14.3-5):

rajobhih sama-sankhyatah
parhavair iha jantavah tesham ye kecanehante
shreyo vai manujadayah

"In this material world there are as many living entities as atoms. Among these living entities, a very few are human beings, and among them few are interested in following religious principles.*

prayo mumukshavas tesham kecanaiva dvijottama mumukshunam sahasreshu
kecin mucyeta sidhyati

"O best of the brahamnas, Shukadeva Gosvami, out of many persons who follow religious principles, only a few desire liberation from the material world. among many thousands who desire liberation, one may actually achieve liberation, giving up material attachment to society, friendship, love, county, home, wife, and children. And among many thousands of such liberated persons, one who can understand the true meaning of liberation is very rare.*

muktanam api siddhanam
narayana-parayanah
sudurlabhah prashantatma
kotishv api maha-mune

"O great sage, among many millions who are liberated and perfect in knowledge of liberation, one may be a devotee of Lord Narayana, or Krishna. Such devotees, who are fully peaceful, are very rare."*

In these verses the word "sreyah" means "persons who are interested in following religious principles so they will be happy in the next life, are better", and "mucyeta" means "they beocme liberated even while living in the material world". If after they attain liberation, such souls do not commit offenses to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, they attain the highest, the final liberation. The liberated sousl who commit offenses to the Supreme Personality of Godhead are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.2.32):

aruhy kricchrena param padam tatah
patanty adho 'nadrita-yushmad-anghrayah

"O lotus-eyed one, those who think they are liberated in this life but who are without devotional service to You are of impure intelligence. Although they accept severe austerities and penances to rise to the spiritual position, to impersonal Brahman realization, they fall down again because they neglect to worship Your lotus feet."*

These persons were also described in these words of the scriptures quoted previously in Bhakti-sandarbha (110-120):

jivan-muktah prapadyante
punah samsara-vasanam yady acintya-maha-shaktau bhagavarty aparadhinah

"Even liberated souls will again take birth in the world of birth and death if they offend the Supreme Personality of Godhead, whose great powers are beyond all understanding."

nanuvrajati yo mohad vrajantam parameshvaram
jnanagni-dagdha-karmapi
sa bhaved brahma-rakshasah

"Even if his past karma is burned to ashes by spiritual knowledge, a person who does not worship the Supreme Personality of Godhead when He arrives will take birth as a brahma-rakshasa demon."

Among many millions of liberated souls, one exalted devotee of the Lord is rare. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.21):

nayam sukhapo bhagavan. . .

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is known as the son of Yashoda and Nanda Maharaja, is never so completely known to the yogis and speculators. But He is easily available to His devotees."*

It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.6.18):

muktim dadati karhicit sma na bhakti-yogam

"Those engaged in getting the Lord's favor attain liberation from the Lord very easily, but He does not very easily give the opportunity to render direct service unto Him."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.5) it is said:

narayana-parayanah sudurlabhah

"O great sage, among many millions who are liberated and perfect in knowledge of liberation, one may be a

Such devotees are peaceful (prashantatma) because they have full faith in the Shri Supreme Personality of Godhead.

This is confirmed in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.19.36), where the Supreme Lord declares:

shamo man-nishthata buddheh

"Faith in Me is peacefulness of the intelligence."

The verses quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda were spoken by King Parikshit to Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 36

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.1.7):

prayena munayo rajan
nivratta vidhi-shedhatah nairgunya-stha ramante sma gunanukathane hareh

"O King Parikshit, mainly the topmost transcendentalists, who are above the regulative principles and restrictions, take pleasure in describing the glories of the Lord."*

In these words the devotional service performed by the great souls is described. The position of the non-devotees is criticized in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.3.24):

tad ashma-saram hridayam batedam

"Certainly that heart is steel-framed which, in spite of one's chanting the holy name of the Lord with concentration, does not change when ecstasy takes place, tears fill the eyes, and the hairs stand on end."*

The devotees are also praised in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.13.23):

tathapi brumahe prashnams
tava rajan yatha-shrutam sambhashaniyo hi bhavan

atmanah shuddhim icchata

"My dear king, although you know everything, you have posed some questions, which I shall try to answer according to what I have learned by hearing from authorities. I cannot remain silent in this regard, for a personality like you is just fit to be spoken to by one who desires self-purification."*

In this verse the word "shuddhim" means "the desire to attain pure devotional service". This verse was spoken by Lord Dattatreya to Shri Prahlada.

Anuccheda 37

The devotees are also praised in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.14.24):

vag gadagada dravate yasya cittam rudaty abhikshnam hasati kvacic ca vilajja udgayati nrityate ca mad-bhakti-yukto bhuvanam punati

"A devotee whose voice becomes choked, whose heart melts, who weeps again and again, who becomes embarrassed, and who sometimes laughs, sings, and dances, purifies the whole world."

The meaning of this verse is clear.

Anuccheda 38

The Supreme Lord Himself praises the devotees in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.14.16):

nirapeksham munim shantam nirvairam sama-darshanam anuvrajamy aham nityam
puyety anghri-renubhih

"I follow a devotee who is peaceful and desireless, who always thinks of Me, who sees everyone equally, and who thinks of no one as his enemy. I follow him so I may become purified by the dust of his feet."

In this verse the Supreme Lord says: "I follow a pure devotee (muni), a devotee like Shri Narada and others, a devotee who is peaceful (shantam) and desireless (nirapeksham), who does not think some things should be accepted and others should be rejected (sama-darshanam), and who thinks of no one as his enemy (nirvairam)."

In this verse the Supreme Lord says: "I am devoted to the saintly persons who have sincere devotion to Me." Why does the Lord follow such devotees. The Lord says: "I follow them so I may become absolved (puyeya) of the debt I owe them for their devotion to Me". That is the meaning here. this verse was spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 39

The devotees are again praised in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.4.36):

gunair aham asankhyeyair
mahatmyam tasya sucyate
vasudeve bhagavati
yasya naisargiki ratih

"Who could list the innumerable transcendental qualities of Prahlada Maharaja? He had unflinching faith in Vasudeva, Lord Krishna (the son of Vasudeva), and unalloyed devotion to Him. His attachment to Lord Krishna was natural because of His previous devotional service. Although his good qualities cannot be enumerated, they prove that he was a great soul (mahatma)."*

The word "tasya" (of him) in this verse refers to Shri Prahlada. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 40

All of this proves that pure love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the highest goal of life. This truth is also confirmed by this prose passage of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.9.39):

atha ha vava tava mahimamrita-rasa-samudra-viprusha sakrid avalidhaya sva-manasi nishyandamananavarata-sukhena vismarita-drishta-shruta-vishaya-sukha-leshabhasah parama-bhagavata ekantino bhagavati sarva-bhuta-priya-suhridi sarvatmani nitaram nirantaram nirvrita-manasah katham u ha va ete madhumanthana punah svartha-kushala hy atma-priya-suhridah sadhavas tvac-caranambujanusevam vishrijati na yatra punar ayam samsara-paryavartah

"Therefore, O killer of the Madhu demon, incessant transcendental bliss flows in the minds of those who have even once tasted but a drop of the nectar from the ocean of Your glories. Such exalted devotees forget the tiny reflection of so-called material happiness produced from the material senses of sight and sound. Free from all desires, such devotees are the real friends of all living entities. Offering their minds unto You, and enjoying transcendental bliss, they are expert in achieving the real goal of life. O Lord, You are the soul and dear friend of such devotees, who never need return to this material world. How could they give up engagement in Your devotional service?"*

Liberation is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.15.35):

cittam brahma-sukha-sprishtam

"When one's consciousness is uncontaminated by material lusty desires, it becomes calm and peaceful in all activities, for one is situated in eternal blissful life. Once situated on that platform, one does not return to materialistic activities."*

These words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam say: "O Lord, You are the dear friend of the individual spirit souls". The verse quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda was spoken by the demigods to the Supreme Personality of Godhead

Anuccheda 41

Liberation is again described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.5.18-19):

tasyaiva hetoh prayateta kovindo na labhyate yad bhramatam upary adhah tal labhyate duhkavad anyatah sukham kalena sarvatra gabhira-ramhasa

"Persons who are actually intelligent and philosophically inclined should endeavor only for that purposeful end which is not obtainable even by wandering from the topmost planet (Brahmaloka) to the lowest planet (Patala). As far as happiness derived from sense enjoyment is concerned, it can be obtained automatically in course of time, just as in the course of time we obtain miseries even though we do not desire them."*

na vai jano jatu kathanca navrajen mukunda-sevy anyavad anga samshritim smaran mukundanghry-upaguhnam punar
vihatum icchen na rasa-graho janah

"My dear Vyasa, even though a devotee of Lord Krishna sometimes falls down somehow or other, he certainly does not undergo material existence like others (fruitive workers, etc.) because a person who has once relished the taste of the lotus feet of the Lord can do nothing but remember that ecstasy again and again."*

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shri Narada.

Anuccheda 42

Devotional service and liberation are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.20.29):

bhajanty atha tvam ata eva sadhavo

vyudasta-maya-guna-vibhramodayam bhavat-padanusmaranad rite satam nimittam anyad bhagavan na vidmahe

"Great saintly persons who are always liberated take to Your devotional service because only by devotional service can one be relieved from the illusions of material existence. O my Lord, there is no reason for the liberated souls to take shelter at Your lotus feet except that such souls are constantly thinking of Your feet."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"This verse says: `O Supreme Personality of Godhead, because You are kind and affectionate to the poor and fallen, the devotees (sadhavah), who have no material desires, worship (bhajanti) You (tvam), who are attained by those who have (atha turned away from impersonal speculations.' What is the Supreme Personality of Godhead like? He is free of all bewildered material activities inspired by the mode of material nature. Why do the devotees worship the Supreme Personality of Godhead? This verse explains: `O Lord, the devotees do not know anything but Your feet' (bhavat-padanusmaranad anyan na vidmahe)."

This verse was spoken by King Prithu to Lord Vishnu.

Anuccheda 43

In this way it is seen that the devotees desire only love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. They reject everything else. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.39.1-2):

sukhopavishtah paryanke
rama-krishnoru-manitah
lebhe manorathan sarvan
pathi yan sa cakara ha

kim alabhyam bhagavati prasanne shri-niketane tathapi tat-para rajan
na hi vanchanti kincana

"Akrura was warmly received by Lord Krishna and Nanda Maharaja and offered a resting place for the night. In the meantime the two brothers Balarama and Krishna went to take Their supper. Akrura sat on his bed and began to reflect that all the desires which he had anticipated while coming from Mathura to Vrindavana had been fulfilled. Lord Krishna is the husband of the goddess of fortune. Being pleased with His pure devotee, He can offer whatever the devotee desires. But the pure devotee does not ask anything from the Lord for his personal benefit."*

The word "sah" (he) in this verse refers to Akrura. The word "yan" (them) in this verse is explained in these words spoken by Akrura Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.38.3):

kim mayacaritam bhadram
kim taptam paramam tapah kim vathapy arhate dattam
yad drakshyamy adya keshavam

"What pious deeds did I do? What gerat austerities did I perform? What charity did I give, that today I will see Lord Krishna?"

In these words it is seen that the devotees desire only devotional service. Here someone may object: "Why do the devotees not pray for liberation and other desirable things?" This protest is answered in this verse by the words "kim alabhyam" (What cannot be attained when when has satisfied Lord Krishna?). These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 44

Pure love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is again described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.19.16):

punash ca bhuyad bhagavaty anante ratih prasangash ca tad-ashrayeshu mahatsu yam yam upayami shrishtim maitry astu sarvatra namo dvijebhyah

"Again, offering obeisances unto all you brahmanas, I pray that if I should again take my birth in the material world I will have complete attachment to the unlimited Lord Krishna, association with His devotees, and friendly relations with all living beings."*

In this verse the word "shrishtim" means "birth, and "sarvatra maitrim" means "without casting a cruel glance on anyone". Being especially respectful to the brahmanas, he says here "namah" (I offer my respectful obeisances). This verse was spojen by King Parikshit.

Anuccheda 45

That the devotees desire only to have love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.9.36):

na vai mukundasya padaravindayo rajo-jushas tata bhavadrisha janah vanchanti tad-dasyam rite 'rtham atmano yadricchaya labdha-manah-samriddhayah

"My dear Vidura, persons like you, who are pure devotees of the lotus feet of Mukunda (the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who can offer liberation) and who are always attached to the honey of His lotus feet, are always satisfied in serving at the lotus feet of the Lord. In any condition of life such persons remain satisfied, and thus they never ask the Lord for material prosperity."*

The words "yadrcchaya labdha-manah samrddhayah" mean "without making any effort they attain great spiritual wealth in their hearts". the briefest merciful glance of the Lord fulfills all desires. That is the power of devotional service.

That the devotees desire only to love the Supreme Personality of Godhead is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.9.29):

naicchan mukti-pater muktim
tasmāt tapam upeyivan

"He did not demand actual liberation from the material world, but at the end of his devotional service, when the Supreme Personality of Godhead appeared before him, he was simply ashamed of the material demands he had in his mind."*

In these words spoken by Dhruva Maharaja the word "mukti" refers to devotional service. This interpretation of the word "mukti" is confirmed by these words of the scriptures:

vishnor anucaratvam hi
moksham ahur man;ishinah

"The wise philosophers affirm that devotional service to Lord Vishnu is true liberation."

The verse quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda was spoken by Shri Maitreya.

Anuccheda 46

Desires other than the desire to love the Supreme Personality of Godhead are criticized in the following two prayers of a pure devotee, prayers recorded in the following five prose paragraphs of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.24.23.-26):

yat tad bhagavatanadhigatanyopayena yacna-cchalenapahrīta-sva-sharīraveshita-loka-trayo varuna-pashaish ca sampratimukto giri-daryam capaviddha iti hovaca.

"When the Supreme Personality of Godhead could see no other means of taking everything away from Bali Maharaja, He adopted the trick of begging from him and took away all the three worlds. Thus only his body was left, but the Lord was still not satisfied. He arrested Bali Maharaja, bound him with the ropes of Varuna, and threw him in a cave in a mountain. Nevertheless, although all his property was taken and he was thrown into a cave, Bali Maharaja was such a great devotee that he spoke as follows.*

nunam batayam bhagavan artheshu na nishnato yo 'sav indro yasya sacivo mantraya vrita ekantato brihaspatis tam atihaya svayam upendrenatmanam ayacatatmanash cashisho no eva tad-dasyam ati-gambhira-vayasah kalasya manvantara-parivrittam kiyal loka-trayam idam.

"Alas, how pitiable it is for Indra, the king of heaven, that although he is very learned and powerful and although he chose Brihaspati as his prime minister to instruct him, he is completely ignorant concerning spiritual advancement. Brhaspati is also unintelligent because he did not properly instruct his disciple Indra. Lord Vamanadeva was standing at Indra's door, but King Indra instead of begging Him for an opportunity to render transcendental loving service, engaged him in asking me for alms to gain the three worlds for his sense gratification. Sovereignty over the three worlds is very insignificant because whatever material opulence one may possess lasts only for an age of Manu, which is but a tiny fraction of endless time.*

yasyanudasyam evasmat-pitamahah kila vavre na tu sva-pitryam yad utakutobhayam padam diyamanam bhagavatah param iti bhagavatoparate khalu sva-pitari.

"Bali Maharaja said: My grandfather Prahlada Maharaja is the only person who understands his own self-interest. Upon the death of Prahlada's father, Hiranyakashipu, Lord Nrisimhadeva wanted to offer Prahlada his father's kingdom and even wanted to grant him liberation from material bondage, but Prahlada accepted neither. Liberation and material opulence, he thought, are obstacles to devotional service, and therefore such gifts are not His actual mercy. Consequently, instead of accepting the results of karma and jnana, Prahlada Maharaja simply begged the Lord for engagement in the service of His servant.*

tasya mahanubhavasyanupatham amrijita-kashayah ko vasmad-vidhah parihina-bhagavad-anugraha upajigamishatiti.

"Bali Maharaja said: Persons like us, who are still attached to material enjoyment, who are contaminated by the modes of material nature, and who lack the mercy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, cannot follow the supreme path of Prahlada Maharaja, the exalted devotee of the Lord."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"In this five paragraphs pure devotional service is described."

These words were spoken by Maharaja Bali to Lord Vamana. In these paragraphs the word "tam" (to Him_ refers to Lord Vamana. Here "atihaya" means "not desiring any other goal". Here King Bali says: "Lord Vamanadeva was standing at Indra's door, but King Indra instead of begging Him for an opportunity to render transcendental loving service, engaged him in asking me for alms to gain the three worlds for his sense gratification."*

In this passage the word "anudasyam" (serving the devotees of the Lord) is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.9.24):

naya mam nija-bhritya-parshvam

"My dear Lord, I request You to place me in touch with Your pure devotee and let me serve him as a sincere servant."*

In this passage the word "sva-pitryam" (my paternal property) refers to sovereignty over the three worlds. The phrase "yad uta akutobhayam padam" (the position of fearlessness) refers to liberation. Then Bali Maharaja says: "tan na tu vavre" (he did not accept it). Why not? Because it was something other (param) than the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavatah). Fearing that one might think in terms of the Supreme Lord's shadow potency or the Lord's partial expansions, King Bali here uses the word "bhagavatah" (the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself). The passage quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 47

The devotees are indifferent to pleasure or pain in this world. That is the proof of their purity. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.17.28):

narayana-parah sarve. . .

"Devotees solely engaged in the devotional service of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Narayana, never fear any condition of life. For them the heavenly planets, liberation, and the hellish planets are all the same, for such devotees are interested only in the service of the Lord."*

Out of kindness for His devotees, the Supreme Lord removes from them everything that has no relation to Him. The Lord throws these things far away. This is described in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (8.22.24), where the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself says:

brahman yam anugrihnam
tad-visho vidhunomy aham

"My dear Lord Brahma, because of material opulence a foolish person becomes dull-witted and mad. Thus he has no respect for anyone within the three worlds and defies even My authority. To such a person I show special favor by first taking away all his possessions."*

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead forbids his devotees from struggling to attain things that have no relation to Him is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.11.23):

traivargikayasa-vighatam asmat-
patir vidhatte purushasya shakra
tato 'numeyo bhagavat-prasado yo durlabho 'kincana-gocar'o 'nyaih

"Our Lord, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, forbids His devotees to endeavor uselessly for religion, economic development, and sense gratification. O Indra, one can thus infer how kind the Lord is. Such mercy is obtainable only by unalloyed devotees, not by persons who aspire for material gain."*

This verse means: "If an independent-minded devotee (purushasya) strives to attain some material thing in the three worlds (traivargikayasa), then the Supreme Personality of Godhead personally creates obstacles (tad-vighatam vidhatta) to prevent the devotee from attaining his desires. The word "akincana-gocara" means that if the devotee strives to attain material pleasures or non-devotional liberation, the Lord creates obstacles to stop the devotee. The word "akincana" means "pure devotee". This has already been explained in the Bhakti-sandarbha. The verse quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda was spoken by Shriman Vritra to the demigod Indra.

Anuccheda 48

If a devotee prays for material things, he wishes them only to serve the Supreme Lord. The devotee does not wish them for his own personal sense gratification. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.70.41):

yakshyati tvam makhendrena rajasuyena pandavah parameshthya-kamo nripatis
tad bhavan anumodatam

"First of all I may inform You that King Yudhishtira has all material opulences which are possible to achieve in the highest planetary system, Brahmaloaka. He has no material opulence for which to aspire, and yet he wants to perform Rajasuya sacrifices only to get Your association and to please You."*

In this verse the word "parameshthya" means "Lord Krishna, the king of Dvaraka". That the word "parameshthi" refers to Lord Krishna is confirmed by the following words describing Lord Krishna's accepting the rice brought by Sudama Vipra (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.81.10):

tavac chrir jagrihe hastam
tat-para parameshthinah

"Rukmini-devi, who is the goddess of fortune herself, checked the Lord by catching hold of His hand."*

Because "parameshthi" refers to Lord Krishna, the word "parameshthya" may be taken to mean "the opulence of Dvaraka City". Interpreted in this way, the word "parameshthya-kamah" means "desiring opulence like that of Lord Krishna Himself". He desired opulence like that of Dvaraka so Indraprastha would be a fit place for Lord Krishna to reside. He had no other desire. This truth about Maharaja Yudhishtira is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.12.6):

kim te kamah sura-sparha
mukunda-manaso dvijah
adhijahur mudam rajnah

kshudhitasya yathetare

"O brahmanas, the opulence of the king was so enchanting that the denizens of heaven aspired for it. But because he was absorbed in the service of the Lord, nothing could satisfy him except the Lord's service."*

By Lord Krishna's mercy, Maharaja Yudhishtira attained this desire. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.75.34-35):

sabhayam maya-klptayam
kvapi dharma-suto 'dhirat vrito 'nugair bandhubhish ca krishnenapi sva-cakshusha

asinah kancane sakshad asane maghavan iva parameshthya-shriya jushtah stuyamanash ca vandibhih

"Once upon a time king Yudhishtira was sitting on the golden throne in the palace constructed by the demon Maya. His four brothers and other relatives, as well as his great well-wisher, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krishna, were present and the material opulence of King Yudhishtira seemed no less than that of Lord Brahma."*

In these verses the word "sva-caksusa" (with his own eye) is an adjective referring to Lord Krishna. A person who has eyes and can see has a possession a blind man does not have. A blind man will certainly yearn to attain such a possession, the possession of having eyes that can see. If a person loses his sight, then all his possessions become useless to him. For the devotees, devotees who consider Lord Krishna their Lord and master, Lord Krishna's is their precious eyes.

Making reference to the Pandavas, Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami spoke these words to Maharaja Parikshit (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.16.20):

na va. . .
. . .ye 'dhyasanam raja-kirita-jushtam
sadyo jahur bhagavat-parshva-kamah

"O chief of all the saintly kings of the Pandu dynasty who are strictly in the line of Lord Shri Krishna! It is not at all astonishing that you give up your throne, which is decorated with the helmets of many kings, to achieve eternal association with the Supreme Personality of Godhead."*

Speaking to Lord Krishna, Shri Narada said:

tad bhavan anumodatam

"May Your Lordship be pleased."

In this way it is seen that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is pleased with His pure devotees. The Supreme Personality of Godhead personally affirmed this truth by saying (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.60.50):

yan yan kamayase kaman
mayy akamaya bhamini santi hy ekanta-bhaktayas
tava kalyani nityada

"O most beautiful Rukmini, You are My dearmost wife. I am greatly pleased to understand how much love you have for Me. Please take it for granted that no matter what ambition and desire you might have and no matter what you might expect from Me, I am always at your service."*

Here the word "akamah" means "devotional service where pure love for Lord Krishna is present and where there is no other desire." In this way "akamah" means "the desire for devotional service had nothing else". The word "akamah" is used in that way in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.3.10):

akamah sarva-kamo va. . .

"A person who has broader intelligence, whether he be full of all material desire, without any material desire, or desiring liberation, must by all means worship the Supreme whole, the Personality of Godhead."*

Devotional service with pure love for the Supreme Lord is also described by Shri Prahlada in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.10.3):

bhritya-lakshana-jijnasuh. . .

"O my worshipable Lord, because the seed of lusty desires, which is the root cause of material existence, is within the core of everyone's heart, You have sent me to this material world to exhibit the symptoms of a pure devotee.*

"Otherwise, O my Lord, O supreme instructor of the entire world, You are so kind to Your devotee that You could not induce him to do something unbeneficial for him. On the other hand, one who desires some material benefit in exchange for devotional service cannot be Your pure devotee. Indeed, he is no better than a merchant who wants profit in exchange for service."*

Therefore, in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.60.50 the words "akamaya yan yan kamayase kaman" mean "O Queen Rukmini, whatever you desire to attain the great treasure of loving devotional service to Me". Because Rukmini is Lord Krishna's eternal beloved, the eternal goddess Lakshmi, she is here addressed by the word "santi" (O eternal one).

Here the word "ekanta-bhaktayah" means "who do not desire anything for your own benefit", "kamini" means "O you who desire only to please Me", and "kalyani" means "O you who remove all obstacles to attaining the great good fortune that is devotional service". The verse quoted in the beginning of this anuccheda was spoken by Lord Krishna to Queen Rukmini.

The desire for samipya liberation is seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.16.20):

sadyo jahur bhagavat-parshva-kamah

"O chief of all the saintly kings of the Pandu dynasty who are strictly in the line of Lord Shri Krishna! It is not at all astonishing that you give up your throne, which is decorated with the helmets of many kings, to achieve eternal association with the Supreme Personality of Godhead."*

This is a very intense kind of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In this kind of love the devotee yearns to be always near the Lord. Because residence in the world of birth of death is an obstacle to that end, these devotees pray that their stay in this world be brought to an end.

This is like the love a mother or father feel for their children. When the children are far away, the parents yearn to be with them. This desire to associate with the Lord is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.9.16):

trasto 'smy aham kripana-vatsala duhsahograsamsara-cakra-kadanad grasatam pranitah baddhah sva-karmabhir ushattama te 'nghri-mulam prito 'pavarga-sharanam hvayase kada nu

"O most powerful, insurmountable Lord, who are kind to the fallen souls, I have been put into the association of demons as a result of my activities, and therefore I am very much afraid of my condition of life within this material world. When will that moment come when You will call me to the shelter of Your lotus feet, which are the ultimate goal from liberation from conditional life?"*

This verse means: "O Lord, because everything in this material world is turned away from You, this world is intolerable (duhsaha) Because the things of this world are all obstacles to devotional service to You, this world is a very fearful (ugram) place. Therefore I am very afraid (trasto 'smi) of the miserable conditions (kadanam) in this material world (samsara-cakram), conditions that are bring sufferings to the hearts of the living entities. In this world I have no power to serve You properly. That even an auspicious situation in the material world is inauspicious for devotional service is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.10.1-2):

shri-narada uvaca

bhakti-yogasya tat sarvam antarayatayarbhakah manyamano hrishikesham
smayamana uvaca ha

"The great saint Narada Muni continued: Although Prahlada Maharaja was only a boy, when he heard the benedictions offered by Lord Nrisimhadeva, he considered them impediments on the path of devotional service. Thus he smiled very mildly and spoke as follows.*

shri-prahlada uvaca

ma mam pralobhayotpattya saktam kameshu tair varaih tat-sanga-bhito nirvinno
mumukshus tvam upashritah

"Prahlada Maharaja said: My dear Lord, O Supreme Personality of Godhead, because I was born in an atheistic family I am naturally attached to material enjoyment. Therefore, kindly do not tempt me with these illusions. I am very much afraid of material conditions, and I desire to be liberated from materialistic life. It is for this reason that I have taken shelter of Your lotus feet."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 7.9.16, Shri Prahlada says: "Although i am afraid (trasto 'smi) of this material world, I am still, because of my offenses to the Lord, placed among these many demons who are like me. Bound by my past karma (sva-karmabhir baddhah), I am thrown (pranitah) amongst them. Therefore, suffering because I am now far from You, I beg: `When (kada nu) will You, being pleased with me (pritah), call me to the shelter of Your lotus feet (anghrim), which are the ultimate goal for liberation from conditional life (apavarga-sharanam)?' " This verse was spoken by Shri Prahlada to Lord Nrisimha.

Anuccheda 50

In the account of the Vishnu Purana, Shri Prahlada, although praying to attain love for the Lord, is not averse to residing in the material world. He says (Vishnu Purana 1.20.18, 19, 26, and 27):

natha yoni-sahasreshu
yeshu yeshu vrajamy aham teshu teshv acyuta bhaktir acyute 'stu sada tvayi

"O Lord, I pray that I will always have unflinching devotion to You, even if I must take take birth in thousands of wombs in this world,

ya pritim avivekanam
vishayeshv anapayini
tvam anusmaratah sa me
hridayan napasrpatu

"Fools fall in love with material sense objects. As they always love senses obejts, may I always love You. I always meditate on You. I pray that You will never leave my heart."

krita-krityo 'smi bhagavan varenanena yat tvayi bhavitri tvat-prasadena
bhaktir avyabharini

"O Supreme Personality of Godhead, please give me the boon that by Your mercy I will always have unflinching devotion to You. With this boon my life will be successful.

dharmartha-kamaih kim tasya muktis tasya kare sthita samasta-jagatam mule
yasya bhaktih sthira tvayi

"What to speak of piety, economic development, sense gratification, even liberation stands in the hand of anyone who has firm devotion to You, the root from which all the worlds have grown."

To these words the Supreme Personality of Godhead gave this reply (Vishnu Purana 1.20.28):

yatha te nishcalam ceto
mayi bhakti-samanvitam
tatha tvam mat-prasadena
nirvanam param apsyasi

"Because your heart has unflinching devotion to Me, by My mercy you will attain final liberation."

This last verse means: "to the extent that you have unflinching devotion to Me, to that extent You are qualified to serve My feet." This same idea is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.14.44):

sevanurakta-manasam abhavo 'pi phalguh

"Indeed, even liberation is considered insignificant for those whose minds are attracted to the loving service of the Lord."*

This same meaning is also hinted in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.2.8):

aham kila puranantam prajartho bhuvi mukti-dam apujayam na mokshaya
mohito deva-mayaya

"Wishing a child, I long ago worshiped the limitless Supreme Lord, who can give the gift of liberation. Bewildered by the Lord's illusory potency, I did not worship Him to attain liberation."

This verse means: "Wishing a child, in my own expanded form, where I bore the name Sutapa, I long ago worshiped (apujayam) the limitless Supreme Lord, who can give the gift of liberation (muktidam). I did not worship Him to attain liberation. Bewildered (mohitah) by the Lord's (deva) merciful (mayaya) glance, I desired to have a son." Here the word "maya" means "mercy". In the Vishva-prakasha Dictionary it is said:

maya dambhe kripayam ca

"The word `maya' may mean `trickery' or `mercy'."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.2.8 the word "kila" (indeed) means "the Supreme Personality of Godhead's words in the maternity room prove all this". It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.2.9):

yatha vicitra-vyasanat. . .

"O saintly spiritual master, please teach me how I may become free from this fearful material world filled with dangers."

In this verse the word "vyasana" (danger) means "the dangers that come from being separated from the Supreme Lord" and the word "bhaya" (fear) means "the fears that come from being separated from the Supreme Lord". It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.2.33):

manye kutashcit. . .

"I think devotional service to the lotus feet of the infallible Supreme Personality of Godhead is the only way a person whose heart is always agitated, a person who thinks his external material body is his true self, can become free from all fear. When devotional service is present fears come to an end."

Shri Narada explains (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.5.45):

tvam apy etan. . .

"O very fortunate one, by faithfully following the path of devotional service you have now heard, you will become liberated and will attain the Supreme."

Here the word "vishva" shows that by attaining the Supreme Personality of Godhead one becomes free from both fears and dangers that come from His absence. At the end of this conversation it is said (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.5.54):

tvam apy etan. . .

"O fortunate one, by faithfully following this path you have heard from me, this path of worshipping the Supreme Personality of Godhead, you will become liberated and will attain the Supreme."

In this verse and the verse following it the way to attain association with Lord Krishna is described. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.2.8, which was quoted in this anuccheda, was spoken by Shri Vasudeva Maharaja to Shri Narada.

Anuccheda 51

In this way the devotees pray to attain loving pastimes with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Pure (ekanti) devotees are of two kinds: 1. devotees whose love for the Lord is not yet born (ajata-priti) and 2. devotees who love for the Lord has been born (jata-priti). The jata-priti devotees are of three kinds: 1. the devotees in shanta-rasa and other devotees like them whose contact with the Lord consists mainly of seeing Him, 2. the Lord's associates in the various rasas who directly see the Lord and also serve Him, and 3. the most important associates of the Lord. The ajata-priti devotees pray that they will attain love for the Lord. It is the goal of their lives. Among the jata-priti devotees, the devotees in shanta-rasa pray to see the Lord directly, but they do not pray to serve Him. They do not desire to serve Him. They are satisfied if the Lord will even only once mercifully glance on them. This is seen in the following description of Kardama Muni Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.21.46):

nati-kshamam bhagavatah. . .

"His body shone most brilliantly. Though he had engaged in austere penance for a long time, he was not emaciated, for the Lord had cast His affectionate sidelong glance upon him and he had also heard the nectar flowing from the moonlike words of the Lord."*

These devotees are not very eager or very determined to be always close to the Lord. However other devotees, the devotees who are the Lord's personal associates, yearn to love the Lord deeply. Yearning to serve the Lord in a particular way, they pray to stay near the Lord. Their prayer to attain loving pastimes with the Lord becomes stronger and stronger. That is the great virtue of these devotees. When, because they are very humble, they do not think they will ever become personal associates of the Lord, they still pray that their love for Him will never perish. That is their virtue. They pray that they will become free from the world of birth and death so they will attain personal association with the Lord. Still, they have not attained the stage of ecstatic love. These devotees have not yet attained the stage of ruci. That engaged in devotional service is the proper way to attain association with the Lord is confirmed by the Lord Himself in these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.20.33):

sarvam mad-bhakti-yogena. . .

"Everything is attained by serving Me with devotion. If somehow he desires them, My devotee easily attains Svargaloka, liberation, or My own spiritual abode."

Even so, it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.29.13):

salokya-sarshti. . .

This means that the devotees will never accept these kinds of liberation if by accepting them they will not be able to serve the Lord. However, if these kinds of liberation help them serve the Lord, then the devotees happily accept them. That is the meaning of these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Sayujya liberation, where one becomes one with the Lord, is the only liberation the devotees will not accept. Filled with desires to serve the Lord in various ways, they happily accept sarupya liberation if that liberation helps their service. The eternal servants of the Lord in Vaikuntha are all devotees like this. In this world also are seen devotees who are like the Lord in some ways, devotees who are intelligent, youthful, princes, or who have forms in some ways like the Lord's. These devotees are praised by the people. Pure devotees have the attainment of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the goal of their lives. Such devotees desire only to attain love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. They have no other desire. They are engaged in devotional service. They crush the cycle of repeated birth and death. They never act sinfully. They are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.25.32-38):

bhaktih siddher gariyasi

"When the service spirit is engaged in devotional service to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, without any motive, that is far better even than salvation.*

jarayat ashv ya kosham
nigirnam analo yatha

"Bhakti, devotional service, dissolves the subtle body of the living entity without separate effort, just as fire in the stomach digests all that we eat.*

naikatmatam me sprihayanti kecin mat-pada-sevabhirata mad-ihah ye 'nyonyato bhagavatah prasajya sabhajayante mama paurushani

"A pure devotee, who is attached to the activities of devotional service and who always engages in the service of My lotus feet, never desires to become one with Me. Such a devotee, who is unflinchingly engaged, always glorifies My pastimes and activities.*

pashyanti te me rucirany amba santah prasanna-vaktraruna-lochanani

rupani divyani vara-pradani sakam vacam sprihaniyam vadanti

"O My mother, My devotees always see the smiling face of My form, with eyes like the rising morning sun. They like to see My various transcendental forms, which are all benevolent, and they also talk favorably with Me.*

tair darshaniyavayavair udara-vilasa-hasekshita-vama-suktaih hritatmano hrita-pranamsh ca bhaktir anicchato me gatim anvim prayunkte

"Upon seeing the charming forms of the Lord, smiling and attractive, and hearing His very pleasing words, the pure devotee almost loses all other consciousness. His senses are freed from all other engagements, and he becomes absorbed in devotional service. Thus in spite of his unwillingness, he attains liberation without separate endeavor.*

atho vibhutim mama mayavinas tam aishvaryam ashtangam anupravrittam shriyam bhagavatim vasprihayanti bhadram parasya me te 'shnuvate tu loke

"Thus because he is completely absorbed in thought of Me, the devotee does not desire even the highest benediction obtainable in the upper planetary systems, including Satyaloka. He does not desire the eight material perfections obtained from mystic yoga, nor does he desire to be elevated to the kingdom of God. Yet even without desiring them, the devotee enjoys, even in this life, all the offered benedictions.*

na karhicin mat-parah shanta-rupe
nankshyanti no me 'nimisho ledhi hetih
yesham aham priya atma sutash ca sakha guruh suhrido daivam ishtam

"The Lord continued: My dear mother, devotees who receive such transcendental opulences are never bereft of them. Neither weapons nor the change of time can destroy such opulences. Because the devotees accept Me as their friend, their relative, their son, preceptor, benefactor, and Supreme Deity, they cannot be deprived of their possessions at any time.*

In these verses the word "anmvim" means "the difficult to understand attainment of being a personal associate of the Supreme Personality of Godhead". The pure devotees are like a person determined to perform a yajna (kratu-nyaya). Attainment of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the only goal of their lives. This is described in the following words of the Chandogya Upanishad (3.14.1):

yatha kratu asmil loke purusho bhavati tathetah pretya bhavati

"According to the way he is determined to worship the Supreme Lord in this life, a person attains an appropriate reward after death."

Here the commentator says:

"Here the word `kratu' means `determination."

It is said in the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (4.4.5):

sa yatha-kamo bhavati tat-kratur bhavati. yat-kratur bhavati tat-karma kurute. yat karma kurute tad abhisampadyate.

"As a person desires, so he becomes determined to act. As he is determined, so he acts. As he acts, so he reaps the result."

It is also said in the scriptures:

yad yatha yathopasate tad eva bhavanti

"As one worships the Lord, so he attains an appropriate reward."

The Supreme Personality of Godhead promises (Bhagavad-gita 4.11):

ya yatha mam prapadyante
tams tathaiva bhajamy aham

"All of them-as they surrender unto Me-I reward accordingly."*

In the Brahma-vaivarta Purana the Supreme Personality of Godhead again promises:

yadi mam praptum icchanti
prapnuvanty eva nanyatha

"If one desires to attain Me, he will attain Me. It is not otherwise."

This spiritual goal was also attained by the gopis of Vraja. They attained personal association with the Lord. This has already been discussed in Shri Krishna-sandarbha, where these words spoken to the gopis by Lord Krishna were quoted (Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.44):

mayi bhaktir hi bhutanam

amritatvaya kalpate
dishtya yad asin mat-sneho
bhavatinam mad-apanah

"The means of attaining My favor is loving service unto Me, and fortunately you are all thus engaged. Those living beings who render service unto Me are eligible to be transferred to the spiritual world and attain eternal life with knowledge and bliss."*

His opulence. Still, their awareness of His sweetness was more important. This is confirmed by Shrila Shridhara Svami, who in His commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.45.1) explains that although Devaki and Vasudeva were certainly aware of the Lord's opulence, their love for Him as their son was a more rare and valuable attainment for them. This is also true for the gopas, as Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.43.17 explains in the words "shri-gopanam svajanah" (the cowherd men saw Lord Krishna as their relative). The cowherd people were not like Kamsa and the other enemies of the Lord. The cowherd people were overcome with love for Lord Krishna. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.15):

a-bala-vriddha-vanitah
sarve 'nga pashu-vrittayah nirjagmur gokulad dinah
krishna-darshana-lalasa

"All the inhabitants of Vrindavana, including the children, women and elderly persons, thought of Krishna just as a cow thinks of her helpless young calf, and thus these poor, suffering people rushed out of the village, intent upon finding Him."

Maharaja Nanda was situated in the most exalted eternal parental love for the Lord. The Lord personally became his son. What more need be said?

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.43.17 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 100

Because they were aware of the Supreme Lord's sweetness, the cowherd people became the most wise philosophers (parama-jnani). The demigod Brahma, who had personally seen numberless four-armed forms of the Lord, specifically took shelter of the form of Lord Krishna. Brahma said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.1):

naumidya te 'bhra-vapushe tadid-ambaraya gunjavatamsa-paripiccha-lasan-mukhaya vanya-sraje kavala-vetra-vishana-venulakshma-shriye mridu-pade pashupangajaya

"My dear Lord, You are the only worshipful Supreme Lord, Personality of Godhead. Therefore I am offering my humble obeisances and prayers just to please You. Your bodily features are of the color of clouds filled with water. You are glittering with a silver electric aura emanating from Your yellow garments.*

"Let me offer my respectful repeated obeisances unto the son of Maharaja Nanda who is standing before me with conchshell, earrings, and peacock feather on His head. His face is beautiful. He is wearing a helmet, garlanded with forest flowers, and He stands with a morsel of food in His hand. He is decorated with cane and bugle, and He carries a buffalo horn and flute. He stands before me with small lotus feet."*

The spiritual love the cowherd people feel for Lord Krishna is the crest jewel of all kinds of love. When opposing things suddenly appear, that love does not waver. On the contrary, that love eclipses all opposition. When obstacles arise, that love increases. In this way spiritual love is like the love hedonists feel for material sense objects. That love the hedonists feel for material senses objects, love that the scriptures and direct perception both declare to be full of faults, is indeed very passionate and strong. In that sense spiritual love is similar to that material love. This is seen in the following prayer spoken by Prahlada Maharaja to Lord Nrisimha in Vishnu Purana (1.20.19):

ya pritir avivekanam
vishayeshv anapayini
tvam anusmaratah sa me
hridayan napasrpatu

"Fools fall in love with material sense objects. As they always love senses objects, may I always love You. I always meditate on You. I pray that You will never leave my heart."

The intensity of spiritual love is also seen in these words spoken by Nanda and Yashoda to Lord Balarama in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.65.3):

ciram nah pahi dasharha
sanujo jagad-ishvarah
ity aropyankam alingya
netraih sishicatur jalaih

" `O descendant of Dasharha, O Lord of the universe, may You and Your younger brother Krishna ever protect us.' Saying this, they raised Shri Balarama onto their laps, embraced Him, and moistened Him with tears from their eyes."

Even though it was very clear the Lord Balarama was Vasudeva's son, a kshatriya, and the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself, Nanda and Yashoda still thought of Him as their own son. This is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.65.1-2):

balabhadrah kusu-shreshtha bhagavan ratham asthitah suhrid-didrikshur utkanthah prayayau nanda-gokulam

"O best of the Kurus, once Lord Balarama, eager to visit His well-wishing friends, mounted His chariot and traveled to Nanda Gokula."

parishvaktas cirotkanthair gopair gopibhir eva ca
ramo 'bhivadya pitarav
ashirbhir abhinanditah

"Having long suffered the anxiety of separation, the cowherd men and their wives embraced Lord Balarama. The Lord then offered respects to His parents, and they joyfully greeted Him with prayers."

When spiritual love (priti) becomes very prominent, it eclipses everything else. This occurs even amongst the devotees who are naturally attracted to the Lord in His feature of power and opulence. An example of this is seen in the following description of Shri Devahuti in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.33.21):

vanam pravrajite patyav
apatya-virahatura
jnata-tattvapy abhun nashte
vatse gaur iva vatsala

"Devahuti's husband had already left home and accepted the renounced order of life, and then her only son, Kapila, left home. Although she knew all the truths of life and death, and although her heart was cleansed of all dirt, she was very aggrieved at the loss of her son, just as a cow is affected when her calf dies."*

A similar situation, where spiritual love overcomes awareness of the Lord's power and opulence, is seen in these words spoken by Shri Devaki-devi in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.3.29):

samuvije bhavad-dhetoh
kamsad aham adhira-dhih

"O Madhusudana, because of Your appearance, I am becoming more and more anxious in fear of Kamsa."*

The same sentiment is seen in these words describing Maharaja Yudhishtira in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.10.32):

ajata-shatruh pritanam
gopithaya madhu-dvisah
parebhyah shankitah snehat
prayunkta catur-anginim

"Maharaja Yudhishtira, although no one's enemy, engaged four divisions of defense [horse, elephant, chariot and army] to accompany Lord Krishna, the enemy of the asuras [demons]. The Maharaja did this because of the enemy, and also out of affection for the Lord."*

This same sentiment of spiritual love eclipsing awareness of the Lord's power and opulence is again seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.10.33):

atha duragatan shaurih
kauravan virahaturan sannivartya dridham snigdhan
prayat sva-nagarim priyaih

"Out of profound affection for Lord Krishna, the Pandavas, who were of the Kuru dynasty, accompanied Him a considerable distance to see Him off. They were overwhelmed with the thought of future separation. The Lord, however, persuaded them to return home, and He proceeded towards Dvaraka with His dear companions."*

How spiritual love overwhelmed even Lord Balarama's awareness of Lord Krishna's power and opulence is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.53.20-21):

shrutvaitad bhagavan ramo
vipakshiya-nripodyamam
krishnam caikam gatam hartum
kanyam kalaha-shankitah

balena mahata sardham
bhratri-sneha-pariplutah
tvaritah kundinam pragad
gajashva-ratha-pattibhih

"When Lord Balarama heard about these preparations of the inimical kings and how Lord Krishna had set off alone to steal the bride, He feared that a fight would ensue. Immersed in affection for His brother, He hurried to Kundina with a mighty army consisting of infantry and soldiers riding on elephants, horses, and chariots."

Here the word "bhagavan" means "all-knowing". Another example of devotees being overwhelmed by love for Lord Krishna is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.11.49):

krishnam maha-baka-grastam
drishtva ramadayo 'rbhakah. . .

"When Balarama and the other boys saw that Krishna had been devoured by the gigantic duck, they became almost unconscious, like senses without life."*

The bliss the cowherd people attain by perceiving Lord Krishna's sweetness far surpasses the bliss that comes from perceiving Brahman or perceiving the opulence and power of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Seeing the good fortune attained by the cowherd people, Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami became filled with wonder. He said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.11):

ittham satam brahma-sukhanubhutya. . .

"In this way, all the cowherd boys used to play with Krishna, who is the source of the Brahman effulgence for jnanis desiring to merge into that effulgence, who is the Supreme Personality of Godhead for devotees who have accepted eternal servitorship, and who for ordinary persons is but another ordinary child. The cowherd boys, having accumulated the results of pious activities for many lives, were able to associate in this way with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. How can one explain their great fortune?"*

He also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.20):

nemam virinco na bhavah. . .

"Neither Lord Brahma nor lord Shiva, nor even the goddess of fortune, who is always the better half of the Supreme Lord, can obtain from the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the deliverer from this material world, such mercy as was received by Mother Yashoda."*

He also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.21):

nayam sukhapah. . .

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krishna, the son of mother Yashoda, is accessible to devotees engaged in spontaneous loving service, but He is not as easily accessible to mental speculators, to those striving for self-realization by severe austerities and penances, or to those who consider the body the same as the self."*

He also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.60):

nayam shriyo 'nga. . .

"When Lord Shri Krishna was dancing with the gopis in the rasa-lila, the gopis were embraced by the arms of the Lord. This transcendental favor was never bestowed upon the goddess of fortune or other consorts in the spiritual world. Indeed, never was such a thing even imagined by the most beautiful girls in the heavenly planets, whose bodily luster and aroma resemble the lotus flower. And what to speak of worldly women who are very beautiful according to material estimation?"*

Sometimes the manifestation of the Lord's opulence increases the perception of His sweetness. This occurs when the devotee has the idea "How can this be our son (or other relation) in this wonderful situation?" An example of such a situation is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.28.18):

nandadayas tu tam drishtva paramananda-nivritah krishnam ca tatra cchandobhih stuyamanam su-vismitah

"Nanda Maharaja and the other cowherd men felt the greatest happiness when they saw that transcendental abode. They were especially amazed to see Krishna Himself there, surrounded by the personified Vedas, who were offering Him prayers."

Because of its great purity, the love the residents of Shri Gokula feel is very glorious. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.35):

esham ghosha-nivasinam uta bhavan. . .

"My Lord, sometimes I am puzzled as to how Your Lordship will be able to repay, in gratitude, the devotional service of these residents of Vrindavana. Although I know that You are the supreme source of all benediction, I am puzzled to know how You will be able to repay all the service that You are receiving from these residents of Vrindavana. I think of how You are so kind, so magnanimous, that even Putana, who came to cheat You by dressing herself as a very affectionate mother, was awarded liberation and the actual post of a mother. And other demons belonging to the same family, such as Aghasura and Bakasura, were also favored with liberation. Under the circumstances, I am puzzled. These residents of Vrindavana have given You everything: Their bodies, their minds, their love, their homes. Everything is being utilized for Your purpose. So how will You be able to repay their debt? You have already given Yourself to Putana! I surmise that You shall ever ever remain a debtor to the residents of Vrindavana, being unable to repay their loving service.*

It is seen that even the cows love Lord Krishna very deeply. When Lord Krishna dove into the Kaliya lake, the cows were overwhelmed. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.11):

gavo vrisa vatsataryah
krandamanah su-dukhhitah
krsne nyastekshana bhita
rudantya iva tasthire

"The cows, bulls and female calves, in great distress, called out piteously to Krishna. Fixing their eyes on Him, they stood still in fear, as if ready to cry but too shocked to shed tears."

When Lord Krishna finally emerged from the Kaliya lake, the cows were overjoyed. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.17.16):

gavo vrisha vatsataryo
lebhire paramam mudam

"Lord Balarama embraced His infallible brother and laughed, knowing well the extent of His potency. Out of great feelings of love, He lifted Him up on His lap and repeatedly looked at Him. The cows, bulls and young female calves also achieved the highest pleasure."

Even the unmoving living beings, like the trees and plants, became filled with joy. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.17.15):

krishnam sametya labdheha
asan shushka naga api

"Having regained their vital functions, Yashoda, Rohini, Nanda and all the other cowherd women and men went up to Krishna. O descendant of Kuru, even the dried-up trees came back to life."

Even the plants of Gokula were filled with love for Lord Krishna. For this reason the demigod Brahma prayed in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.34):

tad bhuri-bhagyam iha janma kim apy atavyam yad gokule 'pi katamanghri-rajo-'bhishekam

"I am most humbly praying at Your lotus feet for You to please give me any sort of birth within this Vrindavana forest so that I may be able to be favored by the dust of the feet of some of the devotees of Vrindavana. Even if I am given the chance to grow just as the humble grass in this land, that will be a glorious birth for me. But if I am not so fortunate to take birth within the forest of Vrindavana, I beg to be allowed to take birth outside the immediate area of Vrindavana so that when the devotees go out they will walk over me. Even that would be a great fortune for me. I am just aspiring for a birth in which I will be smeared by the dust of Your devotees' feet. I can see that everyone here is simply full of Krishna consciousness. They do not know anything but Mukunda. All the Vedas are indeed searching after the lotus feet of Krishna.*

The devotees in Gokula aware of the Lord's sweetness are of two kinds: 1. the followers (anugata) of the Lord, and 2. the friends and kinsmen (bandhava) of the Lord. Of these two kinds of dear devotees of the Lord, the Lord's friends and kinsmen are more exalted, for they are more firmly convinced that "the Lord is mine". Their exalted position is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.32):

aho bhagyam aho bhagyam. . .

"How greatly fortunate are Nanda Maharaja, the cowherd men, and all the other inhabitants of Vrajabhumi! There is no limit to their good fortune because the Absolute Truth, the source of transcendental bliss, the eternal Supreme Brahman, has become their friend."*

It is said that even the least important of the residents of Gokula consider Lord Krishna their friend. In this way their friendship with Lord Krishna is glorified.

The exalted position of Lord Krishna's friends (sakha) is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.11):

ittham satam brahma-sukhanubhutya
dasyam gatanam para-daivatena mayashritanam nara-darakena sakam vijahruh krita-punya-punjah

"In this way, all the cowherd boys used to play with Krishna, who is the source of the Brahman effulgence for jnanis desiring to merge into that effulgence, who is the Supreme Personality of Godhead for devotees who have accepted eternal servitorship, and who for ordinary persons is but another ordinary child. The cowherd boys, having accumulated the results of pious activities for many lives, were able to associate in this way with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. How can one explain their great fortune?"*

In this verse the word "satam" means "the jnanis, before whom the Lord appears as the impersonal Brahman". The devotees of the Lord are extremely rare. The words "dasyam gatanam" mean "they who have attained service to the Lord." These persons are described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.14.5):

muktanam api siddhanam
narayana-parayanah
sudurlabhah prashantatma
kotishv api maha-mune

"O great sage, among many millions who are liberated and perfect in knowledge of liberation, one may be a devotee of Lord Narayana, or Krishna. Such devotees, who are fully peaceful, are extremely rare."*

Thus the devotees who worship the Supreme Personality of Godhead are extremely rare. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.12.11 the word "mayashritanam" means "persons who have neither knowledge of, devotion to, nor friendship for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and who thus do not understand Lord Krishna's spiritual form, do not understand that He is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and do not love Him, and who are thus not qualified to directly see the Supreme Personality of Godhead standing before them. These persons think Lord Krishna is an ordinary human boy. Lord Krishna describes these persons in the following words of Bhagavad-gita (9.11):

avajananti mam mudha
manushim tanum ashritam

"Fools deride Me when I descend in the human form. They do not know My transcendental nature and My supreme dominion over all that be."*

Lord Krishna also says in Bhagavad-gita (7.25):

naham prakashah sarvasya
yogamaya-samavritah

"I am never manifest to the foolish and unintelligent. For them I am covered by My creative potency (yogamaya), and so the deluded world knows Me not, who am unborn and infallible."*

In these three quotes it is seen that the Supreme Lord very rarely makes Himself visible in this world. Still, even though He very rarely appears in this world, He personally enjoys pastimes (vijahruh) with His dear friends who are filled with love for Him. This truth fills Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami with wonder. Or, these words may also be interpreted to mean: "He very mercifully appears before even the ordinary persons who have taken shelter of maya (mayashritanam) and before them He manifests His all-glorious spiritual form which seems to be the form of a human being, and which is very rarely visible in this world." Still, ordinary persons cannot become the friend or kinsman of the Lord in His rare, more rare, or most rare spiritual forms. With these friends the Supreme Lord enjoys pastimes (vijahruh). Here the word "krita-punya-punjab" means

"they are the best among persons who have performed many pious deeds to please the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Their friendship with the Lord is not like the friendship of ordinary persons. Their friendship for the Lord is glorious. How can the good fortune of these loving friends of the Lord be described? Even the ordinary people of Vraja have great good fortune. Even the persons who have only seen Lord Krishna have great good fortune. The good fortune they have attained is attainable by the great sages. This truth is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.12):

yat-pada-pamsur bahu janma-kricchratah. . .

"Yogis may undergo severe austerities and penances for many births by practicing yama, niyama, asana and pranayama, none of which are easily performed. Yet in due course of time, when these yogis attain the perfection of controlling the mind, they will still be unable to taste even a particle of dust from the lotus feet of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. What then can we describe about the great fortune of the inhabitants of Vrajabhumi, Vrindavana, with whom the Supreme Personality of Godhead personally lived and who saw the Lord face to face?"*

These words affirm the truth that the friends of Lord Krishna were very fortunate. This truth was also confirmed by Akrura in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.38.15):

athavarudhah. . .
. . .namasya abhyam ca sakhin vanaukasah

"Then I will at once alight from my chariot and bow down to the lotus feet of Krishna and Balarama, the Supreme Personalities of Godhead. Theirs are the same feet that great mystic yogis striving for self-realization bear within their minds. I will also offer my obeisances to the Lords' cowherd boyfriends and to all the other residents of Vrindavana."

When Lord Brahma kidnapped Lord Krishna's friends and calves, Lord Krishna created new friends and calves. Brahma then returned the original friends and calves. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.12.11 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 101

Lord Krishna parents are even more fortunate than His friends. They are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.51):

tato bhaktir bhagavati
putri-bhute janardane dam-patyor nitaram asid
gopa-gopishu bhārata

"Thereafter, O Maharaja Parikshit, best of the Bharatas, when the Supreme Personality of Godhead became the son of Nanda Maharaja and Yashoda, they maintained continuous, unswerving devotional love in parental affection. And in their association, all the other inhabitants of Vrindavana, the gopas and gopis, developed the culture of Krishna-bhakti."*

In this verse the word "bhaktih" means "love", nitaram" means "up to the levels of sneha and raga", "gopah" means "all the gopas", and "gopyah" means "the gopis who were not Lord Krishna's beloveds". This statement will be explained later in this book.

Ofg all thes edevotees, the gopis of Vraja, who have the most glorious prema, pranaya, mana, and raga love for the Lord, and who have the great good fortune of having anuraga and maha-bhava love for the Lord, and whose pure love brings Lord Krishna under their control, are very glorious and fortunate. Their glory and good fortune have no equal or better. The gopis are thus very exalted. Even Uddhava asked permission from them. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.64):

atha gopir anujnapya yashodam nandam eva ca
gopan amantrya dasharho yasyann aruruhe ratham

"Uddhava, the descendent of Dasharha, then took permission from the gopis and from Mother Yashoda and Nanda Maharaja. He bade farewell to all the cowherd men and, about to depart, mounted his chariot."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 102

The gopis are the most exalted of all the residents of Gokula. This truth is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.87.57-58):

drishtvaivam-adi gopinam krishnaveshatma-viklavam uddhavah parama-pritas
ta namasyann idam jagau

"Thus seeing how the gopis were always disturbed because of their total absorption in Krishna, Uddhava was supremely pleased. Desiring to offer themn all respect, he sang as follows."

etah param tanu-bhrito bhuvi gopa-vadhvo govinda eva nikhilatmani rudha-bhavah vanchanti yad bhava-bhiyo munayo vayam ca
kim brahma-janmabhir ananta-katha-rasasya

"Among all persons on earth, these cowherd women alone have actually perfected their embodied lives, for they have achieved the perfection of unalloyed love for Lord Govinda. Their pure love is hankered after by those who fear material existence, by great sages, and by ourselves as well. For one who has tasted the narrations of the infinite Lord, what is the use of taking birth as a high-class brahmana, or even as Lord Barhma himself?"

In the second of these two verses the word "param" means "only", "etas tanu-bhrtah" means "whose birth in this world has borne its fruit", "akhilatmani" means "in the Supreme Personality of Godhead who, although rarely seen in this world, is present as the Supersoul in all living beings", "govinde" means "the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is directly manifest in this world as the prince of Gokula", "evam" means "with sweetness like this", and "rudha-bhavah" means "whose ecstatic maha-bhava love is manifest". The words "vanchanti yad bhava-bhiyo munayah" mean "If somehow the description of the sweetness of ecstatic love reaching up to the level of maha-bhava enters their ears, then the sages who ordinarily yearn for liberation will renounce that desire and, understanding its glories, will yearn to attain ecstatic love." The word "vayam" means "even great devotees like myself yearn to attain that love. That means we have not yet attained it. We are not qualified to feel that very sweet ecstatic love." That is the meaning. Then the speaker of this verse criticizes persons who do not yearn to attain that ecstatic love. He says: "kim brahma-janmabhir ananta-katha-rasasya", which means "What is the use of taking birth as the demigod Brahma numberless times if we cannot taste the nectar of the hearing the topics of Lord Krishna, whose pastimes have no end?" This rhetorical question implies the answer: "there is no use in taking birth as such a Lord Brahma."

Anucchedas 103 and 104

Here someone may protest: "Is it not true that the sages who yearn after liberation and who have already attained liberation are glorified in all the scriptures? How can the devotees be superior to them? Why would the sages desire anything but liberation?" To answer this protest, Uddhava speaks these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.59):

kvemah striyo vana-carir vyabhicara-dushtah krishne kva caisha paramatmani rudha-bhavah nanv ishvaro 'nubhajato 'vidusho 'pi sakshac chreyas tanoty agada-rajah ivopayuktah

"How amazing it is that these simple women who wander about the forest, seemingly spoiled by improper behavior, have achieved the perfection of unalloyed love for Krishna, the Supreme Soul! Still, it is true that the Supreme Lord Himself awards His blessings even to an ignorant worshiper, just as the best medicine works even when taken by a person ignorant of its ingredients."

In these verses, from beginning to end, Shriman Uddhava's great devotion to the Lord is clearly seen. Here someone may protest that the gopis' relationship with Lord Krishna was adulterous and therefore immoral. This protest is answered by these words spoken at the conclusion of the description of the rasa dance (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.33.35):

gopinam tat-patinam ca
 sarvesham eva dehinam yo 'ntash carati so 'dhyakshah
 kridaneneha deha-bhak

"He who lives as the overseeing witness within the gopis and their husbands, and indeed within all embodied living beings, assumes forms in this world to enjoy transcendental pastimes."

The idea of wicked-hearted men that the gopis acted immorally in their relationship with Lord Krishna is refuted by this verse, by the word "paramatmani" (the Supreme Personality of Godhead) in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.59, and also by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.61):

arya-patham ca hitva. . .

"The gopis of Vrindavana have given up the association of their husbands, sons, and other family members, who are very difficult to give up, and they have forsaken the path of chastity to take shelter of the lotus feet of Mukunda, Krishna, which one should search for by Vedic knowledge. Oh, let me be fortunate enough to be one of the bushes, creepers, or herbs in Vrindavana, because the gopis trample them and bless them with the dust of their feet."*

Now is not the right time to refute the mistaken idea that the gopis acted immorally. Later in this book we will prove that the gopis acted rightly. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.58 and 59 the words "kvemah striyo vana-carih" mean "what is the status of the women who enjoyed pastimes in Vrindavana forest and took shelter of Lord Krishna?" In these verses the words "kva vyabhicara-dushtah bhava-bhiyo vayam" mean "and what is the status of us, sages who have not attained exalted spiritual love and who are not attached to Lord Krishna, are afraid of material existence?" The meaning here is: "The difference between us and the gopis is very great." Here the question may be asked: "Why does such a great difference exist?" The answer is given here in the words "esha paramatmani rudha-bhavah", which mean "In the gopis is seen great ecstatic love (maha-bhava) for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is worshiped by everyone and who is the abode of all desires. That same ecstatic love is not seen in us." If this is so, then the following question may be asked: If you do not directly see Lord Krishna's glorious qualities, qualities that made the gopis fall in love with Him, then how will you attain that ecstatic love even if you yearn to attain it? This question is answered in this verse in the passage beginning with the word "nanu" (the Supreme Lord Himself awards His blessings even to an ignorant worshiper, just as the best medicine works even when taken by a person ignorant of its ingredients.) Here the word "avidushah" means "the Lord Himself makes this love spontaneously manifest within me." That is the example given here. Uddhava declares in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.27):

virahena maha-bhaga
mahan me 'nugraha kritah

"You have rightfully claimed the privilege of unalloyed love for the transcendental Lord, O most glorious gopis. Indeed, by exhibiting your love for Krishna in separation from Him, you have shown me great mercy"

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.59 may also be interpreted in a different way, in a way that sternly rebukes ladies who, although very faithful to their husbands, are averse to the rasas of devotional service. In the first interpretation of this verse the words "kvemah striyah" referred to the gopis, who enjoy pastimes in Vrindavana forest. The second interpretation of this verse is based on the assumption that an "a" was originally present before the word "vana-carih" and then elided by sandhi. Thus the word was originally "avana-carih", which would mean "women who are not like the gopis". Such materialistic women are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.18.19):

striyo vratais tva. . .

"My dear Lord, You are certainly the fully independent master of all the senses. Therefore all women who worship You by strictly observing vows because they wish to acquire a husband to satisfy their senses are surely under illusion. They do not know that such a husband cannot actually give protection to them or their children. Nor can he protect their wealth or duration of life, for he himself is dependent on time, fruitive results and the modes of nature, which are all subordinate to You."*

These words were spoken by Shrimati Lakshmi--devi in the midst of Shrimad-Bhagavatam's description of Kutmala-varsha. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.59 the words "imah striyo vyabhicara-dushtah krishne kva paramatmani" may then be interpreted to mean "What is the status of women who are averse to Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead?" The meaning then would be: "There is a great difference between such women and the gopis." Then the word "rudha-bhavah" may be interpreted to mean: "Not even the smallest fragment of the exalted spiritual love that is the crest jewel of all goals of life is not seen in such women". That exalted spiritual love is present only in the devotees, who are filled with love for the Lord. Only the devotees love the Lord. This is confirmed by the passage beginning with the word "nanu" (Still, it is true that the Supreme Lord Himself awards His blessings even to an ignorant worshiper, just as the best medicine works even when taken by a person ignorant of its ingredients.) What more may be said? The next verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.60) declares:

svar-yoshitam nalina-gandha-rucam kuto 'nyah rasotasave 'sya bhuja-danda-grihita-kantha-labdhashisham ya udagad vraja-sundarinam

"When Lord Shri Krishna was danciong with the gopis in the rasa-lila, the gopis were embraced by the arms of the Lord. This transcendental favor was never bestowed upon the goddess of fortune or other consorts in the spiritual world. Indeed, never was such a thing even imagined by the most beautiful girls in the heavenly planets, whose bodily luster and aroma resemble the lotus flower. And what to speak of worldly women who are very beautiful according to material estimation?"*

In this verse the word "ange" means "on the graceful form of the master of Vaikuntha", "shriyah" means "of the Lord's dearmost beloved", "nitanta-rateh" means "of the love a girl feels for her beloved", "prasadah" means "happiness, and "nayam" means "is not". The verse then continued: "svar-yoshitam nalina-gandha-rucam", which means: "If even the goddess of fortune cannot attain that happiness, then the women of Svarghaloka, whose limbs are like golden lotus flowers, and who do not even reside in Vaikuntha certainly cannot attain it." Then the words "kuto 'nyah" mean "Other women, who are far away from them certainly cannot attain it." That is the meaning. Then one may ask: Are there any women who care not bereft of this happiness? The answer is given in this verse in the passage beginning with the word "rasa" (When Lord Shri Krishna was danciong with the gopis in the rasa-lila, the gopis were embraced by the arms of the Lord.) Here the word "asya" means "of the form of Lord Krishna, the prince of Vraja". That Goddess Lakshmi yearns to attain the touch of Lord Krishna is also confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.36):

yad-vanchaya shrir lalanacarat tapah. . .

"O Lord, we do not know how the serpent Kaliya has attained this great opportunity of being touched by the dust of Your lotus feet. For this end, the goddess of fortune performed austerities for centuries, giving up all other desires and taking austere vows."

Goddess Lakshmi did not only yearn to attain the love the gopis felt in separation from Lord Krishna, she also yearned to attain the love they felt when they directly enjoyed pastimes with Him. What persons like myself say to describe that love? In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.60 the words "rasotasave 'sya bhuja-danda-grihita-kantha-labdashisham ya udagad" mean "When, in the rasa dance, Lord Krishna embraced the gopis' necks, the gopis felt all their desires were fulfilled". This means the desire the gopis had long kept hidden in their hearts was now openly attained. That Goddess Lakshmi yearned to attain the gopis' good fortune is also confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.8):

api yat-spriha shrih

"You have embraced the young cowherd women between Your two arms--a favor hankered after by the goddess of fortune herself."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.60 the word "vraja-sundarinam (of the beautiful girls of Vraja) shows that the gopis are the most beautiful of all girls". That the devotees attain all exalted qualities is confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.18.12):

yasyasti bhaktir bhagavaty akincana. . .

"All the demigods and their exalted qualities, such as religion, knowledge and renunciation, become manifest in the body of one who has developed unalloyed devotion for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Vasudeva."*

Spiritual love where the devotee loves the Lord as a beloved is the crest jewel of all kinds of spiritual love. Here two levels of that love, as manifested by Goddess Lakshmi and by the gopis, are revealed. That this kind of spiritual love for the Lord is the most exalted is not refuted by the following words spoken by the Lord to Uddhava in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.14.15):

na ca sankarshano na shrih

"My dear Uddhava, neither Lord Brahma, Lord Shiva, Lord Sankarshana, the goddess of fortune, nor indeed My own self are as dear to Me as you are."

These words are only intended to praise devotional service and the devotees in a general way. They do not mean that Uddhava is in a position superior to Goddess Lakshmi and the other devotees who consider the Lord their beloved. Because the gopis love Lord Krishna, the original form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, their position is most exalted.

Anuccheda 105

Uddhava thinks: "For me to aspire to become like the gopis is like a dwarf yearning to catch the moon. Therefore my only prayer is this: (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.61):

asam aho carana-renu-jusham aham syam
vrindavane kim api gulma-lataushadhinam ya dustyajam sva-janam arya-patham ca hitva bhejur mukunda-padavim shrutibhir vimrigyam

"The gopis of Vrindavana have given up the association of their husbands, sons, and other family members, who are very difficult to give up, and they have forsaken the path of chastity to take shelter of the lotus feet of Mukunda, Krishna, which one should search for by Vedic knowledge. Oh, let me be fortunate enough to be one of the bushes, creepers, or herbs in Vrindavana, because the gopis trample them and bless them with the dust of their feet."*

In this verse Uddhava says: "It is not possible for me to attain even a slight touch of the effulgent glory of the gopis' great love for Lord Krishna. Therefore my desire will be to take another, a different birth in this world. If in that birth I still cannot directly attain the touch of the gopis' feet, for what shall I pray? I will pray: Let me take birth (syam) even among the undesirable species of life, among the bushes, creepers, or herbs (kim api gulma-lataushadhinam), for then I will have the good fortune of attaining the touch of the dust of the gopis' feet (asam carana-renu)." Here the word "aho" (Oh!) shows that Uddhava's heart is agitated with this desire. Here the question may be asked: "What is the nature of these gopis?" The answer is given: "Impelled by passionate love, they have forsaken the path of chastity and rejected the moral codes taught by the Vedas and ordinary social custom" (ya dustyajam sva-janam arya-patham ca hitva). They follow the blissful path of love for Lord Krishna, a path all the Shruti-shastras have concluded is the crest jewel of all goals of life (bhejur mukunda-padavim shrutibhir vimrigyam)." The conclusion, then, of this verse is: "Let us also reject the path of conventional religion (arya-patham) and follow the footsteps of the gopis."

Anuccheda 106

Goddess Lakshmi and others find the path of directly enjoying blissful pastimes with Lord Krishna is very difficult to attain. This is revealed in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.62):

ya vai shritarcitam ajadibhir apta-kamair yogeshvarair api sadatmani rasa-goshthyam krishnasya tad bhagavatah caranaravindam nyastam staneshu vijahuh parirabhya tapam

"The goddess of fortune herself, along with Lord Brahma and all the other demigods, who are masters of yogic perfection, can worship the lotus feet of Krishna only within her mind. But during the rasa dance Lord Krishna placed His feet upon these gopis' breasts, and by embracing those feet the gopis gave up all distress."

This verse means: "In the assembly of the rasa-dance (rasa-goshthyam) embracing (parirabhya) the indescribably sweet lotus feet (padaravindam) of Lord Krishna (shri-krishnasya), the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavatah), who manifests all opulences, of which sweetness is the best, the gopis became free (jahuh) of the great anxiety they felt from not being able to associate with Lord Krishna directly. Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami and other sages expert in the yoga of devotional service (yogeshvaraih) worship in their hearts (atmani) the lotus feet of Lord Krishna."

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.36):

yad-vanchaya shrir lalanacarat tapah

"O Lord, we do not know how the serpent Kaliya has attained this great opportunity of being touched by the dust of Your lotus feet. For this end, the goddess of fortune performed austerities for centuries, giving up all other desires and taking austere vows."

In these words it is seen that even Goddess Laksmi has to worship Lord Krishna opnly within her mind. This she always did (sad.a) from beginningless time. She was never able to approach Lord Krishna directly. That truth is confirmed by the Shruti-shastras and other scriptures.

Anuccheda 107

Humbled by seeing the gopis' glorious status, and feeling himself very unqualified, Uddhava offers respectful obeisances to the dust of the gopis' feet. He says in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.63):

vande nanda-vraja-strinam pada-renum abhikshnashah yasam hari-kathodgitam
punati bhuvana-trayam

"I repeatedly offer my respects to the dust from the feet of the women of Nanda Maharaja's cowherd village. When these gopis loudly chant the glories of Shri Krishna, the vibration purifies the three worlds."

In this verse Uddhava says: "I offer my respectful obeisances (vande) to the dust of the gopis' feet (pada-renum)." Then in the second part of the verse he describes the gopis. Uddhava's meaning here is: "The good fortune we have attained today is very wonderful." Lord Krishna Himself describes the glories of His devotees in these words of Padma Purana, Karttika-mahatmya:

ete hi yadavah sarve
mad-gana eva bhavini sarvada mat-priya devi
mat-tulya-guna-shalinah

"O glorious goddess, all the Yadavas are always very dear to Me. They have virtues like My own."

The Yadavas, who are very dear to Lord Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.90.46):

shayyasanatanalapa. . .

"The Vrishnis were so absorbed in Krishna consciousness that they forgot their own bodies while sleeping, sitting, walking, conversing, playing, bathing, and so on."

Devotees whose relationship is with other forms of the Lord, forms other than the form of Lord Krishna, are not as glorious as the Yadavas. That amongst the Yadavas and other devotees Uddhava is very glorious is confirmed by these words spoken by Lord Krishna Himself in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.16.29):

tvam tu bhagavateshv aham

"O Uddhava, amongst the devotees you are my representative."

Lord Krishna also says in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.11.49):

tvam me bhrityah suhrit sakha

"O Uddhava, you are My friend, servant, and well-wisher."

Lord Krishna also says in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.4.31):

noddhavo 'nv api man-nyunah

"Uddhava is not inferior to Me in any way."*

Lord Krishna also says in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.14.15):

na ca sankarshano na shrir
naivatma ca yatha bhavan

"My dear Uddhava, neither Lord Brahma, Lord Shiva, Lord Sankarshana, the goddess of fortune, nor indeed My own self are as dear to Me as you."

In these and many other statements Lord Krishna affirms that Uddhava is exalted amongst the devotees. Still, Uddhava is very humble when he speaks about the gopis. He is not humble in the same way about the Lord's queens in Dvaraka. The queens' glory compares to the gopis' glory in the same way the eye of a person blind from birth compares to the glory of the full moon.

Anuccheda 108

That Shri Radha is more glorious than the 16,000 queens of Lord Krishna, the king of the Yadus, is confirmed by the queens themselves, who say in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.83.41-43):

na vayam sadhvi samrajyam svarajyam bhaujyam apy uta vairajyam parameshthyam ca anantyam va hareh padam

kamayamaha etasya
shrimat-pada-rajah shriyah kuca-kunkuma-gandhadhyam
murdhna vodhum gada-bhritah

"O saintly lady, we do not desire dominion over the earth, the sovereignty of the King of heaven, unlimited facility for enjoyment, mystic power, the position of Lord Brahma, immortality, or even attainment of the kingdom of God. We simply desire to carry on our heads the glorious dust of Lord Krishna's feet, enriched by the freagrance of kunkuma from His consort's bosom.

vraja-striyo yad vanchanti
pulindyas trina-virudhah gavash carayato gopah
pada-sparsham mahatmanah

"We desire the same contact with the Supreme Lord's feet that the young women of Vraja, the cowherd boys, and even the aborigine Pulinda women desire-the touch of the dust He leaves on the plants and grass as He tends His cows.*

This verse means: "O saintly lady, we do not desire dominion over the earth, or any other material benefit." Here the word "samrajyam" means "a kingdom on the earth", "svarajyam" means "the kingdom of Indra", "bhojyam" means "the pleasures available in these two kingdoms", "vairajyam" means "mystic powers", "and "parameshthyam" means "the kingdom of Lord Brahma". "Anantyam" here means "the limitless happiness one attains by realizing the Supreme Personality of Godhead". This limitless happiness is described in the Taittiriya Upanishad (2.8.2-9), where the different levels of human happiness, each level of happiness a hundred times greater than the one below is described. The highest of these levels of happiness is found in realizing the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In Taittiriya Upanishad (2.8.9) that limitless happiness is described. That is the meaning here. What more may be said? The queens say: "We do not desire (na kamayamahe) to stay near Lord Hari (shri-hareh padam)." Someone may ask: "Then what do you desire to attain?" To this question the queens answer: "We desire to carry (vodhum) on our heads (murdhna) the dust of the glorious feet (shrimat-pada-rajah) of our master, all-knowing Lord Krishna (gada-bhritah). Further, we desire to attain the great treasure present in that dust, the treasure that is the fragrance of kunkuma from the goddess of fortune's breast (shriyah kuca-kunkuma-gandhadhyam)."

Here someone may protest: "O queens, first you say you do not desire to attain Lord Hari's feet, and then you say you want to hold the dust of His feet on your heads, dust rich with the fragrance of kunkuma from the goddess of fortune's breast. Why do you contradict your own words? If Rukmini, the goddess of fortune, desires, then you will certainly attain your desire. Then you will indeed attain the dust of the Lord's feet, dust rich with kunkuma from the most exalted goddess of fortune's breast. But first please clearly tell us what it is that you desire."

The answer to this protest is found in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.83.43, where the feet of Lord Krishna (not Lord Narayana) are specifically described. The dust of Lord Krishna's feet are also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.17):

purnah pulindya urugaya. . .

"The aborigine women of the Vrindavana area become disturbed by lust when they see the grass marked with reddish kunkuma powder. Endowed with the color of Krishna's lotus feet, this powder originally decorated the breasts of His beloveds, and when the aborigine women smear it on their faces and breasts, they give up all their anxiety."

In these quotes it is seen that the gopis of Vraja yearned to attain (yad vanchanti) the dust of Lord Krishna's feet. The present tense is used here (vanchanti) on the assumption that even today the gopis are not truly separated from Lord Krishna. By mentioning the aborigine girls, the queens hint (in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.83.43) that they themselves should also be qualified to attain the dust of Lord Krishna's feet. Here the words "trina-virudhah" mean the durva grass and other plants". The fragrances of the kunkuma from the goddess of fortune's breast is never absent from Lord Krishna's feet. That is the idea here. Here the word "gavah" means "cows", "carayatah" means "herding", The cowherd boys (gopah) are only briefly mentioned here. Although many cowherd boys, such as the priya-sakhas and narma-sakhas, are very close friends of Lord Krishna, because they are males an elaborate description of them here in the midst of a discussion of the gopis is not appropriate. Even famous Goddess Lakshmi cannot attain Lord Krishna's feet, although she aspires to. This is confirmed in the Naga-patnis' prayers in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.16.36 and also in the words of Uddhava in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.62. Not even the famous Goddess Rukmini can attain the same kind of association with Lord Krishna, for her association with Him is in a different time and place. Therefore Rukmini cannot hope to associate with Lord Krishna as the gopis of Vraja do. The superior status of the gopis is confirmed in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.60. Of Queen Rukmini it is said the Matsya Purana:

rukmini dvaravatyam tu
radha vrindavane vane

"She who is Rukmini in Dvaraka is also Radha in Vrindavana Forest."

Vedanta-sutra (1.1.30) and the Ahangrahopasana-sastras declare that the demigod Indra and Goddess Durga are in one sense not different from the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In the same way, in one sense Shri Radha is not different from Goddess Lakshmi. The difference is that Shri Radha is the original and complete form of Goddess Lakshmi. This is confirmed in the following words of the Brihad-Gautamiya Tantra:

devi krishnamayi prokta radhika. . .

"The transcendental goddess Shrimati Radharani is the direct counterpart of Lord Shri Krishna. She is the central figure for all the goddesses of fortune. She possesses all the attractiveness to attract the all-attractive Supreme Personality of Godhead. She is the primeval internal potency of the Lord."*

In the Bahv-rik-parishishta it is said of Shri Radha:

radhaya madhavo devo
madhavanaiva radhika

"Lord Krishna always stays with Shri Radha. Shri Radha always stays with Lord Krishna."

When she appears as Shri Radha, the goddess of fortune is most glorious. That is confirmed by these words. It is also confirmed by the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.28), which refer to Shri Radha:

anayaradhito nunam
bhagavan. . .

"Certainly this particular gopi has perfectly worshiped the all-powerful Personality of Godhead, Govinda, since He was so pleased with Her that He abandoned the rest of us and brought Her to a secluded place."

The following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.11) also refer to Shri Radha:

apy ena-patny upagatah. . .

"O friend, wife of the deer, has Lord Acyuta been here with His beloved, bringing great joy to your eyes? Indeed, blowing this way is the fragrance of His garland of kunda flowers, which was smeared with the kunkuma from the breasts of His girlfriend when He embraced Her."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.83.41-43 the Dvaraka queens say: "As the gopis yearn to touch Lord Krishna's feet, so do we." They pray: "May the fragrance of the ecstatic love the gopis' feel be manifest in us." The Dvaraka queens do not desire only to attain the dust of Lord Krishna's feet. They desire to touch His feet also. Thus the words "vayam kamayamahe" may refer to the desire expressed in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.83.42 or the desire expressed in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.83.43. Thus the Dvaraka queens' request may be either "We desire to touch Lord Krishna's feet." or "We desire to touch the dust of Lord Krishna's feet." Either way, the same result is attained. Therefore these two requests are not truly different. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.83.42 the word "etasya" refers to Lord Krishna. What is Lord Krishna's nature? In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.83.43 it is said that Lord Krishna is "mahatmanah". In that word "maha" means "He who is naturally the greatest of all", and "atmanah" means "He whose nature is filled with handsomeness and all other virtues". Lord Krishna's handsomeness and virtues are seen in these words spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.6):

tatratishushubhe tabhir
bhagavan. . .

"In the midst of the dancing gopis, Lord Krishna appeared most brilliant, like an exquisite sapphire in the midst of golden ornaments."

The Shrimad-Bhagavatam verses 10.83.41-43 quoted in the beginning of this anucheda were spoken by the Dvaraka queens to Draupadi.

Anuccheda 109

Shri Radha-devi is described in these words of the Adi Purana:

trailokye prithivi dhanya
tatra vrindavanam punah tatrapa gopikah partha
tatra radhabhidha mama

"O Partha, the earth planet is the most fortunate place in the three worlds, for Vrindavana forest, the gopis, and My beloved who bears the name Radha all stay there."

Shri Radha-devi is AGAIN described in these words of the Padma Purana, Karttika-mahatmya:

yatha radha priya vishnos tasyah kundam priyam tatha sarva-gopishu saivaika
vishnor atyanta-vallabha

"Just as Shrimati Radharani is dear to the Supreme Lord Krishna (Vishnu), so Her bathing place (Radha-kunda) is equally dear to Krishna. Among all the gopis, She alone stands supreme as the Lord's most beloved."*

Shri Radha's love is the greatest. This is confirmed in the following words of the Agni Purana, Vasana-bhashya:

gopyah papracchur ushasi krishnanucaram uddhavam hari-lila-viharamsh ca tatraikam radhikam vina radha tad-bhava-samlina
vasanaya viramita

"At dawn the gopis asked Krishna's servant Uddhava to describe how Krishna was enjoying pastimes without Shri Radha. At that moment, overcome with love and yearning to be with Krishna, Shri Radha fainted."

Here the words "vasanaya viramita" indicate that Shri Radha was in the ninth state of consciousness. In other words, She was completely overcome. She had no power to continue. That Shri Radha is the best of the gopis is seen in the following words describing the rasa-dance pastime in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.27):

kasyah padani. . .

"Here we see the footprints of some gopi who must have been walking along with the son of Nanda Maharaja. He must have put His arm on Her shoulder, just as an elephant rests His trunk on the shoulder of an accompanying she-elephant."

These words describe Shri Radha's supreme good fortune. Shri Radha's name is indirectly uttered in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.28):

anayaradhito nunam
bhagavan harir ishvarah
yan no vihaya govindah
prito yam anayad rahah

"Certainly this particular gopi has perfectly worshiped (aradhita) the all-powerful Personality of Godhead, Govinda, since He was so pleased with Her that He abandoned the rest of us and brought Her to a secluded place."

Here the words "anaya bhagavan radhitah" mean "Shri Radha brought the Supreme Personality of Godhead under Her control". The word "nunam" here is used in the sense of making a guess. Within the word "aradhitah" (worshiped) in this verse the name Radha is hidden. The result of Radha's worshiping Krishna is given in the words beginning with "yan na", the words that say: "He was so pleased with Her that He abandoned the rest of us and brought Her to a secluded place." Here the word "govindah" refers to Lord Krishna, the king of Gokula. This verse was spoken by the vraja-gopis.

Anuccheda 110

The different levels of gopis who love the Supreme Lord in the mood of sweetness, levels that culminate in the love felt by Shri Radha, who has no equal or superior, will be described in this anuccheda. Considering its causes and effects, scholars learned in ordinary material poetry call this kind of love "sthaiy-bhava" (continuous ecstatic love). The causes of sthaiy-bhava are vibhava, anubhava, and vyabhicari-bhava. These bhavas are all part of priti (ecstatic love). Sthayi-bhava is described in these words of the rasa-shastra:

viruddhair aviruddhair va bhavair vicchidyate na yah atma-bhavam nayaty anyan
sa sthayi lavanakah

"Ecstatic love that is not diminished by favorable or unfavorable situations is called sthayi-bhava, which is love deep like an ocean."

Vibhava and the other parts of love will be discussed later in this book. When sthayi-bhava and its causes are manifest in the context of ecstatic love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavat-priiti), then they are called "bhagavat-priitimaya-rasa", or "bhakti-rasa" (the mellows of devotional service). That the bhavas thus become the rasas is described in the following words of the rasa-shastra:

bhava evabhisampannah
prayanti rasa-rupatam

"The bhavas become the rasas."

Because they do not have the ingredients (samagri) of the true rasas, the poets who relish the material rasas (prakrita-rasikas) do not desire to taste the rasas of devotional service (bhakti-rasa). Their sphere of tasting the rasas is limited to the material demigods or other material persons. The samagris (ingredients of the rasas) are of three kinds: 1. svarupa-yuogyata samagri, 2. parikara-yogyata samagri, and 3. purusha-yogyata samagri. The svarupa-yuogyata samagris are the ingredients of sthayi-bhava, rati and other sentiments when they are manifest in the material rasas. These sentiments are based on the individual soul's desire to attain happiness for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, that love brings happiness much greater than the waves of happiness attained by realizing the impersonal Brahman. Persons in material consciousness cannot understand those sentiments, which are called yogyata samagri. Only spiritual poets and philosophers can understand those spiritual sentiments. These sentiments are very beautiful and wonderful. The spiritual sentiments felt by Shri Prahlada and the other great devotees are called purusha-yogyata samagri. Material poets and philosophers who are not qualified like the great devotees cannot understand these sentiments. This is described in the following words of Sahitya-darpana (3.2):

punyavantah pamanvanti
yogi-vad rasa-santatim

"Only saintly devotees can understand the spiritual rasas."

It is also said in Sahitya-darpana (3.8):

na jayate tad-asvado
vina rati-adi-vasanam

"Without rati (attraction) and the other sentiments, the taste of the rasas is not manifest."

In the material rasas one tastes the pleasure of one's own happiness. This is described in the following words of Sahitya-darpana (3.2):

sattvodrekad akhanda-svaprakashananda-cin-mayah
vedyantara-sparsha-shunyo

"When the mode of goodness becomes very strong, then limitless spiritual bliss becomes manifest. When one tastes the bliss of the Supreme, then even the touch of knowledge of anything else becomes absent. Knowledge of the Supreme and unawareness of anything else are like two brothers.

lokottara-camatkara-pranah kaishcit pramatribhih sakaravad abhinnatvenayam asvadyate rasah

"Some great souls know the spiritual wonders beyond the reach of this world. They taste the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, whose form is spiritual."

Pure spiritual goodness (aprakrita-vishuddha-sattva) enables one to taste the spiritual rasas. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.3.23):

sattvam vishuddham vasudeva-shabditam. . .

"I am always engaged in offering obeisances to Lord Vasudeva in pure Krishna consciousness. Krishna consciousness is always pure consciousness (vishuddha-sattva), in which the Supreme Personality of Godhead, known as Vasudeva, is revealed without any covering."*

Spiritual pure goodness has already been described in the Bhagavat-sandarbha. That the taste of rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is sweeter than the taste of realizing the impersonal Brahman is confirmed in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.9.10):

ya nirvrittis tanu-bhritam. . .

"My Lord, the transcendental bliss derived from meditating upon Your lotus feet or hearing about Your glories from pure devotees is so unlimited that it is far beyond the stage of brahmananda, wherein one thinks oneself merged in the impersonal Brahman as one with the Supreme."*

This truth is also confirmed by the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.48):

natyantikam viganayanty api te prasadam. . .

"Persons who are very expert and most intelligent in understanding things as they are engage in hearing narrations of the auspicious activities and pastimes of the Lord, which are worth chanting and worth hearing. Such persons do not care even for the highest material benediction, namely liberation, to say nothing of less important other benedictions like the material happiness of the heavenly kingdom."*

That the rasas of perceiving the Supreme Personality of Godhead are very wonderful is confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.2.12):

vismapanam svasya ca saubhagarddheh. . .

"The Lord appeared in the mortal world by His internal potency, yogamaya. He came in His eternal form, which is just suitable for His pastimes. These pastimes were wonderful for everyone, even for those proud of their own opulence, including the Lord Himself in His form as the Lord of Vaikuntha. Thus His (Shri Krishna's) transcendental body is the ornament of all ornaments."*

The great authors of the past, who knew everything about the spiritual and material rasas, have thoroughly explained this topic of rasa. Rasa was also described in a general way by the author of Shri Bhagavan-nama-kaumudi. The five rasas were explicitly described by Shrila Shridhara Svami in his commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.43.17). There he said the word "strinam" referred to shringara-rasa, "gopanam" referred to the sakha, priya-sakha, and narma-sakha friends of the Lord, among whom Shridama and many others are prominent, "pitroh" referred to the kind devotees in vatsalya-rasa, "yoginam" referred to the jnani-bhaktas in shanta-rasa, "vrishninam" referred to the devoteed Vrishnis, and "nrinam" referred to the people in general who loved the Lord. In this description all the rasas, beginning with shanta-rasa, are wonderfully described. The rasas are also explained by Dharma-datta in these words of Sahitya-darpana (3.2):

rase sarash camatkarah
saratrapy anubhuyate
tac-camatkara-saratve
saratrapy adbhuto rasah
tasmad adbhutam evaha
kriti narayano rasam

"Wonder is present everywhere in the rasas. The rasas are wonderful everywhere. Therefore, saintly Narayana dasa says: the rasas are wonderful."

Shrila Shridhara Svami does not show honor to the rasas like raudra-rasa (anger) felt by the wrestlers and others, for the persons in these rasas act like enemies of the Lord. The philosophers who know the truths of the spiritual rasas agree with this view. Some philosophers learned in the material rasas especially honor sakhya-rasa and vatsalya-rasa. Of this view it is said:

sneha-sthayi-bhava preyan

"The ecstasy of sthayi-bhava is manifest in sakhya-rasa."

Shringara-rasa is described in these words:

yad eva rocate mahyam tad eva kurute priya iti veti na janati

tat priyam yat karoti sa

"Whatever pleases me, my beloved does. I may be aware of her actions or not, but she always acts to please me."

Those words described the relationship of husband and wife. The following words describe sakhya-rasa:

sphutam camatkaritataya
vatsalam ca rasam viduh sthayi vatsalatasyeha
putrady-alambanam matam

"The sages know that vatsala-rasa is wonderful. In vatsala-rasa sthayi-bhava is manifest. Vatsala-rasa is the love one feels for children and others in a like position."

The sage Sudeva and others acknowledge vatsala-rasa as one of the bhakti-rasas. Furthermore, material rati (attraction) and the material rasas may bring pleasure in the beginning, but in the end they bring suffering. This the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself confirmed in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.19.41):

. . .sukham duhkha-sukhatyayah
duhkham kama-sukhapeksha

"Real happiness is to transcend material happiness and unhappiness, and real misery is to be implicated in searching for sex pleasure."

The Supreme (ord describes true peace in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.19.36):

shamo man-nishthata buddheh

"True peace is attained when one faithfully rests his intelligence in Me."

In these words the Supreme Lord criticizes material pleasures, which bring horrible results. Even the ordinary people of this world eventually come to hate material pleasures. Criticizing material so-called pleasures and praising the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Shri Narada explains in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.5.10-11):

na yad-vacash citra-padam harer yasho jagat-pavitram pragrinita karhicit tad vayasam tirtham ushanti manasa na yatra hamsa niramanty ushik-kshayah

"Those words which do not describe the glories of the Lord, who alone can sanctify the atmosphere of the whole universe, are considered by saintly persons to be like unto a pilgrimage for crows. Since the all-perfect persons are inhabitants of the transcendental abode, they do not derive any pleasure there.*

tad-vag-visargo janatagha-viplavo yasmin prati-shloka abaddhavaty api namany anantasya yasho 'nkitani yat shrinvanti gayanti grinanti sadhavah

"On the other hand, that literature which is full of descriptions of the transcendental glories of the name, fame, forms, pastimes, etc. of the unlimited Supreme Lord is a different creation, full of transcendental words directed toward bringing about a revolution in the impious lives of this world's misdirected civilization. Such transcendental literatures, even though imperfectly composed, are heard, sung, and accepted by purified men who are thoroughly honest."*

The material rasas are also rejected by Queen rukmini, who says in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.45):

tvak-shmashru-roma-nakha-kesha-pinaddham antar mamsasthi-rakta-kriimi-vit-kapha-pitta-vatam jivac-chavam bhajati kanta-matir vimudha ya te padabja-makarandam ajighrati stri

"A woman who fails to relish the fragrance of the honey of Your lotus feet becomes totally befuddled, and thus she accepts as her husband or lover a living corpse covered with skin, whiskers, nails, head-hair, and body hair, and filled with flesh, bones, blood, parasites, feces, mucus, bile, and air."*

Therefore one should not place his faith in the material rasas, for the material rasas always lead to a situation filled with horrors. The rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, on the other hand, lead to liberation from the material world. If the material rasas lead only to distress and the spiritual rasas lead to liberation, why then do the foolish people not relish the spiritual rasas? The answer is given in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.1.4):

nivritta-tarshair upagiyamanat. . .

"Glorification of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is performed in the parampara system. That is, it is conveyed from spiritual master to disciple. Such glorification is relished by those no longer interested in the false, temporary glorification of this cosmic manifestation. Descriptions of the Lord are the right medicine for the conditioned soul undergoing repeated birth and death. Therefore, who will cease hearing such glorification of the Lord except a butcher or one who is killing his own self?"

The sweetness of the spiritual rasas is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.19):

aspadanam gati-matam pulakas tarunam. . .

"When Lord Krishna plays on His flute, the sweet music causes the moving living entities to become stunned and the nonmoving trees to tremble in ecstasy. These things are certainly very wonderful."

The spiritual rasas of association with Lord Krishna brought the devotees back to life. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.17.15):

krishnam sametya labdheha
asan shushka naga api

"Having regained their vital functions, Yashoda, Rohini, Nanda and all the other cowherd women and men went up to Krishna. O descendant of Kuru, even the dried-up trees came back to life."

The Purana Shrimad-Bhagavatam teaches the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is confirmed by the following words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.1.3):

nigama-kalpa-taroh. . .

"O expert and thoughtful men, relish Shrimad-Bhagavatam, the mature fruit of the desire tree of Vedic literatures. It emanated from the lips of Shri Shukadeva Gosvami. Therefore this fruit has become even more tasteful, although its nectarean juice was already relishable for all, including liberated souls."*

This verse means: "O auspicious souls learned in the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, in your hearts please relish the Supreme Personality of Godhead, which is the sweet fruit of desire tree of the Vedas, a tree with many branches and sub-branches that bear all fruits, a tree that has come to this earth from the spiritual world of Vaikuntha." Here the word "aho" is used to hint that Shrimad-Bhagavatam enables one to attain what is otherwise unattainable. The scripture Shrimad-Bhagavatam is described here with the word "rasa" because it is sweet with the spiritual rasas. It is called Bhagavatam because it describes the rasas of love for Bhagavan (the Supreme Personality of Godhead). That Shrimad-Bhagavatam is filled with the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is described in these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.7.7):

yasyam vai shruyamanayam. . .

"Simply by giving aural reception to this Vedic literature (Shrimad-Bhagavatam), the feeling for loving devotional service to Lord Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, sprouts up at once to extinguish the fire of lamentation, illusion and fearfulness."*

The word "rasa" is used in relation to the Supreme Personality of Godhead in these words of Taittiriya Upanisad (2.7.1):

raso vai sah. rasam hy evayam labdhvanandi-bhavati.

"When one understands the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the reservoir of pleasure (rasa), Krishna, he actually becomes transcendently blissful."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.1.3 the word "rasikah" shows that the sages who attained perfection in ancient times as well as the sages who attained perfection in recent times knew the truth of the rasas. The word "galitam" shows that the fruit here is perfectly ripe and sweet. Here it is seen that because it has come from the tree of the scriptures, this fruit is very sweet and delicious. "Rasam" here shows that this fruit has neither skin nor pit. It has no defect in any way. The words "bhagavatam nigamasya" here show that Shrimad-Bhagavatam is the best of all the sacred fruits of the tree of the scriptures. This is so because it teaches the highest goal of life. Even though the nectar of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is naturally very excellent, it is made even more excellent in Shrimad-Bhagavatam. This is shown here by the word "shuka". Although the fruit of Shrimad-Bhagavatam is very wonderful because it has fallen from the kalpa-vriksha tree of the scriptures, it is made even more sweet and nectarean because it is touched by the mouth of Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami. When it touches Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami's mouth, that fruit becomes sweeter. When they come from the mouth of a great devotee, descriptions of the Supreme Personality of Godhead become sweeter. How much more is this true when such descriptions come from the mouth of Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami, the king of all great devotees? By tasting the nectar of Shrimad-Bhagavatam one will never become satiated. His desire to taste it will never become diminished. Therefore, even after attaining liberation (alayam), one should drink (pibata) the nectar of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. That even liberated souls are attracted to Shrimad-Bhagavatam is confirmed by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami in the following words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 2.1.9):

parinishthito 'pi. . .

"O saintly king, I was perfectly situated in transcendence, yet I was still attracted by the delineation of the pastimes of the Lord, who is described by enlightened verses."*

The sweetness of other things fades in the course of time. The sweetness of Shrimad-Bhagavatam is not like that. It does not fade. The reasons of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead are of two kinds: 1. priti-upayukta and 2. priti-parinama. These are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (12.3.14-15):

katha imas te kathita mahiyasam vitatya lokeshu yashah pareyusham vijnana-vairagya-vivakshaya vibho
vaco-vibhutih na tu paramarthiyam

"O mighty Pariksit, I have related to you the narrations of all these great kings, who spread their fame throughout the world and then departed. My real purpose was to teach transcendental knowledge and renunciation. Stories of kings lend power and opulence to these narrations but do not in themselves constitute the ultimate aspect of knowledge."

yas tutlama-shloka-gunanuvadah sangiyate 'bhikshnam amangala-ghnah tam eva nityam shrinuyad abhikshnam krishne 'malam bhaktim abhiksamanah

"The person who desires pure devotional service to Lord Krishna should hear the narrations of Lord Uttamashloka's glorious qualities, the constant chanting of which destroys everything inauspicious. The devotee should engage in such listening in regular daily assemblies and should also continue his hearing throughout the day."

After describing the rasas in a general way, Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami describes them in more detail in the word "amrita". "Amrita" here refers to the nectar of the Lord's pastimes, nectar described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (12.13.11):

hari-lila-katha-vrata-
mritanandita-sat-suram

"Shrimad-Bhagavatam is full of nectarean accounts of Lord Krishna's pastimes, which give ecstasy to the saintly devotees and demigods."

That narrations of Lord's pastimes are sweet is confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (12.4.40):

lila-katha-rasa-nishevanam. . .

"Narrations of Lord Krishna's pastimes are sweet like nectar."

In the word "sat-suram" from Shrimad-Bhagavatam 12.13.11, the word "sat" refers to the atmarama transcendentalists situated in Brahman realization, who are referred to by the word "satam" in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.12.11, and the word "suram" refers to the devotees who taste only the nectar of devotional service to the Lord. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.1.3 the word "amṛta-drava" means "the sweetest nectar of the Lord's pastimes". The following explanation may be given: Although the nectar of love (prītimaya-rasa) for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the sweetest of all nectars (śreyah), various levels of that nectar can certainly be distinguished. The taste of the nectar of the rasas, as described in the word "pibata" is of two kinds, the first of which is the rasas tasted by the Lord's personal associates who personally participate in the Supreme Lord's pastimes. This perception of the rasas is the best, because it is direct and confidential (antarāṅga). The other perception of the rasas is tasted by all others. It is indirect and not confidential (bahirāṅga). These two levels of the perception of the nectar of the rasas are both described here by the single word "pibata". This nectar is like a river flowing from the mouth of Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami. That Shrimad-Bhagavatam describes the sweetest nectar of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is confirmed by these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 12.13.15):

sarva-vedanta-saram hi. . .
. . . tad-rasamṛita-triptasya. . .

"Shrimad-Bhagavatam is declared to be the essence of all Vedānta philosophy. One who has felt satisfaction from its nectarean mellows will never be attracted by any other literature."

In His commentary Shrila Shridhara Svami defines the word "bhavukah" in this way:

" `Bhavukah' here means `they who are expert at meditating on the nectar rasas'."

This meditation is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.5.19):

smaran mukundanghry-upaguhnam punar
vidhatum icchen na rasa-graho janah

"A person who has once relished the taste of the lotus feet of the Lord can do nothing but remember that ecstasy again and again."*

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.1.3 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Vedavyasa.

Anuccheda 111

Thus joined with vibhava and its other components, the rasac of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead is manifest. They who are learned in the material rasas shown in dramas describe four kinds of characters. First is the hero who is primarily served by the rasa. He is the first character in the drama. Then there is the person who because of being limited, or because of fear or some other impediment, becomes a follower or servant of the hero. That person, the follower or servant, is the second kind of character. Then there is a person who, an ordinary person among the people in general who, because he is unintelligent and needs to accept instructions and orders, becomes a follower or servant of the hero. That follower or servant is the third kind of character. Can the follower or servant who is the second character not be intelligent? If he is he becomes the fourth kind of character. The devotees of the Lord taste the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In this way the rasas they taste are not material in nature. In this way the rasas of love present in the hearts of this hero and His servants and followers are eternal. They are perfect and complete. In this way it is demonstrated that the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead are limitless and spiritual in nature. They are not like the material rasas described in material poems. That is their nature. For example, it is seen that Shri Prahlada, the vraja-gopis, and many other devotees were completely unaffected by fear, and Shri Vrtra, Shri Gajendra, Shri Bharata, and other devotees were completely unaffected by the actions of their previous births. What more need be said? Shri Shukadeva Gosvami and other devotees were completely unaffected by the bliss of impersonal Brahman realization. In these ways it should be known that the love they felt for the Supreme Personality of Godhead was certainly spiritual in nature. It was not material. Here the alambana (main cause of feeling the rasa of love) is the Supreme Lord's opulences, glories, and virtues, which have no equal or superior. The personal associates of the Lord have spiritual qualities like the Lord's. This truth is proclaimed by the great dundubhi drums that are the Vedas, Puranas, and other scriptures. The uddipanas (secondary causes of feeling the rasa of love) are the things in relation to the Lord. These secondary causes of rasa are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.43):

tasyaravinda-nayanasya . .
. . .cakara tesham
sankshobham akshara-jusham api citta-tanvoh

"When the breeze carrying the aroma of tulasi leaves from the toes of the lotus feet of the Supreme Personality of Godhead entered the nostrils of those sages, they experienced a change both in body and in mind, even though they were attached to the impersonal Brahman understanding."*

The Supreme Lord's handsomeness as a cause of rasa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.44.14):

gopyas tapah kim acarān. . .

"What austerities must the gopis have performed! With their eyes they always drink the nectar of Lord Krishna's form, which is the essence of loveliness and is not to be equaled or surpassed. That loveliness is the only abode of beauty, fame, and opulence. It is self-perfect, ever fresh and extremely rare.*

The causes of rasa are also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.40):

ka śtry anga. . .
. . .yad go-dvija-druma-mrigaḥ pulakany abibhran

"Dear Krishna, what woman in all the three worlds wouldn't deviate from religious behavior when bewildered by the sweet, drawn-out melody of Your flute? Your beauty makes all three worlds auspicious. Indeed, even the cows, birds, trees and deer manifest the ecstatic symptom of bodily hair standing on end when they see Your beautiful form."

Lord Krishna's flute-music as a cause of rasa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.14-15):

vividha-gopa-carāneshu vidagdhaḥ. . .

. . .savanashas tad upadharya sureshaḥ śakra-sarva-paramēśthi-purogaḥ kavaya anata-kandhara-cittāḥ kaśmalaṁ yayur anishcita-tattvaḥ

"O pious mother Yashoda, your son, who is expert in all the arts of herding cows, has invented many new styles of flute-playing. When He takes His flute to His bimba-red lips and sends forth the tones of the harmonic scale in variegated melodies, Brahma, Siva, Indra and other chief demigods become confused upon hearing the sound. Although they are the most learned authorities, they cannot ascertain the essence of that music, and thus they bow down their heads and hearts."*

That the accidental manifestation of one of the Lord's potencies can become a cause of spiritual rasa is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.20.31):

pravrit-śhriyam ca tam vikshya sarva-kala-sukhavaham bhagavan puṣyam cakre
atma-śhakti-upabrimhitam

"Observing the beauty and opulence of Vrindavana's rainy season, a perennial source of great happiness, the Lord offered all respect to that season, which was expanded from His own internal potency."

Here the clouds and other features of the rainy season bring ecstatis symptoms, like standing up of the body's hairs.

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.19):

aspendanam gati-matam pulakas tarunam

"When Lord Krishna plays on His flute, the sweet music causes the moving living entities to become stunned and the nonmoving trees to tremble with ecstasy. These things are certainly very wonderful."

Here even the trees and other like living entities wonderfully become like human beings. Even grief and other like emotions can help one taste the spiritual rasas. In that greif it is said there may come madness or other like conditions caused by sorrow and by separation from the Lord. These emotions can certainly be manifest on the spiritual platform. The spiritual world is described in these words of Brahma-samhita (5.56-57):

shriyah kantah kantah parama-purushah kalpa-taravo druma bhumish cintamani-gana-mayi toyam amritam katha ganam natyam gamanam api vamshi priya-sakhi cid-anandam jyotih param api tad asvadyam api ca sa yatra kshirabdhiih sravati surabhibhyash ca su-mahan nimeshardhakhyo va vrajati na hi yatrapam samayah bhaje shvetadvipam tam aham iha golokam iti yam vidantas te santah kshiti-virala-carah katipaye

"I worship thyat transcendental seat, known as Shvetadvipa, where as loving consorts the Lakshmis in their unalloyed spiritual essence practice the amorous service of the Supreme Lord Krishna as their only lover, where every tree is a transcendental purpose tree, where the sopil is the purpose gem, all water is nectar, every word is a song, every gait is a dance, the flute is the favorite attendant, effulgence is full of transcendental bliss, and the supreme spiritual entities are all enjoyable and tasty, where numberless milk cows always emit transcendental oceans of milk, where there is eternal existence of transcendental time, who is ever-present and without past or future and hence is nto subject to the quality of passing away even for the space of half a moment. That realm is known nas Goloka only to a very few self-realized souls in this world."

Here the words "ganam natyam" refer to the rasas. The causes that create the rasas of love for the supreme hero, Lord Krishna, rasas that are spiritual and have many spiritual qualiaities, are called vibhavas. The vibhavas are described in these words of Sahitya-darpana (3.13):

vibhavanam raty-ader visheshenasvadankura-yogyatanayanam. anubhavanam evam-bhutasya raty-adeh samantaram eva rasadi-rupataya bhavanam. sancaranam tatha-bhutasya tasyaiva samyak caranam.

"Vibhava makes rati and the other aspects of rasas first appear as a new sprout. Coming after vibhava, anubhava enables one to directly perceive the nature of rasa. Then sancari-bhava makes the rasas become active."

Even material poets who know the material rasas say that happiness can arise out of sorrow. We also say that spiritual bliss can arise even out of separation from the Lord. Externally the devotee separated from the Lord may seem to be sorrowful. However, during the anguish of separation the supremely blissful Lord is always manifest in the devotee's thoughts. Therefore the devotee is also filled with intense spiritual bliss. In such a situation it is not possible for the devotee to avoid those two emotions of anguish and bliss. These two emotions do not contradict each other. Rather they are like sweetened hot milk placed before a hungry person. The two features of sweetness and heat do not negate each other. Rather they compliment each other. In this way the anguish of separation from the Lord is actually the cause of intense spiritual bliss, just as the shining of the moon and stars is a source of pleasure. Because it is nourished by the memory of the bliss of directly associating with the Supreme Lord, the anguish of separation brings bliss with it. In that state of separation the karuna-rasa (the rasa of a pitiable condition) is manifest. At that time the devotee yearns to be with the Lord. In this way the manifestation of the rasas of love for their supreme hero, Lord Krishna, is described. The rasas arise in two primary ways: 1. the love (anuraga) created by hearing, and 2. the love created by seeing. These are both described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.90.26):

shruta-matro 'pi yah strinam prasahyakarshate manah uru-gayoru-gito va
pashyantnam ca kim punah

"The Lord, whom countless songs glorify in countless ways, forcibly attracts the minds of all women who simply hear about Him. What to speak, then, of those women who see Him directly?"

The arising of the rasa of love for the Lord is described by Uddhava in the following two verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.6.44-45):

tava vikriditam brahman. . .

"My dear Krishna, Your pastimes are supremely auspicious for mankind and are an intoxicating beverage for the ears. Tasting such pastimes, people forget their desires for other things.

"My dear Lord, You are the Supreme Soul, and thus You are most dear to us. We are Your devotees, and how can we possibly reject You or live without You for even a moment? Whether we are lying down, sitting, walking, standing, bathing, enjoying recreation, eating, or doing anything else, we are constantly engaged in Your service."

The anukarta, or follower or servant of the Lord is thus a devotee of the Lord. Non-devotees cannot become followers or servants of the Lord. The rasas of love for the Lord arise amongst the devotees. Here the word "anukarta" should not be interpreted to mean "imitator". It is not possible for the individual spirit souls to imitate the actions of the Lord. The attempt to imitate the Lord is against the principles of devotional service. The devotees associate with the Lord and directly perceive Him, but they never become one with Him. In this way the uddipanas of the rasas, which arouse the devotees' love, enhance the Lord's pastimes. If the pure devotees sometimes imitate the Lord, the devotees always think, "the Lord is mine". They never think, "I have become the Lord. I am the Lord." That kind of imitation is seen in Vasudeva's son Gada and the Lord's other brothers, who think themselves the Lord's equal. Their sentiments are not against the principles of devotional service. The ordinary (samajika) devotees yearn to attain such a glorious position. In drishya-kavyas (staged dramas), the audience sees with their eyes and meditates on the rasas. In shravya-kavyas (recited narrative poems), the audience hears the descriptions of the Lord. In this way the audience meditates on the Lord. The sprout of rati (attraction to the Lord) arises within them. They attain great love (prema) for the Lord. Melodies in the sixth note may also be a cause (uddipana) of rasa. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.5.22):

svara-brahmani nirbhata-hrishikesha-padambuje akhandam cittam aveshya
lokan anucaran munih

"The seven musical notes-sa, ri, ga, ma, pa, dha, and ni-are used in musical instruments, but originally they come from the Sama Veda. The great sage Narada vibrates sounds describing the pastimes of the Supreme Lord. By such transcendental vibrations such as Hare Krishna, Hare Krishna, Krishna Krishna, Hare Hare, Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare,, he fixes his mind at the lotus feet of the Lord. Thus he directly perceives Hrishikesha, the master of the senses. After delivering the Haryashvas, Narada Muni continued traveling throughout the planetary systems, His mind always fixed at the lotus feet of the Lord."*

Prema and the other kinds of ecstatic love (bhavas) create the samagris (ingredients of rasa). This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.4.39-41):

kvacid rudati vaikunthacinta-shabala-cetasah. . .

. . .kvacid utpulkas tushnim
aste samsparsha-nirvritah aspanda-pranayanandasalilamilitekshanah

"Because of advancement in Krishna consciousness, he sometimes cried, sometimes laughed, sometimes expressed jubilation, and sometimes sang loudly.*

"Sometimes, upon seeing the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Prahlada Maharaja would loudly call in full anxiety. He sometimes lost his shyness in jubilation and began dancing in ecstasy, and sometimes, being fully absorbed in thoughts of Krishna, he felt oneness and imitated the pastimes of the Lord.*

"Sometimes, feeling the touch of the Lord's lotus hands, he became spiritually jubilant and remained silent, his hairs standing on end and tears gliding down from his half-closed eyes because of his love for the Lord."*

Materialists who relish the material rasas are attracted by something that is imperfect and incomplete. Persons who taste the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavat-priiti-rasika) are of two kinds: 1. the devotees who directly participate in the Lord's pastimes (tadiya-lilantah-pati), and 2. the devotees who aspire to participate in the Lord's pastimes (tadiya-lilantah-patitabhimana). Because of their past devotional activities, the devotees in the first group attained the Lord's direct association. The devotees in the second group are of two kinds: 1. the devotees who hear description of the Lord's pastimes with His personal associates, and 2. the devotees who hear descriptions of the Lord's sweetness and other transcendental qualities. If a devotee in the first of these two groups desires in the same way the personal associates of the Lord desire, then that devotee eventually becomes the Lord's personal associate. Then that devotee attains the vibhavas and other elements of rasas manifest in a personal associate of the Lord. How the gopis think is seen in the following words of Sahitya-darpana (3.12):

parasya na parasyeti
na mameti mameti ca
tad-asvade vibhavadeh
paricchedo na vidyate

"My beloved may be another's husband, or He may not be another's husband. He may be my husband, or he may not be my husband. When I taste the vibhavas and other elements of the rasas of love for Him, it makes no difference to me if He is my husband or not."

If a devotee desires in a way different from the way the Lord's personal associates desire, then that devotee attains vibhava, anubhava, and sancari-bhava that are generally ordinary in nature. Even when the uddipanas (which arouse the feelings of rasa) are present, that devotee does not perceive the sweetness of rasa. If a devotee desires in a way that opposes the way the Lord's personal associates desire, then, even if the uddipanas of vatsalya-rasa and the other rasas are present, that devotee will not perceive the different bhavas (ecstasies of love), nor will he perceive the sweetness of rasa. Now we will discuss the devotees who hear descriptions of the Lord's sweetness and other transcendental qualities. These devotees are independent like the Lord's personal associates who participate in the Lord's pastimes. These devotees have the power to perceive the sweetness of rasa. Now the perfection of the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead will be considered. When love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavat-priti) is mixed with the vibhavas and other elements of rasa, the result is the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavat-pritimaya-rasa). This is described in the following words of Sahitya-darpana (3.15):

yatha khanda-maricadinam sammelanad apurva iva kashcid asvadah prapanaka-rase sanjayate. vibhavadi-sammelanad ihapi tatha.

"As sugar, black pepper, and other ingredients make a drink delightful for the tongue, so the vibhavas and other elements of rasa make the rasas delightful to taste."

The sweetness of the Lord is counted among the uddipanas, the secondary elements that help one to taste the spiritual rasas. The Supreme Lord Himself is the alambana, the primary element that enables one to taste the spiritual rasas. The alambanas and uddipanas are described in these words of Agni Purana:

vibhavyate hi rati-ader yatra yena vibhavyate vibhavo nama sa devdha-lambanoddipanatmakah

"Vibhava enables one to perceive rati and the other elements of rasa. Vibhava is of two kinds: 1.

alambana, and 2. uddipana."

The alambana may be of two kinds: 1. Lord Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is dearly loved by the devotees, and 2. the Lord's devotees, who are filled with love for Him. These two kinds of alambanas are indicated in Sanskrit by use of the locative case. Lord Krishna as the alambana is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.24.65):

yasyananam makara-kundala. . .

"Krishna's face is decorated with ornaments, such as earrings resembling sharks. His ears are beautiful, His cheeks brilliant, and His smiling attractive to everyone. Whoever sees Lord Krishna sees a festival. His face and body are fully satisfying for everyone to see."*

Lord Krishna as the alambana is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.44.14):

gopyas tapah kim acaran yad amushya rupam

"What austerities must the gopis have performed! With their eyes they always drink the nectar of Lord Krishna's form, which is the essence of loveliness and is not to be equaled or surpassed. That loveliness is the only abode of beauty, fame, and opulence. It is self-perfect, ever fresh and extremely rare."*

As long as Lord Krishna's sweetness is not manifest, the individual soul will see his own self as the most dear and lovable being in the whole world. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.27):

prana-buddhi-manah-svatmadarapatya-dhanadayah yat-samparkat priya asams
tatah ko nv aparah priyah

"It is only by contact with the self that one's vital breath, intelligence, mind, friends, body, wife, children, wealth and so on are dear. Therefore what object can possibly be more dear than one's own self?"

In this verse the word "sva" means "the pure soul", "atma" means "the material body", and "yat-samparkat" means "because of my contact with that". This verse implies: "As a spirit soul I am full of spiritual bliss. Therefore I am dear to myself." This verse also implies: "Because I am His part-and-parcel, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the Supersoul in my heart, is also dear to me." This verse also implies: "The things in relation to me are also dear to me." Thus the vital breath and other things are dear because of their relation to the soul. Even when He appears in many different forms, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is always dear to the individual soul. This is seen in the following words spoken by Lord Balarama in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.13.36):

kim etad adbhutam iva vasudeve'khilatmani

vrajasya satmanas tokeshv
apurvam prema vardhate

"What is this wonderful phenomenon? The affection of all the inhabitants of Vraja, including Me, toward these boys and calves is increasing as never before, just like our affection for Lord Krishna, the Supersoul of all living entities."*

Lord Krishna's own form is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.22):

shyamam hiranya-paridhim vanamalya-barhadhatu-pravala-nata-vesham anuvratamse vinyasta-hastam itarena dhunanam abjam
karnotpala-laka-kapola-mukhabja-hasam

"His complexion was dark blue and His garment golden. Wearing a peacock feather, colored minerals, sprigs of flower buds, and a garland of forest flowers and leaves, He was dressed just like a dramatic dancer. He rested one hand upon the shoulder of a friend and the with the other twirled a lotus. Lilies graced His ears, His hair hung down over His cheeks, and His lotuslike face was smiling."

The words of this verse imply: "Will you not become wonderfully attracted to these features of Lord Krishna?" Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.23.27, quoted in this anuccheda, was spoken by Lord Krishna to the yajna-patnis.

Anuccheda 112

The devotees dear to the Lord are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.18.13):

tulayama lavenapi. . .

"The value of a moment's association with the devotee of the Lord cannot be compared to the attainment of heavenly planets or liberation from matter, and what to speak of worldly benedictions in the form of material prosperity, which are for those who are meant for death."*

In this way it is seen that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the object of love (vishaya) and He is also the primary cause (alambana) that makes the devotees fall in love with Him. By following the path that begins with hearing about the Lord, the devotees attain love (priti) for Him. The word "vishaya" may mean either the person who loves or the person who is loved. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.16.5-6):

tat kathyatam maha-bhaga
yadi krishna-kathashrayam athavasya padambhojamakaranda-liham satam

"Please describe all these incidents if they relate to the topics of Lord Krishna. The devotees of the Lord are accustomed to licking up the honey available from the lotus feet of the Lord."*

By associating with the Supreme Lord, one falls in love with Him. In this way the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the primary cause (alambana) of ecstatic love for Him. The secondary causes (uddipana) of ecstatic love are different. The Lord's dear devotees, who are of two kinds, namely the devotees who have the same desire (savasana) and the devotees who have different desires (bhinna-vasana), are also objects (vishaya) of ecstatic love. The devotees are also the reservoirs of love (adhara) for the Lord. However, one's material friends and kinsmen are not the causes of attaining love of Lord Krishna. Indeed, the devotees do not pray to attain love for their friends and kinsmen. Rather they pray only to love the Supreme Lord. That they do not pray to attain love for their friends and kinsmen is seen in these words of Queen Kunti in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.8.41):

atha vishvesha vishvatman vishva-murte sva-kesu me
sneha-pasham imam chindhi
dridham pandusu vrisnisu

"O Lord of the universe, soul of the universe, O personality of the form of the universe, please, therefore, sever my tie of affection for my kinsmen, the Pandavas and the Vrishnis."*

Anuccheda 113

The love the devotees pray to attain is described in these words of Queen Kunti in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.8.42):

tvayi me 'nanya-vishaya
matir madhu-pate'sakrt ratim udvahatad addha
gangevaugham udanvati

"O Lord of Madhu, as the Ganges forever flows to the sea without hindrance, let my attraction be constantly drawn unto You without being diverted to anyone else."*

Anuccheda 114

The love the devotees accept (angikara) is described in these words of Queen Kunti in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.8.43):

shri-krisna krisna-sakha vrishny-rsabhavani-dhrug-rajanya-vamsha-dahananapavarga-virya govinda go-dvija-surarti- haravatara yogeshvarakhila-guro bhagavan namas te

"O Krishna, O friend of Arjuna, O chief amongst the descendants of Vrishni, You are the destroyer of those political parties which are disturbing elements on this earth. Your prowess never deteriorates. You are the proprietor of the transcendental abode, and You descend to relieve the distresses of the cows, the brahmanas and the devotees. You possess all mystic powers, and You are the preceptor of the entire universe. You are the almighty God, and I offer You my respectful obeisances."

Here Kunti calls out to Krishna, addressing Him with names such as "O friend of Arjuna (Krishna-sakha). In this context Queen Kunti accepts a loving relationship with Arjuna and others because they are all filled with love for the Supreme Lord. These verses were spoken by Queen Kunti to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Krishna.

Anuccheda 115

Now we may consider these words spoken by Uddhava in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.29.39-40):

vriknash ca me su-dridhah sneha-pasho dasharha-vrishny-andhaka-satvateshu prasaritah shrishti-vivridhaye tvaya sva-mayaya hy atma-subodha-hetina

"The firmly binding rope of my affection for the families of the Dasharhas, Vrishnis, Andhakas, and Satvatas-a rope You originally cast over me by Your illusory energy for the purpose of developing Your creation-is now cut off by the weapon of transcendental knowledge of the self."

namo 'stu te maha-yogin prapannam anushadhi mam
yatha tvac-caranambhoje
ratih syad anapayini

"Obeisances unto You, O greatest of yogis. Please instruct me, who am surrendered unto You, how I may have undeviating attachment to Your lotus feet."

Here Uddhava says: "The rope of my affection for others in a bodily relationship with me, a rope You originally cast over me by Your illusory energy for the purpose of developing Your creation-is now cut off." How was that rope cut off? The answer is given in the words: "by the weapon of transcendental knowledge of the self." This means "by the weapon of knowledge of Your glory and attractiveness, which make the devotee fall in love (prity-utpada) with You". Uddhava's statement here that His affection for the Dasharhas, Vrishnis, Andhakas, and Satvatas is maya and his prayer that this affection be removed is a kind of self-delusion on Uddhava's part, for these kinsmen of his are all perfect liberated souls.

In the words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 0 1.8.41 quoted here, Queen Kunti thinks: "If Lord Krishna departs from Hastinapura, that will be inauspicious for the Pandavas, and if He does not depart from Hastinapura and return to Dvaraka that will be inauspicious for the Vrishnis. Her heart thus agitated by competing affections for these two sides of her family, Queen Kunti here prays that the affection she bears for her kinsmen be destroyed. The truth is that when she sees how the two sides of her family dearly love Lord Krishna, her own love for Lord Krishna increases. Therefore, the pretext of saying "Please destroy my affection for my kinsmen", Queen Kunti really prays: "Please do not leave the association of either of the two sides of my family." After Queen Kunti offered her prayers, Lord Krishna still prepared to depart. Shrila Suta Gosvami explains in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.8.45):

tam badham ity upamantrya. . .

"Thus accepting the prayers of Shrimati Kuntidevi, the Lord subsequently informed other ladies of His departure by entering the palace of Hastinapura. But upon preparing to leave, He was stopped by King Yudhishtim, who implored Him lovingly."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.29.39 Uddhava also prayed to attain Lord Krishna's association. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.29.39-40 was spoken by Uddhava.

Anuccheda 116

In the same way it is seen that Shri Devaki was affectionate to her six sons. Because of her affection for them, Lord Krishna kindly delivered them. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.85.54-56):

apayayat stanam prita
suta-sparsha-parisnutam mohita mayaya vishnor
yaya shrishtih pravartate

"Lovingly she let her sons drink from her breast, which became wet with milk just by their touch. She was entranced by the same illusory energy of Lord Vishnu that initiates the creation of the universe."

pitvamritam payas tasyah
pita-shesham gada-bhritah. . .
. . .yayur dhama divaukasam

"By drinking her nectarean milk, the remnants of what Krishna Himself had previously drunk, the six sons touched the transcendental body of Lord Narayana, and this contact awakened them to their original identities. They bowed down to Govinda, Devaki, their father, and Balarama, and then, as everyone looked on, they left for the abode of the demigods."

Here the words "mohita mayaya" mean that Devaki was bewildered into thinking her other six sons were in truth Lord Krishna's brothers. Now we will consider Rukmini's affection for Rukmi. For Rukmini's sake Lord Krishna, who wanted to see Rukmi mocked and humiliated, spared Rukmi. These activities were manifested by the Lord's pastime potency. Rukmini trembled with devotion. Still, the devotion in her heart was mixed with knowledge of the Lord's supreme power and opulence. That is why she addressed Him: "You are the supreme controller, and he is very lowly and fallen. Therefore, please do not mock and humiliate him. Therefore please be compassionate. O Lord, I take shelter of Your feet. I have a relationship with Your body. Please be merciful and give fearlessness to him." Aware of Lord Krishna's power and opulence, Rukmini spoke these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.54.33):

yogeshvaraprameyatman. . .

"O controller of all mystic power, immeasurable one, Lord of lords, master of the universe! O all-potential and mighty-armed one, please do not kill my brother!"

In the same way Lord Balarama became a partisan of His student Duryodhana. When Duryodhana was attacked, Lord Balarama became angry. A similar situation occurred during the kidnapping of Lakshmana. The Lord's pastime potency created these situations to increase the wonder and glory of the Lord's pastimes. Now the uddipanas will be considered. As Lord Krishna Himself, who is the alambana (the primary cause of relishing the rasas) is the cause of bhava and vibhava, so the uddipanas (secondary causes of relishing the rasas) are also the causes of bhava and vibhava. Included among the uddipanas are Lord Krishna's qualities, family, activities, paraphernalia, age, and form. The Supreme Lord's qualities are of three kinds: those in relation to His 1. body, 2. words, and 3. mind. None of the Lord's qualities are material. Lord Krishna Himself affirms this in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.13.40):

mam bhajanti gunah sarve
nirgunam nirapekshakam suhridam priyam atmanam
samyasangadayo 'gunah

" All superior transcendental qualities, such as being beyond the modes of nature, detached, the well-wisher, the most dear, the Supersoul, equally situated everywhere, and free from material entanglement-all such qualities, free from the transformations of material qualities, find their shelter and worshipable object in Me."

The qualities of Lord Krishna, who is the alambana (primary impetus for ecstatic love), are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.16.27-30):

satyam shaucam daya kshantis tyagah santosha arjavam shamo damas tapah samyam titikshoparatih shrutam

jnanam viraktir aishvaryam shauryam tejo balam smrtih svatantryam kaushalam kantir dhairyam mardavam eva ca pragalbhyam prashrayah shilam

saha ojo balam bhagah gambhiryam sthairyam astikyam kirtir mano'nahankrtih

ete canye ca bhagavan
nitya yatra maha-gunah prarthya mahattvam icchadbhir
na viyanti sma karhicit

"In Him (Lord Krishna) reside (1) truthfulness, (2) cleanliness, (3) intolerance of another's unhappiness, (4) the power to control anger, (5) self-satisfaction, (6) straightforwardness, (7) steadiness of mind, (8) control of the sense organs, (9) responsibility, (10) equality, (11) tolerance, (12) equanimity, (13) faithfulness, (14) knowledge, (15) absence of sense enjoyment, (16) leadership, (17) chivalry, (18) influence, (19) the power to make everything possible, (20) the discharge of proper duty, (21) complete independence, (22) dexterity, (23) fullness of all beauty, (24) serenity, (25) kindheartedness, (26) ingenuity, (27) gentility, (28) magnanimity, (29) determination, (30) perfection in all knowledge, (31) proper execution, (32) possession of all objects of enjoyment, (33) joyfulness, (34) immovability, (35) fidelity, (36) fame, (37) worship, (38) pridelessness, (39) being (as the Personality of Godhead), (40) eternity, and many other transcendental qualities which are eternally present and never to be separated from Him."*

In these verses the word "satyam" means "truthfulness", "shaucam" means "cleanliness", and "daya" means "intolerance of another's unhappiness". This means the Lord protects His devotees. He is the friend and well-wisher of His devotees. "Kshanti" means "power to control anger", "tyaga" means "generosity", "santosha" means "self-satisfaction", "arjavam" means "being without crookedness", and "shama" means "steadiness of mind". By this last quality the Lord is firm in vow. "Dama" means "being unaffected by the external senses", "tapah" means "in His lila-avatara as a kshatriya performing the appropriate religious duties", "samyam" means "not thinking one person is a friend and another person is an enemy", "titiksha" means "tolerance of others' offenses", "uparati" means "indifference to personal gain", "shrutam" means "being learned in the scriptures", "jnanam" means "the five kinds of knowledge: which are: 1. intelligence, 2. gratefulness, 3. being an appropriate judge of time and place, 4. being all-knowing, and 5. spiritual knowledge of the self", "virakti" means "not having a thirst to enjoy wicked pleasures", "aishvaryam" means "being a controller", "shauryam" means "ability to fight in battle", "tejah" means "power", and "balam" means "expertness". This last quality means the power to perform difficult deeds quickly. In some texts the word here is "dhrutih", which means "to remain unagitated even in distressing conditions". "Smriti" means "the power to know what should be done", "svatantryam" means "not being dependent on others", "kaushalam" means "three kinds of expertise: 1. expertise in performing activities, 2. expertise in performing two or more actions simultaneously, and 3. expertise in arts and playful activities", "kanti" means "handsomeness, which is of four kinds: 1. handsomeness of the various parts of the body, including the hands and other parts of the body, 2. handsomeness of color, taste, fragrance, touch, and sound, which means whatever touches His lips or feet becomes sweet like nectar, 3. handsomeness of the prime of youth, and 4. handsomeness that charms the hearts of beautiful women", "dhairyam" means "not becoming agitated", "mardavam" means "having a heart that melts with love", "pragalbhyam" means "brilliant genius, which brings eloquent speech", "prashraya" means "humbleness, which brings shyness, appropriate respect for all others, and speaking affectionate words", "shilam" means "good character, which makes one inclined to take shelter of a saintly devotee", "sahah" means "sharpness of intellect", "ojah" means "expert skill of the knowledge-acquiring senses", "balam" means "expert skill of the working senses", "bhaga" means "good fortune, which is of three kinds: 1. good fortune in enjoying sense objects, 2. good fortune in being happy, and 3. good fortune in possessing all wealth and opulence", "gambhiryam" means "being the reservoir of unknowable secrets", "sthairyam" means "being not fickle", "astikyam" means "seeing through the eyes of the scriptures", "kirti" means "being famous for one's virtues", "mana" means "being worshipable, and "anahankriti" means "freedom from pride". Here the word "ca" (and) hints that the Lord also has the qualities of being the well-wisher of the brahmanas, being served by all perfections, and having an eternal form filled with transcendental bliss. In this way the Supreme Lord has many glorious qualities (maha-gunah prarthya mahattvam icchadbhih). Lord Krishna has all other good qualities in the highest degree. All other persons have these good qualities only slightly and for a brief time. However Lord Krishna has them in fullness eternally. This is confirmed by the following words of Shrila Suta Gosvami in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.26:

nityam nirikshamananam
yad api dvarakaukasam na vitriypanti hi drishah
shriyo dhamangam acyutam

"The inhabitants of Dvaraka were regularly accustomed to look upon the reservoir of all beauty, the infallible Lord, yet they were never satiated."*

In this way the Supreme Lord's transcendental qualities are eternal (nityah). They never become diminished (na viyanti). The Lord's qualities are eternally present in His transcendental form. Some other (anye ca) qualities of the Lord, qualities the individual souls cannot attain include: 1. the power to attain anything simply by desiring it, 2. complete control over a host of inconceivable potencies, 3. being the sole resting place of perfect goodness, 4. being the protector of the worlds, 5. giving residence in the spiritual world to the enemies He kills, 6. being attractive to all liberated souls, 7. being served by Brahma, Shiva, and all the demigods and sages, 8. having a spiritual form in which inconceivable transcendental potencies reside, 9. having handsomeness and other glorious virtues that are limitless and eternally new and fresh, 10. in His forms as the purusha-avatars controlling the world of maya, 11. being the creator, maintainer, and destroyer of the material worlds, 12. being the seed from which the guna-avatars and other avatars have come, 13. the pores of whose body are the resting place of numberless material universes, 14. whose original form as the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavan) has all inconceivable potencies and all the transcendental qualities of Vasudeva, Narayana, and His other expansions, 15. in His original form as Lord Krishna He gives liberation and devotional service to the enemies He kills, 16. whose form and other features have a wonderful sweetness, 17. association with Him brings perfect bliss, a bliss beyond anything the material senses or mind can know.

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.16.27-30 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by the earth-goddess to Dharma.

Anuccheda 117

That the Supreme Lord's transcendental qualities are limitless is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.7):

gunatmanas te 'pi gunan vimatum hitavatirnasya ka ishire 'sya. . .

"In time, great scientists may be able to count all the atoms of the universe, all the stars and planets in the sky, and all the particles of snow, but who among them can count the unlimited transcendental qualities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead?"*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the demigod Brahma to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 118

By the Lord's inconceivable potency even mutually contradictory qualities reside within Him. This is known on the authority of scripture. In Vedanta-sutra (2.1.27) it is said:

shrutes tui shabda-mulativat

"The nature of the Supreme is known only by the revelation of scripture."

Some of these mutually contradictory features of the Lord are seen in the words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.43.17):

mallanam ashanih. . .

"The various groups of people in the arena regarded Krishna in different ways when He entered it with His elder brother. The wrestlers saw Krishna as a lightning bolt, the men of Mathura as the best of males, the women as Cupid in person, the cowherd men as their relative, the impious rulers as a chastiser, His parents as their child, the King of the Bhojas as death, the unintelligent as the Supreme Lord's universal form, the yogis as the Absolute Truth, and the Vrishnis as their supreme worshipable Deity."

The inconceivable power of the Lord is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.7.7):

shishor analpaka-pravala-mridv-anghri-hatam vyavartata. . .

"Lord Shri Krishna was lying down underneath the handcart in one corner of the courtyard, and although His little legs were as soft as leaves, when He struck the cart with His legs, it turned over violently and collapsed. The wheels separated from the axle, the hubs and spokes fell apart, and the pole of the handcart broke. On the cart there were many little utensils made of various metals, and all of them scattered hither and thither."*

Lord Krishna's transcendental gentleness is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.16):

kvacit pallava-talpesu
niyuddha-shrama-karshitah. . .

"Sometimes Lord Krishna grew tired from fighting and lay down at the base of a tree, resting upon a bed made of soft twigs and buds and using the lap of a cowherd friend as His pillow."

The Supreme Lord's gentleness is also seen in the pastime where Goddess Lakshmi stopped Him from eating the inferior rice Sudama Vipra brought. Lord Krishna's transcendental gentleness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.7):

vala-vyajanam adaya
ratna-dandam sakhi-karat

"From her maidservant's hand Goddess Rukmini took a yak-hair fan with a jeweled handle, and then she began to worship her master by fanning Him."

The pastime where Goddess Lakshmi stopped Lord Krishna from eating Sudama Vipra's rice is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.81.10):

iti mushtim. . . tat-para

"After saying this, the Supreme Lord ate one plamful and was about to eat a second when the devoted goddess Rukmini took hold of His hand."

In this pastime Lord Krishna thought: "By My mercy I have already given a little of My opulences to this devotee. Why should I continue to eat this inferior rice?" Even if He breaks the rules of religion, the Supreme Lord is never sinful or impious. This is seen in the following words of Chandogya Upanishad (8.1.5):

ayam atmapahata-papma

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead is always free from sin."

This truth is also confirmed by the following words of Kurma Purana:

aishvarya-yogad bhagavan
viruddhartho 'bhidhiyate tathapi doshah parame naivaharyah samantatah

"Even if He breaks the rules of religion, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is always sinless, for He is the all-opulent supreme master."

The idea that among the Supreme lord's qualities there are some faults is refuted in the following passage of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (8.8.18-19):

tatas tato nupura-valgu-shinjitair visarpati hema-lateva sa babhau

"As she (the goddess of fortune) walked here and there, her ankle-bells jingling softly, she appeared like a creeper of gold.*

vilokayanti niravadyam atmanah padam dhruvam cavyabhicari-sad-gunam gandharva-siddhasura-yaksha-caranatraipishta-peyadishu nanvavindata

"While walking among the Gandharvas, Yakshas, asuras, Siddhas, Caranas, and denizens of heaven, Lakshmi-devi, the goddess of fortune, was scrutinizingly examining them, but could not find anyone naturally endowed with all good qualities. None of them was devoid of faults, and therefore she could not take shelter of any of them."*

In this passage the word "sa" (she) refers to Goddess Lakshmi, "padam" means "shelter", "dhruvam" means "eternal", and "avyabhicari-sad-gunam" means "the person who has eternal good qualities".

Anuccheda 119

The passage continues in the next three verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (8.8.20-22):

nunam tapo yasya na manyu-nirjayo jnanam kvacit tac ca na sanga-varjitam kashcin mahams tasya na kama-nirjayah sa ishvarah kim parato vyapashrayah

"The goddess of fortune, examining the assembly, thought in this way: Someone who has undergone great austerity has not yet conquered anger. Someone possesses knowledge, but he has not conquered material desires. Someone is a very great personality, but he cannot conquer lusty desires. Even a great personality depends on something else. How, then, can he be the supreme controller?*

dharmah kvacit tatra na bhuta-sauhridam tyagah kvacit tatra na mukti-karanam viryam na pumso 'sty aja-vega-nishkritam na hi dvitiyo guna-sanga-varjitah

"Someone may possess full knowledge of religion but still not be kind to all living entities. In someone, whether human or demigod, there may be renunciation, but that is not the cause of liberation. Someone may possess great power and yet be unable to check the power of eternal time. Someone else may have renounced attachment to the material world, yet he cannot compare to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Therefore no one is completely freed from the influence of the material modes of nature.*

kvacic cirayur na hi shila-mangalam kvacit tad apy asti na vedyam ayushah yatrobhayam kutra ca so 'py amangalah sumangalah kashca na kankshate hi mam

"Someone may have longevity but not have auspiciousness or good behavior. Someone may have both auspiciousness and good behavior, but the duration of his life is not fixed. Although such demigods as Lord Shiva have eternal life, they have inauspicious habits like living in crematoriums. And even if others are well qualified in all respects, they are not devotees of the Supreme Personality of Godhead."*

In this passage it is seen that no one possesses austerity or any other virtue in the same degree as the Supreme Personality of Godhead possesses them. This is seen in the words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.16.30) quoted above. The saintly devotees may possess austerity and the other virtues, but they possess them only imperfectly and in relatively small quantities. Thus they are not equal to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 8.8.20-22 the word "yasya" refers to Durvasa and the sages, "kashcid" refers to Shukra and his followers and also to Brahma, Soma, and their followers, "parato vyapashrayah" refers to Indra and his followers, "sa kim ishvarah kvacit na bhuta-sauhrdam" refers to Parashurama and other sages like Him, "na mukti-karanam tyagah" refers to Maharaja Shibi and others like him, and "pumsah viryam asti" refers to Karttavirya and others like him. The words "aja-vega-nishkritam" mean "not free of the power of time", "na hi dvitiyo guna-sanga-varjitah" mean "aside from Lord Krishna, no one, not even the four Kumaras and the great atmarama sages, is completely freed from the influence of the material modes of nature, for their peacefulness, self-control, and other virtues are all made of the illusory potency maya". Even Lord Shiva is not free of the material modes of nature. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.88.3):

shivah shakti-yutah shashvat
tri-lingo guna-samvritah vaikarikas taijasash ca
tamasash cety aham tridha

"Lord Shiva is always united with his personal energy, the material nature. Manifesting himself in three features in response to the entreaties of nature's three modes, he thus embodies the threefold principle of material ego in goodness, passion, and ignorance."

Only Lord Vishnu is free of the material modes. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.88.5):

harir hi nirgunah sakshat purushah prakriteh parah
sa sarva-drig upadrashta
tam bhajan nirguno bhavet

"Lord Hari, however, has no connection with the material modes. He is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the all-seeing eternal witness, who is transcendental to material nature. One who worships Him becomes similarly free from the material modes."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 8.8.20-22 Goddess Lakshmi rejects even Lord Shiva. The words "kvacin cirayuh" mean "Markandeya and other sages may live a long life". The words "shila-mangala" are explained by Shrila Shridhara Svami in these words of his commentary: "Good character means sense-control". However, even if a person controls his senses, if he is not auspicious (mangala) he is not honored in the world. Some persons like Maya Danava and others may live long lives, but they have neither good character nor auspiciousness. This is because they are demons. Others, like Bali Maharaja, may have both good character and auspiciousness, but they do not have long lives, for they are subject to death. Lord Shiva is auspicious by nature, and He also lives eternally. Still, His activities seem externally to be inauspicious, for He lives in a cemetery and engages in seemingly inauspicious activities. However, Lord Vishnu has limitless good qualities. He is very auspicious. Indeed, His form is a great treasure-house of all that is auspicious. In this passage Goddess Lakshmi laments: "Because His form is filled with all virtues and opulences, Lord Vishnu does not desire me, even though my form is filled with transcendental bliss and I am the giver of all wealth and opulences. How can He not desire me, even though I love Him so dearly? Even though He is supremely auspicious, He does not desire me."

Anuccheda 120

The supremely blissful Supreme Personality of Godhead has two kinds of internal potency: 1. the potency of His limitless qualities and opulences, and 2. the internal potency that is His own body. This second potency is manifest only in His own transcendental body. The first potency is manifest outside His body and is known by the name Goddess Lakshmi. The form of Goddess Lakshmi is thus the origin of all qualities and opulences. Because He is always perfect and complete, the blissful Supreme Personality of Godhead is not different from His qualities and opulences, and therefore these two opulences are not separate from each other. Also, the Lord is controlled by the love His devotees bear for Him. This is certainly true in relation to Goddess Lakshmi, who loves Him dearly. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (8.8.23):

evam vimrishyavyabhicari-sad-gunair varam nijaikashrayatayagunashrayam vavre varam sarva-gunair apekshitam rama mukundam nirapeksham ipsitam

"In this way, after full deliberation, the goddess of fortune accepted Mukunda as her husband because although He is independent and not in want of her, He possesses all transcendental qualities and mystic powers and is therefore the most desirable."*

In this verse the words "avyabhicari-sad-gunaih" mean "supreme with qualities that have no defect", "nijaikashrayataya" means "without being dependent on anyone", and "gunashrayam" means "He whose qualities are perfect". In this way the Lord's qualities are described. The words "sarva-gunair apekshitam nirapeksham ipsitam" mean "because His nature is full of transcendental bliss, the Supreme Personality of Godhead has all good qualities. Therefore Goddess Lakshmi chose Him." This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 121

No fault or defect is present in any of the Supreme Lord's qualities, for their presence would contradict what was previously said of the Lord's qualities. Compassion is different from the other opulences of the Lord, for compassion means contact with the sufferings present in the material world, as for example the sufferings the non-devotees feel in the hellish worlds. This is so because material sufferings can never touch the Supreme Lord's heart, as has already been explained in the Paramatma-sandarbha. The sufferings the Pandavas and others feel because of separation from Lord Krishna are not material sufferings. Those sufferings are part of sancari-bhava in the reasas of devotional service. In them devotee humbly thinks he is not worthy of the Lord's mercy. This kind of sancari-bhava increases the devotees' love for the Lord. An example of this kind of humbleness is seen in these words spoken by Queen Kunti in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.8.20):

bhakti-yoga-vidhanartham
katham pashyema hi striyah

"You Yourself descend to propagate the transcendental science of devotional service unto the hearts of the advanced transcendentalists and mental speculators, who are purified by being able to discriminate between matter and spirit. How, then, can we women know You perfectly?"*

Sometimes the Lord personally acts to create humbleness in His devotee. This is seen in the following words spoken by the Supreme Lord in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (8.22.24):

brahman yam anugrihnam
tad-visho vidhunomy aham

"My dear lord Brahma, because of material opulence a foolish person becomes dull-witted and mad. Thus he has no respect for anyone within the three worlds and defies even My authority. To such a person I show special favor by first taking away all his possessions."*

An example of a prayer spoken by such humble devotees is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.17.24):

su-dustaran nah svan pahi. . . na shaknumas tvac-caranam santyaktum. . .

"O Lord, we are Your true friends and devotees. Please protect us from this insurmountable fire of death. We can never give up Your lotus feet, which drive away all fear."

Another example is seen in these words spoken by Queen Kunti in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.8.25):

vipadah santu tah shashvat. . .

"I wish that all those calamities would happen again and again so that we could see You again and again, for seeing You means that we will no longer see repeated births and deaths."*

That the Lord deliberately puts the devotee in distress to increase the devotee's devotion is seen in these words spoken by Lord Krishna Himself in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.20):

naham tu sakhyo bhajato 'pi. . .

"But the reason I do not immediately reciprocate the affection of living beings even when they worship Me, O gopis, is that I want to intensify their loving devotion. They then become like a poor man who has gained some wealth and then lost it, and who thus becomes so anxious about it that he can think of nothing else."

In these ways the the scriptures explain that the devotees' humbleness and distress increases their devotion for the Lord.

The demigod Brahma once kidnapped the cowherd boys of Vraja and made them unconscious. After one year of unconsciousness the cowherd boys awakened and saw Lord Krishna reeturning from looking for the calves. Seeing Lord Krishna, their loev (prema-rasa) for Him increased. At that time they spoke these words recorded in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.45):

ucush ca suhridah krishnam
sv-agatam te 'ti-ramhasa
naiko 'py abhoji kavala
ehiitah sadhu bhujiyatam

"They began to laugh, thinking that Krishna was not willing to leave their lunchtime company. They were very jubilant and invited Him, 'Dear friend Krishna, You have come back so quickly! All right, we have not as yet begun our lunch, not even taken one morsel of food. So please come and join us and let us eat together.'

In the description of the pastime of accepting food from the yajna-patnis it is said that Lord Krishna attracts and delights the devotees. It is said in that passage of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.36):

bhajate tadrishih krida
yah shrutva tat-paro bhavet

"When the Lord assumes a humanlike body to show mercy to His devotees, He engages in such pastimes as will attract those who hear about them to become dedicated to Him."

The all-powerful Supreme Personality of Godhead is always faultless, regardless of what action He performs. This is not so for others. For example, the sages said to the dmeigod Brahma in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.12.30-31):

naitat purvaih kritam tvad ye na karishyanti capare yas tvam duhitaram gaccher anigrihyangajam prabhuh

tejiyasam api hy etan

na sushlokyam jagad-guro

"O father, this performance in which you are endeavoring to complicate yourself was never attempted by any other Brahma, nor by anyone else, nor by you in previous kalpas, nor will anyone dare to attempt in the future. You are the supreme being in the universe, so how is it that you want to have sex with your daughter and cannot control your desire?*

"Even though you are the most powerful being, this act does not suit you because your character is followed for spiritual improvement by the people in general."*

Here the words "tejiyasam api" mean "it is not right, even for very powerful persons".

Lord Krishna gave the following advice to the yajna-patnis in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.32):

na pritaye 'nuragaya
hy anga-sango nrinam iha tan mano mayi yunjana
aciran mam avapsyatha

"For you to remain in My bodily association would certainly not please people in this world, nor would it be the best way for you to increase your love for Me. Rather, you should fix your minds on Me, and very soon you will achieve Me."

Here Lord Krishna says: "If you stayed in this birth in brahmana families and personally associated with Me and served Me directly, then the people of this world who saw or heard of your activities would not be pleased. Therefore you should not associate with Me directly. However, very soon, in your next birth, you will attain My association." These words were spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead to the yajna-patnis.

Anuccheda 122

In this way is manifest the superficial appearance that the Supreme Lord is not the friend and well-wisher of His devotee. The Lord's devotees are of two kinds: 1. the devotees who are not intimate associates of the Lord (durastha), and 2. the Lord's personal associates (parikara). To benefit the durastha devotees, the Supreme Lord manifests His feature as their friend and well-wisher. In this way He is known as brahmanya (the friend of the brahmanas) and many other like names also. This feature of the Lord is seen in His pastime of protecting Maharaja Ambarisa and in many other pastimes also. However, this feature of being the devotee's friend and well-wisher is not always seen in the Lord's dealings with His personal associates. This is seen in the pastime of the curse placed on Jaya and Vijaya and in many other pastimes also. It is also seen in the mischievous activities of Durvasa Muni described in the Skanda Purana, Dvaraka-mahatmya. However, in both situations, whether the Lord seems to be the devotee's friend or seems not to be the devotee's friend, the Lord is in truth always the devotee's friend and well-wisher. The Supreme Lord considers the devotees who are not His personal associates to be like His friends or kinsmen. However, the devotees who are His personal associates the Lord considers to be like His own self. This is described by the Supreme Lord in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.4.63):

aham bhakta-paradhinah. . .

"I am completely under the control of my devotees. Indeed, I am not at all independent. Because my devotees are completely devoid of material desires, I sit only within the cores of their hearts. What to speak of My devotee, even those who are devotees of My devotee are very dear to Me."*

The Supreme Lord again says His personal associates are like Himself in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.16.4):

tad dhity atma-kritam manye
yat sva-pumbhir asat-kritah

"The disrespect shown by My attendants has actually been displayed by Me because the doormen are My servitors. I take this to be an offense by Myself. Therefore I seek your forgiveness for the incident that has arisen."*

In this way the Supreme Lord is the friend and well-wisher of His devotee. The Lord melts with love for His devotee. Indeed, He is controlled by His devotee's love. In this way the nature of the Lord's love for His devotees is revealed. The Lord's love is prominent amongst the uddipanas (impetuses to the rasas of ecstatic love). His love is a source of great wonder. The Lord melts with love (premardra) for His devotees. Melting with love is included among the anubhavas known as udbhasvaras. Melting with love is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.20.19-21):

bhagavan atha vishvatma
prithunopahritarhanah samujjihanaya bhaktya
grihita-czranambujah

"King Prithu abundantly worshiped the lotus feet of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who was so merciful to him. While worshiping the lotus feet of the Lord, Prithu Maharaja gradually increased his ecstasy in devotional service.*

prasthanabhimukho 'py enam anugraha-vilambitah pashyan padma-palashaksho
na pratathe suhrit satam

"The Lord was just about to leave, but because He was so greatly inclined toward the behavior of King Prithu, He did not depart. Seeing the behavior of Maharaja Prithu with His lotus eyes, He was detained because He is always the well-wisher of His devotees.*

sa adi-rajo racitanjalir harim vilokitam nashakad ashru-locanah. . .

"The original king, Maharaja Prithu, his eyes full of tears and his voice faltering and choked up, could not see the Lord very distinctly nor speak to address the Lord in any way. He simply embraced the Lord within his heart and remained standing in that way with folded hands."*

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 123

Impelled by sattvika-bhava, the Supreme Personality of Godhead also melts with devotion. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.21.38-39):

yasmin bhagavato netran
nyapatann ashru-bindavah kripaya samparitasya prapanne 'rpitaya bhrisham

tad vai bindusaro nama. . .

"The holy lake Bindu-sarovara, flooded by the waters of the River Sarasvati, was resorted to by hosts of eminent sages. Its holy water was not only auspicious but as sweet as nectar. It was called Bindu-sarovara because drops of tears had fallen there from the eyes of the Lord, who was overwhelmed by extreme compassion for the sage who had sought His protection."*

In these verses the word "bhagavatah" means "of the Supreme Personality of Godhead in His incarnation named Shukla", and "prapanne" means "for the devotee named Shri Kardama Muni". This verse was spoken by Shri Maitreya.

Anuccheda 124

The Supreme Lord melting in ecstatic love for His parents is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.34):

krishna-ramau parishvajya
pitarav abhivadya ca
na kincanocatuh premna
sashru-kanthau kurudvaha

"O hero of the Kurus, Krishna and Balarama embraced Their foster parents and bowed down to them, but Their throats were so choked up with tears of love that the two Lords could say nothing."

In this verse the word "pitarau" means, "the Lord's parents Nanda and Yashoda who had come to meet Him at Kurukshetra. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 125

The Supreme Lord's melting weith love for His friends is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.80.18-19 narrating the story of the brahmana Sudama):

tam vilokyacyuto durat
priya-paryankam asthitah sahasotthaya cabhyetya
dorbhyam paryagrahin muda

"At that time Lord Acyuta was seated on His consort's bed. Spotting the brahmana at some distance, the Lord immediately stood up, went forward to meet him, and with great pleasure embraced Him.

sakhyuh priyasya viprarshe anga-sangati-nirvritah prito vyamuncad ab-bindun netrabhyam pushkarekshanah

"The lotus-eyed Supreme Lord felt intense ecstasy upon touching the body of His dear friend, the wise brahmana, and thus He shed tears of love."

In these verses the word "tam" (him) refers to the brahmana Sudama. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 126

The Supreme Lord's melting weith love for His gopi beloveds is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.20):

tasam rati-viharena
shrantanam vadanani sah pramrijat karunah premna shantamenanga panina

"Seeing that the gopis were fatigued from conjugal enjoyment, my dear King, merciful Krishna lovingly wiped their faces with His comforting hand."

In this verse the word "tasam" means "of the gopis", and "premnah karunah" means "with tears in His eyes". These loving feelings of sattvika-bhava are also described in these words of Vishnu Purana (5.13.54):

gopi-kapola-samshlesham

abhipatya harer bhuja pulaṅgamāśāyā
śvedambu-ghanatam gatau

"With His two hands Lord Krishna wiped the perspiration from the gopis' cheeks. The hairs of His arms stood erect with ecstasy. His hairs were like many plants growing luxuriantly in the monsoon rains of the gopis' perspiration."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.33.20 quoted here was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 127

As He is controlled by His devotees' love, so the Supreme Personality of Godhead is also controlled by His devotees' pure devotion. This is described in the following prose passage of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.24.27):

yasya bhagavan svayam akhila-jagad-gurur narayano dvari gada-panir avatishthate nija-jananukampita-hridayah. . .

"My dear King, how shall I glorify the character of Bali Maharaja? The Supreme Personality of Godhead, the master of the three worlds, who is most compassionate to His own devotee, stands with club in hand at Bali Maharaja's door."*

Here the word "yasya" (of whom) refers to Bali Maharaja. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 128

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is controlled by the love of the devotees in vatsalya-rasa is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.11.7):

gopibhih stobhito 'nrityad bhagavan balavat kvacit udgayati kvacin mugdhas
tad-vasho daru-yantravat

"The gopis would say, 'If You dance, my dear Krishna, you are half a sweetmeat.' By saying these words or by clapping their hands, all the gopis encouraged Krishna in different ways. At such times, although He was the supremely powerful Personality of Godhead, He would smile and dance according to their desire, as if He were a wooden doll in their hands. Sometimes He would sing very loudly, at their bidding. In this way Krishna came completely under the control of the gopis."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 129

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is controlled by the love of the devotees in sakhya-rasa is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.16.16):

sarathya-parashada-sevana-sakhya-dautya-virasananugamana-stavana-pranaman snigdheshu pandushu jagat-pranatim ca vishnor bhaktim karoti nri-patish caranaravinde

"Maharaja Parikshit heard that out of His causeless mercy Lord Krishna (Vishnu), who is universally obeyed, rendered all kinds of service to the malleable sons of Pandu by accepting posts ranging from chariot driver to president to messenger, friend, night watchman, etc., according to the will of the Pandavas, obeying them like a servant and offering obeisances like one younger in years. When he heard this, Maharaja Parikshit became overwhelmed with devotion to the lotus feet of the Lord."*

This verse means: "Hearing that Lord Vishnu, who is universally obeyed, had rendered all kinds of service to the malleable sons of Pandu, service beginning with becoming their chariot driver, Maharaja Parikshit became overwhelmed with devotion to the lotus feet of the Lord." Here "parashadam" means "acceptance of presidency in the assembly", "sevana" means "obeying the desires in the heart", and "virasana" means "staying awake at night and standing guard with a sword in one's hand". This verse was spoken by Shrila Suta Gosvami.

Anuccheda 130

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is controlled by the love of the devotees in shringara-rasa is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.22):

na paraye 'ham niravadya-samyujam sva-sadhu-kriyam vibudhayushapi vah ya mabhajan durjara-geha-shrinkhalah samvrishcya tad vah pratiyatu sadhuna

"I am not able to repay My debt for your spotless service, even within a lifetime of Brahma. Your connection with Me is beyond reproach. You have worshiped Me, cutting off all domestic ties, which are difficult to break. Therefore please let your own glorious deeds be your compensation."*

In the verse the word "niravadya" means "pure because their nature and actions are both opure", "samyujam" means "contact with them", "vah sva-sadhu-kriyam" means "supremely blissful devotional service to Me", and "na paraye" means "I have not power to repay". Someone may ask: "Why does the Lord have not power to repay the gopis?" The answer is given in the words "I could not repay you even within a lifetime of Brahma." The Lord says: "Your love for Me is so great that for My sake you disobeyed even the rules of custom and religion." This the Lord said in the third and fourth lines of this verse. There the Lord said: "Please let your own glorious deeds be your compensation. I am always in debt to you." This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 131

Melting with love for His devotee, to please His devotee the Supreme Lord sometimes acts in a way contrary to ordinary good behavior. In this way the Lord becomes glorious, decorated with the crest jewel of all transcendental virtues. An example of such contrary behavior by the Lord is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.9.37):

sva-nigamam apahaya mat-pratijnam ritam adhikartum. . .

"Fulfilling my desire and sacrificing His own promise, He got down from the chariot, took up its wheel, and ran towards me hurriedly, just as a lion goes to kill an elephant. He even dropped His outer garment on the way."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. These words were spoken by Shri Bhishma.

Anuccheda 132

Sometimes the Lord acts in a way contrary to ordinary cleanliness and purity. An example of this is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.43.15):

amsa-nyasta-vishano 'shrinmada-bindubhir ankitah. . .

"Leaving the dead elephant aside, Lord Krishna held onto the tusk and entered the wrestling arena. With the tusk resting on His shoulder, drops of the elephant's blood and sweat sprinkled all over Him, and His lotus face covered with fine drops of His own perspiration, the Lord shone with great beauty."

The meaning of this verse is clear. These words were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 133

Sometimes the Supreme Lord acts in a way contrary to the virtue of forgiveness. For example, in the Mahabharata, Lord Krishna declares:

yas tan dveshti sa mam dveshti
yas tan anu sa mam anu

"He who hates My devotees hates Me. He who loves My devotees loves Me."

Another example is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.44.32-34):

dhanam harata gopanam. . .
. . .evam vikatthamane vai
kamse prakupito 'vyayah

"Kamsa said: Drive the two wicked sons of Vasudeva out of the city! Confiscate the cowherds' property and arrest that fool Nanda! ***

"Kill that most evil fool Vasudeva! And also kill my father, Ugrasena, along with his followers, who have all sided with our enemies! ***

"As Kamsa thus raved so audaciously, the infallible Lord Krishna became intensely angry."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These Shrimad-Bhagavatam verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 134

Sometimes the Supreme Lord acts in a way contrary to the virtue of being always satisfied. For example, in the Hari-bhakti-sudhodaya (14.28) Lord Krishna declares:

api me purna-kamasya. . .

"With great love My devotees see Me and talk with Me. The happiness I feel by associating with My devotees is newer and newer at every moment. Although My desires are always fulfilled, My desire to associate with My devotees never ends."

Another example of the Supreme Lord's not being satisfied is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.5-6):

tam ankam arudham apayayat stanam
sneha-snutam sa-smitam ikshati mukham
atriptam utshrijya. . .jaghasa haiyangavam antaram gatah

"Mother Yashoda then embraced Krishna, allowed Him to sit down on her lap, and began to look upon the face of the Lord with great love and affection. Because of her intense affection, milk was flowing from her breast. But when she saw that the milk pan on the oven was boiling over, she immediately left her son to take care of the overflowing milk, although the child was not yet fully satisfied with drinking the milk of His mother's breast."*

"Being very angry and biting His reddish lips with His teeth, Krishna, with false tears in His eyes, broke the container of yogurt with a piece of stone. Then He entered a room and began to eat the freshly churned butter in a solitary place."*

In these verses the word "raha" means "in these confidential pastimes". These Shrimad-Bhagavatam verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 135

Sometimes the Supreme Lord acts in a way contrary to the virtue of being honest and straightforward. For example, He befriends allies with Hanuman, Sugriva, and others, though the Lord was not straightforward in His dealings with Vali and others. In these situations the Lord's dishonesty is all-auspicious. This is seen in the following example:

krodho 'pi devasya varena tulyah

"The Supreme Lord's anger is as auspicious as His blessing."

The Supreme Lord may sometimes seem to be lusty in His dealings with His consorts. However, what seems to be lust on His part is actually the purest love. This is seen in the following explanation of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.35):

sa esha nara-loke 'sminn avatirnah sva-mayaya reme stri-ratna-kutastho
 bhagavan prakrito yatha

"That Supreme Personality of Godhead Shri Krishna, out of His causeless mercy, appeared on this planet by His internal potency and enjoyed Himself amongst competent women as if He were engaging in mundane affairs."*

In this verse the word "sva-mayaya" means "with mercy to His devotees, mercy that means love, the love that makes Him wish to please them", "avatirnah" means "all the incarnations of the Lord descend to the material world because They are impelled by that mercy and love", "stri-ratna-kutasthah" means "women who with their great love bring the Lord under their control", "reme" means "because of that love the Lord enjoys pastimes with them. He does not enjoy pastimes with them because of the lust that is so well-known in the material world. Here the word "ratna" indicates that these women are very qualified to associate with the Lord. It indicates that they have great love for Him. Although the Lord's pastimes with these women is very different from anything in the material world, these pastimes superficially seem to be like the activities of the material world. This is described here by the words "prakrito yatha". Thus, although the Lord's pastimes may seem to be like ordinary activities of the material world, the idea that He is impelled by lust is here refuted.

Anuccheda 136

That the Supreme Lord's pastimes with His affectionate consorts are completely different from the activities of material lust is again confirmed in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.36):

uddama-bhava-pishunamala-valgu-hasavridavaloka-nihato madano 'pi yasam sammuhya capam ajahat pramadottamas ta yasyendriyam vimathitum kuhakair na shekuh

"Although the queens' beautiful smiles and furtive glances were all spotless and exciting, and although they could conquer Cupid himself by making him give up his bow in frustration, and although even the tolerant Shiva could fall victim to them, still, despite all their magical feats and attractions, they could not agitate the senses of the Lord."*

Here the word "madanah" means "the material demigod Cupid", "hasa-vridavaloka" means "with affectionate, pure, and charming glances", and "-nihatah" means "conquered by the power of the weapon that is the glory of those glances". The words "sammuhya capam ajahat" are explained by these words:

bhru-pallavam dhanur apanga-tarangitani banah

"A beautiful girl's eyebrows are like a vine or like an archer's bow. Her sidelong glances are like waves, or like arrows shot from the bow of her eyebrows."

All of this means that the demigod Cupid has no power to use his weapons against the Supreme Lord's consorts. The word "pramadottamah" here means "women filled with the bliss of the most exalted spiritual love". If some women, not possessing this exalted spiritual love, try to agitate the Supreme Lord's senses with sidelong glances or other kinds of trickery used in this world, these women will certainly fail. This is described here in the words "yasyendriyam vimathitum kuhakair na shekuh". This means that the Lord's desires become awakened only by pure spiritual love, and the Lord's activities are very different from those of an ordinary lusty man of this world.

Anuccheda 137

Materialistic persons cannot understand this truth of the Lord. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.37):

tam ayam manyate loko
hy asangam api sanginam atmaupamyena manujam
vyaprinvanam yato 'budhah

"The common materialistic conditioned souls speculate that the Lord is one of them. Out of their ignorance they think that the Lord is affected by matter, although He is unattached."*

Here the word "ayam lokah" means: "the people in general", "asaktam api" means "although not attached to the material modes of nature", "atmaupamyena manujam vyaprinvanam manyate" means "they think the Lord is a lusty material man like themselves", and "yato 'budhah" means "they think in this way because they are not intelligent".

Anuccheda 138

The reason why the Supreme Personality of Godhead is not attached to the material modes is given in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.38):

etad ishanam ishasya prakriti-stho 'pi tad-gunaih na yujyate sadatma-sthair
yatha buddhis tad-ashraya

"This is the divinity of the Personality of Godhead: He is not affected by the qualities of material nature, even though He is in contact with them. Similarly, the devotees who have taken shelter of the Lord do not become influenced by the material qualities."*

Here the words "prakriti-stho 'pi tad-gunaih na yujyate sada" mean "even when He descends to the material world the Supreme Personality of Godhead is never affected by the material modes", and "etad ishanam ishasya" means "that is the opulence of the Supreme Lord". In the last line of this verse an example is given. There the words "na yujyate yatha buddhis tad-ashraya" mean "The Supreme Lord's consciousness is not like the consciousness of the conditioned souls who have taken shelter of the material nature." These words may also be interpreted to mean: "the great devotees who have taken shelter of the Supreme Lord have a consciousness like Lords. Thus, even though they reside in the material world they are not influenced by the modes of material nature".

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is always detached from matter is confirmed by Uddhava in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.3.19):

bhagavan api vishvatma
loka-veda-pathanugah
kaman sisheve dvarvatyam
asaktah sankhyam asthitah

"Simultaneously, the Personality of Godhead enjoyed life in the city of Dvaraka, strictly in conformity with the Vedic customs of society. He was situated in detachment and knowledge, as enunciated by the Sankhya system of philosophy."*

Anuccheda 139

Here someone may ask: "Do the Lord's consorts know the Lord possesses this great opulence of detachment? If they know, then their love for Him in their confidential pastimes with Him would certainly be broken into pieces." Fearing that someone might speak these words, the author of Shrimad-Bhagavatam explains (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.11.39):

tam menire 'bala maudhyat
strainam canuvratam rahah apramana-vido bhartur
ishvaram matayo yatha

"The simple and delicate women truly thought that Lord Shri Krishna, their beloved husband, followed them and was dominated by them. They were unaware of the extent of the glories of their husband, as the atheists are unaware of Him as the supreme controller."*

Here the word "ishvaram" means "even though He is the Supreme Personality of Godhead", "rahah" means "in confidential pastimes", "maudhyat" means "bewildered by love for Him", "apramana-vido bhartuh" means "unaware of their husband's true opulences and powers", "strainam canuvratam menire" means "they thought He was controlled by women, a follower of women". This idea they have is not the truth. Here the words "matayo yatha" mean "this idea was created by the desire born of their love for Him". The Supreme Lord appears before His devotees in the way they desire Him to appear. This is confirmed by the Lord Himself in these words of Bhagavad-gita (4.11):

ye yatha mam. . .

"All of them, as they surrender unto Me, I reward accordingly."*

This is also confirmed by the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.2):

sveccha-mayasya. . .

"O Lord, Your appearance as a cowherd child is for the benefit of the devotees, to fulfill their desires."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.11.39 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Suta Gosvami.

Anuccheda 140

That the Lord's consorts did not understand the truth about their husband is confirmed by the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.61.2):

grihad anapagam vikshya
raja-putryo 'cyutam sthitam preshtam nyamamsata svam svam

na tat-tattva-vidah striyah

"Because each of these princesses saw that Lord Acyuta never left her palace, each thought herself the Lord's favorite. These women did not understand the truth about Him."

Here the words "preshtham nyamamsata svam svam" mean "each one thought herself the most dear", and "na tat-tattva-vidah" means "each one thinking herself the most dear, they did not understand the truth."

Anuccheda 141

Here someone may ask: "If He is always spiritually satisfied in Himself, why does the Supreme Personality of Godhead love His wives?" To this question the answer is given: The Lord does not love like an ordinary husband or lover in the material world. His love is completely pure. This truth is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.61.3):

carv-abja-kosha-vadanayata-bahu-netra-sa-prema-hasa-rasa-vikshita-valgu-jalpaih sammohita bhagavato na mano vijetum svair vibhramaih samashakan vanita vibhumnah

"The Supreme Lord's wives were fully enchanted by His lovely, lotuslike face, His long arms, and large eyes, His loving glances imbued with laughter, and His charming talks with them. But with all their charms these ladies could not conquer the mind of the all-powerful Lord."

In this verse the word "sa-prema" means "with Lord Krishna's love for His wives". One of the many definitions of the word "vanitah" is given in the following words:

vanita janitatyartha-
nuragayam ca yoshiti

"The word `vanita' means `a very affectionate woman'."

In this verse the Lord's love for His queens is revealed. Still, the Lord's wives did not have the power to conquer the Lord with their charms.

His charming talks with them. But with all their charms these ladies could not conquer the mind of the all-powerful Lord."

In this verse the word "sa-prema" means "with Lord Krishna's love for His wives". One of the many definitions of the word "vanitah" is given in the following words:

vanita janitatyartha-
nuragayam ca yoshiti

"The word `vanita' means `a very affectionate woman'."

In this verse the Lord's love for His queens is revealed. Still, the Lord's wives did not have the power to conquer the Lord with their charms.

Anuccheda 142

The charms of the Lord's wives are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.61.4):

smayavaloka-lava-darshita-bhava-hari-bhru-mandala-prahita-saurata-mantra-shaundaih patnyas tu shodasha-sahasram ananga-banair yasyendriyam vimathitum karanair na shekuh

"The arched eyebrows of these sixteen-thousand queens enchantingly expressed those ladies' secret intentions through coyly smiling sidelong glances. Thus their eyebrows boldly set forth conjugal messages. Yet even with these arrows of Cupid, and with other means as well, they could not agitate Lord Krishna's senses."

Even with flirting arrows of Cupid they could not agitate the Lord. Here the word "smaya" means "smiling", "bhava" means "intention", "bhru-mandala-prahita" means "sent from the eyebrows", "saurata-mantra" means "mantras of love", and "shaundaih" means "bold". This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 143

Describing Lord Ramacandra's pastimes, Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.10.11) explains:

stri-sanginam gatim iti prathayamsh cakara

"Lord Ramacandra showed by His personal example the condition of a person attached to women."*

These words mean: "He showed by His personal example the condition of a person attached to women." It is also said in that chapter of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.10.55):

premanuvrittya shilena prashrayavanata sati bhiya hriya ca bhava-jna
bhartuh sitaharan manah

"Mother Sita was very submissive, faithful, shy, and chaste, always understanding the attitude of her husband. Thus by her character and her love and service she completely attracted the mind of the Lord."*

It is said in the following chapter of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.11.16):

tac chrutva bhagavan ramo rundhann api dhiya shucah smarams tasya gunams tams tan nashaknod roddhum ishvarah

"After hearing the news of Mother Sita's entering the earth, the Supreme Personality of Godhead was certainly aggrieved. Although He is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, upon remembering the exalted qualities of Mother Sita, He could not check His grief in transcendental love."*

The truth is that Lord Rama was actually controlled by Mother Sita's pure spiritual love and devotion. However, He externally acted in the way a lusty conditioned soul acts. He acted in that way to teach renunciation to the people in general. The need for renunciation is described in the next verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.11.17):

stri-pum-prasanga etadrik
sarvatra trasam-avahah

"The attraction between man and woman, or male and female, always exists everywhere, making everyone always fearful. Such feelings are present even among the controllers like Brahma and Lord Shiva and is the cause of fear for them, what to speak of others who are attached to household life in this material world."*

Thus Lord Rama's pastimes have two purposes (1. to show His love to His devotees and 2. to teach the people in general the path of renunciation). In this way the Lord's pastimes bring auspiciousness to all kinds of people. What seems on the surface to be material lust is in truth spiritual love for His devotee. Thus there is no defect in the Lord's actions. That the Supreme Lord is motivated by spiritual love and not by material lust is described in this verse of (Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.59.43):

reme ramabhir nija-kama-samplutah. . .

"Although fully satisfied within Himself, Lord Krishna enjoyed with His pleasing wives, and like an ordinary husband He carried out His household duties."

This truth is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.25):

sa satya-kamo 'nuratabala-ganah. . .

"Although the gopis were firmly attached to Lord Krishna, whose desires are always fulfilled, the Lord was not internally affected by any mundane sex desire. Still, to perform His pastimes the Lord took advantage of all those moonlit autumn nights, which inspire poetic descriptions of transcendental affairs."

Although He is equal to everyone, the Lord especially loves His devotees. Lord Krishna Himself confirms these in these words of Bhagavad-gita (9.29):

samo 'ham sarva-bhuteshu
na me dveshyo 'sti na priyah ye bhajanti tu mam bhaktya mayi te teshu capy aham

"I envy no one, nor am I partial to anyone. I am equal to all. But whoever renders service unto Me in devotion is a friend, is in Me, and I am a friend to Him."*

When, in His humanlike form, the Supreme Personality of Godhead enjoys loving pastimes with His devotees, it is sometimes seen that He becomes bewildered, that He is no longer all-knowing. That bewilderment is a virtue on His part. That bewilderment makes His pastimes more sweet. Therefore, because that bewilderment brings to the wise devotees the bliss of spiritual love, that bewilderment is not a fault. Indeed, the Lord voluntarily accepts that bewilderment for that purpose. An example of the Lord being all-knowing is given in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.25-26):

raksho viditvakhila-bhuta-hrit-sthitah svanam niroddhum bhagavan mano dadhe

tavat pravishtas tv asurodarantaram

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Shri Krishna, who is situated as antaryami, the Supersoul, in the core of everyone's heart, heard the boys talking among themselves about the artificial python. Unknown to them, it was actually Aghasura, a demon who had appeared as a python. Krishna, knowing this, wanted to forbid His associates to enter the demon's mouth.*

"In the meantime, while Krishna was considering how to stop them, all the cowherd boys entered the mouth of the demon. The demon, however, did not swallow them, for he was thinking of his own relatives who had been killed by Krishna and was just waiting for Krishna to enter his mouth."*

An example of the Lord voluntarily accepting bewilderment is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.13.16):

tato vatsan adristvaitya. . .

"Thereafter, when Krishna was unable to find the calves, He returned to the bank of the river, but there He was also unable to see the cowherd boys. Thus He began to search for both the calves and the boys, as if He could not understand what had happened."*

This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

If He does not wish to be bewildered, the Supreme Personality of Godhead will not be bewildered. This is seen in the description of the magical powers of the demon Shalva in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.77.30-31):

evam vadanti rajarshe rishayah ke ca nanvitah

kva shoka-mohau sneho va bhayam va ye 'jna-sambhavah kva cakhandita-vijnanajnanaishvaryash tv akhanditah. . .

"Such is the account given by some sages, O wise king, but those who speak in this illogical way are contradicting themselves, having forgotten their own previous statements.

"How can lamentations, bewilderment, material affection, or fear, all born out of ignorance, be ascribed to the infinite Supreme Lord, whose perception, knowledge, and power are all similarly infinite?" ***

This verse asks: "How can lamentation and other like qualities, which are all born from ignorance, be manifest in the Supreme Lord?". This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

When the Lord does manifest lamentation or other like emotions it is because He is controlled by the love of His devotee. An example is seen in this description of Lord Ramacandra's pastimes in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.11.16):

tac chrutva bhagavan ramah. . .

"After hearing the news of Mother Sita's entering the earth, the Supreme Personality of Godhead was certainly aggrieved. Although He is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, upon remembering the exalted qualities of Mother Sita, He could not check His grief in transcendental love."*

Another example is seen in this description of the Lord's pastimes with Sudama brahmana in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.80.19):

sakhyuh priyasya viprarsheh. . .

"The lotus-eyed Supreme Lord felt intense ecstasy upon touching the body of His dear friend, the wise brahmana, and thus He shed tears of love."

Another example is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.8.31):

gopy adade tvayi krtagasi dama tavad ya te dashashru-kalilanjana-sambhramaksham
vaktram niniya bhaya-bhavanaya sthitasya
sa mam vimohayati bhir api yad bibheti

"My dear Krishna, Yashoda took up a rope to bind You when You committed an offense, and Your perturbed eyes overflowed with tears, which washed the mascara from Your eyes. And You were afraid, though fear personified is afraid of You. This sight is bewildering to me."*

Here it is said that fear personified is afraid of the Lord. In this way the Lord has all glory, power, opulence, and knowledge. He is never truly afraid. In the same way He is never truly bewildered. Even so, in this pastime fear entered His heart (bhaya-bhavanaya sthitasya). This verse was spoken by Queren Kunti to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 146

The Supreme Lord is independent only when He is away from His devotees. He Himself affirms in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.4.63):

aham bhakta-paradhinah. . .

"I am completely under the control of My devotees. Indeed, i am not at all independent."*

The Supreme Personality of Godhead enjoys great pleasure in His pastime of herding the cows and in other like pastimes. On the pretext of herding the cows He enjoys many blissful pastimes. Something of these pastimes is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.18.2-3):

vraje vikridator evam gopala-cchadma-mayaya grishmo namartur abhavan
nati-preyan charirinam

"While Krishna and Balarama were thus enjoying life in Vrindavana in the guise of ordinary cowherd boys, the summer season gradually appeared. This season is not very pleasing to embodied souls."

sa ca vrindavana-gunair
vasnta iva lakshitah

"Nevertheless, because the Supreme Personality of Godhead was personally staying in Vrindavana along with Balarama, summer manifested the qualities of spring. Such are the features of the land of These two verses affirm that in the Supreme Personality of Godhead's pastimes there is no suffering. In these verses the word "chadma" means "pretext", "maya" means "cheating", "Thus, on the pretext of protecting the cows, Krishna and Balarama enjoyed many pastimes. In the morning they left Vraja village and went to the forest on the pretext of herding the cows. In this way they cheated the people of Vraja, for actually They went to the forest of Their own will to enjoy pastimes as They liked. That is the meaning here. When They returned home in the evening They enjoyed still other pastimes. In the second of these verses it is affirmed that time never brings unhappiness to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Neither does any place bring unhappiness to Him. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 147

In His childhood pastimes the Supreme Lord abandons His gravity and calmness and becomes restless and mischievous. As was previously described in relation to bewilderment and other like things, this is not a defect for the Lord. The Lord's childhood restlessness and mischief are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.29):

vatsan muncan kvacid asamaye. . .

"Our dear friend Yashoda, your son sometimes comes to our houses before the milking of the cows and releases the calves, and when the master of the house becomes angry, your son merely smiles. Sometimes He devises some process by which He steals palatable curd, butter, and milk, which He then eats and drinks. When the monkeys assemble, He divides it with them, and when the monkeys have their bellies so full that they won't take any more, He breaks the pots. Sometimes, if He gets no opportunity to steal butter and milk from a house, He will be angry at the householders, and for His revenge He will agitate the small children by pinching them. Then, when they begin crying, Krishna will go away."*

The Supreme Personality of Godhead delights His devotees and the people of the world. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.3.20-21):

snigdha-smitavalokena vaca piyusha-kalpaya
ca ritre nanavadyena
shri-niketena catmana

"He was there in His transcendental body, the residence of the goddess of fortune, with His usual gentle and sweetly smiling face, His nectarean words and His flawless character.

imam lokam amum caiva ramayan sutaram yadun reme kshanadaya datta-kshana-stri-kshana-sauhridah

"The Lord enjoyed His pastimes, both in this world and in other worlds [higher planets], specifically in the association of the Yadu dynasty. At leisure hours offered by night, He enjoyed the friendship of conjugal love with women."*

Here the words "datta-kshana-stri-kshana-sauhridah" mean "At leisure hours offered by night, He enjoyed a festival of the friendship of conjugal love with women." This verse was spoken by Shriman uddhava.

Anuccheda 148

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead delights His devotees is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.37):

evam lila-nara-vapuh. . .

"Thus the Supreme Lord, appearing like a human being to perform His pastimes, imitated the ways of human society. He enjoyed pleasing His cows, cowherd boyfriends, and cowherd girlfriends with His beauty, words, and actions."

What more need be said of how the Lord delights His devotees? However, the demons are not delighted by the Lord or the devotees. The reason why is given in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.3.21):

papacyamanena hridaturendriyah samriddhibhih purusha-buddhi-sakshinam akalpa esham adhirodhum anjasa
param padam dveshti yathasura harim

"One who is conducted by false ego and thus always distressed, both mentally and sensually. cannot tolerate the opulence of self-realized persons. Being unable to rise to the standard of self-realization, he envies such persons as much as demons envy the Supreme Personality of Godhead."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Lord Shiva.

Anuccheda 149

Although all transcendental virtues are eternally present in the Supreme Personality of Godhead, to make the Lord's pastimes completely perfect those qualities are sometimes outwardly manifest and sometimes not outwardly manifest. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.10.19):

ashruyantashishah satyas
tatra tatra dvijeritah
nanurupanurupash ca

"It was being heard here and there that the benedictions being paid to Krishna were neither befitting nor unbefitting because they were all for the Absolute, who was now playing the part of a human being."*

Here the word "nirgunasya" is originally "nirgata-gunasya" (from whom qualities have gone), but the middle word (gata) is elided. The benedictions here were not befitting because the Supreme Lord, being eternally perfect and complete, never needs to attain anything. However, because the Lord does is playing the part of a human being (gunatmanah) and because He is the ultimate creator and remover of all qualities, He voluntarily accepted the benedictions, and therefore the benedictions were befitting. Therefore, because the benedictions were true, the Lord accepted them. The Lord sometimes manifests His qualities and sometimes does not manifest them. He is more effulgent than many billions of moons, but to manifest the sweetness of His pastimes, He sometimes appears to be like a great darkness. This verse was spoken by Shrila Suta Gosvami.

Anuccheda 150

In different situations the Lord manifests different features of His character. He has four primary features, beginning with Dhirodatta. Dhirodatta is described in the following words of Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (2.1.226):

gambhiro vinayi kshanta
karunah sudridha-vratah akatthano gudha-garvo
dhirodattah su-sattva-bhrit

"A Dhirodatta is a person who is naturally very grave, gentle, forgiving, merciful, determined, humble, highly qualified, chivalrous, and physically attractive."*

Lord Krishna manifested these qualities when He lifted Govardhana Hill, conversed with Indra, and enjoyed other like pastimes.

The Lord's feature of dhira-lalita is described in the following words of Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (2.1.226):

vidagdho nava-tarunyah parihasa-visharadah
nishcinto dhira-lalitah
syat prayah preyasi-vashah

"A person is called dhira-lalita if he is naturally very funny, always in full youthfulness, expert in joking and free from all anxieties. Such a dhira-lalita personality is generally found to be domesticated and very submissive to his lover."*

Lord Krishna manifested these qualities when He enjoyed pastimes with the goddesslike vraja-gopis.

The Lord's feature of dhira-prashanta is described in the following words of Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (2.1.226):

shama-prakritikah kleshasahanash ca vivecakah vinayadi-gunopeto
dhira-shanta udiryate

"A person who is very peaceful, forbearing, considerate, and obliging is called dhira-prashanta."*

Lord Krishna manifested these qualities when He enjoyed pastimes of associating with and protecting Maharaja Yudhishtira and other devotees.

The Lord's feature of dhiroddhata is described in the following words of Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (2.1.226):

matsaryavan ahankari
mayavi roshanash calah vikatthanash ca vidvadbhir dhiroddhata udahritah

"A person who is very envious, prud, easily angered, restless, and complacent is called dhiroddhata by learned schoalrs."*

Lord Krishna manifested these qualities when He approached the demons. These qualities are manifest to punish the demons. All these different features are counted among the uddipanas (secondary causes of ecstatic love).

Lord Krishna has two castes: 1. gopa, and 2. kshatriya. His complexion is dark. He is youthful. He has a host of transcendental qualities poets may describe in many metaphors and similies. His associates are gopas and members of other castes also. His pastimes are also counted among the uddipanas (causes of ecstatic love). His pastimes are of two kinds: 1. the pastimes of creation, maintenance, and destruction of the material worlds, pastimes manifested by the maya potency, and 2. His pastimes that are the activities He performs with His own graceful transcendental form, pastimes like smiling, playing, dancing, and fighting, pastimes manifest by His internal potency (svarupa-shakti). His internal potency is so called because it is manifested from the bliss of His own transcendental form. The Lord's internal potency is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.9.23):

ramayatma-shaktya yad yat karishyati

"The Supreme Lord's activities are always enacted through His internal potency, Rama, or the goddess of fortune."*

Because He is the supreme controller, the Lord may act in any way He pleases. His pastimes are described in these words of Vedanta-sutra (2.1.33):

lokavat tu lila-kaivalyam

"Although they seem to be the actions of an ordinary person in the material world, the Lord's pastimes are all transcendental."

To enjoy pastimes the lord sometimes acts as if He were not all-powerful. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (8.6.17):

eka evashvaras tasmin
sura-karye sureshvarah vihartu-kamas tan aha
samudronmathanadibhih

"Although the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the master of the demigods, was capable of performing the activities of the demigods by Himself, He wanted to enjoy pastimes in churning the ocean. Therefore He spoke as follows."*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"Here the words 'eka evashvarah' mean 'although He was capable of performing these activities by Himself'."

The Lord's different pastimes and pastimes are described in these words of Vishnu-dharmottaraPurana:

yasyam yasyam yada yonau pradurbhavati karanat tad-yoni-sadrisham vatsa
tada loke viceshtate

"O child, in whatever species of life He incarnates, the Supreme Personality of Godhead acts as a member of that species would act.

samhartum jagad-ishanah samartho 'pi tada nripa
tad-yoni-sadrishopayair
vadhyam himsati yadava

"O king, O descendent of Maharaja Yadu, although He is always the master of all the worlds, and although He has the power to destroy all the worlds, He acts as a member of that species would act. In those incarnations the Lord acts to kill the demons, demons that deserve death."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 8.6.17, quoted in this anuccheda, was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

The activities the Supreme Personality of Godhead performs in His transcendental form are of two kinds: 1. activities of power and opulence (aishvarya-ceshta), and 2. activities of charming sweetness (madhurya-ceshta). Because His devotees love Him so much, the Lord manifests His great sweetness before them. Filled with wonder and bliss, Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami explains in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.19):

evam nigudhatma-gatih sva-mayaya gopatmajatvam caritair vidambayan reme rama-lalita-pada-pallavo gramyaih samam gramya-vad isha-ceshtitah

"In this way the Supreme Lord, whose soft lotus feet are personally attended by the goddess of fortune, concealed His transcendental opulences by His internal potency and acted like the son of a cowherd. Yet even while enjoying like a village boy in the company of other village residents, He often exhibited feats only God could perform."*

This verse means: "The Supreme Lord, whose soft lotus feet are personally attended by the goddess of fortune when He manifests His form as Lord Narayana, stayed amongst the people of Vraja."

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.18.27):

nirikshya tad-vapur alam ambare carat. . haladhara ishad atrasat

"When Lord Balarama, who carries the plow weapon, saw the gigantic body of the demon as he moved swiftly in the sky-with his blazing eyes, fiery hair, terrible teeth reaching toward his scowling brows, and an amazing effulgence generated by his armlets, crown and earrings-the Lord seemed to become a little frightened."

In this pastime the Lord's sweetness is manifest because He pretends to be an ordinary human beings. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.15.19 the word "mayaya" means "by My mercy". The Lord acts like an ordinary human beings so the people of Vraja will think He is one of them. The Lord acts in this way because He loves His devotees, as He has declared in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.4.68):

sadhavo hridayam mahyam. . .

"The pure devotee is always within the core of My heart, and I am always in the heart of the pure devotee. My devotees do not know anything else but Me, and I do not know anyone else but them."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.15.19 the word "nigudhatma-gatih" means "concealing His supreme opulence and acting like an ordinary human being of this world", "gopatmajatvam" means "like the son of an ordinary cowherd man", "caritair vidambayan reme" means "imitating an ordinary gopa's activities, He enjoyed pastimes". The word "rama-lalita-pada-pallavah" indicates that the Lord does not desire to enjoy the pastime where the goddess of fortune serves His feet as much as He desires to enjoy His pastimes with the people of Vraja. The pastimes with Vraja's peoples are described here in the words "gramyaih samam" which mean "pastimes with village boys". The Lord's pastimes with the people of Vraja are His most important pastimes. The pastimes where He displays His power and opulence are not His most important pastimes. An example of these pastimes is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.6):

sanjata-kopah sphuritarunadharam. . .

"Being very angry and biting His reddish lips with His teeth, Krishna, with false tears in His eyes, broke the container of yogurt with a piece of stone. Then He entered a room and began to eat the freshly churned butter in a solitary place."*

Even though He was in a solitary place, Lord Krishna still acted like an ordinary child. Another example of Lord Krishna acting as if He were an ordinary human beings is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.27):

tan vikshya krishnah. . .

"Krishna saw that all the cowherd boys, who did not know anyone but Him as their Lord, had now gone out of His hand and were helpless, having entered like straws into the fire of the abdomen of Aghasura, who was death personified. It was intolerable for Krishna to be separated from His friends the cowherd boys. Therefore, as if seeing that this had been arranged by His internal potency, Krishna was momentarily struck with wonder and unsure of what to do."*

In this pastime Lord Krishna became distressed, thinking that the cowherd boys were now under the control of fate. In this pastime the Lord thought and acted as if He were an ordinary human being. When they describe these activities of the Lord, the great sages become filled with wonder. In describing the battle with Jarasandha, Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami says in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.50.29):

sthity-udbhavantam bhuvana-trayasya yah samihite 'nanta-gunah sva-lilaya na tasya citram para-paksha-nigrahas tathapi martyanuvidhasya varnyate

"For Him who orchestrates the creation, maintenance, and destruction of the three worlds, and who possesses unlimited spiritual qualities, it is hardly amazing that He subdues an opposing party. Still, when the Lord does so, imitating human behavior, sages glorify His acts."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.15.19 quoted above, the word "isha" means "the Lord's pastime potency, which with its own perfect power establishes the extraordinary transcendental pastimes of the Lord, who yearns to taste the nectar of pastimes", and the word "ceshtitam" means "the Lord's pastimes, which sometimes seem to be ordinary activities and sometimes are wonderful activities impossible for others to perform". An example of the extraordinary and ordinary nature of the Lord's pastimes is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.69.37):

athovaca hrishikesham

naradah prahasann iva
yoga-mayodayam vikshya
manushim iyusho gatim

"Thus having seen this display (where Lord Krishna was present in 16,000 palaces simultaneously) of the Lord's Yogamaya, Narada mildly laughed and then addressed Lord Hrishikesha, who was adopting the behavior of a human beings."

The extraordinary and ordinary nature of the Lord's pastimes is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.36-37):

yady evam tarhi vyadehity uktah sa bhagavan harih vyadattavyahataishvaryah
krida-manuja-balakah

sa tatra dadrishe vishvam

"Mother Yashoda challenged Krishna, 'If You have not eaten earth, then open Your mouth wide.' When challenged by His mother in this way, Krishna, the son of Nanda Maharaja and Yashoda, to exhibit pastimes like a human child, opened His mouth. Although the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krishna, who is full of all opulences, did not disturb His mother's parental affection, His opulence was automatically displayed, for Krishna's opulence is never lost at any stage, but is manifest at the proper time.*

"When Krishna opened His mouth wide by the order of Mother Yashoda, she saw within His mouth all moving and nonmoving entities, outer space, and all directions, along with mountains, islands, oceans, the surface of the earth, the blowing wind, fire, the moon, and stars. She saw the planetary systems, water, light, air, sky, and creation by transformation of akankara. She also saw the senses, the mind, sense perception, and the three qualities goodness, passion, and ignorance. She saw the time allotted for the living entities, she saw natural instinct and the reactions of karma, and she saw desires and different varieties of bodies, moving and nonmoving. Seeing all these aspects of the cosmic manifestation, along with herself and Vrindavana-dhama, she became doubtful and fearful of her son's nature."*

The Supreme Lord's sweetness, as was previously described in these pages, is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.35):

naham bhakshitavan amba
sarve mithyabhishamsinah yadi satya-giras tarhi
samaksham pashya me mukham

"Lord Shri Krishna replied: My dear mother, I have never eaten dirt. All My friends complaining against Me are liars. If You think they are being truthful, you can directly look in My mouth and examine it."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.8.36 quoted above the word "avyahataishvaryah" shows that the Supreme Lord's pastimes are arranged by His pastime potency (lila-shakti). It is His pastime potency that increases Yasaoda's motherly affection for Krishna and fills her with awe and wonder. It is the lord's pastime potency that turns the Lord's anxious lie "I have never eaten dirt" into the truth. In His Damodara pastime as long as the Lord to not agree to be bound with rope, the rope to bind Him was always too short by the measurement of two fingers. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.15):

tad dama. . .

"When mother Yashoda was trying to bind the offending child, she saw that the binding rope was short by a distance the width of two fingers. Thus she brought another rope to join to it."*

However, when Mother Yashoda became exhausted, Lord Krishna agreed to be bound. Then the rope was not longer two fingers short. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.18):

sva-matuh svinna-gatraya. . .

"Because of mother Yashoda's hard labor, her whole body became covered with perspiration, and the flowers and comb were falling from her hair. When child Krishna saw His mother thus fatigued, He became merciful to her and agreed to be bound."*

In the same way with His merciful glance Lord Krishna revived His gopa friends after they fainted by drinking the poisoned water of Kaliya Lake, and in the same way He swallowed a forest fire and performed many other extraordinary activities. The words "krida-manuja-balakah" (who enjoyed pastimes as if He were a human child) is echoed in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.68):

krida-manusha-rupinah

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead was manifesting a humanlike form to enjoy His pastimes."

It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.60):

karya-manushah. . .

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead was acting the role of a human being."

In this way Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.15.19 is explained. That verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 152

These truths of the Supreme Lord's pastimes, truths discussed in the previous explanations given here, are confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.19):

kritva tavantam atmanam yavatir gopa-yoshitah reme sa bhagavams tabhir
atmaramo 'pi lilaya

"Expanding Himself as many times as there were cowherd women to associate with, the Supreme Lord, though self-satisfied, playfully enjoyed their company."

Here the words "rarama abhih" mean "the Lord enjoyed pastimes with the gopis". It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.43):

tasyaravinda-nayanasya. . . cakara tesham sankshobham akshara jusham api citta-tanvoh

"When the breeze carrying the aroma of tulasi leaves from the toes of the lotus feet of the Personality of Godhead entered the nostrils of those sages, they experienced a change both in body and in mind, even though they were attached to the impersonal Brahman understanding."*

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.33.19 means: "When the Lord desired to enjoy pastimes with all the the gopis simultaneously, His pastime potency arranged that the Lord be manifested in this way." The word "lilaya" in this verse indicates that this pastimes was arranged by the Lord's pastime potency. The Lord did not make these arrangements Himself. Here the words "kritva tavantam atmanam" indicate that the Lord manifested His own form as many times as there were gopis. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 153

The Lord's pastimes of sweetness are the most exalted of His pastimes. To increase His enjoyment, the Lord enjoys these wonderful pastimes with many gopis simultaneously. Shrila Sukadeva Gosvami, Lord Siva, Lord Brahma, and the sages and demigods know these pastimes of the Lord are the most sweet. Lord Krishna's pastimes are also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.11):

ittham satam brahma-sukhanubhutya. . .

"In this way, all the cowherd boys used to play with Krishna, who is the source of the Brahman effulgence for jnanis desiring to merge into that effulgence, who is the Supreme Personality of Godhead for devotees who have accepted eternal servitorship, and who for ordinary persons is but another ordinary child. The cowherd boys, having accumulated the results of pious activities for many lives, were able to associate in this way with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. How can one explain their great fortune?"*

The Lord's pastimes are again described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.15):

shakra-sharva-parameshthi-purogah. . . kashmalam yayuh. . .

"When Krishna takes His flute to His bimba-red lips and sends forth the tones of the harmonic scale in variegated melodies, Brahma, Shiva, Indra, and other chief demigods become confused upon hearing the sound. Although they are the most learned authorities, they cannot ascertain the essence of that music, and thus they bow down their heads and hearts."

In this way the demigods become bewildered by hearing Lord Krishna's flute music.

The devotees attracted to the principles of religion appreciate the sweetness of the Lord enjoying pastimes of preaching the rules of religion in His humanlike (krida-manusha-rupinah) pastimes. These pastimes of preaching are seen in the following words spoken by Lord Krishna in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.69.40):

brahman dharmasya vaktaham karta tad-anumodita tac chikshayan lokam imam asthitah putra ma khidah

"O brahmana, I am the speaker of religion, its performer and sanctioner. I observe religious principles to teach them to the world, My child, so do not be disturbed."

After seeing many of Lord Krishna's pastimees, Narada Muni became filled with bliss. Still, thinking of the duty of preaching the principles of religion, he became worried. Lord Krishna spoke this verse to him.

Anuccheda 154

The Lord's pastimes of detachment from the material world are considered sweet by the neophyte devotees. These pastimes are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.3.22):

tasyaivam ramamanasya samvatsara-ganan bahun grihamedheshu yogeshu
viragah samajayata

"The Lord was thus engaged in household life for many, many years, but at last His detachment from ephemeral sex life was fully manifested."*

Here the word "grihamedheshu" means in the religious duties of pious household life, and "viragah" means "detachment". This verse was spoken by Shriman Uddhava to Vidura.

Anuccheda 155

Now will be considered the various objects (dravya) included amongst the uddipanas (impetuses for ecstatic love). Included amongst these objects are the Lord's ornaments, musical instruments, places, markings, personal associates, devotees, tulasi, remnants, and many other things. The Lord's ornaments include His garments, ornaments, flower-ornaments, and many other things. All these are manifested on the Lord transcendental form. They were described in the Bhagavat-sandarbha, Anuccheda 61. They are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.2.12):

bhushana-bhushanangam

"His (Shri Krishna's) transcendental body is the ornament of all ornaments."*

This is means that is because they come into contact with Lord Krishna's handsomeness, bodily fragrance, and other glorious features that the Lord's ornaments have the power to decorate the Lord's transcendental body. On their own the ornaments have no power to decorate the Lord's body. Because they are in contact with the Lord's form, potencies, pastimes, and qualities, the Lord's ornaments become glorious. They are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.2):

pitambara-dharah sragvi
sakshan manmatha-manmathah

"Then Lord Krishna, a smile on His lotus face, appeared before the gopis. Wearing a garland and a yellow garment, He directly appeared as one who can bewilder the mind of Cupid, who himself bewilders the minds of ordinary people."

In this way it is said that the flower-garland and yellow garments decorate the the Supreme Lord, whose glorious handsomeness has no equal or superior. It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.41.35):

idrishany eva vasamsi
nityam giri-vane-carah

"You impudent boys! You're accustomed to roaming the mountains and forests, and yet You would dare put on such clothes as these! These are the king's possessions You're asking for!"

These words were spoken by a demonic washerman. He saw the lord's clothing and ornaments in that way. The way the people in general saw the Lord's clothing and ornaments is described in these words of Vishnu Purana:

suvarnanjana-curnabhyam
tau tada bhushitambarau

"Krishna and Balarama were decorated with fragrant ointments and powders, with splendid garments, and with golden ornaments."

The Lord's ornaments are also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.22):

shyamam hiranya-paridhim. . .

"His complexion was dark blue and His garment golden. Wearing a peacock feather, colored minerals, sprigs of flower buds, and a garland of forest flowers and leaves, he was dressed just like a dramatic dancer. He rested one hand upon the shoulder of a friend and with the other twirled a lotus. Liles graced His ears, His hair hung down over His cheeks, and His lotuslike face was smiling."

Kaliya-, Varuna, and Indra who offered abhisheka to the Lord, all presented to the Lord gifts of glorious garments and ornaments. By the arrangement of the Lord's internal potency Lord Krishna accepted the garments that had belonged to Kamsa. Also by the arrangement of the Lord's internal potency Lord Krishna accepted the many wives of Narakasura. The Lord's weapons include His club and cakra. His musical instruments include His flute and conchshell. His places include Vrindavana and Mathura. His auspicious markings include the markings on the soles of His feet. His personal associates include the cowherd people and the Yadavas. The remnants of things He has used include gopi-candana. Amongst the uddipanas are also the times sacred to the Lord, times such as Janmashtami. All these are uddipanas that arouse the devotees' love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. An example of the uddipanas arousing a devotee's attraction for the Lord is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.42.9):

tato rupa-gunaudaryasannamna praha keshavam uttariyanta akrishya
smayanti jata-hrid-chaya

"Now endowed with beauty, character, and generosity, Trivakra began to feel lusty desires for Lord Keshava. Taking hold of the upper end of His cloth, she smiled and addressed Him as follows."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 156

In the different rasas different limbs and features of the Lord become uddipanas to arouse the devotees' love. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.27):

shriyo nivaso yasyorah
pana-patram mukham drisham bahavo loka-palanam
saranam padambujam

"The Lord's chest is the abode of the goddess of fortune. His moonlike face is the drinking vessel for eyes which hanker after all that is beautiful. His arms are the resting places for the administrative demigods. And His lotus feet are the refuge of pure devotees who never talk or sing of any subject except His Lordship."*

Here the word "shriyah" means "of the Lord's beloved", "drisham" means "of the eyes of all the dear devotees", "loka-palanam" means "of they who should be protected", "saranganam" means "of all the devotees", and "nivasah" means "shelter". These features are described in this way because they are all uddipanas (impetuses for ecstatic love). This verse was spoken by Shrila Suta Gosvami.

Anuccheda 157

Sometimes great obstacles also become uddipanas. The following wexample is seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.53.20-21):

shrutvaitad bhagavan ramo
vipakshiya-nripodyamam
krishnam caikam gatam hartum
kanyam kalaha-shankitah

balena mahata sardham
bhratri-sneha-pariplutah

"When Lord Balarama heard about these preparations of the inimical kings and how Lord Krishna had set off alone to steal the bride, He feared that a fight would ensue. Immersed in affection for His brother, He hurried to Kundina with a mighty army."

The Lord's body being anointed with dust and mud in His pastimes act as uddipanas in the same way for the devotees in vatsalya-rasa. The obstacles presented by elder relatives and others also act as uddipanas for the devotees in shringara-rasa. In the same way various kinds of obstacles act as uddipanas in the five primary and seven secondary rasas. The vyabharis (disturbing symptoms of ecstatic love) are also manifest in the various rasas, as described in the following words of Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (4.7.14):

ami pancaiva shantadya
harer bhakti-rasa matah eshu hasadayah prayo
bibhrati vyabharitam

"The five primary bhakti-rasas beginning with shanta-rasa, and the seven secondary bhakti-rasas beginning with hasa-rasa all manifest the vyabharis (disturbing symptoms of ecstatic love)."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.53.20-21) quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 158

In this way the uddipanas were described. Among the uddipanas those manifested in Vrindavana are the most exalted. This is so because in Vrindavana Lord Krishna is the sole object of the highest spiritual love. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.11.36):

vrindavanam govardhanam. . .

"O King Parikshit, when Rama and Krishna saw Vrindavana, Govardhana, and the banks of the River Yamuna, They both enjoyed great pleasure."*

Speaking to Lord Balarama, Lord Krishna described the glories of Vrindavana in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.5):

aho ami deva-varamararcitam. . .

"O greatest of Lords, just see how these trees are bowing their heads at Your lotus feet, which are worshipable by the immortal demigods. The trees are offering You their fruits and flowers to eradicate the dark ignorance that has caused their birth as trees."

The great devotees who reside in Vrindavana are praised in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.34):

tad bhuri-bhagyam iha janma. . .

"I am most humbly praying at Your lotus feet for You to please give me any sort of birth within this Vrindavana forest so that I may be able to be favored by the dust of the feet of some of the devotees of Vrindavana. Even if I am given the chance to grow just as the humble grass in this land, that will be a glorious birth for me. But if I am not so fortunate to take birth within the forest of Vrindavana, I beg to be allowed to take birth outside the immediate area of Vrindavana so that when the devotees go out they will walk over me. Even that would be a great fortune for me. I am just aspiring for a birth in which I will be smeared by the dust of Your devotees' feet. I can see that everyone here is simply full of Krishna consciousness. They do not know anything but Mukunda. All the Vedas are indeed searching after the lotus feet of Krishna."*

The great devotees who reside in Vrindavana are also praised in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.61):

asam aho carana-renu-jusham. . .

"The gopis of Vrindavana have given up the association of their husbands, sons, and other family members, who are very difficult to give up, and they have forsaken the path of chastity to take shelter of the lotus feet of Mukunda, Krishna, which one should search for by Vedic knowledge. Oh, let me be fortunate enough to be one of the bushes, creepers, or herbs in Vrindavana, because the gopis trample them and bless them with the dust of their feet."*

The great devotees who reside in Vrindavana are also praised in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.10):

vrndavanam sakhi bhuvo vitanoti kirtim. . .

"O friend, Vrindavana is spreading the glory of the earth, having obtained the treasure of the lotus feet of Krishna, the son of Devaki. The peacocks dance madly when they hear Govinda's flute, and when other creatures see them from the hilltops, they all become stunned."

The pastimes Lord Krishna enjoys in Vrindavana are the best of all His pastimes. This is described in the following words of the Trailokya-sammohana Tantra, Shrimad-ashtadashakshara-prastava:

santi tasya maha-bhaga avatarah sahasrashah tesham madhye 'vataranam
balatvam ati-durlabham

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead has thousands and thousands of glorious incarnations. Amongst them all His incarnation as a child is the most glorious and the most rare."

Here the word "bala" (child) means "until the age of sixteen". In the Hari-lila-tika-smriti it is said:

garbhastha-sadrisho jneya
ashtamad vatasrac chishuh balash cashodashad varshat paugandash ceti procyate

"From the time of living in the womb until the age of age a child is called `shishu'. Up to thw age of sixteen a child is called `bala' or `pauganda'."

The childhood of the Supreme Personality of Godhead is glorified in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.46-47):

nandah kim akarod brahman shreya evam mahodayam
yashoda ca maha-bhaga
papau yasyah stanam harih

"Having heard of the great fortune of Mother Yashoda, Parikshit Maharaja inquired from Shukadeva Gosvami: O learned brahmana, mother Yashoda's breast milk was sucked by the Supreme Personality of Godhead. What past auspicious activities did she and Nanda Maharaja perform to achieve such perfection in ecstatic love?*

pitarau nanvavindetam
krishnodararbhakehitam

gayanty adyapi kavayo
yal loka-shamalapaham

"Although Krishna was so pleased with Vasudeva and Devaki that He descended as their son, they could not enjoy Krishna's magnanimous childhood pastimes, which are so great that simply chanting about them vanquishes the contamination of the material world. Nanda Maharaja and Yashoda, however, enjoyed these pastimes fully, and therefore their position is always better than that of Vasudeva and Devaki."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam's Eleventh Canto, after describing Lord Krishna's pastimes in a general way, and after explaining that Lord Krishna's pastimes arouse devotion (bhakty-uddipana) in the hearers, it is said that Lord Krishna's childhood pastimes are the best of His pastimes. There it is said (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.31.28):

ittham harer bhagavato ruciravatara-viryani bala-caritani ca shantamani anyatra ceha ca shrutani grinan manushyo bhaktim param paramahamsa-gatau labheta

"The all-auspicious exploits of the all-attractive incarnations of Lord Shri Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and also the pastimes He performed as a child, are described in this Shrimad-Bhagavatam and in other scriptures. Anyone who clearly chants these descriptions of His pastimes will attain transcendental loving service unto Lord Krishna, who is the goal of all perfect sages."

Lord Krishna's exalted Vrindavana pastimes are of many kinds. For example, there are the pastimes where He reveals His power and opulence (aishvarya), such as the pastime where He shows that many millions of universes are present in His eternal spiritual form full of knowledge and limitless bliss. There are also his pastimes of compassion (karunya), such as His pastime of showing compassion to Putana and allowing her to become like His own mother. Then there are also His pastimes of sweetness (madhurya), which are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.22):

tav anghri-yugmam anukrishya sarishripantau. . .

"When Krishna and Balarama, with the strength of Their legs, crawled in the muddy places created in Vraja by cow dung and cow urines, Their crawling resembled the crawling of serpents, and the sound of Their ankle bells was very charming. Very much pleased by the sound of other people's ankle bells, They used to follow these people as if going to Their mothers, but when They saw that these were other people, They became afraid and returned to Their real mothers, Yashoda and Rohini."*

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.29):

vatsan muncan kvacid asamaye. . .

"Our dear friend Yashoda, your son sometimes comes to our houses before the milking of the cows and releases the calves, and when the master of the house becomes angry, your son merely smiles. Sometimes He devises some process by which He steals palatable curd, butter, and milk, which He then eats and drinks. When the monkeys assemble, He divides it with them, and when the monkeys have their bellies so full that they won't take any more, He breaks the pots. Sometimes, if He gets no opportunity to steal butter and milk from a house, He will be angry at the householders, and for His revenge He will agitate the small children by pinching them. Then, when they begin crying, Krishna will go away."*

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.11.7):

gopibhih stobhito 'nrityat. . .

"The gopis would say: 'If You dance, my dear Krishna, then I shall give You half a sweetmeat.' By saying these words or by clapping their hands, all the gopis encouraged Krishna in different ways. At such times, although He was the supremely powerful Personality of Godhead, He would smile and dance according to their desire, as if He were a wooden doll in their hands. Sometimes He would sing very loudly, at their bidding. In this way, Krishna came completely under the control of the gopis."*

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.11.39-40):

kvacid vadayato venum. . .

"Sometimes Krishna and Balarama would play on Their flutes, sometimes They would throw ropes and stones devised for getting fruits from the trees, sometimes They would throw only stones, and sometimes, Their ankle-bells tinkling, They would play football with fruits like bael and amalaki. Sometimes They would cover Themselves with blankets and imitate cows and bulls and fight with one another, orating loudly, and sometimes They would imitate the voices of the animals. In this way They enjoyed sporting, exactly like two ordinary human children."*

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.1):

kvacid vanashaya mano dadhad vrajat. . .

"O King, one day Krishna decided to take His breakfast as a picnic in the forest. Having risen early in the morning, He blew His bugle made of horn and woke all the cowherd boys and calves with its beautiful sound. Then Krishna and the boys, keeping their respective groups of calves before them, proceeded from Vrajabhumi to the forest."*

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.10-12):

kvacid gayati gayatsu. . .

"Sometimes the honeybees in Vrindavana became so mad with ecstasy that they closed their eyes and began to sing. Lord Krishna, moving along the forest Path with His cowherd boyfriends and Baladeva, would then respond to the bees by imitating their singing while His friends sang about His pastimes. Sometimes Lord Krishna would imitate the chattering of a parrot, sometimes, with a sweet voice, the call of a cuckoo, and sometimes the cooing of swans. Sometimes He vigorously imitated the dancing of a peacock, making His cowherd boyfriends laugh. Sometimes, with a voice as deep as the rumbling of clouds, He would call out with great affection the names of the animals who had wandered far from the herd, thus enchanting the cows and the cowherd boys."*

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.42):

tam gorajas-churita-kuntala-baddha-barha. . .

"Lord Krishna's hair, powdered with the dust raised by the cows, was decorated with a peacock feather and forest flowers. The Lord glanced charmingly and smiled beautifully, playing upon His flute while His companions chanted His glories. The gopis, all together, came forward to meet Him, their eyes very eager to see Him."*

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.18.10):

krishnasya nrityatah kecit. . .

"As Krishna danced, some of the boys accompanied Him by singing, and others by playing flutes, hand cymbals and buffalo horns, while still others praised His dancing."

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.20.26):

dhenavo manda-gaminya. . .

"The cows had to move slowly because of their weighty milk bags, but they quickly ran to the Supreme Personality of Godhead as soon as He called them, their affection for Him causing their udders to become wet."*

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.7):

akshanvatam phalam. . .

"The cowherd girls said: O friends, those eyes that see the beautiful faces of the sons of Maharaja Nanda are certainly fortunate. As these two sons enter the forest, surrounded by Their friends, driving the cows before Them, They hold Their flutes to Their mouths and glance lovingly upon the residents of Vrindavana. For those who have eyes, we think there is no greater object of vision."*

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.22):

shyamam hiranya-paridhim. . .

"His complexion was dark blue and His garment golden. Wearing a peacock feather, colored minerals, sprigs of flower buds, and a garland of forest flowers and leaves, He was dressed just like a dramatic dancer. He rested one hand upon the shoulder of a friend and with the other twirled a lotus. Lilies graced His ears, His hair hung down over His cheeks, and His lotuslike face was smiling."

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.1):

bhagavan api ta ratrih

"Shri Badarayani said: Shri Krishna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, full in all opulences, yet upon seeing those autumn nights scented with blossoming jasmine flowers, He turned His mind toward loving affairs. To fulfill His purposes He employed His internal potency."

Lord Krishna's sweetness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.2):

vama-bahu-krita-vama-kapolah. . .

"When Mukunda vibrates the flute He has placed to His lips, stopping its holes with His tender fingers, He rests His left cheek on His left arm and makes His eyebrows dance. At that time the demigoddesses traveling in the sky with their husbands, the Siddhas, become amazed. As those ladies listen, they are embarrassed to find their minds yielding to the pursuit of lusty desires, and in their distress they are unaware that the belts of their garments are loosening."

What more need be said? Devotees who in their hearts love the Lord will easily understand all these descriptions.

Amongst the bhavas manifest in the heart are the anubhavas, which will now be discussed. The anubhavas are of two kinds: 1. udbhasvara-anubhavaa, and 2. sattvika-anubhavas. The udbhasvaras are anubhavas manifest as external activities. They are described in these words of Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (2.2.2):

nrityam viluthitam ganam
kroshanam anumotanam hunkaro jrimbhanam shvasabhuma lokanupekshita lala-sravo 'töa-hasash ca
ghurna-hikkadayo 'pi ca

"The udbhasvaras are dancing, rolling on the ground, singing very loudly, stretching the body, crying loudly, yawning, breathing very heavily, neglecting the presence of others, drooling, laughing like a madman, wheeling the head, and belching."*

The sattvika-anubhavas are ecstatic symptoms that come from the heart. They are described in these words of Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (2.3.16):

te stambha-sveda-romancah
svara-bhedo 'tha vepathuh vaivarnyam ashru pralaya
ity ashöau sattvikah smritah

"The eight sattvika-bhavas are becoming stunned, perspiring, standing of the hairs on the body, faltering of the voice, trembling of the body, changing of bodily colors, shedding of tears, and devastation."*

In this verse the word "pralaya" (devastation) means "when all activities are lost". This means "when, for the sake of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, all external material activities are lost". In this state internal spiritual activities for the sake of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are not lost. These internal devotional activities are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.2.4-6):

sa muhurtam abhut tushnim krishnanghri-sudhaya bhrisham tivrena bhakti-yogena
nimagnah sadhu nirvritah

shanakair bhagaval-lokan nrilokam punar agatah

"For a moment he remained dead silent, and his body did not move. He became absorbed in the nectar of remembering the Lord's lotus feet in devotional ecstasy, and he appeared to be going increasingly deeper into that ecstasy.*

"It was so observed by Vidura that Uddhava had all the transcendental bodily changes due to total ecstasy, and he was trying to wipe away tears of separation from his eyes. Thus Vidura could understand that Uddhava had completely assimilated extensive love for the Lord.*

"The great devotee Uddhava soon came back from the abode of the Lord to the human plane."*

These internal devotional activities are also described in these words of the Garuda Purana:

jagrat-svapna-sushupteshu yoga-sthasya ca yoginah ya kacin manaso vrittih
sa bhaved acyutashraya

"During wakefulness, dream, and dreamless sleep a yogi situated in yoga keeps the activities of his mind fixed always on the infallible Supreme Personality of Godhead."

In that condition of rapt meditation on the Lord one can understand the different tastes of the different rasas.

Now the sancari-bhavas, which are also called vyabhicari-bhavas will be discussed. The 33 vyabhicaris are described in these words of Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (2.4.1-2, and 4-6):

sancarayanti bhavasya gatim. . .
. . .visheshenabhimukhyena caranti sthayinam prati. . .

nirvedo 'tha vishado
dainyam glani-shramo ca mada-garvau shanka-trasavega
unmadapasmriti tatha vyadhih

moho mritir alasyam
jadyam vridavahittha ca
smritir atha vitarka-cintamati-dhritayo harisa utsukatvam ca

augryamarshasuyash
capalyam caiva nidra ca

"There are some bodily symptoms which express overwhelming ecstatic love (vyabhicari-bhava). They are counted at 33 as follows: disappointment, lamentation, humility, guilt, fatigue, intoxication, pride, doubt, apprehension, intense emotion, madness, forgetfulness, disease, confusion, death, laziness, inertness, bashfulness, concealment, remembrance argumentativeness, anxiety, thoughtfulness, endurance, happiness, eagerness, violence, haughtiness, envy, impudence, dizziness, sleepiness, and alertness."*

To understand the characteristics of all these one may look in the Ujjvala-nilamani. Here the word "trasa" (apprehension) means "when the devotees in vatsalya-rasa and the other rasas become apprehensive that their association with Krishna will become broken". "Nidra" (sleepiness) here means "with a heart free of cares, in a dream the devotee meets Krishna". "Shrama" (fatigue) here means "fatigue attained by engaging in blissful activities for Krishna's sake". "Alasyam" (laziness) here means "unwillingness to perform actions that have no relation to Lord Krishna". "Bodha" (alertness) here means "alert to see Lord Krishna". These 33 vyabhicaris are not material, for they are beyond the modes of material nature. This is so because they bring love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavat-priiti). Together these anubhavas are part of the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. They are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.3.31-32):

smarantah smarayantash ca mitho 'ghaughaharam harim bhaktya sanjataya bhaktya
bibhraty utpulkam tanum

"The devotees of the Lord constantly discuss the glories of the Personality of Godhead among themselves. Thus they constantly remember the Lord and remind one another of His qualities and pastimes. In this way, by their devotion to the principles of bhakti-yoga, the devotees please the Personality of Godhead, who takes away from them everything inauspicious. Being purified of all impediments, the devotees awaken to pure love of Godhead, and thus, even within this world, their spiritualized bodies exhibit symptoms of transcendental ecstasy, such as standing of the bodily hairs on end.

kvacid rudanty acyuta-cintaya kvacid dhasanti nandanti vadanty alaukikah nrityanti gayanty anushilayanty ajam bhavanti tushnim param etya nirvritah

"Having achieved love of Godhead, the devotees sometimes cry out loud, absorbed in thought of the infallible Lord. Sometimes they laugh, feel great pleasure, speak out loud to the Lord, dance, or sing. Such devotees, havign transcended material, conditional life, sometimes imitate the unborn Supreme by acting out His pastimes. And sometimes, achieving His personal audience, they remain peaceful and silent."

In these two verses Lord Hari is the alambana (primary impetus for ecstatic love, remembering Lord Hari is the uddipana (secondary impetus for ecstatic love), reminding one another of Lord Hari and other like devotional activities are the udbhasvaras (external activities of ecstatic love), the standing up of the body's hairs is one of the sattvika-bhavas, and the activities beginning with being rapt in thought of the Lord are the sancari-bhavas. When devotion is awakened in this way sthayi-bhava (continuous ecstasy) is manifest. The words "And sometimes, achieving His personal audience, they (the devotees) remain peaceful and silent" describe samvalana (the situation when all the elements of rasa are joined together). Here the word "param" means "the supreme object of rasa". The rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead are five. These five are shanta-rasa (neutrality), dasya-rasa (servitorship), sakhya-rasa (friendship), vatsalya-rasa (paternal love), and shringara-rasa (conjugal love). Because they manifest sthayi-bhava and because they are eternal and unchanging, always manifest, these five rasas are said to be the primary rasas. Sometimes amnifest among these fiver primary rasas are other rasas, rasas that begin with adbhuta (wonder). Because they are not always manifest, these rasas are said to be secondary rasas. The primary rasas are described in these words:

madhurena samapayet

"The five rasas culminating in shringara-rasa are the primary rasas."

Certain combinations of the secondary rasas are considered rasabhāsa (incompatible mixtures of rasa).

Now the secondary rasas will be discussed. The secondary rasas, which begin with adbhuta (wonder) increase the devotees' love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. They are described in these words:

adbhuto hasya-virau ca
raudro bhishana ity api bibhatsah karunash ceti
gaunah sapta rasah smritah

"The seven kinds of indirect ecstasies of devotional service are known as laughing, astonishment, chivalry, compassion, anger, dread, and ghastliness."*

The adbhuta-rasa (wonder) here is wonder that is full of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Here the alambanas are the extraordinary and unexpected activities of the Lord, the visaya (object of perception) is Lord Krishna, adhara (person who loves) is the devotee, the uddipanas (secondary impetuses for ecstatic love) are the Lord's activities, the anubhavas (bodily manifestations of rasa) are glances and other like things, the vyabhicaris (external manifestations of ecstatic love) are agitation, joy, becoming stunned, and other like ecstatic symptoms, the sthayi-bhava (continuous ecstasy) is the rasa of wonder filled with love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The rasa of wonder is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.69.2):

citram bataitad ekena
vapusha yugapat prithak griheshu dvy-ashöa-sahasram striya eka udavahat

"It is astounding that Lord Shri Krishna, who is one without a second, expanded Himself in sixteen-thousand similar forms to marry sixteen-thousand queens in their respective homes."*

Now the rasa of laughter and comedy (hasya-rasa) filled with love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead will be discussed. In hasya-rasa the alambanas are various activities, garments, and joking words, the vishaya (source of comedy) is Lord Krishna, and the adhara is the devotee. If pleasant and unpleasant things bring the rasa of comedy then that rasa increases the devotee's love for Lord Krishna. This rasa is also manifest in dana-rasa (the rasa of giving charity), yuddha-rasa (the rasa of conflict), and vira-rasa (the rasa of chivalry). The uddipanas here are the actions, words, garments, and other things that create laughter. The anubhavas are the trembling of the nostrils and lips and other like symptoms. The vyabhicaris are joy, laziness, dissimulation, and other like things. The sthayi-bhava is comedy based on love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The jokes in this rasa bring pleasure to the heart. An example of this rasa of joking and laughter is given in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.29):

vatsan muncan kvacid asamaye krosha-sanjata-hasah. . .

"Our dear friend Yashoda, your son sometimes comes to our houses before the milking of the cows and releases the calves, and when the master of the house becomes angry, your son merely smiles. Sometimes He devises some process by which He steals palatable curd, butter, and milk, which He then eats and drinks. When the monkeys assemble, He divides it with them, and when the monkeys have their bellies so full that they won't take any more, He breaks the pots. Sometimes, if He gets no opportunity to steal butter and milk from a house, He will be angry at the householders, and for His revenge He will agitate the small children by pinching them. Then, when they begin crying, Krishna will go away."*

Another example is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.30):

hastagrahye racayati vidhim. . .

"When the milk and curd are kept high on a swing hanging from a ceiling and Krishna and Balarama cannot reach it, They arrange to reach it by piling up various planks and turning upside down the mortar for grinding spices. Being quite aware of the contents of a pot, They pick holes in it. While the elderly gopis go about their affairs, Krishna and Balarama sometimes go into a dark room, brightening the place with the valuable jewels and ornaments on Their bodies and taking advantage of this light by stealing."*

Another example is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.31):

evam dharshöyany ushati kurute. . .

. . . ittham stribhih sa-bhaya-nayana-shri-mukhalokinibhir vyakhyatartha prahasita-mukhi na hy upalabdhum aicchat

"When Krishna is caught in His naughty activities, the master of the house will say to Him: 'Oh, You are a thief,' and artificially express anger at Krishna. Krishna will then reply, 'I am not a thief. You are a thief.' Sometimes, being angry, Krishna passes urine and stool in a neat, clean place in our houses. But now, our dear friend Yashoda, this expert thief is sitting before you like a very good boy..'. Sometimes all the gopis would look at Krishna sitting there, His eyes fearful so His mother would not chastise Him, and when they saw Krishna's beautiful face, instead of chastising Him they would simply look upon His face and enjoy transcendental bliss. Mother Yashoda would mildly smile at all this fun, and she would not want to chastise her blessed transcendental child."*

In this verse the word "vyakhyatarthah" means "while complaining about Krishna's mischievous activities".

Anuccheda 159

An example of utprasa (mocking and satire) is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.22.9):

tasam vasamsy upadaya
nipam aruhya satvarah
hasadbhih prahasan balaih
parihasam uvaca ha

"Taking the girls' garments, He quickly climbed to the top of a kadamba tree. Then, as He laughed loudly and His companions also laughed, He addressed the girls jokingly."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 160

Another example of utprasa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.66.7):

katthanam tad upakarnya paundrakasyalpa-medhasah ugrasenadayah sabhya
uccakair jahasus tada

"King Ugrasena and the other members of the assembly laughed loudly when they heard this vain boasting of unintelligent Paundraka."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 161

Now the rasa of chivalry (vira-rasa) filled with love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead will be described. Vira-rasa is of four kinds: 1. dharma-vira (munificent in executing religious rites), 2. daya-vira (showing extraordinary mercy), 3. dana-vira (charitable activities), and 4. yuddha-vira (chivalrous activities in fighting). Now dharma-vira will be considered. In that rasa the alambana is the intense desire to perform religious rites. The vishaya (object of love) is Lord Krishna. The adhara (lover) is the devotee. The uddipanas are the instructions of the scriptures and other like things. The anubhavas are humility, faith, and other like virtues. The vyabhicaris are thoughtfulness, memory, and other like things. The sthayi-bhava is the eagerness to perform religious rites, an eagerness born of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. An example of dharma-vira is seen in these words spoken by Maharaja Yudhishthira in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.72.3):

kratu-rajena gpvinda
rajasuyena pavanih
yakshye vibhutir bhavatas
tat sampadaya nah prabho

"O Govinda, I desire to worship Your auspicious, opulent expansions by the Rajasuya sacrifice, the king of Vedic ceremonies. Please make our endeavor a success, my Lord."

Now the daya-vira rasa of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead will be considered. In this rasa the alambana is overwhelming compassion for all living entities, seeing everyone as originally devotees of the Supreme Lord. In this way the devotee satisfied Lord Krishna, who is seen as the vishaya (object of love). The adhara (lover) here is the devotee. This rasa is also seen in Lord Krishna's parents and many others who show compassion to Lord Krishna Himself. The uddipanas here are the perception of others' sufferings. The anubhavas are speaking words of consolation and other like activities. The vyabhicaris are eagerness, thoughtfulness, joy, and other like emotions. The sthayi-bhava is eagerness to be compassionate. An example of daya-rasa is given in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (9.21.5-15):

kricchra-prapta-kuumbasya
kshut-tridbhyam jata-vepathoh atithir brahmanah kale bhoktu-kamasya cagamat

tasmai samvyabhajat so 'nnam adritya shraddhayanvitah harim sarvatra sampashyan. . .

. . .iti prabhashya paniyam mriyamanah pipasaya

pulkasayadadad dhiro nisarga-karuno nripah

tasya tribhuvanadhishah phaladah phalam icchatam atmanam darshayam cakrur
maya vishnu-vinirmitah

"Rantideva never endeavored to earn anything. He would enjoy whatever he got by the arrangement of Providence, but when guests came he would give them everything. Thus he underwent considerable suffering, along with the members of his family. Indeed, he and his family members shivered for want of food and water. Yet Rantideva always remained sober. Once, after fasting for forty-eight days, in the morning Rantideva received some water and some foodstuffs made with milk and ghee, but when he and his family were about to eat, a brahmana guest arrived.*

"Because Rantideva perceived the presence of the Supreme Godhead everywhere and in every living entity, he received the guest with faith and respect and gave him a share of the food. The brahmana guest ate his share and then went away.*

"Thereafter, having divided the remaining food with his relatives, Rantideva was just about to eat his own share when a shudra guest arrived. Seeing the shudra in relationship with the Supreme Personality of Godhead, King Rantideva gave him also a share of the food.*

"When the shudra went away, another guest arrived, surrounded by dogs, and said: 'O king, I and my company of dogs are very hungry. Please give us something to eat.'*

"With great respect King Rantideva offered the balance of food to the dogs and the master of the dogs, who had come as guests. The king offered them all respects and obeisances.*

"Thereafter only the drinking water remained, and there was only enough to satisfy one person, but when the king was just about to drink it a candala appeared and said: 'O king, although I am lowborn, kindly give me some drinking water.*

"Aggrieved at hearing the pitiable words of the poor aggrieved candala, Maharaja Rantideva spoke the following nectarean words.*

"I do not pray to the Supreme Personality of Godhead for the eight perfections of mystic yoga, nor for salvation from repeated birth and death. I want only to stay among all the living entities and suffer all distresses on their behalf, so that they may be freed from all suffering.*

"By offering my water to maintain the life of this poor candala, who is struggling to live, I have been freed from all hunger, thirst, fatigue, trembling of the body, moroseness, distress, lamentation, and illusion.*

"Having spoken thus, King Rantideva, although on the verge of death because of thirst, gave his own portion of water to the candala without hesitation, for the king was naturally very kind and sober.*

"Demigods like Lord Brahma and Lord Shiva, who can satisfy all materially ambitious men by giving them the rewards they desire, then manifested their own identities before King Rantideva, for it was they who had presented themselves as the brahmana, shudra, candala, and so on."*

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 162

Now the dana-vira rasa (rasa of giving charity) in relation to love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead will be considered. This rasa is of two kinds: 1. giving charity very liberally (bahu-pradatva) and 2. giving away in charity one's own valuable possessions, possessions attained with great difficulty (samuthita-duraparthyaga). Now the first of these, the bahu-pradatva dana-vira rasa will be considered. In this rasa the alambana is the conclusion that great satisfaction comes from giving charity. For the person very eager thus to give charity, the vishaya (object of love) is Lord Krishna. Here the adhara (lover) is the devotee. Other persons who give charity, persons who are not devotees, give charity only externally (bahiranga). Here the uddipanas are seeing charity and other like things. The anubhavas are the smile that comes from giving in charity more than the recipient could have desired. Other like responses are also included here amongst the anubhavas. The vyabhicaris are thoughtfulness, eagerness, joy, and other like emotions. The sthayi-bhava is eagerness to give charity, eagerness impelled by love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. An example of this kind of charity is given in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.5.1):

nandas tv atmaja utpanne
jatahlado maha-manah. . .

"Delighted at the birth of His son, Maharaja Nanda gave abundant charity."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 163

Giving abundant charity is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (8.20.16):

evam shaptah sva-guruna satyan na calito mahan vamanaya dadav enam
arcitvodaka-purvakam

"Even after being cursed in this way by his own spiritual master, Bali Maharaja, being a great personality, never deviated from his determination. Therefore, according to custom, he first offered water to Vamadeva and then offered Him the gift of land he promised."*

In this verse the word "etam" (this) refers to the land. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 164

Now the second kind of dana-vira, namely giving away in charity one's own valuable possessions, possessions attained with great difficulty (samuthita-durapartha-tyaga), will be considered. In this second kind of dana-vira great enthusiasm is manifest in the same way enthusiasm is manifest in dharma-vira. In dana-vira the vishaya is Lord Krishna, the adhara is the devotee, the uddipanas are Lord Krishna's smiles, talks, and other things, the anubhavas are the earnest description of Lord Krishna's glories, the sancari-bhava is great determination, the sthayi-bhava is eagerness to renounce possessions, an eagerness impelled by spiritual love for Lord Krishna. An example of this second kind of dana-vira is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.29.13):

salokya-sarshöi-samipya-sarupya. . .

"A pure devotee does not accept any kind of liberation-salokya, sarshöi, samipya, sarupya, or ekatva-even though they are offered by the Supreme Personality of Godhead."*

Now yuddha-vira-rasa (chivalrous activities in fighting) in relation to the Supreme Personality of Godhead will be discussed. In this rasa the person who fights Krishna is full of love. Impelled by love for Krishna, he is eager to fight Him. Here the opponent may be an enemy fighting Krishna in a pastime-battle, or the opponent may be a friend standing before Krishna. The first kind of opponent takes Krishna as his enemy and, impelled by spiritual love, is eager to fight with Him. The second kind of opponent is a friend and his battle with Krishna is like a joke or a game. In this sense the yuddha-rasa becomes like hasya-rasa (the rasa of comedy or laughter). Here love for Krishna is the alambana. The alambana here is not the desire to fight. Here the two fighters, Krishna and the devotee, are two friends. Each thinks of the other as a friend. Their friendship is the alambana. In this rasa the uddipanas are the smiles and other like gestures manifest in battle. The anubhavas are the boasts, insults and other like words hurled in the heat of battle. The vyabhicaris are pride, agitation and other like sentiments. The styhayi-bhava is eagerness to fight, an eagerness born of friendship. Thus there are three kinds of opponents (Lord Krishna, Krishna's friend, and Krishna's enemy). Yuddha-vira rasa is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.18.12):

bhramanair langhanaih kshepair
asphoöana-vikarshanaih
cikridatur niyuddhena
kaka-paksha-dharau kvacit

"Krishna and Balarama played with Their cowherd boyfriends by whirling about, leaping, hurling, slapping and fighting. Sometimes Krishna and Balarama would pull the hair on the boys' heads."

Here the word "kaka-paksha-dharau" means "Krishna and Balarama would pull the hair in the boys' topknots, and "niyuddhena" means "they would whirl about and fight in many ways". This kind of friendly fighting is described in these words of Hari-vamsha:

tatha gandiva-dhanvanam vikridan madhusudanah jigaya bharata-shreshöham
kuntyah pramukhato vibhuh

"Playing, Krishna and Arjuna fought. As Kunti watched, Lord Krishna defeated Arjuna."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.18.12 quoted above was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 165

Yuddha-vira rasa is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.18.9):

rama-krishnadayo gopa
nanritur yuyudhur jaguh

"Balarama, Krishna and Their cowherd friends danced, wrestled and sang."

This verse means, "The cowherd boys fought with Krishna. In this way they pleased Him." This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 166

Yuddha-vira rasa is also seen in this description of the killing of Jaraasanda in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.72.41-42):

sancintyari-vadhopayam
bhimasyamogha-darshanah darshayam asa viöapam
patayann iva samjaya

"Having determined how to kill the enemy, that Lord of infallible vision made a sign to Bhima by tearing in half a branch of a tree."

tad vijnaya maha-sattvo bhimah praharatam varah grihitva padayoh shatrum
patayam asa bhu-tale

"Understanding this sign, mighty Bhima, the best of fighters, seized his opponent by the feet and threw him to the ground."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 167

Now raudra-rasa (anger) will be considered. Here the object (vishaya) of loving anger is Lord Krishna and the person who feels the anger (adhara) is the dear devotee. When Lord Krishna is the object of anger the anger is either favorable, unfavorable, or unfavorable for the angry person. As before in the situation when Lord Krishna was the object of love, Lord Krishna is here the primary (mula) alambana. When the anger is directed to someone other than Lord Krishna, then that person is a secondary (bahiranga) alambana. There may be the following kinds of raudra-rasa: 1. When a gopi, because of bewilderment or some other cause, is very angry at Lord Krishna, 2. when the family elders or other persons become angry to learn that the young gopis or other persons are meeting with Krishna, 3. when a devotee concerned for Lord Krishna's welfare is angry at another person for not properly protecting or caring for or dealing with Krishna, 4. the demons or others who try to harm Lord Krishna, and 5. a person who, angry at Lord Krishna, harms himself by preventing himself from associating with Lord Krishna. Here the uddipanas are insults hurled in anger and other like things. The anubhavas are striking blows with one's hand and other like actions. The vyabhicaris are becoming agitated and manifesting other like emotions. The sthayi-bhava is loving anger. The anger the elder gopis feel toward Lord Krishna is also loving anger. Because they are residents of Vraja, the elder gopis are by nature filled with love toward Lord Krishna. They certainly desire His welfare. Of these five kinds of raudra-rasa the first three will be discussed in another place. The last two are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.74.41):

tatah pandu-sutah kruddha
matsya-kaikaya-shrinjayah udayudhah samuttasthuh shishupala-jighamsavah

"Then the sons of Pandu became furious, and together with the warriors of the Matsya, Kaikaya, and Shrinjaya clans, they rose up from their seats with weapons poised, ready to kill Shishupala."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 168

Raudra-rasa is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.39.26):

maitad-vidhasyakarunasya nama bhud akrura ity etad ativa darunah yo 'sav anashvasya su-dukhitam janam priyat priyam neshyati param adhvanah

"He who is doing this merciless deed should not be called Akrura. He is so extremely cruel that without even trying to console the sorrowful residents of Vraja, he is taking away Krishna, who is more dear to us than life itself."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 169

Now bhayanaka-rasa (fear) will be considered. Here the alambana is fear of pain or injury. The vishaya (object) is Lord Krishna. The adhara is the devotee. In addition to feeling fear for Lord Krishna's well-being, sometime this rasa is manifest as the fear that one may be separated from Lord Krishna. Thus one may fear for Lord Krishna's sake or one may fear what will happen to one's own self because of his offenses to Lord Krishna. Thus Lord Krishna may be the root (mula) alambana, or the devotee himself may be the root alambana. The uddipanas here are the causes of fear. This is described in Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu (2.1.15). There the word "vibhave" is in the locative case, and the word "yena" is in the instrumental case. Thus the vishaya (object) may be either Lord Krishna or the devotee. When the devotee is the vishaya and He fears separation from Lord Krishna, then the devotee is the secondary (bahiranga) alambana. When the devotee is the adhara (the person who fears for Lord Krishna's welfare, then Lord Krishna is the primary (antaranga) alambana.

Here the uddipanas are fearful knitting of the eyebrows and other like actions. The anubhavas are withering of the face and other like actions. The vyabhicaris are restlessness and other like responses. The sthayi-bhava is fear impelled by love. The following example is seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.3.29):

janma te mayy asau papo
ma vidyan madhusudana
samudvije bhaved dhetoh
kamsad aham adhira-dhih

"O Lord Krishna, You have now taken birth as my son. For this reason my mind is now restless with fear of Kamsa."

Here Lord Krishna is Himself the vishaya. There is no other cause for fear. This verse was spoken by Devaki to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 170

Bhayanaka-rasa is also seen in thsi description of Shankhacuda's wickedness (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.34.28):

kroshantam krishna rameti
vilokya sva-parigraham

"Hearing Their devotees crying out `Krishna! Rama!' and seeing that they were just like cows being stolen by a thief, Krishna and Balarama began to run after the demon."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 171

Another example of bhayanaka-rasa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.10):

atah kshamasvacyuta me rajo-bhuvo hy ajanatas tvat-prithag-isha-maninah ajavalepandha-tamo-'ndha-cakshusha esho 'nukampyo mayi nathavan iti

"O infallible Lord, because I was born from the mode of passion, I was foolish, and because my eyes were blinded by the darkness of Your illusory potency, I foolishly thought I was a great controller independent of You. Please think of me in this way: `He is my servant. I should forgive him.' "

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the demigod Brahma to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 172

Now bhibhatsa-rasa (horror) in relation to the Supreme Personality of Godhead will be considered. In this rasa of horror, Lord Krishna is, as in the previous rasas, themula (root) alambana because He is the object of the devotee's love. The adhara is the devotee. When the horror has someone else, and not Lord Krishna, as the object, the alambana is a bahiranga (external) alambana. Here the uddipanas are a series of horrible, unclean, and abominable things. The anubhavas are spitting and other like activities. The vyabhicaris are moroseness and other like emotions. The sthayi-bhava is horror impelled by love for Lord Krishna. An example of bhayanaka-rasa is seen in the following words spoken by Queen Rukmini to Lord Krishna in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.45):

tvak-shmashru-roma-nakha-kesha-pinaddham. . .

"A woman who fails to relish the fragrance of the honty of Your lotus feet becomes totally befooled, and thus she accepts as her husband or lover a living corpse covered with skin, whiskers, nails, head-hair, and body-hair and filled with flesh, bones, blood, parasites, feces, mucus, bile, and air."

Now karuna-rasa (anguish) in relation to the Supreme Personality of Godhead will be considered. In this karuna-rasa, which is born from the idea that something inauspicious is happening one's dear friend or kinsman, the vishaya is Lord Krishna. The adhara is the devotee. The uddipanas are Lord Krishna's form, qualities, and activities, and other things in relation to Him. The anubhavas are withering of the face, lamentation, and other like things. The vyabhicaris are becoming stunned, grieving, and other like things. The sthayi-bhava is grief impelled by love for Lord Krishna. The following example is seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.19):

antar hrade bhujaga-bhoga-paritam arat krishnam niriham upalabhya jalashayante gopamsh ca mudha-dhishanan paritah pashumsh ca sankrandatah parama-kashmalam apur artah

"As they hurried along the path to the bank of the Yamuna River, they saw from a distance that Krishna was in the lake, motionless within the coils of the black serpent. They further saw that the cowherd boys had fallen unconscious and that the animals were standing on all sides, crying out for Krishna. Seeing all this, the residents of Vrindavana were overwhelmed with anguish and confusion."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

When the devotees, who dearly love Lord Krishna, feel compassion and lament for the non-devotees who have not yet attained Lord Krishna's mercy, that is also karuna-rasa. The following example is seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (7.5.31):

na te viduh svaritha-gatim hi vishnum durashaya ye bahirartha-maninah andha yathandhair upaniyamanas te 'pisha-tantryam uru-dhamni baddhah

"Persons who are strongly entrapped by the consciousness of enjoying material life, and who have therefore accepted as their leader or guru a similar blind man attached to external sense objects, cannot understand that the goal of life is to return home, back to Godhead, and engage in the service of Lord Vishnu. As blind men guided by another blind man miss the right path and fall into a ditch, materially attached men led by another materially attached man are bound by the ropes of fruitive labor, which are made of very strong cords, and they continue again and again in materialistic life, suffering the threefold miseries."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shri Prahlada to a fellow student.

If adbhuta-rasa (wonder) and the other secondary rasas are felt by Lord Krishna and the object of His feelings is the devotees, then adbhuta-rasa and other rasas are manifest with the devotees as their object. An example of this is seen in these words spoken by Lord Krishna to Lord Balarama in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.5):

aho ami deva-vararcitam. . .

"O greatest of Lords, just see how these trees are bowing down their heads at Your lotus feet, which are worshipable by the immortal demigods. The trees are offering You their fruits and flowers to eradicate the dark ignorance that has caused their birth as trees."

In this way adbhuta-rasa and the other secondary rasas may be manifest even in relation to living entities who have not yet developed ecstatic love for the Lord. In this verse the trees' activities are an imitation of human activities.

Now rasabhasa (incompatible mixing of rasas), which should be avoided, will be considered. Rasabhasa is the rasas relating to Lord % should also be avoided. As rasabhasa should be avoided in the material vatsalya-rasa and other material rasas, so it should also be avoided in the five primary spiritual rasas. This wise and respectable people all accept. Mixtures of rasas that should be rejected in the material rasas should also be rejected in the spiritual rasas. What should not be accepted in the material rasas should not be accepted in the spiritual rasas. Mixtures of rasa that are good and should be accepted in the material rasas are also good and should be accepted in the spiritual rasas. In this way the mixtures in shringara-rasa, vatsalya-rasa, and the other rasas should be considered.

Now what is good, neutral, and to be avoided in the five primary and seven secondary rasas will be considered. In hasya-rasa (laughter) the four devotional rasas in relation to separation are incompatible, santa-rasa is neutral, and the other rasas are compatible.

In relation to each other the secondary rasas are thus grouped into enemies, neutral parties, and friends. To hasya-rasa (laughing), karuna (anguish) and bhayanaka (fear) are enemies, adbhuta (wonder) is a friend, and the others are neutral. In this way amongst the twelve rasas the various sthayi-bhavas, sancari-bhavas, anubhavas, vibhavas, vishayas, and other bhavas are all grouped into compatible, incompatible, and neutral. In this way in people and poems that have a relationship with Lord Krishna the taste of rasabhasa (incompatible rasas) should be avoided. When the rasas are compatible, that is good. That is glorious. In certain special cases rasabhasa is also good and glorious. An example of good and acceptable rasabhasa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.10.21 and 28):

sa vai kilayam purushah puratano
ya eka asid avishesha atmani

"They said: Here He is, the original Personality of Godhead as we definitely remember Him. He alone existed before the manifested creation of the modes of nature, and in Him only, because He is the Supreme Lord, all living beings merge, as if sleeping at night, their energy suspended."*

nunam vrata-snana-hutadineshvarah samarcito hy asya grihita-panibhih pibanti yah sakhy adharamritam muhur vraja-striyah sammumuhur yad-ashayah

"O friends, just think of His wives, whose hands He has accepted. How they must have undergone vows, baths, fire sacrifices and perfect worship of the Lord of the universe to constantly relish now the nectar from His lips [by kissing]. The damsels of Vrajabhumi would often faint just by expecting such favors."*

This passage begins with a philosophical reflection in shanta-rasa and concludes with a description of shringara-rasa. This is incompatible in the same way a mixture of vatsalya-rasa and shanta-rasa is incompatible. However, in these two verses there is no true rasabhasa. That is because they are spoken by different groups of speakers. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.10.21 is spoken by one group of speakers, and Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.10.28 is spoken by another group of speakers. That this is so and there was no rasabhasa in these speakers' words is confirmed by these words immediately following that passage (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.10.31):

evam-vidha gadantinam. . .

"While the ladies of the capital of Hastinapura were greeting Him and talking in this way, the Lord, smiling, accepted their good greetings, and casting the grace of His glance over them, He departed from the city."*

These words spoken by Shрила Suta Gosvami are glorious and blissful. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.10.21 and 28 were spoken by the ladies in the capital city of the Kauravas.

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (4.20.27-28):

athabhaje tvakhila-purushottamam gunalayam padma-karena lalasa apy avayor eka-pati-spridhoh kalir na syat krita-tvac-caranaika-tanayoh

"Now I wish to engage in the service of the lotus feet of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and serve just like the goddess of fortune, who carries a lotus flower in her hand, because His Lordship, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is the reservoir of all transcendental qualities. I am afraid that the goddess of fortune and I would quarrel because both of us would be attentively engaged in the same service.*

jagaj-jananyam jagad-isha vaishasam syat

"My dear Lord of the universe, the goddess of fortune, Lakshmi, is the mother of the universe, and yet I think she may be angry with me because of my intruding upon her service and acting on the very platform to which she is so much attached. Yet I am hopeful that even though there is some misunderstanding, You will take my part, for You are very much inclined to the poor and You always magnify even insignificant service unto You. Therefore even though she becomes angry, I think there is no harm for You, because You are so self-sufficient that You can do without her."*

Here it is seen that Maharaja Prithu's true rasa is dasya-rasa. Because his rasa is clearly not shringara-rasa, these words seem to be rasabhasa. Maharaja Prithu's rasa is dasya-rasa and Goddess Lakshmi's (padma-kerva lalasa) rasa is shringara-rasa. Here is the explanation: Maharaja Prithu's desire is not at all based on srngara-rasa. It is based only on dasya-rasa. The examples he gives are examples only of devotional service in dasya-rasa. His perception of rivalry with Goddess Lakshmi are not inappropriate for a devotee situated in vira-dasya-rasa (heroic servitorship), a devotee who has attained great mercy from the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Others may say Maharaja Prithu's words show only his great love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is so merciful to the poor and fallen, and these words do not at all show any true rivalry with goddess Lakshmi. This kind of appreciation for the Lord's great mercy, thinking the Lord is more merciful to the devotee than He is even to Goddess Lakshmi, is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (8.23.6), where Prahlada Maharaja describes Lord Vamana's pastime of stepping on Bali Maharaja's head:

nemam virinco labhate prasadam. . .

"O Supreme Personality of Godhead, You are universally worshiped. Even Lord Brahma and Lord Siva worship Your lotus feet. Yet although You are such a great personality, You have kindly promised to protect us, the demons. I think that such kindness never has been achieved even by Lord Brahma, Lord Siva, or the Goddess of fortune, Lakshmi, what to speak of other demigods or common people."*

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is more merciful to the devotee than He is even to Goddess

Lakshmi is seen in this prayer, where Prahlada Maharaja glorifies Lord Nrsimhadeva's mercy to him (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 7.9.26):

kvaham rajah-prabhava isha tamo 'dhike 'smin jatah suretara-kule kva tavanukampa na brahmano na tu bhavasya na vai ramaya yan me 'rpitah shirasi padma-karah prasadah

"O my Lord, O Supreme, because I was born in a family full of the hellish material qualities of passion and ignorance, what is my position? And what is to be said of your causeless mercy, which was never offered even to Lord Brahma, Lord Shiva, or the goddess of fortune, Lakshmi? You never put Your lotus hand upon their heads, but You have put it upon mine."*

Here Prahlada Maharaja says: "In the presence of Brahma and the demigods You placed Your hand on my head". He says: "Never was such mercy ever given in any of Your other avatars." Shrimad-Bhagavatam 4.20.27-28 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Maharaja Prithu to Lord Shri Vishnu.

Anuccheda 176

Now we will consider the vatsalya-rasa enjoyed by the Lord's father, Maharaja Vasudeva, and by others also, and which is sometimes properly manifested, and sometimes improperly manifested in the form of rasabhasa. Vatsalya-rasa is seen in these words spoken by Maharaja Nanda (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.66):

manaso vrittayo nah syuh. . .

"May our thoughts always take shelter of Krishna's lotus feet, may our words always chant His names, and may our bodies always bow down to Him and serve Him."*

Lord Krishna's spiritual master also has a relationship in vatsalya-rasa. This is seen in these words spoken by Sudama brahmana in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.80.44):

kim asmabhir anirvritam
deva-deva jagad-guro bhavata satya-kamena
yesham vaso guror abhut

"What could I possibly have failed to achieve, O Lord of lords, O universal teacher, since I was able to personally live with You, whose every desire is fulfilled, at the home of our spiritual master?"

Vatsalya-rasa is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.80.6 and 27):

krishnasyasit sakha kashcit. . .

"Lord Krishna had a certain brahmana friend (named Sudama) who was most learned in Vedic knowledge and detached from all sense enjoyment. Furthermore, his mind was peaceful and his senses subdued."

kathayam cakratuh. . .karau grihya parasparam

"Taking each other's hands, O King, Krishna and Sudama talked pleasantly about how they once lived together in the school of their guru."

In this way vatsalya-rasa is described. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.80.44 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 177

Shringara-rasa is seen in the following words spoken by Queen Rukmini in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.39):

tvam nyasta-danda-munibhir gaditanubhava
atmatma-dash ca jagatam iti me vrito 'si. . .

"Knowing that the great sages who have renounced the sannyasi's danda proclaim Your glories, that You are the Supreme Soul of all the worlds, and that You are so gracious that You give away even Your own self, I chose You as my husband, rejecting Lord Brahma, Lord Shiva, and the rulers of heaven, whose aspirations are all frustrated by the force of time, which is born from Your eyebrows. What interest, then, could I have in any other suitors?"

In this verse the word "atma" means "paramatma", and "atma-dah" means "who reveals Himself to the liberated souls". Someone may say that in this verse the mixture of shringara-rasa and shanta-rasa creates rasabhasa. This is not so. What seems to be santa-rasa here is simply devotional service, is Queen Rukmini's declaration that she is the maidservant of her dear husband. Her words are appropriate because they show that she is the crest jewel of all faithful wives devoted to their husbands. Although they each had hundreds of maidservants, Lord Krishna's queens considered themselves the maidservants of Lord Krishna. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.59.45):

dasi-shata api vibhor vidadhuh sma dasyam

"Although the Supreme Lord's queens each had hundreds of maidservants, they chose to personally serve the Lord.. "

Queen Rukmini is Goddess Lakshmi herself. Her devotion to the Lord is mixed with knowledge of the Lord's supreme power and opulence. Therefore there is no rasabhasa in her prayers describing that opulence. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.6.39 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Queen Rukmini.

Even the vraja-gopis, who think only of Lord Krishna's sweetness, are sometimes aware of His power and opulence. This is seen in the following words spoken by the gopiws in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.31.4):

na khalu gopika-nandano bhavan. . .

"You are not actually the son of the gopi Yashoda, O friend, but rather the indwelling witness in the hearts of all embodied souls. Because Lord Brahma prayed for You to come and protect the universe, You have now appeared in the Satvata dynasty."

What here seems to be shringara-rasa mixed with shanta-rasa is in truth only joking words spoken by the gopis. This will be explained later in this book. Therefore everything in this verse is proper and there is no rasabhasa. It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.23):

baddhanyaya sraja kacit. . .

"One gopi tied up her slender companion with a flower garland and said, ``Now I will bind this boy who has broken the butter pots and stolen the butter." The second gopi then covered her face and beautiful eyes, pretending to be afraid."

These words seem to be a mixture of vatsalya-rasa and shringara-rasa . In truth there is no mixture, nor any rasabhasa in these words. This will be explained later. An example of natural shringara-rasa is seen in these words describing the rasa-dance pastime (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.10):

duhsaha-preshöha-viraha. . .

"For those gopis who could not go to see Krishna, intolerable separation from their beloved caused an intense agony that burned away all impious karma. By meditating upon Him they realized His embrace, and the ecstasy they then felt exhausted their material piety. Although Lord Krishna is the Supreme Soul, these girls simply thought of Him as their male lover and associated with Him in that intimate mood. Thus their karmic bondage was nullified and they abandoned their gross material bodies."

These words were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami, the king of sages. Then it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.12):

krishnam viduh param kantam. . .

"O sage, the gopis knew Krishna only as their lover, not as the Supreme Absolute Truth. So how could these girls, their minds caught up in the waves of the modes of nature, free themselves from material attachment?"

These words are a question posed by Maharaja Parikshit. In Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami's answer to this question may seem to be based on a description of liberation, a description of santa-rasa, a description that may seem to be rasabhasa in the context of srngara-rasa. Actually there is no rasabhasa here. This is explained in Krishna-sandarbha. What is seen as liberation (moksha) here is in truth merely the gopis' overcoming the obstacles that prevent them from meeting Lord Krishna. This is not a description of anything else. It is not a description of impersonal liberation (moksha). It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.8):

tam kacin netra-randhrena. . .yogivananda-sampluta

"One gopi took the Lord through the aperture of her eyes and placed Him within her heart. Then, with her eyes closed and her bodily hairs standing on end, she continuously embraced Him within. Thus immersed in transcendental ecstasy, she resembled a yogi meditating upon the Lord."

In this verse the word "yogi" is in the neuter gender. Although they shyly embrace Lord Krishna in their hearts, the gopis in truth embraced Him very earnestly. In this way they attained His association (yogi). Thus there is no rasabhasa here. In whatever passages of Shrimad-Bhagavatam there may seem to be rasabhasa, there is no rasabhasa in truth. Everything in Shrimad-Bhagavatam is proper and right.

Now seeming contradictions in relation to Lord Balarama and others will be considered. Many contradictions may seem to be manifest in Lord Krishna's many blissful pastimes with His devotees. None of these are contradictions in truth. This is so because of the action of the Lord's inconceivable spiritual potency (acintya-shakti). This is true for all the devotees qualified to participate in the Lord's pastimes. Because He is Lord Krishna's elder brother, Lord Balarama is situated in vatsalya-rasa. Because He is identical with Lord Krishna and because from childhood He enjoys pastimes with Lord Krishna, Lord Balarama is situated in sakhya-rasa. Because He is aware of Lord Krishna's supreme power and opulence (aishvarya), Lord Balarama is a devotee of Lord Krishna. All these features are manifest at the time of Lord Krishna's pastimes with Lord Balarama. The two of Them acting together, Krishna and Balarama attacked Shankhacuda, enjoyed the holi-lila, sang, and enjoyed many pastimes. From Dvaraka Lord Balarama carried Lord Krishna's message to the gopis. There is nothing wrong in any of these activities. This truth is confirmed by the words of Shriman Uddhava and many others also.

Now will be considered the rasabhasa present when a primary rasa is incompatible with a secondary rasa. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.44.51):

devaki vasudevash ca
vijnaya jagad-ishvarau
krita-samvandanau putrau
sasvajate na shankitau

"Devaki and Vasudeva, now knowing Krishna and Balarama to be the Lords of the universe, simply stood with joined palms. Being apprehensive, they did not embrace their sons."

Here someone may say that the combination of vatsalya-rasa and bhayanaka-rasa (fear) in this verse is rasabhasa. The previous explanations have already shown that in this situation there is no rasabhasa.

Now will be considered the rasabhasa present when two secondary rasas are incompatible. In the pastime when Lord Krishna entered Kaliya Lake it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.16):

tams tatha kataran vikshya bhagavan madhavo balah prahasya kincin novaca
prabhava jno 'nujasya sah

"The Supreme Lord Balarama, the master of all transcendental knowledge, smiled and said nothing when He saw the residents of Vrindavana in such distress, since He understood the extraordinary power of His younger brother."

Here Lord Balarama is fully aware of Lord Krishna's power and opulence, and the people of Vraja are plunged in karuna-rasa (grief). In this situation grief is appropriate, but someone may say that Lord Balarama's manifestation of hasya-rasa (smiling) is not appropriate, and therefore rasabhasa is present in this verse. The truth is that Lord Balarama manifests many different natures according to His different pastimes. This has already been explained. In this way He enjoys different pastimes. Here the cause of His smiling is His knowledge of Lord Krishna's supreme power. The people of Vraja, eager to protect Lord Krishna, are situated in a different mood in this situation. If they had known the secret truth of their dear Krishna, they would have smiled also. They would not have worried or lamented. An activity of Lord Balarama performed to benefit the people of Vraja is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.22):

krishna-pranan nirvisato
nandadin vikshya tam hradam pratyashedhat sa bhagavan
ramah krishnanubhava-vit

"Lord Balarama then saw that Nanda Maharaja and the other cowherd men, who had dedicated their very lives to Krishna, were beginning to enter the serpent's lake. As the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Balarama fully knew Lord Krishna's actual power, and therefore He restrained them."

At the end of this pastime the people of Vraja regained their Lord Krishna. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.17.16):

ramash caCyutam alingya
jahasyanubhava-vit

"Lord Balarama embraced His infallible brother and laughed, knowing well the extent of His potency. Out of great feelings of love, He lifted Him up on His lap and repeatedly looked at Him. The cows, bulls and young female calves also achieved the highest pleasure."

In this verse Lord Balarama smiled because he regained Lord Krishna. In the pastime of the kidnapping of Rukimini and in many other pastimes also, Lord Balarama's nature of being flooded with love for His brother Krishna is described. In all these pastimes nothing is inappropriate. Therefore Lord Balarama's smiling here is not rasabhasa. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.16.16 quoted here was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Incompatible mixtures of sthayi-bhava in ecstatic love of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are called "prity-abhasa". Prity-abhasa is included within rasabhasa. Incompatible mixtures of sancari-bhava are also a kind of rasabhasa. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.86.32):

sva-vacas tad ritam kartum asmad-drig-gocarō bhavan
 yad atthaikanta-bhaktan me nanantah shrir ajah priyah

"You have said: 'Neither Ananta, Goddess Shri, nor unborn Brahma is dearer to Me than My unalloyed devotee.' To prove Your own words true, You have now revealed Yourself to our eyes."

This verse may seem to be an incompatible mixture (abhasa) of devotion (bhakti) and pride (garva). In truth there is nothing incompatible in this verse. This verse means: "Because I am Your unalloyed devotee, I am very dear to You. You said: 'Lord Ananta is not dear to Me merely because He is the abode where I rest. Goddess Shri is not dear to Me merely because she is My wife. Unborn Brahma is not dear to Me merely because he is My son. However, he who is the best of My unalloyed devotees is most dear to Me.' To show that the words You spoke are the truth You have now appeared before my eyes. By coming before me You have given Your mercy to me." These words were spoken by the King of Mithila to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.29):

tayor ittham bhagavati
 krishne nanda-yashodayoh vikshyanuragam paramam nandam ahoddhavo muda

"Uddhava then joyfully addressed Nanda Maharaja, having clearly seen the supreme loving attraction he and Yashoda felt for Krishna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead."

In this verse is seen the grief Nanda and Yashoda felt in separation from Lord Krishna. It would seem that their grief in separation and Uddhava's joy are incompatible. The truth is that they are not incompatible. Here the situation is like the previously described situation where Lord Balarama smiled as the people of Vraja grieved. Uddhava had come to console the people of Vraja. Therefore it would not have been appropriate for him to be morose in their presence. Therefore Uddhava's joy here is filled with a great wonder of the glories of appropriate ecstatic spiritual love. Uddhava did succeed in consoling the people of Vraja. This verse was spoken by Shрила Shukadeva Gosvami.

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.42.10):

ehi vira griham yamo
na tvam tyaktum ihotsahe tvayonmathita-cittayah
prasida purusarshabha

"Come, O hero. Let us go to my house. I cannot bear to leave You here. O best of males, please take pity on me, since You ahve agitated my mind."

Someone may say that it is not appropriate for a heroine to be very agitated, and therefore this verse presents an abhasa in shringara-rasa. The truth is there is nothing incmpatible in this verse, for even in ordinary affairs this kind of agitation is not inappropriate. This verse was spoken by Kubja to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.14):

tava sutah sati yadadhara-bimbe. . .

"O pious mother Yashoda, your son, who is expert in all the arts of herding cows, has invented many new styles of flute-playing. When He takes His flute to His bimba-red lips and sends forth the tones of the harmonic scale in variegated melodies, Brahma, Shiva, Indra and other chief demigods become confused upon hearing the sound. Although they are the most learned authorities, they cannot ascertain the essence of that music, and thus they bow down their heads and hearts."

The restlessness here is not like the restlessness felt by Kubja. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam is a passage where in groups of doble stanzas the gopis describe the sweetness of Lord Krishna's flute. The gopis, however, do not become bewildered by the sound of Lord Krishna's flute as the demigods do. The gopis say in that passage of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.17):

vrajati tena vayam. . .

"As Krishna strolls through Vraja with His lotus-petal-like feet, marking the ground with the distinctive embIems of flag, thunderbolt, lotus and elephant goad, He relieves the distress the ground feels from the cows' hooves. As He plays His renowned flute, His body moves with the grace of an elephant. Thus we gopis, who become agitated by Cupid when Krishna playfully glances at us, stand as still as trees, unaware that our hair and garments are slackening."

There the gopis also say (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.35.3):

vyoma-yana-vanitah. . .

"When Mukunda vibrates the flute He has placed to His lips, stopping its holes with His tender fingers, He rests His left cheek on His left arm and makes His eyebrows dance. At that time the demigoddesses traveling in the sky with their husbands, the Siddhas, become amazed. As those ladies listen, they are embarrassed to find their minds yielding to the pursuit of lusty desires, and in their distress they are unaware that the belts of their garments are loosening."

These words describe the expression of natural ecstatic love. The gopis say in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.20):

kunda-dama. . .

"O sinless Yashoda, your darling child, the son of Maharaja Nanda, has festively enhanced His attire with a jasmine garland, and He is now playing along the Yamuna in the company of the cows and cowherd boys, amusing His dear companions. The gentle breeze honors Him with its soothing fragrance of sandalwood, while the various Upadevas, standing on all sides like panegyrists, offer their music, singing and gifts of tribute."

The gopis also say in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.31):

maivam vibho 'rhati bhavan. . .

"O all-powerful one, You should not speak in this cruel way. Do not reject us, who have renounced all material enjoyment to render devotional service to Your lotus feet. Reciprocate with us, O stubborn one, just as the primeval Lord, Shri Narayana, reciprocates with His devotees in their endeavors for liberation."

Someone may say that the gopis' humble appeal for Lord Krishna's association in this verse is inappropriate, an example of rasabhasa. It is not rasabhasa. In truth these words spoken by the gopis may be interpreted to be a series of puns that show a meaning very different from what seems to be an impassioned appeal. This will be explained later. In this way the sublime sweetness of the Lord's pastimes is established.

Someone may say that rasabhasa is present in the following statement of Bali Maharaja in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (8.20.12-13):

yadyapy asav adharmena
mam badhniyad anagasam tathapy enam na himsishye bhitam brahma-tanum ripum. . .

"Although He is Vishnu Himself, out of fear He has covered Himself in the form of a brahmana to come to me begging. Under the circumstances, because He has assumed the form of a brahmana, even if He irreligiously arrests me or even kills me, I shall not retaliate, although He is my enemy.*

"If this brahmana really is Lord Vishnu, who is worshiped by Vedic hymns, He would never give up His widespread reputation. Either He would lie down having been killed by me, or He would kill me in a fight."*

Someone may say that these impious words inspired by Shukracarya's trickery are improper and therefore bhakty-abhasa (incompatible with devotional service). However, because with His feet Lord Vamana directly touched Bali Maharaja and gave him devotion, these words are not truly bhakty-abhasa. These two verses were spoken by Bali Maharaja to Shukracarya.

Anuccheda 183

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.71.10):

jarasandha-vadhah krishna
bhury-arthayopakalpate

"O Krishna, the killing of Jarasandha, which is certainly a reaction of his past sins, will bring immense benefit. Indeed, it will make possible the scarificial ceremony You desire."

Here someone may say that because in this verse Uddhava directly addresses Lord Krishna by His name, these words are an example of dasyabhasa (incompatible with Uddhava's mellow of daysa-rasa). In truth there is no dasyabhasa in these words. Because Lord Krishna's names are filled with descriptions of His glories, it is not improper for the Lord's servants to speak His names directly. That the Supreme Lord's names are filled with His glories is described in these words of Shvetashvatara Upanishad (4.19):

yasya nama mahad-yashah

"The Supreme Lord's names are filled with descriptions of His glories."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.71.10 quoted here was spoken by Uddhava to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 184

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.75.5):

satam shushrushane jishnuh
krishnah padavanejane

"Arjuna attended the respectable elders, and Krishna washed everyone's feet."

Here someone may say: "It is not right that Maharaja Yudhishöhira engaged Lord Krishna in washing everyone's feet. This is an example of bhakty-abhasa (incompatible with devotional service)." In truth there is no bhakty-abhasa in this verse. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.75.3):

bandhavah paricaryayam
tasyasan prema-bandhanah

"At the Rajasuya sacrifice of your saintly grandfather his family members, bound by their love for him, engaged themselves in humble services on his behalf."

Here the family members were not assigned to various services by Maharaja Yudhisthira. Rather, but their own desire they performed these services. Therefore by His own desire Lord Krishna washed everyone's feet. It was not otherwise. In this situation Lord Krishna thought, "My kinsmen still have some past karmic reactions present in their bodies. I should remove all those karmic reactions." Thus, by the power of Lord Krishna's unstoppable desire, He acted in that way. Lord Krishna also desired to show devotion to Narada Muni and the other brahmanas present there. Therefore He washed their feet to show the respect that should be offered to a brahmana. Lord Krishna Himself said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.69.40):

putra ma khidah

"O brahmana, I am the speaker of religion, its performer and sanctioner. I observe religious principles to teach them to the world, My child, so do not be disturbed."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.75.5 quoted here was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 185

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.20-21):

shridama nama gopalo
rama-keshavayoh sakha subala-stokakrishnadya
gopah premnedam abruvan

"Once, some of the cowherd boys-Shridama, the very close friend of Rama and Krishna, along with Subala, Stokakrishna and others-lovingly spoke the following words."

rama rama maha-sattva krishna dushöa-nibarhana ito 'vidure su-mahad
vanam talali-sankulam

"(The cowherd boys said:) Rama, Rama, O mighty-armed one! O Krishna, destroyer of the miscreants! Not far from here is a very great forest filled with rows of palm trees."

Someone may say that because the cowherd boys approached Krishna and Balarama with awe and veneration, this passage is inappropriate for sakhya-rasa (sakhyabhāsa). However, this passage is in truth not at all inappropriate, for although they were aware that Krishna and Balarama were both very powerful and heroic, the boys still thought Krishna and Balarama were still their equals and not their superiors at all. Their awareness of the great power and heroism of Krishna and Balarama, only increased the boys' affection for Them in sakhya-rasa. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.58.14):

salam krishnena sannaddho
vihartum vipinam mahat
bahu-vyala-mrigakirnam
pravishat para-vira-ha

"Once Arjuna, the slayer of powerful enemies, donned his armor, mounted his chariot flying the flag of Hanuman, took up his bow and his two inexhaustible quivers, and went to sport with Lord Krishna in a large forest filled with fierce animals."

As it was shown in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.15.20-21, the knowledge of Lord Krishna's heroic power enhanced Arjuna's affection for Him in sakhya-rasa. The same kind of situation, where the knowledge of Lord Krishna's heroic power enhances the love His friends feel for Him is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.24):

asman kim atra grasita nivistan
ayam tatha ced bakavad vinankshyati

"Then the boys said, 'Has this living creature come to swallow us? If he does so, he will immediately be killed like Bakasura, without delay.' Thus they looked at the beautiful face of Krishna, the enemy of Bakasura, and, laughing loudly and clapping their hands, they entered the mouth of the python."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.10.15.20-21 quoted here was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 186

In the description of Lord Krishna's water-pastimes at Dvaraka it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.90.22):

na calasi. . . vasudeva-nandananghrim

"O magnanimous mountain, you neither move nor speak. You must be pondering some matter of great importance. Or do you, like us, desire to hold on your breasts the feet of Vasudeva's darling son?"

Here someone may protest that the queens' mention of their father-in-law's name in addressing their husband in the words "vasudeva-nandananghrim" (the feet of Vasudeva's son) is improper. It is kanta-bhavabhasa (improper in relation to the husband). This protest is without merit. In truth the word "vasudeva" here does not refer to Lord Krishna's father. Rather it means: "the worshipable Lord (deva) who is the great wealth (vasu) of the heart. Even if one argues that still, even if only by coincidence, the word "vasudeva-nandana" certainly does mean "the son of Vasudeva" and is still improper, then the answer is given that the queens spoke these words in the impulse of wild ecstatic love and they should not be criticized for any fault they may commit by accident. This verse was spoken by Lord Krishna's queens.

Anuccheda 187

It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.33):

tam atmajair drishtibhir antaratmana duranta-bhavah parirebhire patim niruddham apy asravat ambu netrayor vilajjatinam bhrigu-varya vaiklavat

"The insuperable ecstasy was so strong that the queens, who were shy, first embraced the Lord in the innermost recesses of their hearts. Then they embraced Him visually, and then they sent their sons to embrace Him [which is equal to personal embracing]. But, O chief amongst the Bhrigus, though they tried to restrain their feelings, they inadvertently shed tears."*

Here it is said that, filled with great love (duranta-bhavah), the queens wept (niruddham apy asravat). Here someone may claim that the queens' becoming filled with love for their husband as they watched Him embrace their sons is an improper response on their part. It is kanta-bhavabhasa (improper in relation to the husband). This is so because their making an connection between their sons' embracing their husband with the pleasures they enjoy in private with their husband is improper. This claim of impropriety has no basis. Their feeling their love for their husband increase as they watch Him embrace their sons is an increase of love only in a general sense. It has no relation to the private pleasures of husbands and wives. Therefore there is nothing improper with the queens' glances in this situation. This verse was spoken by Shrila Suta Gosvami.

Anuccheda 188

Now the abhasas in relation to the vibhavas will be discussed. In relation to the uddipanabhasas (improper manifestation of the uddipanas) it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.38.8):

yad arcitam. . . yad gopikanam kuca-kunkumankitam

"Those lotus feet are worshiped by Brahma, Shiva and all the other demigods, by the goddess of fortune, and also by the great sages and Vaishnavas. Upon those lotus feet the Lord walks about the forest while herding the cows with His companions, and those feet are smeared with the kunkuma from the gopis' breasts."

Here someone may complain that these signs indicating the Lord's confidential pastimes are not appropriate for a devotee who seeks to associate with the Lord in the mood of dasya-rasa, and therefore this verse is an example of dasya-bhavabhasa (incompatible with dasya-rasa). In truth there is fault in this verse. The speaker of this verse (Akrura) is thinking only that the Supreme Lord is easily attained by devotional service. The speaker of this verse does not desire to participate in the gopis' confidential pastimes with Lord Krishna. In his commentary on this verse Shrila Shridhara Svami says: "Here the words `yad-gopikanam' indicate that by serving Him with devotion the gopis easily attained association with Lord Krishna." Because the speaker in this verse aspired only to attain devotion to Lord Krishna in general way, there is no fault in this verse. In the same way there is no fault in these words (also spoken by Akrura) in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.38.17):

samarhanam yatra. . .

"By offering charity to that lotus hand, Purandara and Bali earned the status of Indra, King of heaven, and during the pleasure pastimes of the rasa dance, when the Lord wiped away the gopis perspiration and removed their fatigue, the touch of their faces made that hand as fragrant as a sweet flower."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.38.8 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Akrura.

Anuccheda 189

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.55.40):

yam vai muhuh. . .

"It is not astonishing that the palace women, who should have felt maternal affection for Pradyumna, privately felt ecstatic attraction for him as if he were their own lord. After all, the son exactly resembled his father. Indeed, Pradyumna was a perfect reflection of the beauty of Lord Krishna, the shelter of the goddess of fortune, and appeared before their eyes as Cupid himself. Since even those on the level of his mother felt conjugal attraction for him, then what to speak of how other women felt when they saw him?"

Here the truth that the palace women were agitated by feelings of amorous love for Pradyumna seems to be inappropriate. What seems here to be inappropriate is actually appropriate, as has already been explained in a previous passage of this book.

Someone may say that inappropriate alambanas or inappropriate lovers (prity-adhara) bring rasabhasa situations in the descriptions of the yajna--patnis, pulinda girls, does, and others in Shrimad-Bhagavatam. This assertion will be refuted later in this book.

Someone may claim that an inappropriateness in relation to the object of love (priti-vishaya) is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.7):

akshanvatam. . .vaktram vrajesha-sutayoh

"The cowherd girls said: O friends, those eyes that see the beautiful faces of the sons of Maharaja Nanda are certainly fortunate. As these two sons enter the forest, surrounded by Their friends, driving the cows before Them, They hold Their flutes to Their mouths and glance lovingly upon the residents of Vrindavana. For those who have eyes, we think there is no greater object of vision."

Here someone may say that although Lord Krishna and Lord Balarama , still the form of Lord Balarama is not the same as the form of Lord Krishna, and therefore it is not appropriate for Lord's girlfriends to have feelings of amorous love for Lord Balarama, and therefore this verse has a rasabhasa of shringara-rasa. The truth, however, is that in this verse the gopis are hiding their amorous feelings for Lord Krishna. They are pretending that they have no amorous feelings for Lord Krishna. Therefore their praising Lord Krishna and Lord Balarama equally is in now way a statement of their amorous feelings for Lord Balarama. Therefore there is no rasabhasa in this verse. In his commentary on Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.65.17) Shrila Shridhara Svami states: "The gopis who enjoyed amorous pastimes with Lord Balarama were different from the gopis who enjoyed pastimes with Lord Krishna." Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.21.7 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by the goddesslike gopis of Vraja.

Anuccheda 190

Here someone may say that in Shrimad-Bhagavatam there are descriptions of love where the object of love is a person other than lord Krishna. This, they say, is sangaty-abhasa (improper object of love). They quote this verse describing Shrimati Devahuti in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.22.16):

kamah sa bhuyat. . .kshipatim iva shriyam

"Let your daughter's desire for marriage, which is recognized in the Vedic scriptures, be fulfilled. Who would not accept her hand? She is so beautiful that by her bodily luster alone she excels the beauty of her ornaments."*

Someone may say that Devahuti's devotion to Kardama Muni is bhakty-abhasa (devotion directed to the wrong person). This criticism is not valid. Her union with Kardama Muni brought great glory and good fortune to the world. Therefore no one should find fault with it. This verse was spoken by Shri Kardama Muni.

Anuccheda 191

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.57.26):

uvasa tasyam katicin
mithilayam sama vibhuh manitah priti-yuktena janakena mahatmana
tato 'shikshad gadam kale
dhartarashörah suyodhanah

"The almighty Lord Balarama stayed in Mithila for several years, honored by His affectionate devotee Janaka Maharaja. During that time Dhritarashöra's son Duryodhana learned from Balarama the art of fighting with a club."*

In this verse the word "vibhuh" (almighty) refers to Lord Balarama. The word "manitah" (honored) and other words like it are adjectives modifying Lord Balarama. Any claim that rasabhasa is present in this verse is not justified. There is no rasabhasa here.

Anuccheda 192

These and other seeming examples of rasabhasa in Shrimad-Bhagavatam are thus shown to be free of any true rasabhasa. It is said: "Even if there is some seeming rasabhasa, if the sthayi-bhava is very exalted and powerful, then there is no rasabhasa. Then the rasas are properly manifest. An example of a very exalted and powerful primary rasa negating the possibility of rasabhasa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.32):

aho bhagyam aho bhagyam
nanda-gopa-vrajaukasam
yan-mitram paramanandam
purnam brahma sanatanam

"How greatly fortunate are Nanda Maharaja, the cowherd men, and all the other inhabitants of Vrajabhumi! There is no limit to their good fortune because the Absolute Truth (Brahman), the source of transcendental bliss, the eternal Supreme Brahman, has become their friend."*

In this verse spoken by the demigod Brahma to describe the people of Vreja there is a mixture of jnana-bhakti (the santa-rasa mixture of devotion and philosophical speculation present here by the description of the Brahman feature of the Lord) and bandhu-bhava (love for Lord Krishna as one's friend or kinsman). This mixture is not rasabhasa because the taste of the sentiment of thinking of the Lord is one's friend is so sweet and exalted that its glory eclipses the dry mellow of santa-rasa here. The description here of jnana-bhakti is done in the mood of wonder felt within the heart, in the mood of praising the glorious good fortune of Vraja's people. Therefore there is no rasabhasa and the rasas are properly manifest (rasollasa) in this description. A similar situation is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.21.11

"All the cowherd boys used to play with Krishna, who is the source of the Brahman effulgence "*

A similar situation is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.49.9):

bhratreya bhagavan krishnah sharanyo bhakta-vatsalah paitri-shvasreya smareati
ramash camburuhekshanah

"Does my nephew Krishna, the Supreme Personality and the compassionate shelter of His devotees, still remember His aunt's sons? And does lotus-eyed Rama remember them also?"

For Lord Krishna's paternal aunt devotion mixed with knowledge of Lord Krishna's supreme power and opulence (aishvarya-jnana-mayi bhakti) is not appropriate. For her vatsalya-rasa is proper and appropriate. Here the knowledge that Lord Krishna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead is eclipsed by overwhelming feelings of vatsalya-rasa, feelings seen here in the words "bhratreya", "paitri-shvasreya", and "amburuhekshanah" Because vatsalya-rasa is so glorious and prominent in this verse there is no rasabhasa. All is proper with the rasas (rasollasa). This verse was spoken by Queen Kunti.

Anucchedas 193 and 194

In Lord Ramacandra's sweet pastimes Hanuman has pure dasya-rasa, a rasa still mixed with the knowledge that his master is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Although initially it may seem that this is not an appropriate mixture, the sweetness of Hanuman's dasya-rasa eclipses his knowledge that his master is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Thus there is not rasabhasa and everything in these rasas is proper (rasollasa). The glory of this kind of mixture of madhurya (perception of the Lord's sweetness) and aishvarya (knowledge of the Lord's power and opulence) is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.19.3):

om namo bhagavate uttamashlokaya. . .

"Let me please Your Lordship by chanting the bija-mantra omkara. I wish to offer my respectful obeisances unto the Personality of Godhead, who is the best among the most highly elevated personalities. Your Lordship is the reservoir of all the good qualities of Aryans, people who are advanced. Your character and behavior are always consistent, and You always control Your senses and mind. Acting just like an ordinary human being, You exhibit exemplary character to teach others how to behave. There is a touchstone that can be used to examine the quality of gold, but You are like a touchstone that can verify all good qualities. You are worshiped by brahmanas who are the foremost of all devotees. You, the Supreme Person, are the King of kings, and therefore I offer my respectful obeisances unto You."*

In this verse the word "bhagavatah" shows the Lord's feature of aishvarya and the word "uttama-shlokaya" shows the Lord's feature of madhurya. The Lord's true nature is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.19.4):

yat tad vishuddhanubhava-matram ekam. . .

"The Lord, whose pure form [sac-cid-ananda-vigraha] is uncontaminated by the modes of material nature, can be perceived by pure consciousness. In the Vedanta He is described as being one without a second. Because of His spiritual potency, He is un- touched by the contamination of material nature, and because He is not subjected to material vision, He is known as transcendental. He has no material activities, nor has He a material form or name. Only in pure consciousness, Krishna consciousness, can one perceive the transcendental form of the Lord. Let us be firmly fixed at the lotus feet of Lord Ramacandra, and let us offer our respectful obeisances unto those transcendental lotus feet."*

In this verse the words "yat-tat" refer to Lord Ramacandra's celebrated form dark like durva grass. The word "matram" describes the Lord's wualities and form, a form manifest sometimes in a white color and sometimes in other colors, a form more effulgent and glorious than the sun and other luminaries. The Lord's nature and His internal potency have already been described in the Bhagavat-sandarbha and other books. Here the Lord's nature is described by the word "ekam". Here the words "sva-tejasa dhvasta-guna-vyavastham" mean "His internal potency throws far away the external potency consisting of three modes". Here the word "prasantam" means "he is never stopped by any obstacle", and "pratyak" means "He is seen only by spiritual eyes". This is described in the following words of Kaõha Upanishad (2.3.9 and 1.2.23):

na cakshusha pashyati rupam asya

"With material eyes no one can see the Supreme Lord's form."

yam evaisha vrinute tena labhyas
tasyaisha atma vivrinute tanum svam

"The Lord is obtained only by one whom He Hismelf chooses. To such a person He manifests His own form."*

What is the nature of the Supreme Lord's form? Shrimad-Bhagavatam declares: "anama-rupam" (His name and form are not material). Material names and forms are described in these words of Chandogya Upanishad 6.3.2):

etas tisro devata anena jivenatmananupravishya nama-rupe vyakaravani

"In this way the individual spirit souls entered three kinds of material bodies and obtained various material names."

The Supreme Personality of Godhead does not have material names and forms like those of the conditioned spirit souls. The reason the Lord has no material names or forms is given here in the word "niraham" (He is free of material false-ego). In the passage from Chandogya Upanisad the word "atma" refers to the individual spirit soul, who is part and parcel of the Supreme Personality of Godhead (paramatma). The word "anena" (by him) here indicates that the individual soul is different from the Supreme Lord. That individual spirit soul then enters a material body The word "devata" here refers to the various kinds of material bodies made of the elements fire, water, and earth. Because of material false-ego the individual soul enters a material body. Although He is present within thr material body as the Supersoul, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is not affected by material false ego and thus remains always free from possessing a material name or material body. Free from material false ego, He does not accept a material name or material body. Here someone may ask: "Why does not everyone accept this idea that Lord Ramacandra's form is spiritual in nature?" To this Shrimad-Bhagavatam gives the answer: "sudhiyopalambhanam" (Only in pure consciousness, Krishna consciousness can one perceive the transcendental form of the Lord). The spiritual nature of the Supreme Lortd's form is also described by Lord Brahma in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.9.3):

natah param parama yad bhavatah svarupam. . .

"O my Lord, I do not see a form superior to Your present form of eternal bliss and knowledge."*

Anuccheeda 195

Here someone may ask: "If the Supreme Personality of Godhead has a spiritual form as you say, then why does He come and stay amongst the conditioned souls?" To this the answer is given: There are many secondary reasons, but the primary reason the Supreme Personality of Godhead comes to the material world is to show to His devotees the sweetness of His pastimes. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.19.5):

martyavataras tv iha

"It was ordained that Ravana, chief of the Rakshasas, could not be killed by anyone but a man, and for this reason Lord Ramacandra, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, appeared in the form of a human being. Lord Ramacandra's mission, however, was not only to kill Ravana but also to teach mortal beings that material happiness centered around sex life or centered around one's wife is the cause of many miseries. He is the self-sufficient Supreme Personality of Godhead, and nothing is lamentable for Him. Therefore why else could He be subjected to tribulations by the kidnapping of mother Sita?"*

In this verse the word "tu" (but) is used to dispel doubt. Here "martyavataarah" means "He who incarnates in the world of mortals". Then the verse explains: "He does not come to the world of mortals only to kill the demons who trouble the saintly devotees, He comes also to teach the conditioned souls. He reveals to them the true goal of life." But these are only the external secondary reasons He appears in the world of mortals. He also comes to reveal the great sweetness of His pastimes to the devotees, devotees whose desire of the heart is to engage in devotional service, devotees whose heart melt in anguish in separation from the Lord. If the Lord had desired only to kill the demons, He could very easily have killed them by His expansion as the all-pervading Supersoul, and He Himself, in His original form, could have remained in the spiritual world enjoying His pastimes. Why did He come, then, to this world? His main purpose was not to kill the demons. His main purpose was to reveal the sweetness of His pastimes. That is the meaning here.

Anuccheda 196

In this way the Supreme Lord's pastimes are filled with mercy and sublime sweetness. Lord Rama's distress at His separation from Goddess Sita, a distress found within the sweetness of His pastimes, is not a defect in any way. Within His pastimes there is no attachment to lust or other faulty emotions, as there is in ordinary material activities. The Lord manifests these pastimes to give mercy to His devotees. This is seen in the following explanation in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.19.6):

na vai sa atmatmavatam. . .

"Since Lord Shri Ramacandra is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Vasudeva, He is not attached to anything in this material world. He is the most beloved Supersoul of all self-realized souls, and He is their very intimate friend. He is full of all opulences. Therefore He could not possibly have suffered because of separation from His wife, nor could He have given up His wife and Lakshmana, His younger brother. To give up either would have been absolutely impossible."*

Here it is said that the Personality of Godhead, Vasudeva, is not attached to anything in this material world. The reason why He is not attached is given here in the word "atma", which means "the Supersoul", and the word "bhagavan", which means "He who is full of all powers and opulences", and the word "vasudeva", which means "the shelter of all". Furthermore, it is said here that He is the dearest friend (suhrittamah) of the devotees, who consider Him their master, and who think "the Lord is mine" (atmavatam). It is also said here that the Lord does not truly feel anguished (kaslamam) on separation from His wife. He only manifests this anguish to show His great love. Also, at the time of the devaduta Lord Ramacandra did not in truth abandon Lakshmana. He had not power truly to abandon Him. At the time when He ascended to His own abode in the spiritual world, Lord Ramacandra was reunited with His associates, who had all been waiting for Him. Even today Lord Rama, Sita-devi, and Their associates may be seen on Kimpurusha-varsa. Therefore those pastimes of Lord Rama were only an imitation of the activities natural to human society. That is the meaning here.

Anuccheda 197

To confirm what was said before, the following two verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam declare that devotion to the Lord is the only way one can attain the Lord's mercy, mercy that is the sweetest of the Lord's virtues. This is confirmed by the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.19.7):

na janma nunam mahato na saubhagam na van na buddhir nakritis tosha-hetuh tair yad vishrishöan api no vanaukasash cakara sakhye bata lakshmanagrajah

"One cannot establish a friendship with the Supreme Lord Ramacandra on the basis of material qualities such as one's birth in an aristocratic family, one's personal beauty, one's eloquence, one's sharp intelligence or one's superior race or nation. None of these qualifications is actually a prerequisite for friendship with Lord Shri Ramacandra. Otherwise how is it possible that although we uncivilized inhabitants of the forest have not taken noble births, although we have no physical beauty and although we cannot speak like gentlemen, Lord Ramacandra has nevertheless accepted us as friends?"*

In this verse the word "janma mahatah" means "birth from the Supreme Personality of Godhead", "saubhagam" means "beauty", "akritih" means "birth", "yat" means "from which", "taih" means "birth and other like things", "vishrishöan" means "rejected", "nah" means "we who pleased the Lord with our devotional service of searching for Sita-devi and engaging in other kinds of devotional service also", "bata" means "indeed", "lakshmanagrajah" the elder brother of Lakshmana, who is endowed with all virtues and who is Sumitra's son, "sakhye" means "made friendship, for in these pastimes friendship and not servitude was the appropriate rasa". This verse describes Sugriva.

Anuccheda 198

The next verse declares (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 5.19.8):

suro 'suro vapy atha vanaro narah sarovatmana yah sukritajnam uttamam bhajeta ramam manujakritim harim ya uttaran anayat kosalan divam iti

"Therefore, whether one is a demigod or a demon, a man or a creature other than man, such as a beast or bird, everyone should worship Lord Ramacandra, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who appears on this earth just like a human being. There is no need of great austerities or penances to worship the Lord, for He accepts even a small service offered by His devotee. Thus He is satisfied, and as soon as He is satisfied, the devotee is successful. Indeed, Lord Shri Ramacandra brought all the devotees of Ayodhya back home, back to Godhead [Vaikunöha]."*

The previous verse described devotion to the Lord's humanlike transcendental form, devotion based on knowledge of the Lord's true nature and status. This verse describes devotion based on perception of the Lord's sweetness. In that situation the devotee worships the humanlike form of the Lord (manujakritim harim). Here the word "ramam" means "the form of Lord Rama, not the form of Kapila or any other form of the Lord". Here "uttamam" means "whose transcendental qualities have no equal or superior", and "sukritajnam" means "He who is pleased by even a small quantity of devotional service". This verse was spoken by Shri Hanuman.

Anuccheda 199

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.29-32):

maivam vibho 'rhati. . .

"The wives of the brahmanas replied: O almighty one, please do not speak such cruel words. Rather, You should fulfill Your promise that You always reciprocate with Your devotees in kind. Now that we have attained Your lotus feet, we simply wish to remain here in the forest so we may carry upon our heads the garlands of tulasi leaves You may neglectfully kick away with Your lotus feet. We are ready to give up all material relationships."*

It is again said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.30):

presöhö bhavams tanu-bhritam kila bandhur atma

"Our dear Krishna, as an expert in religion You have advised us that the proper religious duty for women is to faithfully serve their husbands, children and other relatives. We agree that this principle is valid, but actually this service should be rendered to You. After all, O Lord, You are the dearest friend of all embodied souls. You are their most intimate relative and indeed their very Self."

Because they are filled with jokes and puns, these verses are very glorious and show perfectly compatible combinations of the rasas.

Sometimes in a secondary way the rasas may be incompatible and in the primary way the rasas are compatible. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.45):

tvak-shmashru-roma-nakha-kesha. . .

"A woman who fails to relish the fragrance of the honey of Your lotus feet becomes totally befooled, and thus she accepts as her husband or lover a living corpse covered with skin, whiskers, nails, head-hair, and body hair and filled with flesh, bones, blood, parasites, feces, mucus, bile, and air."

These words were spoken by Shri Rukmini. Here, although the presence of bibhatsa-reasa (horror) is incompatible, that incompatibility is eclipsed by Rukimini-devi's praise of her beloved husband, Lord Krishna. Therefore the result is glorious and in the final result the rasas are considered compatible. It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.10.30):

etah param stritvam apastapeshalam nirasta-shaucam bata sadhu kurvate yasam grihat pushkara-locanah patir na jatv apaity ahritibhir hridi sprishan

"All these women auspiciously glorified their lives despite their being without individuality and without purity. Their husband, the lotus-eyed Personality of Godhead, never left them alone at home. He always pleased their hearts by making valuable presentations."*

In this verse the word "stritvam" means "birth as a woman". Shri Rukmini and the other queens came from different classes of society. The word "apastapeshalam" here describes their situation. These words do not describe Shri Rukimini and the other queens born in higher classes. The other queens, born as lower-class women, may have had some faults, but by glorifying Lord Krishna they all became supremely purified. That is the way they became saintly, free of faults, and decorated with all virtues. Then this verses explains that Lord Krishna, giving appropriate gifts to His beloved queens, touched their hearts. At heart attached to them, Lord Krishna did not leave their homes. As in a previous example the presence of bibhatsa-rasas gave a superficial appearance of rasabhasa that in the end was not at all present, so in this verse any appearance of rasabhasa is not real. There is no rasabhasa in this verse. This verse was spoken by the ladies in Hastinapura, the city of the Kauravas.

Anuccheda 200

As before, an example of what seems to be rasabhasa of a primary and secondary rasa, but in the end is understood to be a compatible mixture of rasas is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.20):

gopyo 'nurakta-manaso bhagavaty anante tat-sauhrida-smita-viloka-girah smarantyah

graste 'hina priyatame bhrisha-duhkha-taptah shunyam priya-vyatihritam dadrishus tri-lokam

"When the young gopis, whose minds were constantly attached to Krishna, the unlimited Supreme Lord, saw that He was now within the grips of the serpent, they remembered His loving friendship, His smiling glances and His talks with them. Burning with great sorrow, they saw the entire universe as void."

Here the secondary rasa, karuna-rasa (lamentation), is compatible, and the primary rasa, shringara-rasa, seems to be incompatible. However, in this situation the gopis' remembrance of Lord Krishna's smiling glances acts to make their sorrow glorious. For this reason the mixture of these rasas is compatible, and there is no rasabhasa. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 201

An example of what seems to be a sancari-bhava incompatible with a primary rasa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.8):

ta varyamanah patibhih. . .

"Their husbands, fathers, brothers and other relatives tried to stop them, but Krishna had already stolen their hearts. Enchanted by the sound of His flute, they refused to turn back."

Here it may at first seem that the gopis' restlessness (capalya) is incompatible with their being completely enchanted (moha) by Lord Krishna. Both, however, combine to nourish the gopis' exalted, guileless ecstatic love for Lord Krishna. Therefore the rasas here are compatible, and there is no rasabhasa. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 202

Now some other similar examples will be given. Sometimes what at first seems to be rasabhasa in the end is found to be a perfectly compatible mixture of rasas. An example of this may be seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.85.18):

yuvam na nah sutau sakshat
pradhana-purusheshvarau

"You are not our sons but the very Lords of both material nature and its creator (Maha-Vishnu). As You Yourself have told us, You have descended to rid the earth of the rulers who are a heavy burden upon her."

Someone may claim that in this verse Vasudeva's paternal vatsalya-rasa is incompatible with his devotion in awe and reverence. In truth these two sentiments are not incompatible here. This has already been described in our discussion of another verse, a verse describing Lord Balarama. In this way it is seen that the rasas are compatible in this verse. There is no rasabhasa here.

Anuccheda 203

In this way the rasas of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead are described. The rasa of devotional service mixed with knowledge (jnana-bhaktimaya-rasa) is also called by the name shanta-rasa. In this rasa of devotion mixed with knowledge the alambana (prime impetus of ecstatic love) and the vishaya (object of love) are both the transcendental form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead (bhagavan) manifest as the Supreme Brahman (para-brahma). Here the adhara (lovers) are the great jnani-bhaktas who personally participate in the Supreme Lord's pastimes. The Supreme Personality of Godhead as He manifests in this rasa is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.37):

evam tadaiva bhagavan aravinda-nabhah

"At that very moment, the Lord, who is called Padmanabha because of the lotus grown from His navel and who is the delight of the righteous, learned about the insult offered by His own servants to the saints. Accompanied by His spouse, the goddess of fortune, He went to the spot on those very feet sought for by recluses and great sages."*

When they arrived in Vaikunöha, the four Kumaras saw this form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The jnani-bhaktas are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.7.10):

atmaramash ca munayo

"All different varieties of atmaramas [those who take pleasure in atma, or spirit self], especially those established on the path of seff-realization, though freed from all kinds of material bondage, desire to render unalloyed devotional service unto the Personality of Godhead. This means that the Lord possesses transcendental qualities and therefore can attract everyone, including liberated souls."*

The four Kumaras and many others are atmaramas are described in this verse. Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami, who was attracted by the nectar sweetness of the rasas in the Supreme Lord's pastimes and who was rapt in reciting Shrimad-Bhagavatam, is also described in that verse.

In shanta-rasa the uddipanas (secondary impetuses for ecstatic love) are primarily the Supreme Lord's qualities, activities, and paraphernalia. Here the Lord's qualities include His eternal form of knowledge and bliss, His form always being manifest, His being the master of all opulences, His being the all-pervading Supersoul, His being the master of the knowledge-potency, His being all-powerful, His giving liberation to the enemies He kills, His being dear to the devotees in shanta-rasa, His being equal to all, His being self-controlled, His being peaceful, His purity, and His manifesting wonderful forms. The Lord's activities being with His acting to protect His devotees and include a host of other activities also. His paraphenralia include His great Upanishads, the dust of the jnani-bhaktas' feet, His Tulasi-devi, His transcendental abodes, and many other things also.

Now the anubhavas (activities of ecstatic love) will be described. Here the anubhavas include: praising the Supreme Lord's transcendental qualities and other features, chanting the holy names of the Lord in His forms as Brahman, Paramatma, and other forms, tasting the bliss of seeing the Lord in His Brahman feature, and yearning to see the Lord in His original feature as Bhagavan (the Supreme Personality of Godhead). Here the sattvika-bhavas include: staring at the tip of the nose, performing the actions of an avadhuta, assuming the jnana-mudra posture, yawning, observing silence, bowing down before the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and offering prayers to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Most of these activities are material in nature. In this rasa the sancari-bhavas (symptoms of ecstatic love) include: being detached from material things, steadiness, joyfulness, thoughtfulness, meditation, gravity, eagerness, earnestness, and the philosophical search for the truth.

The sthayi-bhava (continuous ecstasy) of the jnani-bhaktas is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.46):

yo 'ntarhito hridi gato 'pi duratmanam tvam
so 'dyaiva no nayana-mulam ananta raddhah

"Our dear Lord, You are not manifested to rascals, even though You are seated within the heart of everyone. But as far as we are concerned, we see You face to face, although You are unlimited. The statements we have heard about You from our father, Brahma, through the ears have now been actually realized by Your kind appearance."*

The attainment of shanta-rasa is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.15.43):

tasyaravinda-nayanasya padaravinda-kinjalka-mishra-tulasi-makaranda-vayuh antar-gatah sva-vivarena cakara tesam
sankshobham akshara jusham api citta-tanvoh

"When the breeze carrying the aroma of tulasi leaves from the toes of the lotus feet of the Personality of Godhead entered the nostrils of those sages, they experienced a change both in body and in mind, even though they were attached to the impersonal Brahman understanding."*

In this verse the lotus-eyed Lord (aravinda-nayanasya) is the alambana, the breeze is the uddipana, the change in body is the udbhasvara, sattvika-bhava, and anubhava, and the change in mind is the sancari-bhava, which consists of spiritual happiness. Even though they were situated in impersonal Brahman understanding, the sages attained devotional service mixed with knowledge (jnana-bhakti). That kind of devotional service was the sthayi-bhava (continuous ecstasy) they felt. All these together culminate in jnana-bhakti (devotional service mixed with knowledge). That was the rasa they experienced.

Now we will discuss the bhakti-rasa known as ashraya-rasa (the rasa of taking shelter of Lord Krishna). In this rasa Lord Krishna is the object of love and certain devotees who participate in Lord Krishna's pastimes are the lovers. In different situations sometimes Lord Krishna manifests His humanlike form and sometimes He manifests His form as the supreme controller. In the presence of the residents of Vraja He manifests His supremely sweet and glorious humanlike form.

The devotees are of two kinds: 1. the external devotees who serve the Lord by performing specific duties in the material world, and 2. the confidential devotees for whom the shade of Lord Krishna's feet is their very life. In the first group the demigods Brahma, Shiva, and some others are considered confidential devotees because of their great devotion to the Lord. The second group is divided into three parts: 1. the devotees in general, 2. the residents of the cities of the Yadus (like Mathura and Dvaraka), and 3. the residents of Vraja. In the first of these groups are included the kings imprisoned by Jarasandha, the great sages, and many others, and in the second and third groups are included Janaka Maharaja (the king of Mithila) and many other devotees.

Included among the uddipanas in this rasa are Lord Krishna's qualities. Included among His qualities are the following: 1. being the master of all opulences (bhagavattvam) in His relationship with the devotees who take shelter of Him as the supreme controller, 2. being the seed of all avatars (avataravali-bijatvam), 3. being the attractor of the self-satisfied sages (atmaramakarshitvam), 4. being the giver of ecstatic devotional service to Putana and others who only pretend to engage in devotional service, 5. manifesting numberless material universes from the pores of His skin, 6. being an ocean of mercy to the devotees who take shelter of Him as He is manifest in His humanlike form, 7. being the protector of anyone who takes shelter of Him, 8. possessing inconceivable potencies, 9. being the supreme object of worship, 10. being all-knowing, 11. being firm in vow, 12. possessing all wealth and all good fortune, 13. being naturally patient and tolerant, 14. being righteous, 15. being truthful, 16. being expert, 17. being all-auspicious, 18. being supremely powerful and glorious, 19. being the best follower of religion, 20. seeing through the eyes of the scriptures, 21. being the devotee's friend and well-wisher, 22. generosity, 23. power, 24. fame, 25. strength, 26. tolerance, 27. ability, 28. being controlled by love, and many other transcendental qualities also.

Now we will consider Lord Krishna's castes. The first group of devotees (the devotees in general) accept that Lord Krishna is a cowherd boy or a member of another caste (as a ksatriya in Dvaraka). This acceptance of caste by the Lord is only an imitation. Lord Krishna's dark complexion and many other things remind (smaraka) the devotees of Him. The devotees in the second group (the residents of Vraja, Mathura, and Dvaraka) think that Lord Krishna is the best of all gopas or the best of all ksatriyas. Now Lord Krishna's activities will be considered. For the first group of devotees (the devotees in general) Lord Krishna's creation and maintenance of the material worlds and His revelation of His universal form are prominent. For the second group of devotees (the residents of Vraja, Mathura, and Dvaraka) Lord Krishna's killing the demons, protecting His devotees, and casting His glance of mercy are prominent. Now Lord Krishna's paraphernalia will be considered. Lord Krishna's weapons, musical instruments, ornaments, abodes, footprints, and devotees are prominent among His paraphernalia. For the first group of devotees these are all clearly transcendental. For the second group of devotees these seem to be material even though they certainly are transcendental in fact. Now the time sequence of Lord Krishna will be considered. For both the first and second groups of devotees these begin with Lord Krishna's birth in this world and end with His departure for the spiritual world.

Now the anubhavas in this rasa will be considered. The anubhavas include residing in places sacred to Lord Krishna, chanting the glories of Lord Krishna's holy names and qualities, and performing other like devotional activities.

Now the sancari-bhavas in this rasa will be discussed. When the devotees associate with Lord Krishna the sancari-bhavas are joy, pride, and steadiness. When the devotees are separated from Lord Krishna the sancari-bhavas are sickness and exhaustion. In both association with and separation from the Lord are manifest the sancari-bhavas detachment, anxiety, moroseness, humbleness, worry, meditation, embarrassment, thoughtfulness, and death. An example of meditation on the Lord even when the Lord is present before the devotee is seen in this description of Bhishmadeva's actions in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.9.31):

vishuddhaya dharanaya. . .

"By pure meditation, looking at Lord Shri Krishna, he at once was freed from all material inauspiciousness and was relieved of all bodily pains caused by the arrow wounds. Thus all the external activities of his senses at once stopped, and he prayed transcendently to the controller of all living beings while quitting his material body."*

Unhappy that he may have offended Lord Krishna by attacking Him in battle, Bhishmadeva prays in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.9.34):

yudhi turaga-rajah. . .mama nishita-sharair vibhidyamana-tvaci

"On the battlefield [where Shri Krishna attended Arjuna out of friendship], the flowing hair of Lord Krishna turned ashen due to the dust raised by the hoofs of the horses. And because of His labor, beads of sweat wetted His face. All these decorations, intensified by the wounds dealt by my sharp arrows, were enjoyed by Him. Let my mind thus go unto Shri Krishna."*

Bhishmadeva again prays in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.9.38):

shita-vishikha-hatah. . .

"May He, Lord Shri Krishna, the Personality of Godhead, who awards salvation, be my ultimate destination. On the battlefield He charged me, as if angry because of the wounds dealt by my sharp arrows. His shield was scattered, and His body was smeared with blood due to the wounds."*

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.9.31 quoted here was spoken by Shrila Suta Gosvami.

Anuccheda 204

Sthayi-bhava (continuous ecstasy) as manifested in ashraya-rasa is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.7):

bhavaya nas tvam bhava vishva-bhavana tvam eva ma-tatha suhrit-patih pita tvam sad-gurur nah paramam ca daivatam yasyanuvrittya kritino babhuvima

"O creator of the universe, You are our mother, well-wisher, Lord, father, spiritual master and worshipable Deity. By following in Your footsteps we have become successful in every respect. We pray, therefore, that You continue to bless us with Your mercy."*

In this verse the vibhavas, udbhasvaras, anubhavas, sattvika-bhavas, and other kinds of ecstasy combine to make a wonderfully sweet rasa. It is said:

sad-bhavash ced vibhavader dvayor ekasya va bhavet jhaõity anya-samakshepat
tada dosho na vidyate

"If the transcendental bhavas and vibhavas meet together and nothing incompatible arises, then there is no fault in the rasas."

Here the word "anya-samakshepat" means "incompatible in that situation". Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.11.7 quoted here was spoken by the citizens of Dvaraka to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 205

Ashraya-rasa is of two kinds: 1. ashraya-rasa in separation from the Lord, and 2. ashraya-rasa in direct association with the Lord. Ashraya-rasa in separation from the Lord is again of two kinds: 1. initial separation, before meeting the Lord, and 2. separation when the Lord is far away. Ashraya-rasa in direct association with the Lord is also of two kinds: 1. eventually meeting the Lord again after one of the two kinds of separation, and 2. the regular direct association called by the names "siddhi" (perfection) and "tushöi" (happiness). Initial separation, before meeting the Lord, is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.70.31):

iti magadha-samruddha
bhavad-darshana-kankshinah prapannah pada-mulam te dinanam sham vidhiyatam

"This is the message of the kings imprisoned by Jarasandha, who all hanker for Your audience, having surrendered to Your feet. Please bestow good fortune on these poor souls."

Here the words "bhavad-darshana-kankshinah" indicate that the kings yearned to become free of their imprisonment in order to see Lord Krishna. In this is seen the sthayi-bhava. Here the soles of the Lord's feet (pada-mulam) are the alambana, the kings' imprisonment is the uddipana, their surrender to the Lord is the udbhasvara, their eagerness and humility are the sancari-bhavas. From this the sattvika-bhavas and other bhavas are known. This verse was spoken by the kings' messenger to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 206

The "siddhi" kind of direct association with the Lord is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.73.2-7):

dadrishus te ghana-shyamam
pita-kausheya-vasasam shrivatsankam catur-bahum. . .

. . .pibanta iva cakshurbhyam lihanta iva jihvaya

jighranta iva nasabhyam rambhanta iva bahubhih pranemur hata-papmano murdhabhih padayor hareh

krishna-sandarshanahladadhvasta-samrodhana-klamah prashashamsur hrishikesham girbhih pranjalayo nripah

"The kings then beheld the Lord before them. His complexion was dark blue like the color of a cloud, and Hewore a yellow silk garment. He was distinguished by the Shrivatsa mark on His chest, His four mighty arms, the pinkish hue of His eyes, which resembled the whorl of a lotus, His lovely, cheerful face, His gleaming makara earrings, and the lotus, club, conchshell, and disc in His hands. A helem, a jeweled necklace, a golden belt, and golden bracelets and armlets decorated His form, and on His neck He wore both the brilliant precious Kaustubha gem and a garland of forest flowers. The kings seemed to drink His beauty with their eyes, lick Him with their tongues, relish His fragrance with their nostrils, and embrace Him with their arms. Their past sins now eradicated, the kings all bowed down to Lord Hari, placing their heads at His feet.

"The ecstasy of beholding Lord Krishna having dispelled the weariness of their imprisonment, the kings stood with joined palms and offered words of praise to that supreme master of the senses.

These verses are an example of utpreksha, the fanciful kind of metaphor where one thing is imagined to have become another. Here wide-opened eyes are imagined to be drinking, wide-opened mouths are imagined to be licking Lord Krishna's fragrant lotus feet, and blossomed-wide nostrils are imagined to be smelling the fragrance of all of Lord Krishna's limbs. In this way, because of their great devotion, the kings are attracted to Lord Krishna's feet. Overcome with ecstatic love, it is as if they embraced the lord's feet. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 207

Separation when the Lord is in a distant place is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.9):

yarhy ambujakshapasasara. . .

"O lotus-eyed Lord, whenever You go away to Mathura-Vrindavana or Hastinapura to meet Your friends and relatives, every moment of Your absence seems like a million years. O infallible one, at that time our eyes become useless, as if bereft of sun."*

This verse describes the separation felt by the citizens of Dvaraka. The separation felt by the people of Vraja is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.25):

yadu-patir dvirada-raja-viharah. . .

"With His cheerful face resembling the moon, lord of the night, the Lord of the Yadus moves with the grace of a regal elephant. Thus He returns in the evening, delivering the cows of Vraja from the heat of the day.

Here it is said that Lord Krishna delighted the young and old cows. How much more did He give delight to the human beings? The "tushöi" kind of association with the Lord is described in these words of Shrimad-

Bhagavatam (1.11.1):

anartan sa upavrajya
svrddhan jana-padan svakan dadhmau daravaram tesam
vishadam shamayann iva

"Upon reaching the border of His most prosperous metropolis, known as the country of the Anartas [Dvaraka], the Lord sounded His auspicious conchshell, heralding His arrival and apparently pacifying the dejection of the inhabitants."*

The word "iva" (as if) used here is a rhetorical ornament. This verse was spoken by Shrila Suta Gosvami.

Anuccheda 208

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.35.25 quoted above it was said that Lord Krishna delighted the people of Vraja and delivered them from their sufferings. This is confirmed by the following words spoken by the goddesslike gopis of Vraja in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.10):

vrndavanam sakhi bhuvo vitanoti kirtim. . .

"O friend, Vrindavana is spreading the glory of the earth, having obtained the treasure of the lotus feet of Krishna, the son of Devaki. The peacocks dance madly when they hear Govinda's flute, and when other creatures see them from the hilltops, they all become stunned."

The gopis also say in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.4):

hanta citram abalah shrinutedam. . .

"O girls! This son of Nanda, who gives joy to the distressed, bears steady lightning on His chest and has a smile like a jeweled necklace. Now please hear something wonderful. When He vibrates His flute, Vraja's bulls, deer and cows, standing in groups at a great distance, are all captivated by the sound, and they stop chewing the food in their mouths and cock their ears. Stunned, they appear as if asleep, or like figures in a painting."

Now the devotional dasya-rasa (servitorship) will be considered. In this rasa the alambana is Lord Krishna in His feature as a master. The object of service is Lord Krishna, and the servitors are the glorious servants who directly participate in Lord Krishna's pastimes. As in the previous rasa, in this rasa Lord Krishna manifests two kinds of forms: 1. the form of the opulent supreme controller (parameshvara-akara), and 2. a glorious humanlike form (nara-akara). Some servants serve the first of these forms, and other servants serve the other. Thus there are two kinds of servants. Again there are three kinds of servants: 1. servants who serve the Lord's body (anga-sevaka), 2. servants who act as the Lord's associates (parshada), and 3. servants the Lord sends on specific missions (preshya). The anga-sevaka servants anoint the Lord's body with fragrant ointments, offer the Lord betelnuts and fragrant scents, dress the Lord in exquisite garments, and serve Him in many other ways. The parshada servants become the Lord's advisor, chariot-driver, a general of His army, a judge in His judicial system, an administrator of parts of His kingdom, and they also assume many other like duties. With their great learning and expertise they delight the Lord's royal conclave. Because of his exalted position the Lord's priest is counted among His gurus. Thus the Lord's priest is amongst His associates (parshada). The preshyas include the Lord's chariot-driver, footsoldiers, artisans, and others. As were the previously mentioned servants, these servants are all very dear to the Lord. Shri Uddhava, Daruka, and others who very closely serve the Lord are the most dear of the Lord's servitors. Lord Krishna said to Uddhava in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.11.49):

tvam me bhrityah suhrit sakha

"O Uddhava, you are my servant, well-wisher, and friend."

In this rasa the uddipanas are the same as were previously described. For the anga-sevaka servants the Lord's qualities include His handsomeness, delicateness, and other qualities, the Lord's activities include His eating, sleeping, and other like activities, and the Lord's paraphernalia include the articles used to serve the Lord and the remnants of what has been enjoyed by the Lord. For the parshada servants the Lord's qualities include His status as the supreme master, and many other qualities. For the preshya servants the Lord's qualities include His power, glory, and other qualities. Here the anubhavas are primarily as were described before. Directly associating with the Lord, the servants perform their respective duties. If trembling, becoming stunned, or other ecstatic symptoms become manifest in them when they perform their duties of serving the Lord, the servants lament. The Lord's servants are very extraordinary. For them ecstatic symptoms are both common and powerful. Even when the Lord is not present dasya-rasa is very powerful and exalted. When the Lord is not present His servants continue to perform their duties of serving Him. Here the sancari-bhavas are as previously were described. The sthayi-bhava is service with devotion. For Akrura and others like him knowledge of the Lord's power and opulence is prominent. For Uddhava and others like him knowledge of the Lord's sweetness is prominent. The Lord's servants in Vraja know only the Lord's sweetness and nothing else. Their devotion is very great. They worship Lord Krishna because He is Vraja's prince, because He has a host of transcendental qualities, and because He is supremely glorious. About Akrura it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.38.28):

dadarsha krishnam ramam ca
vraje go-dohanam gatau. . .

"Akrura then saw Krishna and Balarama in the village of Vraja, going to milk the cows. Krishna wore yellow garments, Balarama blue, and Their eyes resembled autumnal lotuses. One of those two mighty-armed youths, the shelters of the goddess of fortune, had a dark-blue complexion, and the other's was white. With Their fine-featured faces They were the most beautiful of all persons. As they walked with the gait of young elephants, glancing about with compassionate smiles, those two exalted personalities beautified the cow pasture with the impressions of Their feet, which bore the marks of the flag, lightning bolt, elephant goad and lotus. The two Lords, whose pastimes are most magnanimous and attractive, were ornamented with jeweled necklaces and flower garlands, anointed with auspicious, fragrant substances, freshly bathed, and dressed in spotless raiment. They were the primeval Supreme Personalities, the masters and original causes of the universes, who had for the welfare of the earth now descended in Their distinct forms of Keshava and Balarama. O King Parikshit, They resembled two gold-bedecked mountains, one of emerald and the other of silver, as with Their effulgence They dispelled the sky's darkness in all directions."

In this part of the Lord's pastimes Akrura saw the Lord's sweetness. Later Akrura saw the Lord's power and opulence manifest in a lake of the Yamuna. For Akrura seeing the Lord's wonderful power and opulence was more important than seeing His sweetness. For Shri Uddhava Lord Krishna's sweetness was most important. This is clearly seen in the words Uddhava spoke glorifying the good fortune of Gokula's residents. When the Lord was absent, Uddhava meditated on the sweetness of Lord Krishna's humanlike pastimes. Thus he felt the pangs of separation from the Lord. Uddhava said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.2.16):

mam khedayaty etad ajasya janmavidambanam yad vasudeva-gehe vraje ca vaso'ri-bhayad iva svayam purad vyavatsid yad-ananta-viryah

"When I think of Lord Krishna-how He was born in the prison house of Vasudeva although He is unborn, how He went away from His father's protection to Vraja and lived there incognito out of fear of the enemy, and how, although unlimitedly powerful, He fled from Mathura in fear-all these bewildering incidents give me distress."*

Anuccheda 209

Lord Krishna's glories are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.2.12):

yan martya-lilaupayikam. . .

"The Lord appeared in the mortal world by His internal potency, yoga-maya. He came in His eternal form, which is just suitable for His pastimes. These pastimes were wonderful for everyone, even for those proud of their own opulence, including the Lord Himself in His form as the Lord of Vaikunöha. Thus His (Shri Krishna's) transcendental body is the ornament of all ornaments."*

Lord Krishna's supremely sweet pastimes are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.2.25-28):

vasudevasya devakyam
jato bhojendra-bandhane cikirshur bhagavan asyah sham ajenabhiyacitah

"The Personality of Godhead, Lord Shri Krishna, being prayed to by Brahma to bring welfare to the earth, was begotten by Vasudeva in the womb of his wife Devaki in the prison of the King of Bhoja."*

tato nanda-vrajam itah
pitra kamsad vibibhyata

ekadasha samas tatra
gudharcih sa-balo 'vasat

"Thereafter, His father, being afraid of Kamsa, brought Him to the cow pastures of Mabaraja Nanda, and there He lived for eleven years like a covered flame with His elder brother, Baladeva."*

parito vatsapair vatsamsh carayan vyaharad vibhuh yamunopavane kujad-dvija-sankulitanghripe

"In His childhood, the Almighty Lord was surrounded by cowherd boys and calves, and thus He traveled on the shore of the Yamuna River, through gardens densely covered with trees and filled with vibrations of chirping birds."*

kaumarim darshayamsh ceshöam prekshaniyam vrajaukasam rudann iva hasan mugdhabala-simhavaloka nah

"When the Lord displayed His activities just suitable for childhood, He was visible only to the residents of Vrindavana. Sometimes He would cry and sometimes laugh, just like a child, and while so doing He would appear like a lion cub."*

Here the words "Sometimes He would cry and sometimes laugh" mean that in the presence of Mother Yashoda and others Lord Krishna acted like an ordinary child. These verses were spoken by Shriman Uddhava.

Anuccheda 210

The residents of Vraja knew only the Lord's sweetness. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.17):

pada-samvahanam cakruh
kecit tasya mahatmanah
apare hata-papmano
vyajanaih samavijayan

"Some of the cowherd boys, who were all great souls, would then massage His lotus feet, and others, qualified by being free of all sin, would expertly fan the Supreme Lord."

Here the word "mahatmanah" means "endowed with great virtues" and the word "hata-papmanah" means "free of any sins that might stop their good fortune". Speaking these humble words, Shrila Shukadeva

Gosvami yearns to become like these cowherd boys. These words were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 211

Dasya-rasa is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.18):

hantayam adrir abala hari-dasa-varyah. . .

"Of all the devotees, this Govardhana Hill is the best! O my friends, this hill supplies Krishna and Balarama, along with Their calves, cows and cowherd friends, with all kinds of necessities-water for drinking, very soft grass, caves, fruits, flowers and vegetables. In this way the hill offers respects to the Lord. Being touched by the lotus feet of Krishna and Balarama, Govardhana Hill appears very jubilant."

The menaing of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 212

Beginning with the vibhavas and culminating in sthayi-bhava, this rasa is filled with wonder. An example of a devotee at the time before His first meeting Lord Krishna is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.38.10):

apy adya vishnor manujatvam iyusho bharavataraya bhuvo nijecchaya lavanya-dhamno bhavitopalambhanam mahyam na na syat phalam anjasa drishah

"I am going to see the Supreme Lord Vishnu, the reservoir of all beauty, who by His own sweet will has now assumed a humanlike form to relieve the earth of her burden. Thus there is no denying that my eyes will achieve the perfection of their existence."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Akrura.

Anuccheda 213

An example of a devotee seeing Lord Krishna for the first time is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.38.35):

bhagavad-darshanahlada-baspaparyakulekshanah pulaakacitanga autkanöhyat

svakhyane nashakan nripa

"The joy of seeing the Supreme Lord flooded Akrura's eyes with tears and decorated his limbs with eruptions of ecstasy. He felt such eagerness that he could not speak to present himself, O King."

The words "he could not speak to present himself" mean "He could not say: I am Akrura. I offer my respectful obeisances to You." This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 214

An example of a devotee feels separation in Lord Krishna's absence is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.2.1-3):

iti bhagavatah prishtah kshattra vartam priyashrayam prativaktum na cotseha
autkanöhyat smariteshvarah

"When the great devotee Uddhava was asked by Vidura to speak on the messages of the dearest Lord Krishna, Uddhava was unable to answer immediately due to excessive anxiety at the remembrance of the Lord.*

"He was one who even in his childhood, at the age of five years, was so absorbed in the service of Lord Krishna that when he was called by his mother for morning breakfast, he did not wish to have it.*

"Uddhava thus served the Lord continually from childhood, and in his old age that attitude of service never slackened. As soon as he was asked about the message of the Lord, he at once remembered all about Him."*

In these verses the word "Bhagavatah" refers to Shriman Uddhava and ksattra" refers to Vidura. The word "jarasam" means "twenty-five years old". This word does not mean that he had become old. True, he was of approximately the same age as Lord Krishna. Still, as Lord Krishna never became old and infirm, so Uddhava also never became old. This is described in Shri Krishna-sandarbha (Anuccheda 117). Lord Krishna personally glorified Uddhava in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.4.31):

noddhavo 'nv api man-nyunah. . .

"Uddhava is not inferior to Me in any way because he is never affected by the modes of material nature. Therefore he may remain in this world in order to disseminate specific knowledge of the Personality of Godhead."*

It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.45.19):

tatra pravasayo 'py asan
yuvano 'ti-balaujasah. . .

"Even the most elderly inhabitants of the city appeared youthful, full of strength and vitality."

If the residents of Mathura were eternally youthful, then how much more so was Uddhava eternally youthful? Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.2.1-3 was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 215

It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.2.7):

krishna-dyumani nimloce. . .durbhago bata loko 'yam

"My dear Vidura, the sun of the world, Lord Krishna, has set, and our house has now been swallowed by the great snake of time. What can I say to you about our welfare? The universe with all its planets is most unfortunate."*

In these words Uddhava lamented his separation from Lord Krishna. However, after feeling distress in separation from Lord Krishna, Uddhava perceived Lord Krishna direct presence and became joyful. It was as if Lord Krishna directly came before him. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.2.4):

sa muhurtam abhut tasmim krishna-nghri-sudhaya bhrsham tivreṇa bhakti-yogena
nimagnah sadhu nirvritah

"For a moment he remained dead silent, and his body did not move. He became absorbed in the nectar of remembering the Lord's lotus feet in devotional ecstasy, and he appeared to be going increasingly deeper into that ecstasy."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 216

To save the lives of the people of Vraja, who were plunged in despair because Lord Krishna was no longer amongst them, Lord Krishna sent Uddhava with a message. When he entered there, Uddhava saw that Vraja was filled with spiritual bliss. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.9):

vasitarthe 'bhiyudhyadbhih. . .

"Gokula resounded on all sides with the sounds of bulls in rut fighting with one another for fertile cows, with the mooing of cows, burdened with their udders, chasing after their calves, with the noise of milking and of the white calves jumping here and there, with the loud reverberation of flute-playing, and with the singing of the all-auspicious deeds of Krishna and Balarama by the cowherd men and women, who made the village resplendent with their wonderfully ornamented attire. The cowherds' homes in Gokula appeared most charming with their abundant paraphernalia for worship of the sacrificial fire, the sun, unexpected guests, the cows, the brahmanas, the forefathers, and the demigods. On all sides lay the flowering forest, echoing with flocks of birds and swarms of bees and beautified by its lakes crowded with swans, Karandava ducks, and bowers of lotuses."

It is also said in that chapter of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.45):

ta dipa-diptair manibhir virejuh. . .

"As they pulled on the churning ropes with their bangled arms, the women of Vraja shone with the splendor of their jewels, which reflected the lamps' light. Their hips, breasts, and necklaces moved about, and their faces, anointed with reddish kunkuma, glowed radiantly with the luster of their earrings reflecting from their cheeks."

Concerned for the welfare of His parents and His gopi-beloveds, Lord Krishna said to Uddhava in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.3):

gacchoddhava vrajam saumya. . .

"Dear gentle Uddhava, go to Vraja and give pleasure to Our parents. And also relieve the gopis, suffering in separation from Me, by giving them My message."

Lord Krishna's parents and the other residents of Vraja felt only unhappiness. Without Lord Krishna present before them they found no happiness in anything. They said to Uddhava in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.18):

api smareti nah krishno
mataram suhridah sakhin

gopan vrajam catma-natham
gavo vrindavanam girim

"Does Krishna remember us? Does He remember His mother and His friends and well-wishers? Does He remember the cowherds and their village of Vraja, of which He is the master? Does He remember the cows, Vrindavana forest, and Govardhana Hill?"

These words were spoken by Nanda Maharaja. Uddhava's visit to Vraja is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.54-56):

uvasa katicin masan
gopinam vinudan shucah krishna-lila-katham gayan
ramayam asa gokulam

"Uddhava remained there for several months, dispelling the gopis' sorrow by chanting the topics of Lord Krishna's pastimes. Thus he brought joy to all the people of Gokula.

yavanty ahani nandasya
vraje 'vatsit sa uddhavah vrajaukasam kshana-prayany
asan krishnasya vartaya

"All the days that Uddhava dwelled in Nanda's cowherd village seemed like a single moment to the residents of Vraja, for Uddhava was always discussing Krishna.

sarid-vana-giri-dronir vikshan kusumitan druman
krishnam samsmarayan reme
hari-daso vrajaukasam

"The servant of Lord Hari, seeing the rivers, forests, mountains, valleys, and flowering trees of Vraja, enjoyed inspiring the inhabitants of Vrindavana by reminding them of Lord Krishna."

In this verse the word "samsmarayan" means "reminding". Reminding them of Lord Krishna, Uddhava dispelled the sadness the people of Vraja felt. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.54-56 was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 217

The joy that comes from directly seeing Lord Krishna is described in these words spoken by Uddhava in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.29.47):

tatas tam antar hridi sanniveshya gato maha-bhagavato vishalam yathopadishöam jagad-eka-bandhuna tapah samasthaya harer agad gatim

"Thereupon, placing the Lord deeply within his heart, the great devotee Uddhava went to Badarikashrama. By engaging there in austerities, he attained the Lord's personal abode, which had been described to him by the only friend of the universe, Lord Krishna Himself."

Here the words "yathopadishöam gatim" refer to the Third Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, where Lord Krishna said to Uddhava (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.4.11):

vedaham antar manasipsitam te dadami yat tad duravapam anyaih

"O Vasu, I know from within your mind what you desired in the days of yore when the Vasus and other demigods responsible for expanding the universal affairs performed sacrifices. You particularly desired to achieve My association. This is very difficult to obtain for others, but I award it unto you."*

Here Lord Krishna says to Uddhava: "You particularly desired to achieve My association. This is very difficult to obtain for others, but I award it unto you." Then Lord Krishna said to Uddhava in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.4.13):

pura maya proktam ajaya nabhye

"O Uddhava, in the lotus millennium in the days of yore, at the beginning of the creation, I spoke unto Brahma, who is situated on the lotus that grows out of My navel, about My transcendental glories, which the great sages describe as Shrimad-Bhagavatam."*

In these words Lord Krishna describes the gist of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Uddhava describes his eagerness to hear Shrimad-Bhagavatam by speaking these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.4.15):

ko nv isha te pada-saroja-bhajam
sudurlabho 'rtheshu caturshv apiha
tathapi naham pravrinomi bh uman
bhavat-padambhoja-nisevanotsukah

"O my Lord, devotees who engage in the transcendental loving service of Your lotus feet have no difficulty in achieving anything within the realm of the four principles of religiosity, economic development, sense gratification and liberation. But, O great one, as far as I am concerned, I have preferred only to engage in the loving service of Your lotus feet."*

Uddhava then suddenly expresses his bewilderment. He tells Lord Krishna in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.4.16-17):

karmany anihasya bhavo 'bhavasya. . .

"My Lord, even the learned sages become disturbed in their intelligence when they see that Your Greatness engages in fruitive work although You are free from all desires, that You take birth although You are unborn, that You flee out of fear of the enemy and take shelter in a fort although You are the controller of invincible time, and that You enjoy householder life surrounded by many women although You enjoy in Your Self.*

"O my Lord, Your eternal self is never divided by the influence of time, and there is no limitation to Your perfect knowledge. Thus You were sufficiently able to consult with Yourself, yet You called upon me for consultation, as if bewildered, although You are never bewildered. And this act of Yours bewilders me."*

Later Lord Krishna would reassure Uddhava with these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.4.31):

noddhavo 'nv api man-nyunah. . .

"Uddhava is not inferior to Me in any way because he is never affected by the modes of material nature. Therefore he may remain in this world in order to disseminate specific knowledge of the Personality of Godhead."*

Wishing to hear Lord Krishna's explanation of many topics, Uddhava spoke to Him these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.4.18):

jnanam param svatma-rahah-prakasham provaca kasmai. . .

"My Lord, kindly explain to us, if You think us competent to receive it, the transcendental knowledge which gives enlightenment about Yourself and which You explained before to Brahmaji."*

In the phrase "yad vrijinam tarema" (may cross over all difficulties) the word "vrijinam" may mean "the unhappiness of being separated from My direct service" or it may mean "the distress and bewilderment of residing in the material world". It is by confidential transcendental knowledge that once crosses over this difficulty. Then Uddhava said: "Lord Krishna then fulfilled my desire." Uddhava said to Shri Vidura (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.4.19):

itya vedita-hardaya
mahyam sa bhagavan parah adidesharavindaksha
atmanah paramam sthitim

"When I thus expressed my heartfelt desires unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the lotus-eyed Lord instructed me about His transcendental situation."*

In this verse the words "transcendental situation" refers to the spiritual world of Vaikuntha, which the Lord revealed to the demigod Brahma in the Second Canto of Shrimad-Bhagavatam. These words also refer to the transcendental realm of Dvaraka, as has been described in Shri Bhagavat-sandarbha, Anuccheda 7. This spiritual world is described in the four nutshell verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.9.33-36). In wonderful pastimes like these, the Supreme Personality of Godhead reveals the truth that He is controlled by His devotees' love. By understanding these truths, Uddhava became again peaceful and composed. Then he himself entered that spiritual abode the Lord had described to him. Lord Krishna gives this same instruction in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.29.33):

jnane karmani yoge ca
 vartayam danda-dharane
yavan artho nrinam tata
 tavams te 'ham catur-vidhah

"Through analytic knowledge, ritualistic work, mystic yoga, mundane business, and political rule, people seek to advance in religiosity, economic development, sense gratification, and liberation. But because you are My devotee, whatever men can accomplish in these multifarious ways you will very easily find within Me."

For Uddhava Lord Krishna was the supreme goal of life. This Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami had previously explained in Shrimad-Bhagavatam. Lord Krishna kept Uddhava on the earth so he could preach the science of devotional service. Later, when Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami was preaching the glories of the Lord's pastimes, there was no longer any need for Uddhava to stay on the earth. Then, in his original spiritual form, Uddhava attained the glorious spiritual land of Vraja. This was Uddhava's earnest desire, as he himself had said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.61):

asam aho carana-renu-jusham aham syam. . .

"The gopis of Vrindavana have given up the association of their husbands, sons, and other family members, who are very difficult to give up, and they have forsaken the path of chastity to take shelter of the lotus feet of Mukunda, Krishna, which one should search for by Vedic knowledge. Oh, let me be fortunate enough to be one of the bushes, creepers, or herbs in Vrindavana, because the gopis trample them and bless them with the dust of their feet."*

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.29.47 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 218 and 219

Now the devotional mellow of prashraya-rasa (filial love) will be considered. In this rasa the alambana and visaya are Lord Krishna, the doting parent. The adhara (lovers) are Lord Krishna's children and other like kinsmen who are the objects of His parental affections. As before, in this rasa also Lord Krishna manifests two forms: 1. the form of the supreme controller, and 2. a humanlike form. The devotees who are thus the objects of Lord Krishna's parental affection are of three kinds: 1. the devotees who have a relationship with the Lord in His feature as the supreme controller, 2. the devotees who have a relationship with the Lord in His humanlike feature, and 3. the devotees who have a relationship with the Lord in both these two features. The demigod Brahma and other demigods have a relationship with the Lord in His feature as the supreme controller. The children in Gokula, which is revealed in the twelve-syllable mantra, have a relationship with the Lord in His humanlike feature. The Lord's children born to Him at Dvaraka have a relationship with the Lord in both these features. This filial relationship includes Lord Krishna's own children, nephews, nieces, followers, and other like persons. Some of Lord's Krishnas children have qualities like their father, and others have forms like their father. The Lord's children who have qualities like those of their father are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.61.1):

ekaikashas tah krishnasya
putran dasha-dashabalah ajijanann anavaman
pituh sarvatma-sampada

"Each of Lord Krishna's wives gave birth to ten sons, who were not less than their father, having all His personal opulence."

Samba and others like him had glorious transcendental qualities like those of their father. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.61.2):

jambavatyah suta hy ete
sambadyah pitri-sammatah

"Samba and the other sons of Jambavati were just like their father."

Anuccheda 220

In the Eleventh Canto is a description of Samba's acting in an improper way (by teasing Narada Muni). It should be understood that those actions were instigated by Lord Krishna Himself by His own wish to arrange for certain pastimes. Amongst all of Lord Krishna's sons, Shri Rukmini's sons were the best. This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.61.9):

pradyumna-pramukha jata
rukminyam navamah pituh

"Rukmini's sons, headed by Pradyumna, were not less than their father."

Again and again the superiority of those sons is described. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 221

The great glory of Shri Pradyumna is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.55.33):

katham tv anena sampraptam
sarupyam sharnga-dhanvanah akrityavayavair gatya
svara-hasavalokanaih

"But how is it that this young man so much resembles my own Lord, Krishna, the wielder of Sharnga, in his bodily form and His limbs, in His gait and the tone of His voice, and in His smiling glance?"

The meaning of these words is clear. This verse was spoken by Shri Rukmini.

Anuccheda 222

Pradyumna's glory is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.55.40):

yam vai muhuh pitri-svarupa-nijesha-bhavas tan-mataro yad abhajan raha-rudha-bhavah citram na tat khalu ramaspada-bimba-bimbe kame smare 'ksha-vishaye kim utanya-naryah

"It is not astonishing that the palace women, who should have felt maternal affection for Pradyumna, privately felt ecstatic attraction for Him as if He were their own Lord. After all, the son exactly resembled His father. Indeed, Pradyumna was a perfect reflection of the beauty of Lord Krishna, the shelter of the goddess of fortune, and appeared before their eyes as Cupid himself. Since even those on the level of His mother felt conjugal attraction for Him, then what to speak of how other women felt when they saw Him?"

In this verse the word "yam" refers to Pradyumna. The words "tan-mataro yad abhajan rahah" mean "His mothers came to see Him. Shyly taking Him to a secluded place, they worshiped Him." The words "tat khalu ramaspada-bimba-bimbe" mean "He was like a picture of Lord Krishna, the place where the goddess of fortune enjoys pastimes". "Na citram" means "It was not surprising that the mothers felt maternal love for Him, for He was exactly like His father." The words "pitri-svarupa-nijesha-bhavah" mean "This was also not surprising because Pradyumna's body closely resembled that of His father, and therefore the queens thought Pradyumna was their master, Lord Krishna." Still, they did not think of Him as their husband, and therefore it was proper for them to take Him to a secluded place. The same explanation was already given previously in that chapter where it was said (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.55.27-28):

tam drishöva jalada-shyamam. . .

. . .krishnam matva striyo hrita
nililyus tatra tatra ha

"The women of the palace thought he was Lord Krishna when they saw His dark-blue complexion the color of a rain-cloud, His yellow silk garments, his long arms, and red-tinged eyes, his charming lotus face adorned with a pleasing smile, His fine ornaments, and His thick, curly black hair. Thus the women became bashful and hid themselves here and there."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.55.40 the words "rudha-bhavah" indicate that the queens thought Pradyumna was Lord Krishna, who is very dear to them. Because He very closely resembled His father, they thought He was their master, Lord Krishna. Still, they did not think of Him as their husband. Shri Rukmini thought of Him as her son. She did not think He was her master, Lord Krishna. Because He so closely resembled Lord Krishna, Rukmini thought He must be her own son. This is seen in the following words spoken by Shri Rukmini in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.55.33-34):

katham tv anena sampraptam. . .

. . .sa eva va bhaven nunam yo me garbhe dhrito 'rbhakah amusmin priti adhika
vama sphurati me bhujah

"But how is it that this young man so much resembles my own Lord, Krishna, the wielder of Sharnga, in his bodily form and His limbs, in His gait and the tone of His voice, and in His smiling glance?

"Yes, He must be the same child I bore in my womb, since I feel great affection for Him and my left arm is quivering."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.55.40 the words "ramaspada-bimba-bimbe kame smare" mean the queens were bewildered into thinking Pradyumna was the spiritual Kamadeva who had now incarnated in the material world. The words "aksha-vishaye kim utanya-naryah" mean, if the queens saw Him in that way, then how enchanted must other women have become by seeing Him?" Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.55.40 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 223

In prashraya-rasa the uddipanas are Lord Krishna's transcendental qualities, beginning with His smiling glance filled with paternal love. Also included among the uddipanas are the glories of Lord Krishna's fame, intelligence, strength, and other attributes. Also included are Lord Krishna's noble birth, activities, and many other like things.

The anubhavas are as follows. In childhood the anubhavas include: 1. again and again asking questions in a sweet voice, 2. grasping the arm and the fingers, 3. sitting on the lap, and 4. accepting the betelnuts chewed by the Lord. After childhood the anubhavas include: 1. following the commands, 2. imitating the activities, and 3. renouncing all independence. In both childhood and after the sons are followers of their father. All the sattvika-bhavas are manifest here. The vyabhicaris are also as before described. The sthayi-bhava is prashraya-rasa. In childhood hugging and dealing with great affection are the seed of prashraya-rasa. Those are the activities in childhood. The activities after childhood are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.17-18):

nishamya presatham ayantam. . .

. . .pradyumnash carudeshnash ca

sambo jambavatt-sutah praharsha-vegocchashita-shayanasana-bhojanah

"On hearing that the most dear Krishna was approaching Dvaraka-dhama, magnanimous Vasudeva, Akrura, Ugrasena, Balarama (the superhumanly powerful), Pradyumna, Carudeshna and Samba the son of Jambavati, all extremely happy, abandoned resting, sitting and dining.*

varanendram puraskritya
brahmanaih sasumangalaih shankha-turya-ninadena brahma-ghoshena cadrtah pratyujjagmu rathair hrishtah pranayagata-sadhvasah

"They hastened toward the Lord on chariots with brahmanas bearing flowers. Before them were elephants, emblems of good fortune. Conchshells and bugles were sounded, and Vedic hymns were chanted. Thus they offered their respects, which were saturated with affection."*

In this verse the word "pranayah" means "great devotion". This verse was spoken by Shrila Suta Gosvami.

Anuccheda 224

In prashraya-rasa the vibhavas and other conditions are as previously described. In this rasa there is great devotion for the Lord.

Now will be considered vatsalya-rasa, the rasa of parental love. In that rasa the alambana is Lord Krishna, who is the object of His parents affection. The vishaya is Lord Krishna. the adhara (lovers) are Lord Krishna's parents and other superiors. In this reasa Lord Krishna manifests only His humanlike form. In this reas Lord Krishna's superiors are Shri Vasudeva, Devaki, Kunti, and others. Their devotion for the Lord is mixed (mishra-bhakti). Also included in this rasa are Shri Yashoda, Nanda, and their contemporary gopas and gopis, and others also. Their devotion for Lord Krishna is pure (shuddha). The devotees in vatsalya-rasa are expert in performing their parental duties in relation to Lord Krishna. This expertise is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.6.21):

gopyah samsprishöa-salila
angeshu karayoh prithak nyasyatmany atha balasya
bija-nyasam akurvata

"The gopis first executed the process of acamana, drinking a sip of water from the right hand. They purified their bodies and hands with the nyasa-mantra and then applied the same mantra upon the body of the child."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. Included among the uddipanas are Lord Krishna's qualities. The first of these is His quality of being an adorable child (lalya-bhava). This quality is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.4):

tam stanya-kama asadya
mathnantim jananim harih grihitva dadhi-manthanam
nyashedhat pritim avahan

"While mother Yashoda was churning butter, Lord Krishna, desiring to drink the milk of her breast, appeared before her, and in order to increase her transcendental pleasure, He caught hold of the churning rod and began to prevent her from churning."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 225

Vatsalya-rasa is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.45.2-10):

uvaca pitarav etya
sagrajah satvatarshabhah prashrayavanatah prinann amba tateti sadaram. . .

. . .iti maya-maushyasya

"Lord Krishna, the greatest of the Satvatas, approached His parents with His elder brother. Humbly bowing His head and gratifying them by respectfully addressing them as 'My dear mother' and 'My dear father', Krishna spoke as follows.

" `Dear father, because of Us, your two sons, you and mother Devaki always remained in anxiety and could never enjoy Our childhood, boyhood, or youth.

" `Deprived by fate, We could not live with you and enjoy the pampered happiness most children enjoy in their parents' home.

" `With one's body one can acquire all goals of life, and it is one's parents who give the body birth and sustenance. Therefore no mortal man can repay his debt to his parents, even if he serves them for a full lifetime of a hundred years.

" `A son who, though able to do so, fails to provide for his parents with his physical resources and wealth is forced after his death to eat his own flesh.

" `A man who, though able to do so, fails to support his elderly parents, chaste wife, young child, or spiritual master, or who neglects a brahmana or anyone who comes to him for shelter, is considered dead, though breathing.

"Thus We have wasted all these days, unable as We were to properly honor you because Our minds were always disturbed by fear of Kamsa.

" `Dear father and mother, please forgive Us for not serving you. We are not independent and have been greatly frustrated by cruel Kamsa.'

"Thus beguiled by the words of Lord Hari, the Supreme Soul of the universe, who by his internal illusory potency appeared to be a human, His parents joyfully raised Him up on their laps and embraced Him."

In these verses the word "pitarau" (parents) refers to Shri Devaki and Vasdueva, and the word "prinan" means "delighting". These verses were spoken by Shri la Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchadas 226-229

Lord Krishna's childhood restlessness is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.25):

shringy-angi-damshöry-asi-jala-dvija-kanöakebhyah krida-parav ati-calau sva-sutau nisheddhum grihyani kartum api yatra na taj-jananyau sekata apatur alam manaso 'navastham

"When Mother Yashoda and Rohini were unable to protect the babies from calamities threatened by horned cows, by fire, by animals with claws and teeth such as monkeys, dogs, and cats, and by thorns, swords, and other weapons on the ground, they were always in anxiety, and their household engagements were disturbed. At that time they were fully equipoised in the transcendental ecstasy known as the distress of material affection, for this was aroused within their minds."*

Lord Krishna's childhood restlessness is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.28-29):

krishnasya gopyo ruciram
vikshya kaumara-capalam shrinvantyah kila tan-matur
iti hocuh samagatah

"Observing the very attractive childish restlessness of Krishna, all the gopise in the neighborhood, to hear about Krishna's activities again and again, would approach Mother Yashoda and speak to her as follows."*

vatsan muncan kvacid asamaye. . .

"`Our dear friend Yashoda, your son sometimes comes to our houses before the milking of the cows and releases the calves, and when the master of the house becomes angry, your son merely smiles. Sometimes He devises some process by which He steals palatable curd, butter, and milk, which He then eats and drinks. When the monkeys assemble, He divides it with them, and when the monkeys have their bellies so full that they won't take any more, He breaks the pots. Sometimes, if He gets no opportunity to steal butter and milk from a house, He will be angry at the householders, and for His revenge He will agitate the small children by pinching them. Then, when they begin crying, Krishna will go away.'"*

The word "gopyah" (gopis) here refers to Mother Yashoda's friends and Lord Krishna's aunts. In other situations in this rasa Lord Krishna manifests humility, shyness, speaking sweet words, honesty, generosity and other virtues. These virtues are seen in the following description of Lord Krishna's pastimes at the pilgrimage to Kurukshetra in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.34):

krishna-ramau parishvajya
pitarav abhivadya ca. . .

"O hero of the Kurus, Krishna and Balarama embraced Their foster parents and bowed down to them, but Their throats were so choked up with tears of love that the two Lords could say nothing."

In His childhood Lord Krishna was very forceful and arrogant when He stopped the Indra-yajna. Still, His actions delighted His parents and superiors. Lord Krishna's handsomeness and auspicious features gradually increased until they reached their apex in His full-blown youth (purna-kaishora). The growing-up of Lord Krishna is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.21 and 26):

kalena vrajatalpena
gokule rama-keshavau
janubhyam saha panibhyam
ri\ngamanau vijahratuh

"After a short time passed, both brothers, Rama and Krishna, began to crawl on the ground of Vraja with the strength of Their hands and knees and thus enjoy Their childhood play."*

kalenalpena rajarshe ramah krishnash ca gokule aghrishöa-janubhih padbhir vicakramatur anjasa

"O King Parikshit, within a very short time both Rama and Krishna began to walk very easily in Gokula on Their legs, by Their own strength, without the need to crawl."*

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 230

Lord Krishna's gradually growing-up is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.1):

tatash ca pauganda-vayah-shritau vraje babhuvatus tau pashu-pala-sammatau

"When Lord Rama and Lord Krishna attained the age of pauganda [six to ten] while living in Vrindavana, the cowherd men allowed Them to take up the task of tending the cows. Engaging thus in the company of Their friends, the two boys rendered the land of Vrindavana most auspicious by imprinting upon it the marks of Their lotus feet."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 231

Lord Krishna's birth was already described. Lord Krishna's activities include His birth pastimes and His childhood pastimes. Lord Krishna's birth pastimes are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.5.1):

nandas tv atmaja utpanne. . .

"Nanda Maharaja was naturally very magnanimous, and when Lord Shri Krishna appeared as his son, he was overwhelmed with jubilation."*

Lord Krishna's childhood pastimes are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.22-24):

tav anghri-yugmam anukrishya sarishripantau
ghosha-praghosha-ruciram vraja-kardameshu tan-nada-hrishöa-manasav anushritya lokam mugdha-prabhitavad upeyatur anti matroh. . .

"When Krishna and Balarama, with the strength of Their legs, crawled in the muddy places created in Vraja by cow dung and cow urines, Their crawling resembled the crawling of serpents, and the sound of Their ankle bells was very charming. Very much pleased by the spound of other people's ankle bells, They used to follow these people as if going to Their mothers, but when They saw that these were other people, They became afraid and returned to Their real mothers, Yashoda and Rohini.*

"Dressed with muddy earth mixed with cow dung and cow urine, the babies looked very beautiful, and when They went to Their mothers, both Yashoda and Rohini picked Them up with great affection, embraced Them, and allowed Them to suck the milk flowing from their breasts. While sucking the breast, the babies smiled, and Their small teeth were visible. Their mothers, upon seeing those beautiful teeth, enjoyed great transcendental bliss.*

"Within the house of Nanda Maharaja the cowherd ladies would enjoy seeing the pastimes of the babies Rama and Krishna. The babies would catch the ends of the calves' tails, and the calves would drag Them here and there. When the ladies saw these pastimes, they certainly stopped their household activities and laughed and enjoyed the incidents."*

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 232

In this context the word "adi" (beginning with) means "beginning with the pauganda years (six until ten). Here the paraphernalia of the Lord's pastimes include his garments, clay pots, and other things. Different specific times include Lord Krishna's birthday and other like times. Lord Krishna's birthday celebration is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.7.4):

kadacid autthanika-kautukaplave janmarksha-yoge samaveta-yoshitam vaditra-gita-dvija-mantra-vacakaish cakara sunor abhishecanam sati

"When Mother Yashoda's baby was slanting His body to attempt to rise and turn around, this attempt was observed by a Vedic ceremony. In such a ceremony, called utthana, which is performed when a child is due to leave the house for the first time, the child is properly bathed. Just after Krishna turned three months old, mother Yashoda celebrated this ceremony with other women of the neighborhood. On that day there was a conjunction of the moon with the constellation Rohini. As the brahmanas joined by chanting Vedic hymns and professional musicians also took part, this great ceremony was observed by mother Yashoda."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 233

Among the anubhavas are the udbhasvaras. Among the udbhasvaras is lalana (doting parental love), which is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.44-46):

tayor yashoda-rohinyau
putrayoh putra-vatsale yatha-kamam yatha-kalam
vyadhattam paramashishah

"Mother Yashoda and mother Rohini, acting most affectionately toward their two sons, offered all the best things to Them in response to Their every desire and at the various appropriate.

gatadhvana-shramau tatra
majjanonmardanadibhih
nivim vasitva ruciram
divya-srag-gandha-manditau

"By being bathed and massaged, the two young Lords were relieved of the weariness caused by walking on the country roads. Then They were dressed in attractive robes and decorated with transcendental garlands and fragrances.

janany-upahritam prashya svadv annam upalatitau samvishya vara-shayyayam
sukham sushupatur vraje

"After dining sumptuously on the delicious food given Them by Their mothers and being pampered in various ways, the two brothers lay down upon Their excellent beds and happily went to sleep in the village of Vraja."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 234

The udbhasvara of shiro-ghrana (smelling the head) is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.6.43):

nandah sva-putram adaya pretyagatam udara-dhih murdhny upaghraya paramam
mudam lebhe kurudvaha

"O Maharaja Parikshit, best of the Kurus, Nanda Maharaja was very liberal and simple. He immediately took his son Krishna on his lap as if Krishna had returned from death, and by formally smelling his son's head, Nanda Maharaja undoubtedly enjoyed transcendental bliss."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 235

The udbhasvara of ashirvada (speaking blessings) is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.5.12):

ta ashishah prayunjanash
ciram pahiti balake haridra-curna-tailadbhih
sincantyo 'janam ujjaguh

"Offering blessings to the newborn child, Krishna, the wives and daughters of the cowherd men said, 'May you become the king of Vraja and long maintain all its inhabitants.' They sprinkled a mixture of turmeric powder, oil, and water upon the birthless Supreme Lord and offered prayers."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 236

The udbhasvara of hitopadesha-dana (giving auspicious advice) is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.11.15):

krishna krishnaravindaksha
tata ehi stanam piba alam viharaih kshut-kshantah
krida-shranto 'si putraka

"Mogher Yasoda said: My dear son Krishna, lotus-eyed Krishna, come here and drink the milk of my breast. My dear darling, You must be very tired because of hunger and the fatigue of playing so long. There is no need to play any more."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 237

All these activities are performed by the many kinds of devotees in vatsalya-rasa, but they are especially performed by Lord Krishna's parents. For His benefit, Lord Krishna's parents also rebuke Him. An example of this is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.32-34):

ekada kridamanas te ramadya gopa-darakah krishno mridam bhakshitavan
iti matre nyavedayan

"One day while Krishna was playing with His small playmates, including Balarama and the other sons of the gopas, all His friends came together and lodged a complaint to Mother Yashoda. 'Mother,' they submitted, 'Krishna has eaten earth.'*

sa grihitva kare krishnam upalabhya haitaishini yashoda bhaya-sambhrantaprekshanaksham abhashata

"Upon hearing this from Krishna's playmates, mother Yashoda, who was always full of anxiety over Krishna's welfare,, picked Krishna up with her hands to look into His mouth and chastise Him. Her eyes fearful, she spoke to her son as follows.*

kasman mridam adantatman
bhavan bhakshitavan rahah vadanti tavaka hy ete
kumaras te 'grajo 'py ayam

"Dear Krishna, why are You so restless that You have eaten dirt in a solitary place? This complaint has been lodged against You by all Your playmates, including Your elder brother, Balarama. How is this?"*

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 238

An example of what happened to child Krishna after He broke the yogurt-pot is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.11-12):

kritagasam tam prarudantam akshini kasantam anjan-mashini sva-panina udvikshamanam bhaya-vihvalekshanam haste grihitva bhishayanty avagurat

"When caught by mother Yashoda, Krishna became more and more afraid and admitted to being an offender. As she looked upon Him, she saw that He was crying, His tears mixing with the black ointment around His eyes, and as He rubbed His eyes with His hands, He smeared the ointment all over His face. Mother Yashoda, catching her beautiful son by the hand, mildly began to chastise Him."*

tyaktva yashtim sutam bhitam

"Mother Yashoda was always overwhelmed by intense love for Krishna, not knowing who Krishna was or how powerful He was. Because of maternal affection for Krishna, she never even cared to know who He was. Therefore, when she saw that her son had become excessively afraid, she threw the stick away and desired to bind Him so that He would not commit any further naughty activities."*

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Wishing only His welfare and happiness, the devotees in vatsalya-rasa discipline Krishna, give Him bitter-tasting medicine, and perform other like activities. An example of these activities is seen in the following wrds of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.5):

tam ankam arudham apayayat stanam
sneha-snutam sa-smitam ikshati mukham
atriptam utshrijya javena sa yayav utsicyamane payasi tv adhishrite

"Mother Yashoda then embraced Krishna, allowed Him to sit down on her lap, and began to look upon the face of the Lord with great love and affection. Because of her intense affection, milk was flowing from her breast. But when she saw that the milk pan on the oven was boiling over, she immediately left her son to take care of the overflowing milk, although the child was not yet fully satisfied with drinking the milk of His mother's breast."*

These devotees are also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.35):

yad-dhamartha-suhrit-priyatma-tanaya-pranashayas tvat-krite

"My Lord, sometimes I am puzzled as to how Your Lordship will be able to repay, in gratitude, the devotional service of these residents of Vrindavana. Although I know that You are the supreme source of all benediction, I am puzzled to know how You will be able to repay all the service that You are receiving from these residents of Vrindavana. I think of how You are so kind, so magnanimous, that even Putana, who came to cheat You by dressing herself as a very affectionate mother, was awarded liberation and the actual post of a mother. And other demons belonging to the same family, such as Aghasura and Bakasura, were also favored with liberation. Under the circumstances, I am puzzled. These residents of Vrindavana have given You everything: Their bodies, their minds, their love, their homes. Everything is being utilized for Your purpose. So how will You be able to repay their debt? You have already given Yourself to Putana! I surmise that You shall ever remain a debtor to the residents of Vrindavana, being unable to repay their loving service."*

Here we see Mother Yashoda is eager to protect the wealth in her house. Cowherd people are naturally very determined to attain great wealth in milk and milk-products. Mother Yashoda was eager to protect her wealth of milk. Still, this eagerness only nourished her love for Lord Krishna in vatsalya-rasa. As waves increase the ocean, so these activities increased her love for her son. In her heart she did not think of protecting her own wealth. She only thought: "This is what I must do now". In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.9.5 the word "sneha-snutam" shows that she had deep love for her son. Even when her son broke the yogurt pots, she had only a dim reflection of anger. In her heart she was delighted and amused by her son's mischief. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.7):

uttarya gopi sushritam payah punah pravishya sandrishya ca dadhy-amatrakam bhagnam vilokya sva-sutasya karma taj jahasa tam capi na tatra pashyati

"Mother Yashoda, after taking down the hot milk from the oven, returned to the churning spot, and when she saw that the container of yogurt was broken and that Krishna was not present, she concluded that the breaking of the pot was the work of Krishna.* Seeing this, she smiled."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 241

Even when he is in distress, a devotee in vatsalya-rasa may pretend to smile in order to reassure Lord Krishna. An example of this is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.11.6):

ulukhalam vikarshantam
damna baddham svam atmajam vilokya nandah prahasadvadano vimumoca ha

"When Nanda Maharaja saw his own son bound with ropes to the wooden mortar and dragging it, he smiled and released Krishna from His bonds."*

An alternate reading here is "prahasad-vadanam" (Lord Krishna was smiling). This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 242

A devotee in vatsalya-rasa may fear that calamities brought by wicked people or other sources may harm Lord Krishna. An example of this is seen in these words spoken by Devaki in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.3.29):

janma te mayy asau papo
ma vidyan madhusudana
samudvije bhavad-dhetoh
kamsad aham adhira-dhih

"O Madhusudana, because of Your appearance I am becoming more and more anxious in fear of Kamsa. Therefore, please arrange for that sinful Kamsa to be unable to understand that You have taken birth from my womb."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shri Devaki.

Anuccheda 243

This fear is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.25):

shringy-angi-damshöry-asi-jala-dvija. . .

"When Mother Yashoda and Rohini were unable to protect the babies from calamities threatened by horned cows, by fire, by animals with claws and teeth such as monkeys, dogs, and cats, and by thorns, swords, and other weapons on the ground, they were always in anxiety, and their household engagements were disturbed. At that time they were fully equipoised in the transcendental ecstasy known as the distress of material affection, for this was aroused within their minds."*

For Lord Krishna's welfare a devotee in vatsalya-rasa may worship the demigods or other exalted beings. An example of this is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.5.16):

tais taih kamair adinatma yathocitam apujayat vishnor aradhanarthaya
sva-putrasyodayaya ca

"The great-minded Maharaja Nanda gave clothing, ornaments, and cows in charity to the cowherd men in order to please Lord Vishnu, and thus he improved the condition of his own son in all respects."*

Here Nanda Maharaja thought: "By these activities Lord Vishnu will be pleased. When He is pleased then good will come to my son." Thinking in this way, Nanda properly performed these activities of worship. That is the meaning here. This verse was spoken by Shрила Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 244

Seeing a display of Lord Krishna's extraordinary power, a devotee in vatsalya-rasa may think the power came not from Krishna, but from some other source instead. An example of this is seen in the following words spoken by Lord Krishna's parents in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.7.31):

aho bataty-adbhutam esha rakshasa balo nivrittim gamito 'bhyagat punah himsrah sva-papena vihimsitah khalah sadhuh samatvena bhayad vimucyate

"It is most astonishing that although this innocent child was taken away by the Rakshasa to be eaten, He has returned without having been killed or even injured. Because this demon was envious, cruel, and sinful, he has been killed for his own sinful activities. This is the law of nature. An innocent devotee is always protected by the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and a sinful person is always vanquished for his sinful life."*

Lord Krishna's prents thought in this way. Lord Krishna's mother spoke these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.40):

kim swapna. . .

"(Mother Yashoda began to argue with herself:) Is this a dream, or is it an illusory creation by the external energy? Has this been manifested by my own intelligence, or is it some mystic power of my child?"*

After seeing Lord Krishna manifest the entire material universe within His abdomen, Mother Yashoda could not believe that this was a display of her son's great power. She assumed that He had no power to manifest this vision. (She assumed that the vision of the universal form was caused by the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is different from her son.) She thought in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.41):

atho yathavan na vitarka-gocaram. . .

"Therefore let me surrender to the Supreme Personality of Godhead and offer my obeisances unto Him, who is beyond the conception of human speculation, the mind, activities, words, and arguments, who is the original cause of this cosmic manifestation, by whom the entire cosmos is maintained, and by whom we can conceive of its existence. Let me simply offer my obeisances, for He is beyond my contemplation, speculation, and meditation. He is beyond all of my material activities."*

Here Mother Yashoda assumes that this vision of the universal form was caused by the Supreme Personality of Godhead (who is different from her son). To become free from seeing this fearful vision, she takes shelter of the Supreme Lord's lotus feet. Then she thought (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.8.42):

aham mamasau. . .

"It is by the influence of the Supreme Lord's maya that I am wrongly thinking that Nanda Maharaja is my husband, that Krishna is my son, and that because I am the queen of Nanda Maharaja, all the wealth of cows and calves are my possessions and all the cowherd men and their wives are my subjects. Actually, I also am eternally subordinate to the Supreme Lord. He is my ultimate shelter."*

With these words Mother Yasoda firmly takes shelter of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Speaking the words "Nanda Maharaja is my husband, that Krishna is my son," she refers to Lord Krishna, who was then before her eyes. Then she says: "I am bewildered (kumatih) by these many manifestations of the universal form (yan-mayaya)." Then she says: "the Supreme Personality of Godhead (sah) is the goal of my life (gatih). There Shрила Shukadeva Gosvami explained (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.8.43):

ittham vidita-tattvayam. . .

"Mother Yashoda, by the grace of the Lord, could understand the real truth. But then again, the supreme master, by the influence of the internal potency, Yogamaya, inspired her to become absorbed in intense maternal affection for her son."*

Here the word "tattva" refers to her son. Here the words "sa ishvarah" refer to Lord Krishna's feature as the supreme controller. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.8.42 the words "pranatasmi tat-padam" mean "Let me simply offer obeisances, for He is beyond my contemplation". In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.8.43 the words "vaishnavim mayam" may mean "the Supreme Lord's internal potency", or they may also mean "the Supreme Lord's mercy". This is explained in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.45):

trayya copanishadbhish ca. . .

"The glories of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are studied through the three Vedas, the Upanishads, the literature of sankhya-yoga, and other Vaishnava literature, yet mother Yashoda considered the Supreme Person her ordinary child."*

It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.21):

nayam sukhapo bhagavan. . .

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krishna, the son of mother Yashoda, is accessible to devotees engaged in spontaneous loving service, but He is not as easily accessible to mental speculators, to those striving for self-realization by severe austerities and penances, or to those who consider the body the same as the self."*

In these words the Shrimad-Bhagavatam sings the glories of Mother Yashoda. It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.18-19):

api smarati nah krishnah. . .

"Does Krishna remember us? Does He remember His mother and His friends and well-wishers? Does He remember the cowherds and their village of Vraja, of which He is the master? Does He remember the cows, Vrindavana forest, and Govardhana Hill?

apy ayashyati govindah. . .

"Will Govinda return even once to see His family? If He ever does, we may then glance upon His beautiful face, with its beautiful eyes, nose, and smile."

After Nanda Maharaja had spoken these words, Uddhava, following the way of this world, to console him spoke these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.30):

yuvam shlaghyatamau nunam. . .

"O respectful Nanda, certainly you and mother Yashoda are the most praiseworthy persons in the entire world, since you have developed such a loving attitude toward Lord Narayana, the spiritual master of all living beings."

Even as Uddhava spoke these words of praise, Nanda's remained convinced that Krishna was his son and not the Supreme Personality of Godhead. He could not be moved from that idea. Then it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.44):

evam nisha sa bhruvator vyatita nandasya krishnanucarasya rajan. . .

"While Krishna's messenger continued speaking with Nanda, the night ended, O king. The women of the cowherd village rose from bed and, lighting lamps, worshiped their household deities. Then they began churning yogurt into butter."

In this way Uddhava spoke many words to console Nanda Maharaja, who was grieving in separation from Krishna. No matter what Uddhava said, Nanda remained always convinced that Krishna was his son and not the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The truth of Uddhava's words, that Lord Krishna is indeed the original form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is elaborately explained in the Krishna-sandarbha. Even at Kuruksetra, when a great host of saintly devotees affirmed that Lord Krishna is indeed the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Nanda and Yashoda remained unconvinced. They continued to believe that Krishna was only their son. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.35):

tav atmasanam aropya
bahubhyam parirabhya ca
yashoda ca maha-bhaga
sutau vijahatuh shucah

"Raising their two sons onto their laps and holding Them in their arms, Nanda and saintly mother Yashoda forgot their sorrow."

It is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.66):

manaso vrittayo nah syuh. . .

"May our thoughts always take shelter of Krishna's lotus feet, may our words always chant His names, and may our bodies always bow down to Him and serve Him."

Even though the truth that Shri Krishna is the all-powerful Supreme Personality of Godhead was again and again proved to him, Nanda Maharaja continued to believe Krishna was only his son and nothing more. These words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.66) Nanda spoke to Uddhava mean: "We pray that birth after birth we may love Krishna." This prayer of love spoken by Nanda is filled with anuraga love. Love is not absent from it. Then it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.65):

tam nirgatam samasadya nanopayana-panayah nandadayo 'nuragena
pravocann ashru-locanah

"As Uddhava was about to leave, Nanda and the others approached him bearing various items of worship. With tears in their eyes they addressed him as follows."

In these verses it is seen that Nanda and Yashoda are filled with anuraga ecstatic love for Lord Krishna. Their devotion to the Lord is not in the mood of awe and veneration, the mood of appreciating Lord Krishna's supreme power and opulence. Here Uddhava thinks: "Although I am far from attaining this kind of good fortune, I still pray that someday I will attain this kind of ecstatic love. I pray this love will not be denied to me." With a voice choked with emotion Uddhava prays in this way. Praying that in some other lifetime he may some day attain this kind of anuraga ecstatic love, Uddhava says (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.67):

karmabhir bhramyamanaanam. . .

"Wherever we are made to wander about this world by the Supreme Lord's will, in accordance to the reactions to our fruitive work, may our good works and charity always grant us love for Lord Krishna."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.66 may be interpreted in two ways. It may be interpreted to refer to vatsalya-rasa alone, or it may also be interpreted to refer to the other rasas also. Here the phrase beginning with the word "pada" (taking shelter of Krishna's feet) is considered appropriate in vatsalya-rasa because Nanda Maharaja feels great anguish because he cannot associate with Krishna who has gone to a faraway country. A similar situation in karuna-rasa is seen in the story of Maharaja Citraketu. Here the word "prahvana" means "bowing down". In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.67 the word "ishvare" is used, as it was used before, as an affectionate term used to address a child. It is sometimes used in that way in this world. These are included amongst the udbhasvaras. Now the sattvika-bhavas will be considered. Of these there are eight, as were described before. For Lord Krishna's mother there is a ninth sattvika-bhava, which is milk flowing from her breasts. Now the sancari-bhavas will be considered. These are: 1. those born from the pastimes Lord Krishna directly performs, and 2. those born from the pastimes of power and opulence manifest with the aid of Lord Krishna's pastime potency. The first of these is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.34):

kasman mridam adantatman. . .

"Dear Krishna, why are You so restless that You have eaten dirt in a solitary place? This complaint has been lodged against You by all Your playmates, including Your elder brother, Balarama. How is this?"

This is an example of Lord Krishna's restlessness. The second of these sancari-bhavas (those pastimes of power and opulence manifest with the aid of Lord Krishna's pastime potency) is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.37):

sa tatra dadrishe vishvam. . .

"When Krishna opened His mouth wide by the order of Mother Yashoda, she saw within His mouth all moving and nonmoving entities, outer space, and all directions, along with mountains, islands, oceans, the surface of the earth, the blowing wind, fire, the moon, and stars. She saw the planetary systems, water, light, air, sky, and creation by transformation of akankara. She also saw the senses, the mind, sense perception, and the three qualities goodness, passion, and ignorance. She saw the time allotted for the living entities, she saw natural instinct and the reactions of karma, and she saw desires and different varieties of bodies, moving and nonmoving. Seeing all these aspects of the cosmic manifestation, along with herself and Vrindavana-dhama, she became doubtful and fearful of her son's nature."*

In this passage is seen Mother Yashoda's wonder and doubt. Here the sthayi-bhava is vatsalya-rasa. This sthayi-bhava is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.23):

tan-matarau nija-sutau ghrinaya snuvantya pankanga-raga-rucirav upagrihya dorbhyam dattva stanam prapibato sma mukham nirikshya mugdha-smitalpa-dashanam yayatuh pramodam

"Dressed with muddy earth mixed with cow dung and cow urine, the babies looked very beautiful, and when They went to Their mothers, both Yashoda and Rohini picked Them up with great affection, embraced Them, and allowed Them to suck the milk flowing from their breasts. While sucking the breast, the babies smiled, and Their small teeth were visible. Their mothers, upon seeing those beautiful teeth, enjoyed great transcendental bliss."*

In this verse the word "tan-matarau" means "the mothers of Krishna and Balarama", and "ghrinaya" means "with compassion". Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.8.23 was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 245

Vatsalya-rasa is wonderful with many vibhavas and other bhavas. Even before the devotees have seen Lord Krishna for the first time, these ecstasies are manifest. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.5.9):

gopyash cakarnya mudita yashodayah sutodbhavam atmanam bhushayam cakrur
vastrakalpanadibhih

"The gopi wives of the cowherd men were very pleased to hear that mother Yashoda had given birth to a son, and they began to decorate themselves very nicely with proper dresses, ornaments, black ointment for the eyes, and so on."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 246

After the devotees attain Lord Krishna's direct association the ecstasies of vatsalya-rasa become perfectly manifest. They are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.5.12):

ta ashishah. . .

"Offering blessings to the newborn child, Krishna, the wives and the daughters of the cowherd men said, 'May You become the king of Vraja and logn maintain all its inhabitants.' They sprinkled a mixture of turmeric powder, oil, and water upon the birthless Supreme Lord and offered their prayers."*

When the devotees become separated from Lord Krishna, the ecstasies of vatsalya-rasa are also seen. An example is given in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.27-28):

iti samsmritya samsmritya
nandah krishnanurakta-dhih aty-utkanöho 'bhavat tushnim
prema-prasara-vihvalah

"Thus intensely remembering Krishna again and again, Nanda Maharaja, his mind completely attached to the Lord, felt extreme anxiety and fell silent, overcome by the strength of his love."

yashoda varnyamanani putrasya caritani ca shrinvaty ashruni avasrakshit
sneha-snuta-payodhara

"As mother Yashoda heard the descriptions of her son's activities, she poured out her tears, and milk flowed from her breasts out of love."

The meaning of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.46.27-28 is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 247 and 248

After being separated from Him, when they again meet Krishna, the devotees in vatsalya-rasa are very pleased. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.35):

tav atmasanam aropya

"Raising their two sons onto their laps and holding Them in their arms, Nanda and saintly mother Yashoda forgot their sorrow."

These ecstasies are also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.84.66):

nandas tu sakhyuh priya-krit premna govinda-ramayoh
adya sva iti masams trin
yadubhir manito 'vasat

"And on his part, Nanda was also full of affection for his friend Vasudeva. Thus during the following days Nanda would repeatedly announce, 'I will be leaving later today' and 'I will be leaving tomorrow'. But out of love for Krishna and Balarama he remained there for three more months, honored by all the Yadus."

In this verse it is said: "But out of love for Krishna and Balarama he remained there for three more months." For three months he would repeatedly announce, 'I will be leaving later today' and 'I will be leaving tomorrow'." Overcome with bliss, Nanda felt those three months apss as if they were only two days. Someone may ask: "What did he do as he resided there?" The answer is given here in the words: "Nanda was also full of affection for his friend Vasudeva." This means that when Vasudeva was present Nanda did not act as if Krishna were his son. Neither did he attempt to take Krishna back with him to Vraja. Then it is said here: "Nanda was honored by all the Yadus." Afterward Nanda was again separated from Lord Krishna. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.84.67-69):

tatah kamaih puryamanah
sa-vrajah saha-bandhavah parardhyabharana-kshaumanananarghya-paricchadaih

vasudevograsenabhyam krishnoddhava-baladibhih
dattam adaya paribarham
yapito yadubhir yayau

"Then, after Vasudeva, Ugrasena, Krishna, Uddhava, Balarama, and others had fulfilled his desires and presented him with precious ornaments, fine linen, and varieties of priceless household furnishing, Nanda Maharaja accepted all these gifts and took his leave. Seen off by all the Yadus, he departed with his family members and the residents of Vraja."

nando gopas ca gopyash ca govinda-caranambuje
manah kshiptam punar hartum anisha mathuram yayau

"Unable to withdraw their minds from Lord Govinda's lotus feet, where they had surrendered them, Nanda and the cowherd men and women returned to Mathura."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.84.67 the word "kamaih" means "with the desires that begin with the desire that Krishna would return to Vraja", and the word "puryamanah" means "satisfied by Lord Krishna". It was Lord Balarama who returned to Vraja. In describing that pastime Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.65.6):

krishne kamala-patrakshe
sanyastakhila-radhasah

"The cowherds had dedicated everything to lotus-eyed Krishna."

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"In this verse the word `krishne' means `for the purpose of attaining Lord Krishna's association', and `sanyastakhila-radhasah' means `they renounced everything'."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.84.67-69 it is said: "With great love Vasudeva and the others gave gifts of many ornaments." Here the word "apitah" means "escorted by a great army". Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.84.69 describes the great love the people of Vraja felt for Lord Krishna. When they had returned to Mathura, the cowherd people again yearned for Lord Krishna's association. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.84.66-69 was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 249

It was after these pastimes that the citizens of Dvaraka spoke these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.9):

yarhy ambujakshapasasara bho bhavan
kurun madhun vatha suhrid-didrikshaya

"O lotus-eyed Lord, whenever You go away to Mathura-Vrindavana or Hastinapura to meet Your friends and relatives, every moment of Your absence seems like a million years. O infallible one, at that time our eyes become useless, as if bereft of sun."*

In Shri Krishna-sandarbha (Anuccheda 174) it was explained that Lord Krishna resides in Vraja eternally in His aprakaōa (unmanifest) form, and therefore they people of vraja are never truly separated from Him. Their desire to associate with Him is always satisfied. In this way vatsalya-rasa has been described.

Now sakhya-rasa will be described. In this rasa the alambana is Lord manifest as a friend. The vishaya is Lord Krishna. The asraya is the friends who participate in Lord Krishna's glorious pastimes. In this rasa the Lord sometimes manifests a form-armed form and other times manifests a humanlike form. The four-armed form is described by Arjuna in these words of Bhagavad-gita (11.46):

tenaiva rupena catur-bhujena sahasra-baho bhava vishva-murte

"O universal form, O thousand-armed Lord, I wish to see You in Your four-armed form."*

Afterward, when Lord Krishna's humanlike form was manifest, Arjuna said in Bhagavad-gita (11.51):

drishövedam manusham rupam tava saumyam janardana idanim asmi samvrittah
sa-cetah prakritim gatah

"When Arjuna saw Krishna in His original form, he said: O Janardana, seeing this humanlike form, so very beautiful, I am now composed in mind, and I am restored to my original nature."*

Amongst the devotees in sakhya-rasa are the mitras, suhrits, and sakhas. Among the suhrits, Shri Bhimasena and Shri Draupadi are prominent. Among the sakhas, Shriman Arjuna and Shridama Vipra are prominent. In Gokula the gopa Shridama is prominent. These great devotees are glorified in Shrimad-Bhagavatam and other scriptures. In the Agama-sastras, Vasudama, Kinkini, and other devotees in sakhya-rasa are described. In the Bhavishya Purana's description of pastimes of wrestling, the names of some devotees in sakhya-rasa are given in these words:

subhadra-mandalibhadrabhadravardhana-gobhaöah yakshendrabhaöah. . .

"Subhadra, Mandalibhadra, Bhadravardhana, Gobhaöa, and Yakshendrabhaöa participated in these pastimes."

The gopas in sakhya-rasa are also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.2):

tenaiva sakam prithukah sahasrashah. . .

"At that time, hundreds and thousands of cowherd boys came out of their respective homes in Vrajabhumi and joined Krishna, keeping before them their hundreds and thousands of groups of calves. The boys were very beautiful, and they were equipped with lunch bags, bugles, flutes, and sticks for controlling the calves."*

These gopas were all Lord Krishna's equals. It is said in the scriptures:

gopaih samana-guna-shila-vayo-vilasa-vashaish ca

"In their qualities, character, age, pastimes, and garments, the gopa boys were like Krishna."

Of the gopas it is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.18.11):

gopa jati-praticchanna. . .

"O King, demigods disguised themselves as members of the cowherd community and, just as dramatic dancers praise another dancer, worshiped Krishna and Balarama, who were also appearing as cowherd boys."

This verse has been explained in Shri Krishna-sandarbha, Anuccheda 117. The gopas' great learning is seen in these words they spoke in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.8):

diksayah pashu-samsthayah. . .

"Except during the interval between the initiation of the performer of a sacrifice and the actual sacrifice of the animal, O most pure brahmanas, it is not contaminating for even the initiated to partake of food, at least in sacrifices other than the Sautramani."

The gopas' expert artistic skill is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.18.13):

kvacin nrityatsu canyeshu. . .

"While the other boys were dancing, O King, Krishna and Balarama would sometimes accompany them with song and instrumental music, and sometimes the two Lords would praise the boys, saying, ``Very good! Very good!' "

In these words Lord Krishna Himself praised the gopas' glorious qualities. The gopas are of three kinds: 1. sakha (ordinary friends), 2. priya-sakha (more confidential friends), and 3. priya-narma-sakha (intimate friends). The gopa Shridamaa and the other gopas enjoy very sweet pastimes with Lord Krishna. They are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.11):

ittham satam. . .

"In this way, all the cowherd boys used to play with Krishna, who is the source of the Brahman effulgence for jnanis desiring to merge into that effulgence, who is the Supreme Personality of Godhead for devotees who have accepted eternal servitorship, and who for ordinary persons is but another ordinary child. The cowherd boys, having accumulated the results of pious activities for many lives, were able to associate in this way with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. How can one explain their great fortune?"*

In this rasa lord Krishna is the alambana. Lord Krishna as the alambana is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.5):

barhapidam naöa-vara-vapuh. . .

"Wearing a peacock-feather ornament upon His head, blue karnikara flowers on His ears, a yellow garment as brilliant as gold, and the Vaijayanti garland, Lord Krishna exhibited His transcendental form as the greatest of dancers as He entered the forest of Vrindavana, beautifying it with the marks of His footprints. He filled the holes of His flute with the nectar of His lips, and the cowherd boys sang His glories."

Now the uddipanas in this rasa will be considered. Amongst these uddipanas are included the following transcendental qualities: loving friendship, straightforwardness, gratitude, intelligence, learning, glory, expert skill, heroism, strength, tolerance, mercy, and giving delight to the people. Also included amongst these uddipanas are youthful handsomeness, all-auspicious bodily features, and other qualities. For the suhrit friends the qualities beginning with straightforwardness are prominent. For the sakha friends the qualities beginning with handsomeness and skill are prominent. For the mitra friends the qualities beginning with straightforwardness, handsomeness, and skill are prominent. The suhrit, sakha, and mitra kinds of friendship are mentioned by lamenting Arjuna in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.15.4):

sakhyam maitrim sauhridam ca. . .

"Remembering Lord Krishna and His well wishes, benefactions, intimate familial relations and His chariot driving, Arjuna, overwhelmed and breathing very heavily, began to speak."

Lord Krishna's friendly affection for the gopas is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.13.13 and 16):

tan drisöva bhaya-santrastan uce krishno'sya bhi-bhayam mitrany ashan ma viramatehaneshye vatsakan aham

"When Krishna saw that His friends the cowherd boys were frightened, He, the fierce controller even of fear itself, said, just to mitigate their fear, 'My dear friends, do not stop eating. I shall bring your calves back to this spot by personally going after them Myself.' "

tato vatsan adrishövaitya puline 'pi ca vatsapan ubhav api vane krishno
vicikaya samantatah

"Thereafter, when Krishna was unable to find the calves, He returned to the bank of the river, but there He was also unable to see the cowherd boys. Thus He began to search for both the calves and the boys, as if He could not understand what had happened."*

The meaning of these verses (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.13.13 and 16) is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 250

Sakhya-rasa is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.52):

anvamamsata tad rajan govindanugrahekshitam. . .

"O King, the cowherd boys then considered that although they had drunk poison and in fact had died, simply by the merciful glance of Govinda they had regained their lives and stood up by their own strength."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 251

Sakhya-rasa is again seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.13.5):

aho 'tiramyam pulinam vayasyah. . .

"My dear friends, just see how this riverbank is extremely beautiful because of its pleasing atmosphere. And just see how the blooming lotuses are attracting bees and birds by their aroma. The humming and chirping of the bees and birds is echoing throughout the beautiful trees in the forest. Also, here the sands are clean and soft. Therefore, this must be considered the best place for our sporting and pastimes."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 252

Sakhya-rasa is again seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.16):

kvacit pallava-talpesu
niyuddha-shrama-karshitah
vriksha-mulashrayah shete gopotsangopabarhanah

"Sometimes Lord Krishna grew tired from fighting and lay down at the base of a tree, resting upon a bed made of soft twigs and buds and using the lap of a cowherd friend as His pillow."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 253

Sakhya-rasa is again seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.20):

kunda-dama. . .narma-dah pranayinam vijahara

"O sinless Yashoda, your darling child, the son of Maharaja Nanda, has festively enhanced His attire with a jasmine garland, and He is now playing along the Yamuna in the company of the cows and cowherd boys, amusing His dear companions."

Anuccheda 254

Sakhya-rasa is again seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.18):

mani-dharah. . .pranayino 'nucarasya kadamse prakshipan bhujam agayata yatra

"Now Krishna is standing somewhere counting His cows on a string of gems. He wears a garland of tulasi flowers that bear the fragrance of His beloved, and He has thrown His arm over the shoulder of an affectionate cowherd boyfriend. "

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 255

When Lord Krishna enjoys pastimes as a kshatriya (at Mathura and Dvaraka), the suhrit friends are more numerous. When Lord Krishna enjoys pastimes as a gopa, the sakha friends are more numerous. For these suhrit friends Lord Krishna's pastimes as a heroic warrior and other like pastimes are prominent. For the gopa sakha freinds Lord Krishna's pastimes of joking, singing, conversing, calling the cows, playing the flute, showing artistic skill, and other like pastimes are prominent. Lord Krishna's pastimes of joking are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.13.11):

bibhrad venum jaöhara-paöayoh. . .
. . .tishöhan madhye sva-parisuhrido hasayan narmabhih svaih. . .

"Krishna is yajna-bhuk-that is, He eats only offerings of yajna-but to exhibit His childhood pastimes, He now sat with His flute tucked between His waist and His tight cloth on His right side and with His horn bugle and cow-driving stick on His left. Holding in His hand a very nice preparation of yogurt and rice, with pieces of suitable fruit between His fingers, He sat like the whorl of a lotus flower, looking forward toward all His friends, personally joking with them and creating jubilant laughter among them as He ate. At that time, the denizens of heaven were watching, struck with wonder at how the Personality of Godhead, who eats only in yajna, was now eating with His friends in the forest."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 256

Some of the other pastimes Lord Krishna enjoys with the gopa sakhas are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.9-10):

evam vrindavanam shrimat
krishnah prita-manah pashun reme sancarayann adreh
sarid-rodhahsu sanugah

"Thus expressing His satisfaction with the beautiful forest of Vrindavana and its inhabitants, Lord Krishna enjoyed tending the cows and other animals with His friends on the banks of the river Yamuna below Govardhana Hill."

kvacid gayati gayatsu
madandhalishv anuvrataih upagiyamana-caritah pathi sankarshanavitah. . .

"Sometimes the honeybees in Vrindavana became so mad with ecstasy that they closed their eyes and began to sing. Lord Krishna, moving along the forest Path with His cowherd boyfriends and Baladeva, would then respond to the bees by imitating their singing while His friends sang about His pastimes. Sometimes Lord Krishna would imitate the chattering of a parrot, sometimes, with a sweet voice, the call of a cuckoo, and sometimes the cooing of swans. Sometimes He vigorously imitated the dancing of a peacock, making His cowherd boyfriends laugh."

Anuccheda 257

These pastimes are also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.13.12-13):

megha-gambhiraya vaca namabhir dura-gan pashun
kvacid ahvayati pritya
go-gopala-manojnaya

"Sometimes, with a voice as deep as the rumbling of clouds, He would call out with great affection the names of the animals who had wandered far from the herd, thus enchanting the cows and the cowherd boys."

cakora-kraunca. . .

"Sometimes He would cry out in imitation of birds such as the cakoras, krauncas, cakahvas, bharadajas and Peacocks, and sometimes He would run away with the smaller animals in mock fear of lions and tigers."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 258

These pastimes are also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.18.19):

tatropahuya gopalan
krishnah praha vihara-vit
he gopa viharishyamo
dvandvi-bhuya yatha-yatham

"Krishna, who knows all sports and games, then called together the cowherd boys and spoke as follows:
`Hey cowherd boys! Let's play now! We'll divide ourselves into two even teams.'"

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 259

These pastimes are also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.47):

barha-prasuna-vana-dhatu-vicitritangah proddama-venu-dala-shringa-ravotsavadhyah. . .

"When Krishna returned home to Vrajabhumi, He was seen by all the inhabitants of Vrindavana. He was wearing a peacock feather in His helmet, which was also decorated with forest flowers. Krishna was also garlanded with flowers and painted with different colored minerals collected from the caves of Govardhana Hill. Govardhana Hill is always famous for supplying natural red dyes, and Krishna and His friends painted their bodies with them. Each of them had a bugle made of buffalo horn and a stick and a flute, and each called his respective calves by their particular names. They were so proud of Krishna's wonderful activities that, while entering the village, they all sang His glories. All the gopis in Vrindavana saw beautiful Krishna entering the village."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Lord Krishna's apperance when He wears the garments of a gopa, wearing colorful and wonderful garments, sash, pearls, and ornaments are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.19):

ga gopakair anu-vanam nayatoh. . .
. . .niryoga-pasha-krita-lakshanayor vicitram

"My dear friends, as Krishna and Balarama pass through the forest with Their cowherd friends, leading Their cows, They carry ropes to bind the cows' rear legs at the time of milking. When Lord Krishna plays on His flute, the sweet music causes the moving living entities to become stunned and the nonmoving trees to tremble with ecstasy. These things are certainly very wonderful."

Lord Krishna's appearance dressed as a wrestler is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.6):

barhina-stabaka-dhatu-palashair baddha-malla-paribarha-vidambah. . .

"My dear gopi, sometimes Mukunda imitates the appearance of a wrestler by decorating Himself with leaves, peacock feathers and colored minerals. Then, in the company of Balarama and the cowherd boys, He plays His flute to call the cows. At that time the rivers stop flowing, their water stunned by the ecstasy they feel as they eagerly wait for the wind to bring them the dust of His lotus feet. But like us, the rivers are not very pious, and thus they merely wait with their arms trembling out of love."

Lord Krishna's appearance dressed as a dancer is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.22):

shyamam hiranya-paridhim. . .naöa-vesham

"His complexion was dark blue and His garment golden. Wearing a peacock feather, colored minerals, sprigs of flower buds, and a garland of forest flowers and leaves, He was dressed just like a dramatic dancer."

The elder gopas' appearance dressed like kings is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.5.8):

maharha-vastrabharanakancukoshnisha-bhushitah
gopah samayuyu rajan. . .

"O King Parikshit, the cowherd men dressed very opulently with valuable ornaments and garments such as coats and turbans."*

In Dvaraka and other like places Lord Krishna wears a great variety of garments. In Gokula Lord Krishna primarily wears the standard upper and lower garments of a pious householder. Lord Krishna's Gokula garments are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.45):

nivim vasitva ruciram

"By being bathed and massaged, the two young Lords were relieved of the weariness caused by walking on the country roads. Then They were dressed in attractive robes and decorated with transcendental garlands and fragrances."

Lord Krishna's paraphernalia include His garments, ornaments, conchshell, cakra, buffalo-horn bugle, flute, stick, and dear associates. The appropriate times are the times appropriate for specific pastimes. Some of these pastimes are seen in the following verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.20.25-31):

evam vanam tad varshishöham pakva-kharjura jambumat go-gopalair vrito rantum
sa-balah pravishad dharih

"When the Vrindavana forest had thus become resplendent, filled with ripe dates and jambu fruits, Lord Krishna, surrounded by His cows and cowherd boyfriends and accompanied by Shri Balarama, entered that forest to enjoy."

dhenavo manda-gaminyah. . .

"The cows had to move slowly because of their weighty milk bags, but they quickly ran to the Supreme Personality of Godhead as soon as He called them, their affection for Him causing their udders to become wet."

vanaukasah pramuditah. . .

"The Lord saw the joyful aborigine girls of the forest, the trees dripping sweet sap, and the mountain waterfalls, whose resounding indicated that there were caves nearby."

kvacid vanaspati-krode. . .

"When it rained, the Lord would sometimes enter a cave or the hollow of a tree to play and to eat roots and fruits."

dadhy-odanam samanitam. . .

"Lord Krishna would take His meal of boiled rice and yogurt, sent from home, in the company of Lord Sankarshana and the cowherd boys who regularly ate with Him. They would all sit down to eat on a large stone near the water."

shadvalopari samvishya. . .
pravriö-shriyam ca tam vikshya. . .

"Lord Krishna watched the contented bulls, calves and cows sitting on the green grass and grazing with closed eyes, and He saw that the cows were tired from the burden of their heavy milk bags. Thus observing the beauty and opulence of Vrindavana's rainy season, a perennial source of great happiness, the Lord offered all respect to that season, which was expanded from His own internal potency."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 261

Now other features of sakhya-rasa will be considered. Amongst the anubhavas are the udbhasvaras. Amongst the suhrt friends the udbhasvaras include attempts to bring limitless good fortune to Krishna, discussion of what is proper and improper, smiling conversations, and other like activities. Amongst the sakha friends the udbhasvaras include activities of unwavering affection, activities like various playful games, singing, artistic skill, eating together, sitting down together, taking naps, and other like pastimes. Telling jokes, hearing descriptions of confidential pastimes, and other like activities are also included here. These friends are glorified in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.11):

ittham satam. . .

"In this way, all the cowherd boys used to play with Krishna, who is the source of the Brahman effulgence for jnanis desiring to merge into that effulgence, who is the Supreme Personality of Godhead for devotees who have accepted eternal servitorship, and who for ordinary persons is but another ordinary child. The cowherd boys, having accumulated the results of pious activities for many lives, were able to associate in this way with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. How can one explain their great fortune?"*

The sakha friends are also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.18.9-14):

pravala-barha-stabaka-srag-dhatu-krita-bhushanah
rama-krishnadayo gopa
nanritur yuyudhur jaguh

"Decorating themselves with newly grown leaves, along with peacock feathers, garlands, clusters of flower buds, and colored minerals, Balarama, Krishna and Their cowherd friends danced, wrestled and sang."

krishnasya nrityatah kecij jaguh kecid avadayan
venu-panitalaih shringaih prashashamsur athapare

"As Krishna danced, some of the boys accompanied Him by singing, and others by playing flutes, hand cymbals and buffalo horns, while still others praised His dancing."

gopa jati-praticchanna
deva gopala-rupinau
idire krishna-ramau ca
naöa iva naöam nripa

"O King, demigods disguised themselves as members of the cowherd community and, just as dramatic dancers praise another dancer, worshiped Krishna and Balarama, who were also appearing as cowherd boys."

bhramanair langhanaih kshepair
asphoöana-vikarshanaih
cikridatur niyuddhena
kaka-paksha-dharau kvacit

"Krishna and Balarama played with Their cowherd boyfriends by whirling about, leaping, hurling, slapping and fighting. Sometimes Krishna and Balarama would pull the hair on the boys' heads."

kvacin nrityatsu canyeshu
gayakau vadakau svayam shashamsatur maha-raja
sadhu sadhv iti vdinau

"While the other boys were dancing, O King, Krishna and Balarama would sometimes accompany them with song and instrumental music, and sometimes the two Lords would praise the boys, saying, ``Very good! Very good!""

kvacid bilvaih kvacit kumbhaih. . .

"Sometimes the cowherd boys would play with bilva or kumbha fruits, and sometimes with handfuls of amalaka fruits. At other times they would play the games of trying to touch one another or of trying to identify somebody while one is blindfolded, and sometimes they would imitate animals and birds."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 262

Lord Krishna's pastimes with His sakha friends are also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.13.8):

krishnasya vishvak puru-raji-mandalair abhyananah phulla-drisho vrajarbhakah sahopavishöa vipine virejush
c hada yathambhoruha-karnikayah

"Like the whorl of a lotus flower surrounded by its petals and leaves, Krishna sat in the center, encircled by lines of His friends, who all looked very beautiful. Every one of them was trying to look forward toward Krishna, thinking that Krishna might look toward him. In this way they all enjoyed their lunch in the forest."*

These pastimes are also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.13.9-10):

kecit pushpair dalaih kecit. . .

"Among the cowherd boys, some placed their lunch on flowers, some on leaves, fruits, or bunches of leaves, some actually in their baskets, some on the bark of trees and some on rocks. This is what the children imagined to be their plates as they ate their lunch."*

sarve mitho darshayantah
sva-sva-bhojya- rucim prithak hasanto hasayantash ca-bhyavajahruh sahashvarah

"All the cowherd boys enjoyed their lunch with Krishna, showing one another the different tastes of the different varieties of preparations they had brought from home. Tasting one another's preparations, they began to laugh and make one another laugh."*

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 263

Now other aspects of sakhya-rasa will be considered. Now the sattvika-bhavas of the suhrit and sakha friends will be considered. Shedding tears is among the sattvika-bhavas of the suhrit friends. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.71.27):

tam matuleyam parirabhya nirvrito bhimah smayan prema-jalakulendriyah yamau kiriöi ca suhrittamam muda praviddha-bashpah parirebhire 'cyutam

"Then Bhima, his eyes brimming with tears, laughed with joy as he embraced his maternal cousin Krishna. Arjuna and the twins-Nakula and Sahadeva-also joyfully embraced their dearest friend, the infallible Lord, and they cried profusely."

Of the Lord's associates described here some were elder than Krishna and some younger than Krishna. Still, all of them considered Krishna their suhrit friend. There is no rasabhasa in this. This is a proper arrangement of the rasas. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 264

Devastation is a sattvika-bhava manifest among the sakha friends. It is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.16.10):

tam naga-bhoga-parivitam adrishöa-ceshöam alokya tat-priya-sakhah pashupa bhrishartah krishne 'rpitatma-suhrid-artha-kalatra-kama dukhhanusoka-bhaya-mudha-dhiyo nipetuh

"When the members of the cowherd community, who had accepted Krishna as their dearest friend, saw Him enveloped in the snake's coils, motionless, they were greatly disturbed. They had offered Krishna everything--their very selves, their families, their wealth, wives and all pleasures. At the sight of the Lord in the clutches of the Kaliya snake, their intelligence became deranged by grief, lamentation and fear, and thus they fell to the ground."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 265

Now the sancari-bhavas will be considered. An example of the sancari-bhava harsha (joy) manifest among the suhrit friends is seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.71.27 (which was quoted in Anuccheda 263). This same sancari-bhava (joy) as manifested among the sakha friends is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.17.13-14):

krishnam hradad vinishkrantam. . .

. . .upalabhyotthitah sarve labdha-prana ivasavah pramoda-nibhritatmano
gopah prityabhirebhire

"Krishna rose up out of the lake wearing divine garlands, fragrances and garments, covered with many hne jewels, and decorated with gold. When the cowherds saw Him they all stood up immediately, just like an unconscious person's senses coming back to life. Filled with great joy, they affectionately embraced Him."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 266

In sakhya-rasa the sthayi-bhava is friendship. For Shridama Vipra and others like him the sentiment of friendship is lessened by awareness of the Lord's power and opulence. For Arjuna and others like him, however, their awareness of the Lord's friendship and opulence is itself lessened. For the gopa boys there is no awareness of the Lord's power and opulence. Therefore their friendship is pure and unalloyed. Their sentiment of friendship is never altered. Their friendship is described in the following words in relation to Lord Balarama's return to Vraja (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.65.5):

samupetyatha gopalan
hasya-hasta-grahadibhih. . .

"Lord Balarama then paid proper respects to the elder cowherd men, and the younger ones all greeted Him respectfully. He met them all with smiles, handshakes, and so on."

In this way the activities of the Lord's friends are seen. The different kinds of suhrit friends may be seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.71.27 (which was quoted here in Anuccheda 263). An example of the activities of the sakha friends is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.58.13-14):

ekada ratham aruhya
vijayo vanara-dhvajam gandivam dhanur adaya
tunau cakshaya-sayakau

sakam krishnena sannaddho
vihartum vipinam mahat
bahu-vyala-mrigakirnam
pravishat para-vira-ha

"Once Arjuna, the layer of powerful enemies, donned his armor, mounted his chariot flying the flag of Hanuman, took up his bow and his two inexhaustible quivers, and went to sport with Lord Krishna in a large forest filled with fierce animals."

If this passage had been prose the word sequence would have been "krishnena sakam vihartum". This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 267

The gopa sakhas are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.2):

tenaiva sakam prithukah sahasrashah
snigdha sushig-vetra-vishana-venavah svan svan sahasropari-sankhyayanvitan vatsan puraskritya viniryayur muda

"At that time, hundreds and thousands of cowherd boys came out of their respective homes in Vrajabhumi and joined Krishna, keeping before them their hundreds and thousands of groups of calves. The boys were very beautiful, and they were equipped with lunch bags, bugles, flutes, and sticks for controlling the calves."*

In this verse the word "eva" (indeed) emphasizes the gopas' great attachment to Lord Krishna.

Anuccheda 268

The gopis' attachment to Krishna is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.12.6):

yadi duram gatah krishno
vana-shobhekshanaya tam
aham purvam aham purvam
iti samsprishya remire

"Sometimes Krishna would go to a somewhat distant place to see the beauty of the forest. Then all the other boys would run to accompany Him, each one saying, "'I shall be the first to run and touch Krishna! I shall touch Krishna first!" In this way they enjoyed life by repeatedly touching Krishna."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 269

The gopa sakhas' friendship with Lord Krishna is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.45):

ucush ca suhridah krishnam
sv-agatam te 'ti-ramhasa
naiko 'py abhoji kavala
ehiitah sadhu bhujiyatam

"They began to laugh, thinking that Krishna was not willing to leave their lunchtime company. They were very jubilant and invited Him, "Dear friend Krishna, You have come back so quickly! All right, we have not as yet begun our lunch, not even taken one morsel of food. So please come and join us and let us eat together."*

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 270

Lord Krishna is like the gopa boys' very life. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.11.49 and 53):

krishnam maha-baka-grastam
drishöva ramadayo 'rbhakah babhuvur indriyaniva
vina pranam vicetasah

"When Balarama and the other boys saw that Krishna had been devoured by the gigantic duck, they became almost unconscious, like senses without life."*

muktam bakasyad upalabhya balaka ramadayah pranam ivendriyo ganah sthanagatam tam parirabhya nirvritah praniya vatsan vrajam etya taj jaguh

"Just as the senses are pacified when consciousness and life return, so when Krishna was freed from this danger, all the boys, including Balarama, thought that their life had been restored. They embraced Krishna in good consciousness, and then they collected their own calves and returned to Vrajabhumi, where they declared the incident loudly."*

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 271

The vibhavas and other features of sakhya-rasa have thus been described. The two kinds of friends, the suhrts and the sakhas, have also been described. The situations before meeting Krishna and while the friends have Krishna's association are like what has previously been described in the description of vatsalya-rasa. The situation when the friends are separated from Lord Krishna is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.15.1-4):

evam krisna-sakhah krisno bhratra rajna vikalpitah nana-shankaspadam rupam
krisna-vishlesa-karshita h

"Arjuna, the celebrated friend of Lord Krishna, was griefstricken because of his strong feeling of separation from Krishna, over and above all Maharaja Yudhishöhira's speculative inquiries.*

shokena shushyad-vadana-hrit-sarojo hata-prabhah vibhum tam evanusmaran
nashaknot pratibhasitum

"Due to grief, Arjuna's mouth and lotuslike heart had dried up. Therefore his body lost all luster. Now, remembering the Supreme Lord, he could hardly utter a word in reply.*

kricchrena samstabhya shucah paninamrija netrayoh parokshena samunnaddhapranayautkanthya-katarah

"With great difficulty he checked the tears of grief that smeared his eyes. He was very distressed because Lord Krishna was out of his sight, and he increasingly felt affection for Him.*

sakhyam maitrim sauhridam ca
sarathyadisu samsmaran nripam agrajam ity aha
bashpa-gadgadaya gira

"Remembering Lord Krishna and His well wishes, benefactions, intimate familial relations and His chariot driving, Arjuna, overwhelmed and breathing very heavily, began to speak.*

In these verses the word "Krisnah" means "Arjuna". The word "rajnavikalpitah" is divided into "rajna" and "avikalpitah".

The words "nana-shankaspadam rupam vikalpitah" mean "He was filled with doubts". The words "sucamrija" mean "He wiped the tears of grief from his eyes". "Parokshena" means "because Lord Krishna was no longer present before his eyes". However, because Arjuna did not fear that some calamity had befallen Lord Krishna, this is not an example of karuna-rasa (compassion). Arjuna did not fear that a calamity had befallen Lord Krishna because Arjuna was aware of Lord Krishna's supreme power and opulence, His status as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is seen in the next verse, where Arjuna laments (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.15.5):

vancito 'ham. . .

"O King! The Supreme Personality of Godhead Hari, who treated me exactly like an intimate friend, has left me alone. Thus my astounding power, which astonished even the demigods, is no longer with me."*

Anucchadas 272 and 273

Later in that chapter the devotee's attainment of blissful association with the Supreme Lord is described in these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 1.15.46-48):

te sadhu-krita-sarvartha jnatvatyantikam atmanah manasa dharayam asur
vaikuntha-caranambujam

"They all had performed all the principles of religion and as a result rightly decided that the lotus feet of the Lord Shri Krishna are the supreme goal of all. Therefore they meditated upon His feet without interruption.*

tad-dhyanodriktaya bhaktya vishuddha-dhishanah pare tasmin narayana-pade ekanta-matayo gatim

avapur duravapam te asadbhir vishayatmabhih vidhuta-kalmasham sthanam virajenatmanaiva hi

"Thus by pure consciousness due to constant devotional remembrance, they attained the spiritual sky, which is ruled over by the Supreme Narayana, Lord Krishna. This is attained only by those who meditate upon the one Supreme Lord without deviation. This abode of the Lord Shri Krishna, known as Goloka Vrindavana, cannot be attained by persons who are absorbed in the material conception of life. But the Pandavas, being completely washed of all material contamination, attained that abode in their very same bodies."*

In these verses the word "te" means "the Pandavas", sadhu" means "properly", "krita-sarvarthah" means "having attained economic development, religiosity, sense gratification, and liberation", "vaikuntha-caranambujam" means "the lotus feet of the Supreme Personality of Godhead", "atyantikam" means "the supreme goal of life", "jnatva" means "understanding". Understanding this is the supreme goal of life, they became rapt in meditation "manasa dharayam asuh). Here "narayana" means "Shri Krishna", This means they again attained Lord Krishna's association. "Vidhuta-kalmasham sthanam" means "the supremely pure spiritual abode where Lord Krishna is manifest eternally", and "atmanah" means "in their very same bodies". This was possible because their bodies were not material (virajena). The word "hi" (certainly) is used here to dispell any doubt that is is not possible.

It is then said in the same passage of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.15.50):

draupadi ca tadajnaya patinam anapekshatam
vasudeve bhagavati
hy ekanta-matir apa tam

"Draupadi also saw that her husbands, without caring for her, were leaving home. She knew well about Lord Vasudeva, Krishna, the Personality of Godhead. Both she and Subhadra became absorbed in thoughts of Krishna and attained the same results as their husbands."*

Here the words "patinam anapekshatam" means "independent of their husbands", "tat" means "the association of Lord Krishna", "ajnaya" means "properly understanding", "vasudeve" means "Lord Krishna, the son of Maharaja Vasudeva", "hi" means "certainly", and "ekanta-matir" means "thoughts absorbed in Lord Krishna". In this way they attained the association of Lord Krishna.

Anuccheda 274

The gopa boys of Vraja are separated from Krishna when Krishna goes to live in a faraway place. Later they meet Him again and feel happiness. These experiences for them are like the previously described experiences of the devotees in vatsalya-rasa. Thus concludes the description of sakhya-rasa.

Now shringara-rasa will be described. In this Krishna the alambana is Lord Krishna as the object of amorous love. The vishaya is the beloved Krishna. The lovers (adhara) are of two kinds: 1. sajatiya-bhava, and 2. tadiya-parama-vallabha. Lord Krishna as the alambana and vishaya is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.52.37):

shrutva gunan bhuvana-sundara shrinvatam te nirvishya karna-vivarair harato 'nga-tapam rupam drisham drishimatam akhilartha-labham tvayy acyutavishati cittam apatrapam me

"O beauty of the worlds, having heard of Your qualities, which enter the ears of those who hear and remove their bodily distress, and having also heard of Your beauty, which fulfills all the visual desires of those who see, I have fixed my shameless mind upon You, O Krishna."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shri Rukmini.

Anuccheda 275

Lord Krishna as the alambana and vishaya is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.2):

tasam avirabhuc chaurih smayamana-mukhambujah
pitambara-dharah sragvi
sakshan manmatha-manmathah

"Then Lord Krishna, a smile on His lotus face, appeared before the gopis. Wearing a garland and a yellow garment, He directly appeared as one who can bewilder the mind of Cupid, who himself bewilders the minds of ordinary people."

Here the word "manmatha-manmathah" means "who bewilders even Cupid". This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 276

The Supreme Lord's ordinary lovers (samanya-vallabha) include the girl Kubja and the damsels on Mount Kailasa, damsels described in the Kurma Purana. Kubja is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.48.8):

saivam kaivalya-natham tam prapya dushprapya ishvaram anga-ragarpanenaho
durbhagedam ayacata

"Having thus gotten the hard-to-get Supreme Lord by the simple act of offering Him body ointment, unfortunate Trivakra submitted to that Lord of freedom the following request."

This verse says: "Even though she was unfortunate, Kubja attained the Supreme Personality of Godhead simply by offering bodily ointment to Him. This is very surprising." Then Kubja said to Lord Krishna in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.48.9):

sahoshyatam. . .

"O beloved, please stay here with me for a few days more and enjoy. I cannot bear to give up Your association, O lotus-eyed one."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.48.8 the word "ayacata" means "she approached to beg a favor". What were the characteristics of Lord Krishna? It is said here that He is "kaivalya-natha", which means "the beloved whose love is pure". Although originally she approached Lord Krishna so that she herself would find pleasure, at the end Kubja loved Krishna with pure and selfless love. In this way she became like the goddesslike gopis of Vraja. Shri Rukmini and the other queens of Lord Krishna are praised in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.90.27):

yah samparyakaran premna pada-samvahanadibhih jagad-gurum bhartri-buddhya
tasam kim varnyate tapah

"And how could one possibly describe the great austerities that had been performed by the women who perfectly served Him, the spiritual master of the universe, in pure ecstatic love? Thinking of Him as their husband, they rendered such intimate services as massaging His feet."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 277

Lord Krishna's queens are also praised in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.61.5-6):

ittham rama-patim avapaya patim striyas ta brahmadayo 'pi na viduh padavim yadiyam bhejur mudaviratam edhitayanuragahasavaloka-nava-sangama-lalasadyam

"Thus these women obtained as their husband the master of the goddess of fortune, although even great demigods like Brahma do not know how to approach Him. With ever-increasing pleasure, they felt loving attraction for Him, exchanged smiling glances with Him, eagerly anticipated associating with Him in ever-fresh intimacy, and enjoyed in many other ways."

pratyudgamasana-vararhana-pada-shauca-tambula-vishramana-vijana-gandha-malyaih kesha-prasara-shayana-snapanopaharyaih dashi-shata api vibhor vidadhuh sma dasyam

"Although the Supreme Lord's queens each had hundreds of maidservants, they chose to personally serve the Lord by approaching Him humbly, offering Him a seat, worshiping Him with excellent paraphernalia, bathing and massaging His feet, giving Him pan to chew, fanning Him, anointing Him with fragrant sandalwood paste, adorning Him with flower garlands, dressing His hair, arranging His bed, bathing Him, and presenting Him with various gifts."

Persons who think someone other than Lord Krishna is the supreme love of their life are criticized in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.52):

ye mam bhajanti dam-patye. . .

"Although I have the power to award spiritual liberation, lusty persons worship Me with penance and vows in order to get My blessings for their mundane family life. Such persons are bewildered by My illusory energy."

Later in that chapter Lord Krishna affirms (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.60.54):

dishöya griheshvari. . .

"Fortunately, O mistress of this house, you have always rendered Me faithful devotional service, which liberates one from material existence. This service is very difficult for the envious to perform, especially for a woman whose intentions are wicked, who lives only to gratify her bodily demands, and who indulges in duplicity."

In Ketumala-varsha Goddess Lakshmi worships the Supreme Personality of Godhead manifest there in His form as Kamadeva. She prays to Him (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 5.18.19):

striyo vratais tva hrishikeshvaram svato
hy aradhya loke patim ashasate 'nyam. . .

"My dear Lord, You are certainly the fully independent master of all the senses. Therefore all women who worship You by strictly observing vows because they wish to acquire a husband to satisfy their senses are surely under illusion. They do not know that such a husband cannot actually give protection to them or their children. Nor can he protect their wealth or duration of life, for he himself is dependent on time, fruitive results and the modes of nature, which are all subordinate to You."*

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.61.5-6 was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 278

In addition to Lord Krishna's queens (svakiya), there are the goddesslike gopis of Vraja, who love Lord Krishna as their paramour (parakiya). No lovers are equal or superior to the gopis, who are glorified in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.60):

nayam shriyo 'nga u nitanta-rateh prasadah
svar-yoshitam nalina-gandha-rucam kuto 'nyah
rasotasave 'sya bhuja-danda-grihiöa-kanöhalabdhashisham ya udagad vraja-vallabhinam

"When Lord Shri Krishna was dancing with the gopis in the rasa-lila, the gopis were embraced by the arms of the Lord. This transcendental favor was never bestowed upon the goddess of fortune or other consorts in the spiritual world. Indeed, never was such a thing even imagined by the most beautiful girls in the heavenly planets, whose bodily luster and aroma resemble the lotus flower. And what to speak of worldly women who are very beautiful according to material estimation?"*

The gopis are again glorified in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.44.14):

gopyas tapah kim acarān yad amuṣhya rūpam. . .

"What austerities must the gopis have performed! With their eyes they always drink the nectar of Lord Krishna's form, which is the essence of loveliness and is not to be equaled or surpassed. That loveliness is the only abode of beauty, fame, and opulence. It is self-perfect, ever fresh and extremely rare."*

This verse says: "The gopis gazed at Lord Krishna's form, which is not to be equaled or surpassed". The gopis are again glorified in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.44.15):

ya dohane 'vahanane mathanopalepa. . .
. . .dhanya vraja-striya urukrama-citta-yanah

"The ladies of Vraja are the most fortunate of women because, with their minds fully attached to Krishna and their throats always choked up with tears, they constantly sing about Him while milking the cows, winnowing grain, churning butter, gathering cow dung for fuel, riding on swings, taking care of their crying babies, sprinkling the ground with water, cleaning their houses, and so on. By their exalted Krishna consciousness they automatically acquire all desirable things."

In this verse the word "urukrama-citta-yanah" means "they whose chariot is the all-powerful mind". This means that wherever their minds went, they, riding on the chariot of the mind, were able to go." An alternate reading gives us "cinta-yanah" instead of "citta-yanah". The meaning, however, remains the same. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.44.15 was spoken by the women of Mathura City.

Anuccheda 279

In this way the great glory of the gopis' love for Lord Krishna is seen. Their love is glorious because it is forbidden, because it is love for a paramour (parakiya). Even in ordinary affairs of the material world, this kind of forbidden love is understood to be very intense. The author Bharata explains:

bahu varyate yataḥ khalu yatra pracchanna-kamukatvam ca ya ca mitho durlabhata
sa parama manmathasya ratih

"The highest amorous pleasure is attained when love is forbidden, when the lovers must conceal their love, when the lovers rarely meet."

The author Rudra explains:

vamata durlabhatvam ca
strinam ya ca nivarana
tad eva panca-banasya
manye paramam ayudham

"Contrariness, difficulty of attainment, and rejection by women I consider Kamadeva's greatest weapons."

The author Vishnu-gupta explains:

yatra nishedha-visheshah
su-durlabhatvam ca yan mrigakshinam tatraiva nagaranam
nirbharam asajjate hridayam

"When love is forbidden and the doe-eyed beloved is difficult to attain, then the passionate lover's heart becomes very attached to his beloved."

Some gopi girls prayed to Goddess Katyayani that they might attain Lord Krishna as their husband. Their desire to attain Him was very strong. Because Krishna was unattainable for them, their love for Him was very great. The greatness of their love is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.83.43):

vraja-striyo yad vanchanti. . .

"We desire the same contact with the Supreme Lord's feet that the young women of Vraja, the cowherd boys, and even the aborigine Pulinda women desire—the touch of the dust He leaves on the plants and grass as He tends His cows."

Their love is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.58):

vanchanti yad bhava-bhiyah. . .

"Among all persons on earth, these cowherd women alone have actually perfected their embodied lives, for they have achieved the perfection of unalloyed love for Lord Govinda. Their pure love is hankered after by those who fear material existence, by great sages, and by ourselves as well. For one who has tasted the narrations of the infinite Lord, what is the use of taking birth as a high-class brahmana, or even as Lord Barhma himself?"

Still, the girls' intense desire to attain Lord Krishna was not born merely because they were forbidden to associate with Him. They certainly did not wish to be forbidden or to have so many obstacles placed before them. Rather they loved Him in spite of being so strongly forbidden. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.61):

ya dustyajam. . .

"The gopis of Vrindavana have given up the association of their husbands, sons, and other family members, who are very difficult to give up, and they have forsaken the path of chastity to take shelter of the lotus feet of Mukunda, Krishna, which one should search for by Vedic knowledge. Oh, let me be fortunate enough to be one of the bushes, creepers, or herbs in Vrindavana, because the gopis trample them and bless them with the dust of their feet."*

As a wild elephant cannot be stopped, so the gopis' passionate love for Krishna could not be stopped. Although the gopis were all forbidden in the same way to associate with Lord Krishna, still they each had a different intensity of love for Him. Of them all Radha had the greatest love. She had the greatest power to bring Lord Krishna under Her control. The supremely exalted position of Shri Radha's love is indirectly described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.28):

anayaradhito nunam. . .

"Certainly this particular gopi has perfectly worshiped the all-powerful Personality of Godhead, Govinda, since He was so pleased with Her that He abandoned the rest of us and brought Her to a secluded place."

In this way the gopis' love for Lord Krishna blossomed. It was as if they had been bitten by the black snake of love for Krishna. They did not associate with Krishna as a wife associates with her husband. Rather they passionately loved Krishna as a girl loves her paramour. This kind of love is criticized in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.7-8):

nihsvam tyajanti ganika. . .

"Prostitutes abandon a penniless man."

jara bhuktva ratam striyam

"A lover abandons the woman he has enjoyed, even though she remains attached to him."

It is said that girls who love someone other than their husbands (parakiya) are fallen and worthy of contempt. This is true for girls who take shelter of individual souls who live in the material world. The situation of such girls is abominable. However these defects and criticisms do not apply to the gopis. This truth is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.35):

gopinam tat-patinam ca. . .

"He who lives as the overseeing witness within the gopis and their husbands, and indeed within all embodied living beings, assumes forms in this world to enjoy transcendental pastimes."

From the material point of view it seemed that the gopis had husbands other than Krishna. However, from the spiritual point of view these so-called husbands did not exist. In the Krishna-sandarbha it has already been shown that the gopis' so-called husbands were in truth only a display manifested from Lord Krishna's internal potency. Therefore it is Lord Krishna Himself who is ultimately the gopis' only true husband. The gopis' exalted position, which has so equal or superior, is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.58):

etah param tanu-bhritah. . .

"Among all persons on earth, these cowherd women alone have actually perfected their embodied lives, for they have achieved the perfection of unalloyed love for Lord Govinda. Their pure love is hankered after by those who fear material existence, by great sages, and by ourselves as well. For one who has tasted the narrations of the infinite Lord, what is the use of taking birth as a high-class brahmana, or even as Lord Barhma himself?"

The gopis' glories are also described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani:

neshöa yad angini rase kavibhih parodha
tad gokulambuja-drisham kulam antarena ashamsaya rasa-vidher avataritanam kamsarina rasika-mandala-shekharena

"Philosophers do not praise adultery. However, they do praise the pastimes Lord Krishna, the crown of all rasikas, enjoys with Gokula's lotus-eyed girls, girls who descended to this world to enjoy nectar pastimes with Him."

The gopis did not have even a dim reflection of contact with their so-called husbands. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.37):

nasuyan khalu krishnaya
mohitas tasya mayaya manyamanah sva-parshva-sthan
svan svan daran vrajaukasah

"The cowherd men, bewildered by Krishna's illusory potency, thought their wives had remained home at their sides. Thus they did not harbor any jealous feelings against Him."

The gopis are eternally dear to Lord Krishna. They are His consorts eternally. This verse explains: "The cowherd men, bewildered by Krishna's illusory potency, thought their wives had remained home at their sides. Thus they did not harbor any jealous feelings against Him." This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 280

In this way it is seen that the gopis' love for Lord Krishna is most exalted. The spiritual forms of Lord Krishna and the gopis are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.43):

tabhih sametabhir udara-ceshōitah. . .

"Among the assembled gopis, the infallible Lord Krishna appeared just like the moon surrounded by stars. He whose activities are so magnanimous made their faces blossom with His affectionate glances, and His broad smiles revealed the effulgence of His jasmine-bud-like teeth."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 281

The spiritual forms of Lord Krishna and the gopis are again described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.6):

tatratishushubhe tabhir
bhagavan devaki-sutah
madhye maninam haimanam
maha-marakato yatha

"In the midst of the dancing gopis, Lord Krishna appeared most brilliant, like an exquisite sapphire in the midst of golden ornaments."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 282

The spiritual powers and glories and virtues of Lord Krishna and the gopis are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.10):

tabhir vidhuta-shokabhir
bhagavan acyuto vritah vyarocatadhikam tata
purushah shaktibhir yatha

"Encircled by the gopis, who were now relieved of all distress, Lord Acyuta, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, shone forth splendidly. My dear King, Krishna thus appeared like the Supersoul encircled by His spiritual potencies."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 283

The transcendental artistic genius of Lord Krishna and the gopi is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.7-8):

pada-nyasair bhuja-vidhutibhih. . .

"As the gopis sang in praise of Krishna, their feet danced, their hands gestured, and their eyebrows moved with playful smiles. With their braids and belts tied tight, their waists bending, their faces perspiring, the garments on their breasts moving this way and that, and their earrings swinging on their cheeks, Lord Krishna's young consorts shone like streaks of lightning in a mass of clouds."

uccair jagur nrityamana rakta-kanöhyo rati-priyah krishnabhimarsha-mudita
yad-gitenedam avrtam

"Eager to enjoy conjugal love, their throats colored with various pigments, the gopis sang loudly and danced. They were overjoyed by Krishna's touch, and they sang songs that filled the entire universe."

In this verse the word "idam" (this) refers to the universe. This verse says that the gopis' songs filled the entire universe. In the Sangita-sara it is said:

tavanta eva raga syur yavatyo jiva-jatayah
teshu shodasha-sahashri
pura gopi-krita vara

"The ragas number 16,000, as many as there are species of life. The gopis sang songs in all these ragas."

At the end of this book it is said that these ragas are seen in Svargaloka and the other higher material planets.

Anuccheda 284

The gopis' songs are also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.9):

kacit samam mukundena
svara jatir amishritah

unninye pujita tena priyata sadhu sadhv iti
tad eva dhruvam unninye
tasyai manam ca bahv adat

"One gopi, joining Lord Mukunda in His singing, sang pure melodious tones that rose harmoniously above His. Krishna was pleased and showed great appreciation for her performance, saying `Excellent! Excellent!' Then another gopi repeated the same melody, but in a special metrical pattern, and Krishna praised her also."

In this verse the word "svarah" means the scale of seven notes beginning with the sixth note", and "jatayah" means "the raga that comes from that scale". Here "amishritah" means that because Krishna and the gopis were very expert, the melodies they sang did not become mixed. The melodies remained pure, and "unninye" means "the melodies were gloriously sung". The gopis sang together with Lord Krishna, Krishna whose melodies even Brahma, Shiva, Indra and all the demigods have no power to understand. The singing of Krishna and the gopis was equal. The singing of one did not dominate the singing of the other. The words "pujita tena" mean "with their treble voices the gopis worshiped Lord Krishna". Here the word "dhruvam" means "a gopi sang a melody in the dhruva rhythm, and "tasyai manam adat" means "Lord Krishna praised her". This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchadas 285 and 286

Among the ordinary (samanya) conjugal lovers of Lord Krishna, Kubja is the most exalted. Among the queens married (svakiya) to Lord Krishna, Shri Rukmini and Shri Satyabhama are mostly exalted. They are described in the following words of Hari-vamsha:

kuöumbasyeshvari casid rukmini bhishmakatmaja satyabhamottama strinam
saubhagye cadhikabhavat

"Bhishmaka's daughter, Rukmini, is the controller of Lord Krishna's household. Satyabhama is the most fortunate of Lord Krishna's wives."

The most exalted of the goddesslike gopis of Vraja are described in these words of the Bhavishya Purana, Uttara-khanda:

gopali palika dhanya
vishakha dhyana-nishöhika radhanuradha somabha
taraka dashami tatha

"The ten most prominent gopis are Gopali, Palika, Dhanya, Vishakha, Dhyana-nishöhika, Radha, Anuradha, Somabha, and Taraka."

Here the words "taraka dashami" mean "the tenth gopi is named Taraka". In the Skanda Purana, Prahlaḍa-saṁhita the four gopis Lalita, Shaibya, Padma, and Bhadrā are included amongst the most prominent gopis. In other places in the scriptures Candravali is also included amongst the prominent gopis. The Somabha mentioned in the previous quote from the Bhaviṣhya Purana is the same as Candravali. In the Āgama-śāstras it is said:

pramada-shata-koṭibhir akulitah

"Lord Krishna is surrounded by hundreds and millions of beautiful gopis."

Amongst all the gopis, Rādhā is the most important. It is because of her great love that Lord Krishna disappeared from the rasa dance. This has already been described in the Shri Krishna-saṁdarbha (Anuccheda 189). Rādhā is celebrated in all the scriptures. In the Gopālā-tapani Upanishad she is known by the name Gandharvika.

Lord Krishna's beloveds are of three kinds: 1. mṛgdhā (meek), 2. madhyā (intermediate), and 3. prajālambā (arrogant). They are also of three ages: 1. nava-yauvāna (new youth), 2. spāṣṭhā (clearly manifested youth), and 3. (samyag-yauvāna (fully blossomed youth). According to these different ages different kinds of activities are manifested. The age of samyag-yauvāna is sixteen years. It is not older than that. This is seen in the following words of the Gautamiya Tantra:

kanyābhir dvy-āṣṭhā-varṣabhiḥ

"Lord Krishna is surrounded by sixteen-year-old gopis."

The temperaments of the Lord's beloveds are of three kinds: 1. dhīrā (peaceful), 2. ādhīrā (agitated), and 3. miśra-guṇā (a mixture of peace and agitation). Their love for Lord Krishna they are also of three kinds: 1. śreṣṭhā (best), 2. sāmā (intermediate), and 3. lāghu (least).

In their pastimes with Lord Krishna, His beloveds are in the following eight situations: 1. abhisarika (meeting Krishna in a rendezvous), 2. vāsakā-sajjā (dressing in fine garments and ornaments to prepare for a rendezvous with Krishna), 3. utkāṇḍita (yearning to meet Krishna at the rendezvous), 4. khaṇḍita (jilted by Krishna), 5. vipralambhā (separated from Krishna), 6. kalāhantārīkā (feuding with Krishna), 7. proṣhita-preyāsī (separated from Krishna because He has gone to a faraway place), and 8. svādhīnā-bhātrīkā (dominating Krishna). In their relations with each other, Lord Krishna's beloveds have four kinds of natures: 1. sādṛishyā (alike), 2. kincit-sādṛishyā (somewhat alike), 3. āspāṣṭhā-sādṛishyā (not clearly alike), and 4. vīrodhi (opposed). These four natures are manifest as the following four kinds of relationships: 1. sakhī (friend), 2. suhṛit (well-wisher), 3. tāṭasthā (neutral person), and pratīpakṣhīkā (rival). In this way the Lord's beloveds have different natures. A sakhī spoke these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.11):

apy ena-patnī. . . tanvān drisham sakhi su-nīrvṛitim

"O friend, wife of the deer, has Lord Acyuta been here with His beloved, bringing great joy to your eyes? Indeed, blowing this way is the fragrance of His garland of kunda flowers, which was smeared with the kunkuma from the breasts of His girlfriend when He embraced Her."

Here the words "tanvan drisham sakhi su-nirvritim" (O friend, has Lord Acyuta been here with His beloved, bringing great joy to your eyes?) were spoken by the gopis because they yearned to see Lord Krishna. Here the word "sakhi" (O friend) shows that the gopis imagined the deer to be like them, delighted by the sight of Lord Krishna. In this way they imagined that the deer were their friends. Here the word "kanta" means "the great good fortune of Lord Krishna's girlfriend", "kula-pateh" means "of Lord Krishna", and "kantanga-sange" means "delighted by the fragrance of the two lovers' embraces". The pleasures Radha and Krishna enjoy in Their pastimes are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.12):

bahum priyamsa. . .

"O trees, we see that you are bowing down. When the younger brother of Rama walked by here, followed by intoxicated bees swarming around the tulasi manjaris decorating His garland, did He acknowledge your obeisances with His affectionate glances? He must have been resting His arm on the shoulder of His beloved and carrying a lotus flower in His free hand."

A suhrit (well-wisher) spoke these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.28):

anayaradhito nunam
bhagavan harir isvarah
yan no vihaya govindah
prito yam amayad rahah

"Certainly this particular gopi has perfectly worshiped the all-powerful Personality of Godhead, Govinda, since He was so pleased with Her that He abandoned the rest of us and brought Her to a secluded place."

Because she praises Shri Radha's good fortune, the gopi who speak this verse is a suhrit. After hearing a sakhi speak Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.11, a The taöastha (neutral person) spoke these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.13):

pricchatema lata bahun
apy ashlishöa vanaspateh
nunam tat-karaja-sprishöa bibhraty utpulkany aho

"Let us ask these creepers about Krishna. Even though they are embracing the arms of their husband, this tree, they certainly must have been touched by Krishna's fingernails, since out of joy they are manifesting eruptions on their skin."

After hearing a suhrit speak Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.28, a taöastha spoke these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.29):

dhanya aho ami alyah. . .

"O girls! The dust of Govinda's lotus feet is so sacred that even Brahma, Shiva and the goddess Rama take that dust upon their heads to dispel sinful reactions."

Anuccheda 287

A pratipakshiki (rival) spoke these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.30):

tasya amuni nah kshobhamkurvanty uccaih padani yat yaikapahritya gopinam
raho bhunkte 'cyutadharam

"These footprints of that special gopi greatly disturb us. Of all the gopis, She alone was taken away to a secluded place, where She is enjoying the lips of Krishna."

The gopi who spoke this verse clearly displayed her envy of the gopi taken away by Lord Krishna. In the pastime of capturing the parijata-tree, a pastime described in the Hari-vamsha and other scriptures, Satyabhama envied Shri Rukmini in the same way the gopi who spoke Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.30 envied the gopi taken away by Lord Krishna. The meaning of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.30 is clear. It was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 288

Here someone may protest: "It is not possible that the devotees of the Lord can be rivals of each other. That is a horrible idea. It is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.48):

tasam tat-saubhaga-madam. . .

" `Lord Keshava, seeing the gopis too proud of their good fortune, wanted to relieve them of this pride and show them further mercy. Thus He immediately disappeared.'

"In this way it is seen that the Supreme Personality of Godhead wishes to cast far away all envy, lust, and pride. Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami here uses the word `dauratmya' (wickedness) to describe those vices."

To this protest I reply: If sometimes the Lord's devotees are rivals of each other that is only to nourish their love for the Lord and to nourish the Lord's pastimes. The Lord reveals His pastimes so the souls may attain love for Him. This is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.36):

bhajate tadrishih krida
yah shrutva tat-paro bhavet

"When the Lord assumes a humanlike body to show mercy to His devotees, He engages in such pastimes as will attract those who hear about them to become dedicated to Him."

Indeed, in shringara-rasa (the mellow of conjugal love), the rasa is nourished by a wonderful display of spiritual envy, lust, and pride. This truth is confirmed by the great philosophers. The Supreme Lord personally accepts it in His pastimes. As the hero loved by His beloveds, the Supreme Lord manifests four features: 1. dakshina (pleasing), 2. anukula (a faithful lover), 3. shaöha (a cheat), and 4. dhrishöa (bold and dominating). The Lord's pastime potency (lila-shakti) manifests these various features in the presence of the Lord's beloveds. In this way these features are seen. However, when they are separated from the Lord, the Lord's beloveds feel great distress. In that state of calamity they all feel friendship for each other. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.40):

anvicchantyo bhagavato
margam gopyo 'viduritah dadrishuh priya-vishleshan
mohitam duhkhitam sakhim

"While continuing to search out Krishna's path, the gopis discovered their unhappy friend close by. She was bewildered by separation from Her lover."

In this verse the gopis' feeling of friendship for each other is manifested. Lord Krishna manifests this pastime of being separated from Him in order that the gopis' thirst to attain Him may very quickly increase. In this way the gopis' love for Lord Krishna, the crest jewel of amorous heroes, increases. That this is the true reason Lord Krishna arranges that His devotees be separated from Him is confirmed by Lord Krishna Himself in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.20):

naham tu sakhyo bhajato 'pi jantun. . .

"But the reason I do not immediately reciprocate the affection of living beings even when they worship Me, O gopis, is that I want to intensify their loving devotion. They then become like a poor man who has gained some wealth and then lost it, and who thus becomes so anxious about it that he can think of nothing else."

These pastimes are the Supreme Lord's attempt to make the gopis free of false pride. This is seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.48, which was quoted above. In that verse the word "prasamaya" means "to make them free of false pride", and the word "prasadaya" means "to give them mercy, mercy that took the form of making them thirst after attaining Him". In this way the gopis' good fortune (tat-subhaga) is seen. The word "prasadaya" may also be interpreted to mean "to satisfy the gopis' passionate desires, Lord Krishna enjoyed the rasa dance pastime", and the word "prasadaya" may also be interpreted to mean "to delight the gopis, Lord Krishna enjoyed the rasa-dance pastime". The word "dauratmya" here means "separated from Lord Krishna, the gopis became depressed at heart". "Dauratmya" here does not mean "wickedness" because this passage describes pastimes of transcendental love. Shrila Shyukadeva Gisvami, the king of sages, then gave this description in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.41):

taya kathitam akarnya. . .

"She told them how Madhava had given Her much respect, but how She then suffered dishonor because of Her misbehavior. The gopis were extremely amazed to hear this."

Actually there was nothing wrong with that gopis' pride. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.34):

reme taya svatma-rata
atmaramo 'py akhanditah
kaminam darshayan dainyam
strinam caiva duratmatam

"Lord Krishna enjoyed with that gopi although He enjoys only within, being self-satisfied and complete in Himself. Thus by contrast He showed the wretchedness of ordinary lusty men and hardhearted women."

In this verse the word "svatma-ratah" means "self-satisfied", "atmaramah" means "who enjoys pastimes", and "apy akhanditah reme" means "attached to that particular gopi, He enjoyed pastimes with Her". Someone may ask: "Why was Lord Krishna so attached to that one gopi? Why did He enjoy pastimes with Her?" The answer is given here in this verse, Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.35. It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.7.10):

ittham-bhuta-guno harih

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead possesses transcendental qualities."

As the Supreme Personality of Godhead possesses transcendental qualities, so does the gopi (Shri Radha) mentioned in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.34. Her quality is that She is filled with love for Lord Krishna. Here it is specifically said that Her love is pure spiritual love. It is not material lust. Spiritual love is very powerful and glorious. Still, this gopi's spiritual love may superficially seem like material lust, and in this way it may manifest what seems to be material pride and material passion. Thus this gopi reveals a kind of love that seems to be like the wretchedness (dainyam) of lusty women, a wretchedness that is well known in this material world. Thus this gopi manifests stubbornness, willfulness, and a personality that tries to dominate Her beloved. With this beloved Lord Krishna enjoys pastimes (reme). Or, these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam may be interpreted in a different way. They may be interpreted to mean "With these pastimes the Lord shows how wretched and insignificant are materialistic men who try to enjoy amorous pastimes with lusty women in the material world. Manifesting the glory of His pastimes, the Lord shows how wretched and devoid of true nectar are the activities (dainyam) of lusty men (kaminam) and how wretched is the nature (duratmatam) of materialistic women (strinam) who do not worship the Supreme Lord." The great glory of the gopis' pastimes with Lord Krishna is also seen in these words of scripture:

darshayad vidhu-parajayam rama-vaktram ullasati dhuta-lanchanam

"As the goddess of fortune enjoys pastimes with the Supreme Lord, the spotless moon of her face, a moon that defeats all other moons, shines with bliss."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.34 discussed in these words was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

In this way the alambana of srngara-rasa has been described. Now the uddipanas will be described. Included among the uddipanas are Lord Krishna's qualities, such as His ability to charm women (nari-moahana-shilatva), The handsome charm of His bodily color, sweetness, fragrance, touch, sound, auspicious qualities, and new youthfulness (avayava-varna-rasa-gandha-sparsha-shabda-sal-lakshana-nava-yauvananam kamaniyata), His being always new and fresh (nitya-nutanatva), His making the gopis fall in love with Him (abhivyakta-bhavatva), His being controlled by His devotees' love (prema-vashyatva), and His genius (saubuddhya-pratibhatva). His ability to charm women is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.12):

krishnam nirikshya vanitotsava-rupa-shilam. . .

"Krishna's beauty and character create a festival for all women. Indeed, when the demigods' wives flying in airplanes with their husbands catch sight of Him and hear His resonant flute-song, their hearts are shaken by Cupid, and they become so bewildered that the flowers fall out of their hair and their belts loosen."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the goddesslike gopis of Vraja.

Anuccheda 290-294

Lord Krishna's being eternally new and fresh is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.11.34):

yadyapy asau parshva-gatah. . .

"Although Lord Shri Krishna was constantly by their sides, as well as exclusively alone, His feet appeared to them to be newer and newer. The goddess of fortune, although by nature always restless and moving, could not quit the Lord's feet. So what woman can be detached from those feet, having once taken shelter of them?"

Now Lord Krishna's quality of making the gopis fall in love with Him will be described. The purva-raga (first stages of that love) is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.31.2):

sharad-udashaye sadhu jata-satsarasijodara-shri-musha drisha surata-natha te 'shulka-dasika vara-da nighnato neha kim vadhah

"O Lord of love, in beauty Your glance excels the whorl of the finest, most perfect fly formed lotus within the autumn pond. O bestower of benedictions, You are killing the maidservants who have given themselves to

You freely, without any price. Isn't this murder?"

In this verse the words "drisha surata-natha" mean "O Lord who with Your glance beg to enjoyamorous pastimes", "vara-prada" means "O Lord who at the end of our worship of Goddess Katyayani granted the boon we prayed to attain", "drisha ashulka-dasika" mean "without giving any money to purchase us, simply by casting Your love-filled glance on us, You turned us into Your slavea", and "nighnato neha kim vadhah" mean "did You not murder us women?" In this way this verse shows that simply with His glance Lord Krishna enchanted the gopis. He enchanted them in two ways: 1. He enchanted them with His form and qualities (svarupa), and 2. He enchanted them with His activities others have no power to perform (dushkara-kriya). In this verse these two ways of enchantment are both described. Lord Krishna's enchanting the gopis is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.31.8):

madhuraya gira valgu-vakyaya budha-manojnaya pushkarekshana vidhi-karir ima vira muhyatir adhara-sidhunapyayayasva nah

"O lotus-eyed one, Your sweet voice and charming words, which attract the minds of the intelligent, are bewildering us more and more. Our dear hero, please revive Your maidservants with the nectar of Your lips."

In this verse the word "madhuraya" means "with the sweetness of Your form", "valgu-vakyaya" means "with the sweetness of Your words", and "budha-manojnaya" means "which charm the hearts of the intelligent". In this way Lord Krishna's sweetness is manifest. Lord Krishna's enchanting the gopis is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.31.10):

prahasitam priya-prema-vikshanam viharanam ca te dhyana-mangalam rahasi samvido ya hridi sprishah kuhaka no manah kshobhayanti hi

"Your smiles, Your sweet, loving glances, the intimate pastimes and confidential talks we enjoyed with You--all these are auspicious to meditate upon, and they touch our hearts. But at the same time, O deceiver, they very much agitate our minds."

In this verse the word "samvidah" means "joking words".

Lord Krishna's enchanting the gopis is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.31.12):

dina-parikshaye nila-kuntalair vanaruhananam bibhrad avritam ghana-rajavalam darshayan muhur manasi nah smaram vira yacchasi

"At the end of the day You repeatedly show us Your lotus face, covered with dark blue locks of hair and thickly powdered with dust. Thus, O hero, You arouse lusty desires in our minds."

In this verse the word "muhuh" means "again and again". Lord Krishna's enchanting the gopis is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.31.16-17):

pati-sutanvaya-bhratri-bandhavan ativilanghya te 'nty acyutagatah gati-vidas tavodgita-mohitah kitava yoshitah kas tyajen nishi

"Dear Acyuta, You know very well why we have come here. Who but a cheater like You would abandon young women who come to see Him in the middle of the night, enchanted by the loud song of His flute? Just to see You, we have completely rejected our husbands, children, ancestors, brothers and other relatives."

rahasi samvidam hric-chayodayam prahasitananam prema-vikshanam brhad-urah shriyo vikshya dhama te muhur ati-spriha muhyate manah

"Our minds are repeatedly bewildered as we think of the intimate conversations we had with You in secret, feel the rise of lust in our hearts and remember Your smiling face, Your loving glances and Your broad chest, the resting place of the goddess of fortune. Thus we experience the most severe hankering for You."

In these verses the words "gati-vidas tavodgita-mohitah" mean "You played on Your flute, a flute that well knows how to bring us under its spell". These verses were spoken by the gopis to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who at that moment was not visible before them.

Anuccheda 295

Lord Krishna's enchanting the gopis in the stage of purva-raga (beginning of love) is described in these words of Skanda Purana, Reva-khanda, Tulasi-stava:

gavam hitaya tulasi
gopinam rati-hetave vrindavane tvam vapita sevita vishnuna svayam

"To bring auspiciousness to the cows, as well as to make the gopis fall in love with Him, Lord Vishnu personally plants You in Vrindavana and serves you, O Goddess Tulasi."

Lord Krishna's enchanting the gopis while directly enjoying pastimes them is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.42):

iti viklavitam tasam. . .

"Smiling upon hearing these despondent words from the gopis, Lord Krishna, the supreme master of all masters of mystic yoga, mercifully enjoyed with them, although He is self-satisfied."

In this verse the word "prahasya" (smiling) describes how Lord Krishna enchanted the gopis.

Lord Krishna enchanting the gopis as He enjoyed pastimes with them is again described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.43, 44, and 46):

tabhih sametabhir udara-ceshōitah. . .
. . .udara-hasa-dvija-kunda-didhatih

"Among the assembled gopis, the infallible Lord Krishna appeared just like the moon surrounded by stars. He whose activities are so magnanimous made their faces blossom with His affectionate glances, and His broad smiles revealed the effulgence of His jasmine-bud-like teeth."

upagiyamanah. . .udgayan

"As the gopis sang His praises, that leader of hundreds of women sang loudly in reply. He moved among them, wearing His Varjayanti garland, beautifying the Vrindavana forest."

bahu-prasara. . .

"Krishna threw His arms around the gopis and embraced them. He aroused Cupid in the beautiful young ladies of Vraja by touching their hands, hair, thighs, belts, and breasts, by playfully scratching them with His fingernails, and also by joking with them, glancing at them, and laughing with them. In this way the Lord enjoyed His pastimes."

In this way is described Lord Krishna's quality of making the gopis fall in love with Him.

Now will be considered Lord Krishna's quality of controlled by His devotees' love (prema-vashyatva). This quality is of two kinds: 1. being controlled by the love of devotees other than His beloveds (premantarena), and 2. being controlled by the love of His beloveds (preyasi-premna). The first of these (being controlled by the love of devotees other than His beloveds) is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.20):

narma-dah pranayinam vijahara

"O sinless Yashoda, your darling child, the son of Maharaja Nanda, has festively enhanced His attire with a jasmine garland, and He is now playing along the Yamuna in the company of the cows and cowherd boys, amusing His dear companions. The gentle breeze honors Him with its soothing fragrance of sandalwood, while the various Upadevas, standing on all sides like panegyrists, offer their music, singing and gifts of tribute."

Now the second of these (being controlled by the love of His beloveds) will be considered. This quality when manifested in the stage of purva-raga is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.53.2):

tathaham api tac-citto
nidram ca na labhe nishi

"Just as Rukmini's mind is fixed on Me, My mind is fixed on her. I can't even sleep at night."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead to Rukmini's messenger.

Anucchedas 296 and 297

Lord Krishna's being controlled by the love of His beloveds in the stage of purva-raga is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.1):

bhagavan api ta ratrih
sharadotphulla-mallikah vikshya rantum manash cakre
yoga-mayam upashritah

"Shri Krishna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, full in all opulences, yet upon seeing those autumn nights scented with blossoming jasmine flowers, He turned His mind toward loving affairs. To fulfill His purposes He employed His internal potency."

In this verse the word "yoga-mayam upashritah" means "taking shelter of yoga-maya, which fulfills the numberless desires of numberless gopis."

Lord Krishna's being controlled by the love of His beloveds as He directly enjoys pastimes with them is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.42):

iti viklavitam tasam
shrutva yogeshvareshvarah prahasya sa-dayam gopir
atmaramo py ariramat

"Smiling upon hearing these despondent words from the gopis, Lord Krishna, the supreme master of all masters of mystic yoga, mercifully enjoyed with them, although He is self-satisfied."

In this verse the word "viklavitam" means "the gopis' appeals of love", "sadayam" means "merciful because He was controlled by their love", "atmaramo 'pi" means "even though He was self-satisfied, He could see the great virtue of their love for Him". The word "atmarama" (self-satisfied) is also seen in these words of Shrimad-

Bhagavatam (1.7.10):

atmaramash ca munayah. . .
. . .ittham-bhuta-guno harih

"All different varieties of atmaramas [those who take pleasure in atma, or spirit self], especially those established on the path of seff-realization, though freed from all kinds of material bondage, desire to render unalloyed devotional service unto the Personality of Godhead. This means that the Lord possesses transcendental qualities and therefore can attract everyone, including liberated souls."*

The two verses Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.1 and 10.29.42 were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 298 and 299

Lord Krishna's being controlled by the love of His beloveds as He directly enjoys pastimes with them is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.23):

reme svayam sva-ratir atra gajendra-lilah

"My dear King, in the water Krishna found Himself being splashed on all sides by the laughing gopis, who looked at Him with love. As the demigods worshiped Him by showering flowers from their airplanes, the self-satisfied Lord took pleasure in playing like the king of the elephants."

In this verse the word "sva-ratih" means "Lord Krishna who loved (rati) the gopis (sva)". Lord Krishna's being controlled by the love of His beloveds as He directly enjoys pastimes with them is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.20):

tasam rati-viharena

"Seeing that the gopis were fatigued from conjugal enjoyment, my dear King, merciful Krishna lovingly wiped their faces with His comforting hand."

This pastime is also seen in these words of Vishnu Purana (5.13.54):

gopi-kapola-samshlesha. . .

"Lord Krishna wiped the gopis' cheeks."

Lord Krishna's pastimes with the gopis are also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.16):

evam parishvanga-karabhimarsha-snigdhekshanoddama-vilasa-hasaih reme ramesho vraja-sundaribhir

"In this way Lord Krishna, the original Lord Narayana, master of the goddess of fortune, took pleasure in the company of the young women of Vraja by embracing them, caressing them and glancing lovingly at them as He smiled His broad, playful smiles. It was just as if a child were playing with his own reflection."

Here the word "ramesha" means "the controller of Goddess Lakshmi". This verse says: "by embracing them, caressing them and glancing lovingly at them, Lord Krishna enjoyed pastimes with the gopis". In this way Lord Krishna was controlled by the gopis' love. Here is given the example of a child playing with his reflection. As a child plays with his reflection, so Lord Krishna enjoyed pastimes beginning with singing and dancing with the gopis. In this activities it is seen that Lord Krishna and the gopis were deeply attached to each other.

Anuccheda 300

Then it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.25):

evam shashankamshu-virajita nishah
sa satya-kamo 'nuratabala-ganah
sisheva atmany avaruddha-sauratah sarvah sharat-kavya-katha-rasashrayah

"Although the gopis were firmly attached to Lord Krishna, whose desires are always fulfilled, the Lord was not internally affected by any mundane sex desire. Still, to perform His pastimes the Lord took advantage of all those moonlit autumn nights, which inspire poetic descriptions of transcendental affairs."

In this verse the word "evam" means "as was previously described", "anuratabala-ganah" means "the gopis who loved Krishna eternally", "sah" means "Shri Krishnacandra", "atmany avaruddha-sauratah" means "whose thoughts were filled with flirting and various amorous pastimes", "satya-kamah" means "whose love is never wrong", "sharat-kavya-katha-rasashrayah" means "nectar poems in relation to autumn", "sarvah" means "them all", and "sisheva" means "He utilized". The word "sharat" here may also mean "for an entire year". The word "shashankamshu-virajita" (moonlit nights) further describes this pastime. The Lord's amorous pastimes are also seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.58):

evam saurata-samlapaih. . .

"And so the self-satisfied Supreme Lord of the universe enjoyed with the goddess of fortune, engaging her in lovers' talks and thus imitating the ways of human society."

This verse describes Lord Krishna's pastimes of joking with Rukmini. The word "saurata" here has the same meaning it had in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.33.25. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.33.25 was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

In the matter of His relationship with the gopis Lord Krishna Himself declares in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.22):

na paraye 'ham. . .

"I am not able to repay My debt for your spotless service, even within a lifetime of Brahma. Your connection with Me is beyond reproach. You have worshiped Me, cutting off all domestic ties, which are difficult to break. Therefore please let your own glorious deeds be your compensation."*

Lord Krishna's separation from the gopis when He went to live in a faraway place is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.1-4):

vrishninam pravaro mantri
krishnasya dayitah sakha shishyo brihaspateh sakshad
uddhavo buddhi-sattamah

"The supremely intelligent Uddhava was the best counselor of the Vrishni dynasty, a beloved friend of Lord Shri Krishna, and a direct disciple of Brihaspati."

tam aha bhagavan preshöham bhaktam ekantinam kvacit grihitva panina panim
prapannarti-haro harih

"The Supreme Lord Hari, who relieves the distress of all who surrender to Him, once took the hand of His fully devoted, dearest friend Uddhava and addressed him as follows."

gacchoddhava vrajam saumya
pitror nau pritim avaha gopinam mad-viyogadhim
mat-sandeshair vimocaya

"Dear gentle Uddhava, go to Vraja and give pleasure to Our parents. And also relieve the gopis, suffering in separation from Me, by giving them My message."

ta man-manaska mat-prana

mad-arthe tyakta-daihikah

"The minds of those gopis are always absorbed in Me, and their very lives are ever devoted to Me. For My sake they have abandoned everything related to their bodies."

This pastime is also described in the Skanda Purana, Prahlada-samhita, Dvaraka-mahatmya, where Shriman Uddhava tells the gopis:

bhagavan api dasharhah
kandarpa-shara-piditah
na bhunkte na shvapiti ca
cintayan vo hy ahar-nisham

"Wounded by Kamadeva's arrow, Lord Krishna thinks of you gopis day and night. He neither eats nor sleeps."

Most of the princesses married by Lord Krishna had previously been gopis in Vraja. As time passed in separation from Krishna, they became those princesses to save themselves from committing suicide in despair. This is described in the following words of Padma Purana:

kaishora gopa-kanyas ta
yauvane raja-kanyakah

"The girls who in the beginning of their youth had been gopis at the later stage of their youth became princesses."

That the Lord's beloveds are inclined to commit suicide rather than live without Lord Krishna is seen in these words spoken by Queen Rukmini in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.52.43):

yarhy ambujaksha na labheya bhavat-prasadam jahyam asun vrata-krishan shata-janmabhih syat

"O lotus-eyed one, if I cannot obtain Your mercy, I shall simply give up my vital force, which will have become weak from severe penances I will perform. Then, after hundreds of lifetimes of endeavor, I may obtain Your mercy."*

Anuccheda 302

Amongst the uddipanas is Lord Krishna's caste status. Lord Krishna's caste as a gopa is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.14):

vividha-gopa-caraneshu vidagdho venu-vadya urudha. . .

"O pious mother Yashoda, your son, who is expert in all the arts of herding cows, has invented many new styles of flute-playing. When He takes His flute to His bimba-red lips and sends forth the tones of the harmonic scale in variegated melodies, Brahma, Siva, Indra and other chief demigods become confused upon hearing the sound. Although they are the most learned authorities, they cannot ascertain the essence of that music, and thus they bow down their heads and hearts."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the goddesslike gopis of Vraja.

Anuccheda 303

Lord Krishna's caste as one of the Yadavas, a kshatriya, is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.90.20):

megha shrimams tvam asi dayito yadavendrasya nunam. . .

"O revered cloud, you are indeed dear to the chief of the Yadus, who bears the mark of Shrivatsa. Like us, you are bound to Him by love and are meditating upon Him. Your heart is distraught with great eagerness, as our hearts are, and as you remember Him again and again you shed a torrent of tears. Association with Krishna brings such misery!"

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the Lord's queens.

Anuccheda 304

Now Lord Krishna's activities (kriya) will be considered. The Lord's activities are of two kinds: 1. bhava-sambandhini (activities of love), and 2. svabhavika-vinodamaya (pastimes that come from His own nature). The first of these two kinds of activities (activities of love) is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.4):

nishamya gitam tad ananga-vardhanam. . .

"When the young women of Vrindavana heard Krishna's flute song, which arouses romantic feelings, their minds were captivated by the Lord. They went to where their lover waited, each unknown to the others, moving so quickly that their earrings swung back and forth."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 305

The second of these two kinds of activities (pastiems that come from His own nature) is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.2):

vama-bahu-krita-vama-kapolo
valgita-bhrur adhararpita-venum. . .

"When Mukunda vibrates the flute He has placed to His lips, stopping its holes with His tender fingers, He rests His left cheek on His left arm and makes His eyebrows dance. At that time the demigoddesses traveling in the sky with their husbands, the Siddhas, become amazed. As those ladies listen, they are embarrassed to find their minds yielding to the pursuit of lusty desires, and in their distress they are unaware that the belts of their garments are loosening."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the goddesslike gopis of Vraja.

Anuccheda 306

These activities are also seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.14):

vividha-gopa-caraneshu. . .

"O pious mother Yashoda, your son, who is expert in all the arts of herding cows, has invented many new styles of flute-playing. When He takes His flute to His bimba-red lips and sends forth the tones of the harmonic scale in variegated melodies, Brahma, Siva, Indra and other chief demigods become confused upon hearing the sound. Although they are the most learned authorities, they cannot ascertain the essence of that music, and thus they bow down their heads and hearts."

Now the Lord's paraphernalia (dravya) will be considered. Amongst them are the Lord's beloveds, who are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.22.6):

ushasy utthaya gotraih svair anyonyabaddha-bahavah krishnam uccair jagur yantyah
kalindyam snatum anvaham

"Each day they rose at dawn. Calling out to one another by name, they all held hands and loudly sang the glories of Krishna while going to the Kalindi to take their bath."

In this verse the word "gotraih" means "in various groups". This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 307

The Lord's beloveds are also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.3):

tad vraja-striya ashrutya. . . sva-sakhibhyo 'nvavarnayan

"When the young ladies in the cowherd village of Vraja heard the song of Krishna's flute, which arouses the influence of Cupid, some of them privately began describing Krishna's qualities to their intimate friends."

The Lord's personal associates (parikara) are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.1):

tam vikshya krishnanucaram vraja-striyah. . .

"The young women of Vraja became astonished upon seeing Lord Krishna's servant, who had long arms, whose eyes resembled a newly grown lotus, who wore a yellow garment and a lotus garland, and whose lotuslike face glowed with brightly polished earrings. 'Who is this handsome man?', the gopis asked. 'Where has he come from, and whom does he serve? He's wearing Krishna's clothes and ornaments!' Saying this, the gopis eagerly crowded around Uddhava, whose shelter was the lotus feet of Lord Uttamahshloka, Shri Krishna."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 308 and 309

Lord Krishna's ornaments (mandana) are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.17):

purnah pulindya urugaya-padabja-raga-shri-kunkumena dayita. . .

"The aborigine women of the Vrindavana area become disturbed by lust when they see the grass marked with reddish kunkuma powder. Endowed with the color of Krishna's lotus feet, this powder originally decorated the breasts of His beloveds, and when the aborigine women smear it on their faces and breasts, they give up all their anxiety."

Lord Krishna's flute is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.9):

gopyah kim acarad ayam kushalam sma venuh. . .

"My dear gopis, what auspicious activities must the flute have performed to enjoy the nectar of Krishna's lips independently and leave only a taste for us gopis, for whom that nectar is actually meant! The forefathers of the flute, the bamboo trees, shed tears of pleasure. His mother, the river on whose bank the bamboo was born, feels jubilation, and therefore her blooming lotus flowers are standing like hair on her body."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anucchadas 310-312

The auspicious marks on Lord Krishna's feet are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.25):

padani vyaktam etani
nanda-sunor mahatmanah

"The marks of a flag, lotus, thunderbolt, elephant goad, barleycorn and so forth on these footprints clearly distinguish them as belonging to that great soul, the son of Nanda Maharaja."

The dust from Lord Krishna's feet is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.29):

dhanya aho ami alyo
govindanghry-abja-renavah yan brahmeshau rama devi
dadhur murdhny agha-nuttaye

"O girls! The dust of Govinda's lotus feet is so sacred that even Brahma, Shiva and the goddess Rama take that dust upon their heads to dispel sinful reactions."

This kind of ecstatic love (prema) for Lord Krishna is the most exalted (utkarsha) love. Love mixed with awareness of Lord Krishna's power and opulence (aishvarya-jnana) is not the most exalted. This most exalted love enables one to directly see the most exalted object (vishaya) of love. Maharaja Bharata, who had fallen in love with a deer, praised the earth's good fortune for having been touched by the deer's hoofs. He said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (3.8.23):

kim va are acaritam tapas tapasvinyanaya yad iyam avanih. . .

"O unfortunate Bharata, your austerities and penances are very insignificant compared to the penance and austerity undergone by this earth planet. Due to the earth's severe penances, the footprints of this deer, which are small, beautiful, most auspicious, and soft are impressed on the surface of this most fortunate planet."*

In a similar way the earth is also praised in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.10):

kim te kritam kshiti tapo bata keshavanghri-sparshotsavotpulakitanga-ruhair vibhasi

apy anghri-sambhava urukrama-vikramad va aho varaha-vapushah parirambhanena

"O mother earth, what austerity did you perform to attain the touch of Lord Keshava's lotus feet, which has brought you such great joy that your bodily hairs are standing on end? You appear very beautiful in this condition. Was it during the Lord's current appearance that you acquired this ecstatic symptom, or was it perhaps much earlier, when He stepped upon you in His form of the dwarf Vamanadeva, or even earlier, when He embraced you in His form of the boar Varahadeva?"

In the first half of this verse the glory of Lord Krishna's sweetness is described. In the second half of this verse the lesser nature of the sweetness present in the Lord's other forms is described. In this verse the word "api" means "whether?" This verse asks: "Did you attain this ecstatic joy from the touch of the Lord's feet when the Lord stepped upon you in His form of the dwarf Varahadeva?" Here the word "aho" is used to introduce a different idea, the idea expressed in these words: "Did you attain this ecstatic joy from the touch of the Lord's feet when He embraced you in His form of the boar Vamanadeva?" The implied answer to these two rhetorical questions is: "Certainly not. Certainly not." An obscure definition of the word "api" is "butter". Interpreted in this way, the passage becomes: "filled with bliss by the touch of the Lord's feet, the earth became soft like butter". This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 313

The marks left by the Lord's nails is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.13):

pricchatema lata bahun. . .

"Let us ask these creepers about Krishna. Even though they are embracing the arms of their husband, this tree, they certainly must have been touched by Krishna's fingernails, since out of joy they are manifesting eruptions on their skin."

Also included here are Vrindavana forest, the Yamuna, and other places of Lord Krishna's pastimes. Now the different times of Lord Krishna's rasa-dance festival and other pastimes will be considered. The tiem of the rasa-dance pastime is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.43):

tah kim nishah smarati yasu. . .

"Does He recall those nights in the Vrindavana forest, lovely with lotus, jasmine, and the bright moon? As we glorified His charming pastimes, He enjoyed with us, His beloved girlfriends, in the circle of the rasa dance, which resounded with the music of ankle bells."

The meaning of this verse is clear this verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 314

Thus the Lord's transcendental qualities and other features are included among the uddipanas. Because the Lord's beloveds are diligently engaged in His service, the qualities of the Lord's beloveds are also included among the uddipanas. Thus the Lord's qualities and His beloveds' qualities are both included among the uddipanas. Now the anubhavas will be considered. Examples of the anubhavas for Kubja and other like beloveds of the Lord are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.48.5):

sa majjanalepa-dukula-bhushana-srag-gandha-tambula-sudhasavadibhih prasadhitatmopasasara madhavam

"Trivakra (Kubja) prepared herself by bathing, anointing her body, and dressing in fine garments, by putting on jewelry, garlands, and perfume, and also by chewing betelnut, drinking fragrant liquor, and so on. She then approached Lord Madhava with shy, playful smiles and coquettish glances."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 315

Examples of the anubhavas for Lord Krishna's queens are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.59.44-45):

ittham rama-patim avapya. . .

"Thus those women obtained as their husband the husband of the goddess of fortune, although even great demigods like Brahma do not know how to approach Him. With ever-increasing pleasure they experienced loving attraction for Him, exchanged smiling glances with Him and reciprocated with Him in ever-fresh intimacy, replete with joking and feminine shyness."

"Although the Supreme Lord's queens each had hundreds of maidservants, they chose to personally serve the Lord by approaching Him humbly, offering Him a seat, worshipping Him with excellent paraphernalia, bathing and massaging His feet, giving Him pan to chew, fanning Him, anointing Him with fragrant sandalwood paste, adorning Him with flower garlands, dressing His hair, arranging His bed, bathing Him, and presenting Him with various gifts."

Examples of anubhavas for the goddesslike gopis of Vraja are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.61):

asam aho. . . ya dustyajam

"The gopis of Vrindavana have given up the association of their husbands, sons, and other family members, who are very difficult to give up, and they have forsaken the path of chastity to take shelter of the lotus feet of Mukunda, Krishna, which one should search for by Vedic knowledge. Oh, let me be fortunate enough to be one of the bushes, creepers, or herbs in Vrindavana, because the gopis trample them and bless them with the dust of their feet."

Examples of anubhavas for the gopis are also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.15.42-43):

tam gorajas-churita-kuntala-baddha-barha-vanya-prasuna-rucirekshana-caru-hasam venum kvanantam anugair upagita-kirtim gopyo didrikshita-drisho 'bhyagaman sametah

"Lord Krishna's hair, powdered with the dust raised by the cows, was decorated with a peacock feather and forest flowers. The Lord glanced charmingly and smiled beautifully, playing upon His flute while His companions chanted His glories. The gopis, all together, came forward to meet Him, their eyes very eager to see Him."

pitva mukunda-mukha-saragham akshi-bhringais tapam jahur viraha jam vraja-yoshito 'hni tat sat-kritim samadhigamya vivesha goshtam savrida-hasa-vinayam yad apanga-moksam

"With their beelike eyes, the women of Vrindavana drank the honey of the beautiful face of Lord Mukunda, and thus they gave up the distress they had felt during the day because of separation from Him. The young Vrindavana ladies cast sidelong glances at the Lord-glances filled with bashfulness, laughter and submission- and Shri Krishna, completely accepting these glances as a proper offering of respect, entered the cowherd village."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchadas 316 and 317

The anubhavas of the Lord's beloveds are of four kinds: 1. udbhasvara (bodily luster), 2. sattvika (nature), 3. alankara (ornaments), and 4. vacika (speech). The udbhasvara-anubhavas are described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 63:

nivy-uttariya-dhammillasramsanam gatra-moöanam jrimbha ghranasya phullatvam nishvasadyash ca te matah

"Included amongst the udbhasvaras are: 1. loosening of the tight belt, 2. loosening of the bodice, 3. loosening of the braids, 4. crushing of the limbs, 5. yawning, 6. expansion of the nostrils, and 7. sighing."

The udbhasvara-anubhavas are also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.17):

tad-anga-sanga-pramudakulendriyah
keshan dukulam kuca-paöökam va nanjah prativyodhum alam vraja-striyo visrasta-malabharanah kurudvaha

"Their senses overwhelmed by the joy of having His physical association, the gopis could not prevent their hair, their dresses and the cloths covering their breasts from becoming disheveled. Their garlands and ornaments scattered, O hero of the Kuru dynasty."

The sattvika-anubhavas are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.11):

tatraikamsa-gatam bahum
krishnasyotpala-saurabham candalapliptam aghraya
hrishöa-roma cucumba ha

"Upon the shoulder of one gopi Krishna placed His arm, whose natural blue-lotus fragrance was mixed with that of the sandalwood pulp anointing it. As the gopi relished that fragrance, her bodily hair stood on end in jubilation, and she kissed His arm."

The meaning of these verses is clear. The two Shrimad-Bhagavatam verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 318

The alankara-anubhavas are 20 in number. Of these the three manifested on the bodily limbs (angaja) are: 1. bhava, 2. hava, and 3. hela. The seven manifested without any effort (ayatnaja) include: 1. shobha, 2. madhurya, 3. pragalbhya, 4. audarya, 5. dhairya (the remaining two are kanti and dipti). The ten manifested from the lover's own nature are: 1. lila, 2. vilasa, 3. vicchitti, 4. kilakincita, 5. vibhrama, 6. vibboka, 7. lalita, 8. kuööamita, 9. moööayita, and 10. vikrita. Bhava is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 6:

nirvikaratmake citte
bhavah prathama-vikriya

"The first stage of anubhava is called bhava. In that stage the external ecstatic symptoms are absent."

Bhava is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.34):

cittam sukkena bhavatapahritam griheshu. . .

"Until today our minds were absorbed in household affairs, but You easily stole both our minds and our hands away from our housework. Now our feet won't move one step from Your lotus feet. How can we go back to Vraja? What would we do there?"

The meaning of this vverse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 319

Hava is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 9:

griva-recaka-samyukto
bhru-netradi-vikasa-krit bhavad ishat-prakasho yah
sa hava iti kathyate

"When there is a slight manifestation of ecstatic symptoms, when the neck becomes titled, and the eyebrows, eyes, and other bodily features blossom with happiness, that stage is called hava."

Hava is seen in the following words spoken by Queen Lakshmana describing her svayamvara (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.83.29):

unniya vaktram uru-kuntala-kundala-tvidganda-sthala shishira-hasa-kaōaksha-mokshaih rajno nirikshya paritah shanakair murarer amse 'nurakta-hridaya nidadhe sva-malam

"I lifted my face, which was encircled by abundant locks and effulgent from the glow of my earrings reflected from my cheeks. Smiling coolly, I glanced about. Then, looking around at all the kings, I slowly placed the necklace on the shoulder of Murari, who had captured my heart."

Had this passage been in prose, the order of the words would have been: "vaktram unniya rajnah parito nirikshya shishira-hasa-kaōaksha-mokshair murarer amse malam shanakair nidadhe." Here the word "shanakaih" (slowly) shows that her neck was, for a moment, titled out of shyness. This is an example of tilting the neck (griva-recaka) a manifestation of hava. This verse was spoken by Queen Lakshmana.

Anuccheda 320 and 321

Hela is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 11:

hava eva bhaved dhela
vyaktah shringara-sucakah

"After hava is the stage hela, which is the harbinger of amorous pastimes."

Shobha is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 13:

sa shobha rupa-bhogadyair
yat syad anga-vibhushanam

"In the state called shobha the body is decorated with various symptoms of conjugal enjoyment."

Shobha is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.20):

tasam rati-viharena. . .

"Seeing that the gopis were fatigued from conjugal enjoyment, my dear King, merciful Krishna lovingly wiped their faces with His comforting hand."

Shobha is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.21-22):

gopyah sphurat-puraöa-kundala. . .

"The gopis honored their hero with smiling glances sweetened by the beauty of their cheeks and the effulgence of their curly locks and glittering golden earrings. Overjoyed from the touch of His fingernails, they chanted the glories of His all-auspicious transcendental pastimes."

"Lord Krishna's garland had been crushed during His conjugal dalliance with the gopis and colored vermillion by the kunkuma powder on their breasts. To dispel the fatigue of the gopis, Krishna entered the water of the Yamuna, followed swiftly by bees who were singing like the best of the Gandharvas. He appeared like a lordly elephant entering the water to relax in the company of his consorts. Indeed, the Lord had transgressed all worldly and Vedic morality just as a powerful elephant might break the dikes in a paddy field."

Madhurya is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 17:

madhuryam nama ceshöanam
sarvavasthasu caruta

"When all activities are naturally charming and graceful, that is called madhurya."

Madhurya is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.10):

kacid rasa-parishranta
parshva-sthasya gada-bhrtah

jagraha bahunā skandham
shlathad-valaya-mallika

"When one gopi grew tired from the rasa dance, She turned to Krishna, standing at Her side holding a baton, and grasped His shoulder with Her arm. The dancing had loosened Her bracelets and the flowers in Her hair."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 322

Pragalbhya is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 19:

nishankatvam prayogeshu
budhair ukta pragalbhata

"Complete lack of shyness in the course of amorous pastimes is called pragalbhya by the wise."

Pragalbhya is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.11):

tatraikamsa-gatam bahum. . .

"Upon the shoulder of one gopi Krishna placed His arm, whose natural blue-lotus fragrance was mixed with that of the sandalwood pulp anointing it. As the gopi relished that fragrance, her bodily hair stood on end in jubilation, and she kissed His arm."

Audarya is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 20:

audaryam vinayam prahuh
sarvavastha-gatam budhah

"When one is always humble in all situations, this quality is called audarya by the wise."

Audarya is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.40):

ha natha ramana preshöha. . .

"O master! My lover! O dearest, where are You? Where are You? Please, O mighty-armed one, O friend, show Yourself to Me, Your poor servant!"

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shri Radha Herself.

Anuccheda 323

Audarya is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.21):

api bata madhu-puryam. . .

"O Uddhava! It is indeed regrettable that Krishna resides in Mathura. Does He remember His father's household affairs and His friends, the cowherd boys? O great soul! Does He ever talk about us, His maidservants? When will He lay on our heads His aguru-scented hand? "

Dhairya is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 23:

sthira cittonnatir ya tu
tad dhairyam iti kirtyate

"When the mind is very steady, that state is called dhairya."

Dhairya is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.17):

mrigayur iva kapindram. . .dustyajas tat-katharthah

"Like a hunter He cruelly shot the king of the monkeys with arrows. Because He was conquered by a woman, He disfigured another woman who came to Him with lusty desires. And even after consuming the gifts of Bali Maharaja, He bound him up with ropes as if he were a crow. So let us give up all friendship with this dark-complexioned boy, even if we can't give up talking about Him."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shri Radha Herself.

Anuccheda 324 and 325

Kanti and Dipti are described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Texts 14 and 15:

shobhaiva kantir akhyata
manmathapyayanojjvala

"When beauty increases amorous desire, this stage is called kanti."

kantir eva vayo-bhoga-desha-kala-gunadibhih uddipitati-vistaram
prapta ced diptir ucyate

"If beauty is greatly increased by youthfulness, amorous enjoyment, place, time, various qualities, or other things, that condition of increased beauty is called di[6]pti."

Lila is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 24:

priyanukaranam lila ramyair vesha-kriyadibhih

"Lila is the imitation of the charming appearance, activities, or other things of the beloved."

Lila is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.1-2):

antarhite bhagavati. . .

"When Lord Krishna disappeared so suddenly, the gopis felt great sorrow at losing sight of Him, like a group of female elephants who have lost their mate."

gatyauraga-smita. . .

"As the cowherd women remembered Lord Krishna, their hearts were overwhelmed by His movements and loving smiles, His playful glances and enchanting talks, and by the many other pastimes He would enjoy with them. Thus absorbed in thoughts of Krishna, the Lord of Rama, the gopis began acting out His various transcendental pastimes."

The pastimes the gopis had enjoyed with Krishna are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.46):

bahu-prasara. . .

"Krishna threw His arms around the gopis and embraced them. He aroused Cupid in the beautiful young ladies of Vraja by touching their hands, hair, thighs, belts, and breasts, by playfully scratching them with His fingernails, and also by joking with them, glancing at them, and laughing with them. In this way the Lord enjoyed His pastimes."

As the gopis imitated Lord Krishna's pastimes in their ecstasy of lila-anubhava, they acted as if they were not different from Lord Krishna. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.3):

gati-smita-prekshana-bhasanadishu. . .

"Because the beloved gopis were absorbed in thoughts of their beloved Krishna, their bodies imitated His way of moving and smiling, His way of beholding them, His speech and His other distinctive features. Deeply immersed in thinking of Him and maddened by remembering His pastimes, they declared to one another, 'I am Krishna!' "*

As they imitated Lord Krishna's pastimes, the gopis' original nature became concealed. This is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.20):

yatanty unnidadhe 'mbaram

" 'Don't be afraid of the wind and rain,' said one gopi. 'I will save you.' And with that she lifted her shawl above her head."*

Overcome with ecstatic love, the gopis passed the time in this way, imitating Lord Krishna's pastimes. However, they did not imitate all of Lord Krishna's pastimes. They imitated His childhood pastimes and some other pastimes, but they did not imitate His pastimes in shringara-rasa. The gs imitated Lord Krishna's pastimes with Putana and other enemies and they also imitated Lord Krishna's pastimes with His mother and His other loving associates. To increase their love for Lord Krishna, they passed the time in separation from Him by artificially acting out His pastimes. They did not believe that they were truly Lord Krishna. Here some philosophers say: "When they were remembering the pastime of killing Putana, some gopis played the role of Putana. Even though it was only play-acting, the other gopis became fearful for child Krishna's welfare. Even in the ordinary affairs of this world an expert actor playing the role of a ferocious tiger may bring a moment's fear to his audience. In this way, by feeling fear for Lord Krishna's safety in the course of this play-acting, the gopis felt their love for Lord Krishna increase. Also, the gopi playing the role of Putana did not feel hatred for Lord Krishna. In these pastimes of play-acting the gopis always felt love for Lord Krishna. In these pastimes the gopis also assumed the role of Mother Yashoda. An example of this is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.23):

baddhanyaya sraja kacit. . .

"One gopi tied up her slender companion with a flower garland and said, 'Now I will bind this boy who has broken the butter pots and stolen the butter.' The second gopi then covered her face and beautiful eyes, pretending to be afraid."*

In this way they meditated on Lord Krishna's Damodara pastimes, pastimes described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (1.8.31):

vaktram niniya bhaya-bhavanaya sthitasya. . .

"My dear Krishna, Yashoda took up a rope to bind You when You committed an offense, and Your perturbed eyes overflowed with tears, which washed the mascara from Your eyes. And You were afraid, though fear personified is afraid of You. This sight is bewildering to me."*

In these words child Krishna's fear of Mother Yashoda is described. The gopis imitated this pastime and Lord Krishna's other childhood pastimes. One gopi, playing the part of Mother Yashoda, tied up another gopi, who was playing the part of child Krishna. As was said before, in the course of these pastimes of play-acting the gopis always felt love for Lord Krishna. In these pastimes the gopis always took dhelter of their natural love for Lord Krishna. Even though one gopi played the role of Mother Yashoda and another gopi played the role of child Krishna, their original love for Lord Krishna in shringara-rasa remained unchanged. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.3 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 326

Vilasa-anubhava is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 27:

gati-sthanasanadinam
mukha-netradi-karmanam
tat-kalikam tu vaishishöyam vilasah priya-sangajam

"The graceful gestures of the face, eyes, and other parts of the body while walking, sitting, standing, and enjoying various pastimes with the beloved Lord Krishna are called vilasa."

Vilasa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.3):

tam vilokyagatam preshöham
prity-utphulla-drisho 'balah

"When the gopis saw that their dearmost Krishna had returned to them, they all stood up at once, and out of their affection for Him their eyes bloomed wide. It was as if the air of life had reentered their bodies."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 327

Kila-kincita is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 39:

garvabhilasha-ruditasmitasuya-bhaya-krudham
sankari-karanam harshad
ucyate kila-kincitam

"Pride, ambition, weeping, smiling, envy, fear, and anger are the seven ecstatic loving symptoms manifest by a jubilant shrinking away, and these symptoms are called kila-kincita-bhava."*

Kila-kincita is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.22.12-15):

tasya tat kshvelitam drishöva gopyah prema-pariplutah. . .

"Seeing how Krishna was joking with them, the gopis became fully immersed in love for Him, and as they glanced at each other they began to laugh and joke among themselves, even in their embarrassment. But still they did not come out of the water.

evam bruvati govinde. . .

"As Shri Govinda spoke to the gopis in this way, His joking words completely captivated their minds. Submerged up to their necks in the cold water, they began to shiver. Thus they addressed Him as follows.

manayam bhoh krithah. . .

"Dear Krishna, don't be unfair! We know that You are the respectable son of Nanda and that You are honored by everyone in Vraja. You are also very dear to us. Please give us back our clothes. We are shivering in the cold water.

shyamasundara te dasyah. . .

"O Shyamasundara, we are Your maidservants and must do whatever You say. But give us back our clothing. We know what the religious principles are, and if You don't give us our clothes we will have to tell the king. Please!""

The meaning of these verses is clear. These Shrimad-Bhagavatam verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 328

Vibhrama is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 34:

Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.22.15):

vallabha-prapti-velayam

madanavesha-sambhramat vibhramo hara-malyadibhusha-sthana-viparyayah

"Hastily preparing to meet her lover, the bewildered heroine may place her necklace, flower-garland, and other ornaments in the wrong places. This is called vibhrama."

Vibhrama is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.7):

vyatyasta-vastrabharanah
kashcit krishnantikam yayuh

"Though their clothes and ornaments were in complete disarray, the gs rushed off to Krishna."

Vibboka is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 47:

ishöe 'pi garva-manabhyam
vibbokah syad anadarah

"Even though pleased by Lord Krishna's gift, the heroine may angrily and proudly pretend to dislike it. This is called vibboka."

Vibboka is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.6):

eka bhru-kuöim abadhya. . .

"One gopi, beside herself with loving anger, bit her lips and stared at Him with frowning eyebrows, as if to wound Him with her harsh glances."

Lalita is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 51:

vinyasa-bhangir anganam
bhru-vilasa-manohara sukumara bhaved yatra
lalitam tad udahritam

"Playful, enchanting movements of the eyebrows, and graceful, delicate movements of the limbs are called lalita."

In this eay these features of ecstatic love should be u understood. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.7 quoted in this anuccheda was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Moöäyita is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 42:

kanta-smarana-vartadau
hridi tad-bhava-bhavatah
prakaöyam abhilashasya
moöäyitam udiryate

"When the heroine remembers or hears about her lover, Krishna, love for Him is aroused in her heart, and she hankers for His association. This is called moöäyita "

Moöäyita is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.12):

krishnam nirikshya vanitotsava. . .

"Krishna's beauty and character create a festival for all women. Indeed, when the demigods' wives flying in airplanes with their husbands catch sight of Him and hear His resonant flute-song, their hearts are shaken by Cupid, and they become so bewildered that the flowers fall out of their hair and their belts loosen."

Vikrita is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 53:

hri-manershyadibhir yatra nocyate sva-vikasitam vyajyate ceshöayaivedam
vikritam tad vidur budhah

"When shyness, anger, and jealousy are not openly expressed in words, but displayed only by action, that is known as vikrita by the wise."

Vikrita is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.22.23):

paridhaya sva-vasamsi
preshöha-sangama-sajjitah grihita-citta no celus
tasmin lajjayitekshanah

"The gopis were addicted to associating with their beloved Krishna, and thus they became captivated by Him. Thus, even after putting their clothes on they did not move. They simply remained where they were, shyly glancing at Him."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 330

Vicchitti is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 30:

akalpa-kalpanalpapi
vicchittih kanti-posha-krit

"Vicchitti is beautifying the body with various ornaments."

Kuööamita is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 44:

sthanadharadi-grahane
hrit-pritav api sambhramat bahih krodho vyathitavat
proktam kuööamitam budhaih

"When the border of Her sari and the cloth veiling Her face are caught, She externally appears offended and angry, but within Her heart She is very happy. Learned scholars call this attitude kuööamita."*

In this way vicchitti and kuööamita are described. The vacika-anubhavas (anubhavas of speech) will now be considered. Amongst them Alapa is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 73:

cati-priyoktir alapah

"Very affectionate words are called alapa."

Alapa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.40):

ka sry anga te kala-padayata-venu-gita-sammohita. . .

"Dear Krishna, what woman in all the three worlds wouldn't deviate from religious behavior when bewildered by the sweet, drawn-out melody of Your flute? Your beauty makes all three worlds auspicious. Indeed, even the cows, birds, trees and deer manifest the ecstatic symptom of bodily hair standing on end when they see Your beautiful form."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 331

Vilapa is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 75:

vilapo duhkha-jam vacah

"Vilapa means `words born of suffering'."

Vilapa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.47):

param saukhyam hi nairasyam. . .

"Indeed, the greatest happiness is to renounce all desires, as even the prostitute Pingala has declared. Yet even though we know this, we cannot give up our hopes of attaining Krishna."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 332

Samlapa is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 77:

ukti-pratyukti-mad vakyam
samlapa iti kirtyate

"Conversation is called samlapa."

Samlapa is seen in the conversation recounted in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.18-41.

In this conversation Lord Krishna has two purposes: 1. to request the association of the contrary gopis charmed by His flute music and other pastimes and qualities, and 2. as a joke, and also to test their love, to reject the company of the gopis, who had come to Him in the forest to attain His association. Here the words of the gopis also have two purposes: 1. To reject Lord Krishna's request that they return home, and 2. with words filled with yearning to beg His company. Because Lord Krishna and the gopis are equally expert in the art of graceful conversation, the rasa of thwir pastimes is nourshied by these talks between them. In the beginning of this conversation (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.18) Lord Krishna affirms that He and the gopis are equal. Then He tells them in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.

rajany esha. . .

"This night is quite frightening, and frightening creatures are lurking about. Return to Vraja, slenderwaisted girls. This is not a proper place for women."

These words, however, have a second, a hidden meaning. By interpreting the words in a different way this verse comes to mean: "O girls, somehow you have met Me here. Please do not now return to Vraja, for this night is quite frightening. Therefore you girls should not leave this place. Instead, you should stay here with Me, your hero." By speaking the word "su-madhyamah" (O slender-waisted girls) Lord Krishna hints that He would become very unhappy if the gopis left Him and returned to Vraja. Then Lord Krishna tells them: "As long as you stay with Me you need not fear your relatives. He says in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.20):

matarah. . .

"Not finding you at home, your mothers, fathers, sons, brothers and husbands are certainly searching for you. Don't cause anxiety for your family members."

The hidden meaning of this verse is: "Your mothers and other relatives did not see you tonight. Therefore they are now searching for you. However, they will not be able to come here to this place." The word "putrah" (sons) in this verse means either "the sons of your brothers-in-law" or "the sons of your co-wives". Then Lord Krishna tries to enliven the gopis by showing them the beauties of His personal forest-garden. He tells them in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.21-22):

drishöam vanam. . . tad yata. . .

"Now you have seen this Vrindavana forest, full of flowers and resplendent with the light of the full moon. You have seen the beauty of the trees, with their leaves trembling in the gentle breeze coming from the Yamuna. So now go back to the cowherd village. Don't delay. O chaste ladies, serve your husbands and give milk to your crying babies and calves."

The hidden meaning of this verse is: "The forest is very fearful. Therefore please do not be eager to go to Vraja so soon." Or these words may also be interpreted to mean: "Please don't leave now." They may also be interpreted to mean: "Please don't faithfully serve your husbands." Here the word "satih" means "O best of girls". "Vatsa ma krandanti" may mean "the calves are not crying", "ma payayata" may mean "don't feed them milk", "ma duhyata" may mean "don't feed them with cow's milk". Here Lord Krishna hints: "If you truly love me, then please don't ignore My request." Then Lord Krishna places this logical argument before the gopis (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.23):

atha va. . .

"On the other hand, perhaps you have come here out of your great love for Me, which has taken control of your hearts. This is of course quite commendable on your part, since all living entities possess natural affection for Me."

Here the word "mayi" is the same as mama". In this verse Lord Krishna argues: "If all living entities naturally love Me, then beautiful girls may also love Me, thinking of Me as their beloved." Here someone may protest: "But is not wrong for women to renounce the vow of faithfully serving their husbands?" To answer this protest Lord Krishna tells the gopis (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.24):

bhartuh shushrushanam. . .

"The highest religious duty for a woman is to sincerely serve her husband, behave well toward her husband's family and take good care of her children."

Here Lord Krishna declares: "The highest religious duty for a woman is to sincerely serve her husband." However, Lord Krishna implies here: "But you girls have never been married to your so-called husbands. Your marriage to them is only an imagination, a myth. Therefore you do no wrong to abandon these mythical husbands. You may think these persons are your husbands. Still, the words of the Smṛiti-shāstra affirm that you may indeed abandon the vow of serving such mythical husbands." Then Lord Krishna tells the gopis (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.25):

duhshilo durbhago vṛiddhah. . .

"Women who desire a good destination in the next life should never abandon a husband who has not fallen from his religious standards, even if he is obnoxious, unfortunate, old, unintelligent, sickly or poor."

Here Lord Krishna declares: "A woman should never abandon a husband who has not fallen." Here the hidden meaning of "fallen" is "envious". In this sense Lord Krishna considers the gopis' mythical husbands to be envious of Him, and therefore fallen. Thinking that the gopis might consider their husbands not fallen and therefore stay with them, with these tricky words changing the original meaning of the Smṛiti-shāstra's words, Lord Krishna denies that the gopis have any responsibility to serve their so-called husbands. Then Lord Krishna tells the 4 gopis (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.26):

asvargyam. . .

"For a woman from a respectable family, petty adulterous affairs are always condemned. They bar her from heaven, ruin her reputation and bring her difficulty and fear."

The hidden meaning of these words is: "A woman who stays near (upa) her husband (pati) (aupapatyam) will not enter heaven."

Thinking, "the gopis may worry that it will be very difficult to attain love for Me", Lord Krishna tells them: "Please do not turn away from Me." He tells them (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.27):

shravanat. . .

"Transcendental love for Me arises by the devotional processes of hearing about Me, seeing My Deity form, meditating on Me and faithfully chanting My glories. The same result is not achieved by mere physical proximity. So please go back to your homes."

Here Lord Krishna says: "Transcendental love for Me arises by the devotional processes that begin with hearing about Me. The same result is not achieved by mere physical proximity. So please enter this forest grove, which is just like your own homes." That is the hidden meaning of Lord Krishna's request here. The other, original, meaning is well-known in this world. In this way, in these verses, with many joking words Lord Krishna refutes the idea that the gopis actions are in any way improper. The condition the gopis attained after hearing these words of Lord Krishna is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.28-30):

iti vipriyam akarnya. . .

"Hearing these unpleasant words spoken by Govinda, the gopis became morose. Their great hopes were frustrated and they felt insurmountable anxiety.

"Their heads hanging down and their heavy, sorrowful breathing drying up their reddened lips, the gopis scratched the ground with their toes. Tears flowed from their eyes, carrying their kajjala and washing away the vermillion smeared on their breasts. Thus they stood, silently bearing the burden of their unhappiness.

"Although Krishna was their beloved, and although they had abandoned all other objects of desire for His sake, He had been speaking to them unfavorably. Nonetheless they remained unflinching in their attachment to Him. Stopping their crying, they wiped their eyes and began to speak, their voices stammering with agitation.

These verses show that the gopis did not understand the second, hidden, meaning of Lord Krishna's previous words. Filled with longing to associate with Krishna, they considered His words unpleasant. Thus they became morose. Hearing Lord Krishna's statements that had two meanings, the gopis became anxious and bowed their faces and performed other like activities. There is no rasabhasa in any of these actions. They scratched the ground with their toes and they spoke to Lord Krishna.

The gopis said to Lord Krishna (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.31):

maivam. . .

"The beautiful gopis said: O all-powerful one, You should not speak in this cruel way. Do not reject us, who have renounced all material enjoyment to render devotional service to Your lotus feet. Reciprocate with us, O stubborn one, just as the primeval Lord, Shri Narayana, reciprocates with His devotees in their endeavors for liberation.

In this verse the word "ma" (don't) is used to refute Lord Krishna's request (that the gopis return to their homes). Here the gopis say: "We have completely renounced our husbands, children, and all else and become Your devotees. Please reciprocate with us." Speaking here the passage beginning with the word "pada-mulam" (the soles of Your feet), the gopis chant the glories of Lord Krishna. Here the words "duravagraha ma tyajasman" may also be divided "duravagraham atyajasman". Divided in the second way they mean: "You have completely rejected us". Then the gopis give an example of acting properly by accepting one's own devotees and rejecting others. They say: "Lord Narayana reciprocates with the sages who yearn after liberation and who have renounced pious deeds, sense pleasures, and all else for His sake. The Lord does not reciprocate with others." Then, quoting from scripture, the gopis speak the next verse to refute Lord Krishna's request. They say (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.32):

yat paty-apatya. . .

"Our dear Krishna, as an expert in religion You have advised us that the proper religious duty for women is to faithfully serve their husbands, children and other relatives. We agree that this principle is valid, but actually this service should be rendered to You. After all, O Lord, You are the dearest friend of all embodied souls. You are their most intimate relative and indeed their very Self."

In this verse the word "sva-dharmah" may be interpreted as "sv-adharmah" which means "great impiety". If this word is interpreted in that way, then the word "dharma-vida" is employed as a joke, to mock the so-called knower of religion described here. If this interpretation is accepted, then these words are only a trick and the words "faithfully serve their husbands" come to mean the opposite of what they seem. Interpreted in this way, these words reject the false religious principles described here. Here the word "upadesha-pade" means "teacher" and "ishe tvayy evastu" means "You are the supremely independent Lord. These words thus mean: "O Lord, you reject these false principles of religion". Someone may ask: "O Lord, what is Your nature?" Here the gopis answer with the word "preshöhah" (dearest beloved). The gopis say: "You are the friend of all living entities. You are the dearest beloved of all living entities." This means: "O Lord, by associating with You, we will all attain great auspiciousness." Then, refuting Lord Krishna's statement in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.23, the gopis say (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.33):

kurvanti. . .

"Expert transcendentalists always direct their affection toward You because they recognize You as their true Self and eternal beloved. What use do we have for these husbands, children and relatives of ours, who simply give us trouble? Therefore, O supreme controller, grant us Your mercy. O lotus-eyed one, please do not cut down our long-cherished hope to have Your association."

This verse also has a second, a hidden meaning. The hidden meaning, attained by interpreting the syntactical relationships of the words in the sentence in a different way, is: "O lotus-eyed Lord, please cut into pieces our desire, the desire that says, 'We will become happy by enjoying the pleasures of our material bodies, material bodies that are always so dear to us, pleasures we enjoy with our husbands and children. Why should we be attracted to Krishna as our beloved? We are not attracted to Him.' " Here the word "varadeshvara (giver of boons) is in the vocative case. It is used here sarcastically. Here the gopis say: "Please give this boon to us. Give us the boon that the indifference we feel in our hearts toward You, the indifference that says, 'Let us not always yearn to attain You, O Krishna.', will be cut into pieces." Here the word "aravinda-netra" (O lotus-eyed one) implies: "It is not right that a person with such beautiful lotus eyes will be so crooked and deceitful to us". The word "sma" here changes the present tense of the verb into the imperfect tense. The word "asham" is the object of the sentence. In the next verse the gopis criticize Lord Krishna's description of the way love for Him is attained, a description He spoke in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.27. The gopis say (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.34):

cittam. . .

"Until today our minds were absorbed in household affairs, but You easily stole both our minds and our hands away from our housework. Now our feet won't move one step from Your lotus feet. How can we go back to Vraja? What would we do there?"

Here the gopis say: "As long as You had not stolen them away, our minds and hearts were very happy. They were happy because they stayed at home (grhesu). The symptom of their happiness was that our hands were engaged in household duties." Thinking of Krishna's addressing them as "su-madhyamah" (O slenderwaisted girls) in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.28.19, the gopis say in this verse: "Now our feet won't move one step from Your lotus feet. How can we go back to Vraja?" The meaning here is: "We will not go back to Vraja. We will stay here." Then the gopis say: "What would we do there?" In reply to Lord Krishna's words "pratiyata grihan" (Please go back to your homes) in Shrimad-Bhagavatam Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.27, the gopis speak the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.35):

sinca. . .

"Dear Krishna, please pour the nectar of Your lips upon the fire within our hearts--a fire You ignited with Your smiling glances and the sweet song of Your flute. If You do not, we will consign our bodies to the fire of separation from You, O friend, and thus like yogis attain to the abode of Your lotus feet by meditation."

In this verse the gopis say: "beloved, please pour the nectar of Your lips upon the fire within our hearts--a fire You ignited with Your smiling glances and the sweet song of Your flute." Then the gopis jokingly say: "If You will not give us that nectar, then we will only stand here and lick our own lips with desire to taste that nectar." Here the gopis hint that it is Lord Krishna's duty to protect them. That the Lord protects His devotees is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.4.10):

dhatte padam tvam avita yadi vighna-murdhni

"O Lord, because You are the direct protector of Your devotee, he is able to step over the head of whatever obstacle the demigods place before him."

Then the gopis say (in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.35): "If You do not give us the nectar of Your lips, we will consign our bodies to the fire of separation from You." The gopis address Krishna as "sakhe" (O friend), in the vocative case, because in the past they had exchanged playful and affectionate glances with Him. Here Lord Krishna may ask: "When We were children we played and touched. Why have you gopis now become like strangers?" To answer this question the gopis speak the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.36):

yarhi. . .

"O lotus-eyed one, the goddess of fortune considers it a festive occasion whenever she touches the soles of Your lotus feet. You are very dear to the residents of the forest, and therefore we will also touch those lotus feet. From that time on we will be unable even to stand in the presence of any other man, for we will have been fully satisfied by You."*

This verse may also be interpreted to mean: "O lotus-eyed one, the birds, beasts, and other beings in the forest all dearly love You as You enjoy Your childhood pastimes. Beautiful girls think the soles of Your feet are a great festival of happiness. We yearn to attain the soles of Your feet. Still, somehow we remain unable to touch them. When we played as children we enjoyed Your company. But now we must stand before our elders and superiors. No longer can we easily associate with You." In this verse the word "bata" is used in the sense of doubt or worry. These words mean: "We should escape from the circle of our elders and superiors." Remembering Lord Krishna's statement (in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.23) "priyante mayi jantavah" (all living entities possess natural affection for Me), a statement that hints, "beautiful girls naturally love Me as their beloved", the gopis cite Goddess Lakshmi as an example in the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.37):

shrih. . .

"Goddess Lakshmi, whose glance is sought after by the demigods with great endeavor, has achieved the unique position of always remaining on the chest of her Lord, Narayana. Still, she desires the dust of His lotus feet, even though she has to share that dust with Tulasi-devi and indeed with the Lord's many other servants. Similarly, we have approached the dust of Your lotus feet for shelter."

In this verse the gopis say: "After attaining a place at Lord Vishnu's chest, Goddess Lakshmi still yearns to attain to dust of Your feet in Gokula's ofrest, dust Tulasi-devi also yearns to attain. From the moment of Your birth there, Nanda's land of Vraja has been a place of pastimes for Goddess Lakshmi. To attain the dust of your feet Goddess Tulasi always resides in Vrindavana forest." Someone may ask: "Why do Lakshmi and Tulasi yearn to attain the dust of Lord Krishna's feet?" The answer is given here in the words "bhritya-jushöam" (served by His servants). It is natural for a maidservant to place her master's feet on her head. Someone may ask: "What are the glories of Goddess Lakshmi?" The answer is given here in the words "yasyah sva-vikshana utanya-sura-prayasah", which mean: "the gloruy of Goddess Lakshmi is such that the other divine beings who are her associates yearn to attain her glance." Their voices choked with emotion, the gopis then say the words "vayam ca", which menas "we are like them". Therse words mean: "As Lakshmi and Tulasi are enchanted by You, we are also enchanted by You. That is why we have now approached the dust of Your feet. It is not otherwise." Then the gopis speak the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.38):

tan nah. . .

"Therefore, O vanquisher of all distress, please show us mercy. To approach Your lotus feet we abandoned our families and homes, and we have no desire other than to serve You. Our hearts are burning with intense desires generated by Your beautiful smiling glances. O jewel among men, please make us Your maidservants."

In this verse the word "vrjinardana" mreans "O Lord who removes all distress", and "nah prasida" means "please be merciful to us and remove the obstacles that keep us from seeing You". Here Lord Krishna may ask: "Did you gopis really come here only to touch My feet?" To this question the gopis reply with the words: "We left our homes not only to touch Your feet, but because we yearn to worship You. We did not come here to see Vrindavana forest in the moonlight." Then the gopis also say: "Our hearts are burning with intense desires generated by Your beautiful smiling glances. Please make us Your maidservants." Because the idea of a gift here is not very explicit, the word "atmanam" is in the genitive case, not the dative case. From this is may be understood that this gift of devotional service is not always given, even in Gokula. The word "purusha-bhushana" (O ornament among men", which is in the vocative case, has a double meaning. It may also mean: "O Lord who have become the ornament of Your boyfriends in Gokula". This interpretation implies: "Therefore You are never the ornament of Gokula's beautiful girls." Their hearts burning, the gopis think all these thoughts. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.21 Lord Krishna ignored the uddipanas that attracted the gs to Him. Then, in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.27, Lord Krishna revealed the great power of His own attractive handsomeness. Thinking of these statements of Lord Krishna, the gopis spoke the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.39):

vikshya. . .

"Seeing Your face encircled by curling locks of hair, Your cheeks beautified by earrings, Your lips full of nectar, and Your smiling glance, and also seeing Your two imposing arms, which take away our fear, and Your chest, which is the only source of pleasure for the goddess of fortune, we must become Your maidservants."

The word "ca" (and) spoken near the end of this verse by voices choked with emotion, refers to the words that precede it. Here the gopis say: "Seeing You, we must become Your maidservants. It is not otherwise." Here Lord Krishna may ask: "If You are so dedicated to Me, why do you not stay here every night?" Thinking Lord Krishna may ask this question, the gopis speak the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.40):

ka sry anga te. . .

"Dear Krishna, what woman in all the three worlds wouldn't deviate from religious behavior when bewildered by the sweet, drawn-out melody of Your flute? Your beauty makes all three worlds auspicious. Indeed, even the cows, birds, trees and deer manifest the ecstatic symptom of bodily hair standing on end when they see Your beautiful form."

This verse means: "O beloved (anga) who sweetly plays on the flute (kala-padayata-venu-gita) and who is enchanting (sammohita) with the arrows shot by Kamadeva, what woman in all the three worlds wouldn't deviate from religious behavior for Your sake? For Your sake we throw far away all vows of pious morality." If someone were to try to find fault in the qualities of the Lord described in the two vocative words (kala-padayata-venu-gita and sammohita) mentioned above, the gopis reply by speaking the word "trailokya-saubhagam" (who makes all three worlds auspicious). The reason for the gopis deviating from religious behavior is given here in the words "arya-caritan nirikshya rupam ka na calet" (upon seeing Your handsome form, what woman would not deviate from religious behavior?). The gopis then say: "Therefore (yat) even the cows, birds, trees and deer manifest the ecstatic symptom of bodily hair standing on end when they see Your beautiful form." Because they may thus easily deviate from the principles of religious behavior, beautiful girls and handsome are forbidden to associate in this way in this world. Thinking of the words Lord Krishna spoke in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.19, and thinking that in the context of those words Lord Krishna might say: "I am a powerful hero. Stay with Me I will protect You from all dangers", the gopis offer a prayer in the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.41):

vyaktam bhavan. . .

"Clearly You have taken birth in this world to relieve the fear and distress of the people of Vraja, just as the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the primeval Lord, protects the domain of the demigods. Therefore, O friend of the distressed, kindly place Your lotus hand on Your maidservants' heads and burning breasts."

In this verse the word "arta-bandho" means "O You who have taken birth in this world to protect the people of Vraja from the fearful condition of falling away from the principles of religion". Here the words "kinkarinam tapta-staneshu kara-pankajam ca shirahsu no nidhehi" have a hidden possible second interpretation, which gives this meaning of the words: "Please do not place Your lotus hand on Your maidservants' heads and breasts, breasts burning with desire from the sight of You". These words thus imply: "Even in Your thoughts do not do such a thing to saintly chaste girls like ourselves." This hidden meaning is hinted in this verse. Quoting the dharma-shastras, Lord Krishna had previously proved that the gopis should always faithfully serve their husbands and relatives. Quoting the jnana-shastras, the gopis now brilliantly refute Krishna's arguments. The gopis here prove that Krishna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead (paramatma), and therefore He is the meaning and the goal of all the scriptures' teachings. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.32 the gopis hint: "O Krishna, You are the meaning and goal of all the scriptures' teachings. Devotional service to You is the final goal taught in the scriptures." Here Lord Krishna may protest: "How is it possible that I am the goal of all the scriptures?" To this the gopis reply (in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.32) by speaking the word "atma", which means: "You are the Supreme Personality of Godhead." The gopis hint here: "You are the goal of all the scriptures, the scriptures that affirm (Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad 4.4.22):

tam etam vedanuvacanena brahmana vividishanti

"By studying the Vedas the brahmanas understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead."

Then Krishna may again protest: "How is it possible that I am the Supreme Personality of Godhead?" To this protest the gopis reply with the words "tanu-bhritam preshöhah", which mean "for the living entities You are the object of love without limit". Here the gopis also say: "bandhur bhavan", which means "You bring limitless auspiciousness to the living entities". In these two ways Lord Krishna possesses the symptoms of being the Supreme Personality of Godhead, symptoms described in these words of the jnana-shastras (Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad 2.4.5):

atmanas tu kamaya sarvam priyam bhavati

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead is loved by everyone. He fulfills everyone's desire."

Here the gopis may say: "In this way we have proved that You are indeed the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Because You are the Supreme Personality of Godhead we are very eager to worship and serve You." It is said in Mundaka Upanishad (1.2.12):

brahmano nirvedam ayat, nasty akritah kritena

"Not merely by performing duties, but by renunciation a brahmana attains the company of the Supreme Personality of Godhead."

In this way the jnana-sastras affirm that it is not wrong for a transcendentalist to renounce his prescribed duties. However, because knowledge of Lord Krishna's sweetness (madhurya) is superior to knowledge of His power and opulence (aishvarya), the gopis do not dwell on Lord Krishna's status as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.33 the gopis describe the activities of true saintly persons. There the word "kushalah" means "saintly persons who know what is important and what is not important, and "hi" means "certainly". Here "sva atman" means "the Supreme Personality of Godhead", as has previously been explained. Or the words "sva atman nitya-priye tvayi" may also mean "You are eternally dear to every soul". Then the gopis say: "tvayy eva ratim kurvanti", which means "therefore saintly persons love You alone. They do not love the principles of religion, their homes, or anything else." Then the gopis say: "paty-adibhih kim", which means "What use do we have for our husbands and relatives?" These truths the gopis further explain in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.36 and 37. In this way the samlapa-anubhava (conversation), which is one of the vacika-anubhavas (anubhavas of speech) has been described. These verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 333 and 334

Sandesha is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 82:

Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.40.52):

sandeshas tu proshitasya
sva-varta-preshanam bhavet

"A letter from a lover living far away is called sandesha."

Sandesha is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.52):

he natha he rama-natha
vraja-natharti-nashana
magnam uddhara govinda
gokulam vrijinarnavat

"O master, O master of the goddess of fortune, O master of Vraja! O destroyer of all suffering, Govinda, please lift Your Gokula out of the ocean of distress in which it is drowning!"

Apadesha is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 85:

anyartha-kathanam yat tu
so 'padesha itiritah

"When a person misunderstands the statement of another, this is called apadesha."

Apadesha is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.7-8):

nihsvam tyajanti ganika. . .jara bhuktva ratam striyam

"Prostitutes abandon a penniless man, subjects and incompetent king, students their teacher once they have finished their education, and priests a man who has remunerated them for a sacrifice.

"Birds abandon a tree when its fruits are gone, guests a house after they have eaten, animals a forest that has burnt down, and a lover the woman he has enjoyed, even though she remains attached to him."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by the gopis to Uddhava.

Anuccheda 335

Upadesha is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 87:

yat tu shikshartha-vacanam upadesha sa ucyate

"Words of instruction are called upadesha."

Upadesha is seen in these words spoken at the time of Lord Balarama's arrival in vraja and recounted in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.65.14):

kim nas tat-kathaya gopyah kathah kathayataparah yaty asmabhir vina kalo
yadi tasya tathaiva nah

"Why bother talking about Him, dear gopis? Please talk of something else. If He passes His time without us, then we shall similarly pass ours without Him."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 336

Vyapadesha is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Anubhava-prakarana, Text 90:

vyajenatmabhilashoktir
vyapadesha itiryate

"When the speaker uses a trick to reveal his actual desire, his statement is called vyapadesha."

Vyapadesha is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.12):

krishnam nirikshya. . .
. . . devyo vimana-gatayah smara-nunna-sara. . .

"Krishna's beauty and character create a festival for all women. Indeed, when the demigods' wives flying in airplanes with their husbands catch sight of Him and hear His resonant flute-song, their hearts are shaken by Cupid, and they become so bewildered that the flowers fall out of their hair and their belts loosen."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 337

The five anubhavas named pralapa, anulapa, apalapa, atidesha, and nirdesha are also included among the vacica-anubhavas. Thus concludes the description of the anubhavas. Now the vyabhicaris will be considered. Amongst them nirveda (despair) is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.15):

carana-raja upaste yasya bhutir vayam ka

"In heaven, on earth, or in the subterranean sphere, what woman is unavailable to Him? He simply arches His eyebrows and smiles with deceptive charm, and they all become His. The supreme goddess herself worships the dust of His feet, so what is our position in comparison? But at least those who are wretched can chant His name, Uttamahsloka."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 338

Anutapa is lamentation. Anutapa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.7):

akshanvatam phalam idam. . .

"O friends, those eyes that see the beautiful faces of the sons of Maharaja Nanda are certainly fortunate. As these two sons enter the forest, surrounded by Their friends, driving the cows before Them, They hold Their flutes to Their mouths and glance lovingly upon the residents of Vrindavana. For those who have eyes, we think there is no greater object of vision."

Dainya is helpless despair. Dainya is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.38):

tan nah prasida vrijinardana. . .

"Therefore, O vanquisher of all distress, please show us mercy. To approach Your lotus feet we abandoned our families and homes, and we have no desire other than to serve You. Our hearts are burning with intense desires generated by Your beautiful smiling glances. O jewel among men, please make us Your maidservants."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 339

Glanī (exhaustion) is described in these words of Bhakti-rasamṛta-sindhu (2.4.26):

glanir nishpranata mata

"Glanī is when one is breathless with exhaustion."

Glanī is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.10):

kacid rasa-parishranta. . .

"When one gopī grew tired from the rasa dance, She turned to Krishna, standing at Her side holding a baton, and grasped His shoulder with Her arm. The dancing had loosened Her bracelets and the flowers in Her hair."

Shrama (fatigue) is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.20):

tasam rati-viharena. . .

"Seeing that the gopīs were fatigued from conjugal enjoyment, my dear King, merciful Krishna lovingly wiped their faces with His comforting hand."

Anuccheda 340

Mada is becoming so wild with joy that one is bereft of discrimination. Mada is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.17):

tad-anga-sanga-pramudakulendriyah. . .

"Their senses overwhelmed by the joy of having His physical association, the gopīs could not prevent their hair, their dresses and the cloths covering their breasts from becoming disheveled. Their garlands and ornaments scattered, O hero of the Kuru dynasty."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrīla Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 341

Garva is contemptuous arrogance. Garva is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.44):

tasyah syur acyuta nripa bhavatopadishöah. . .

"O infallible Krishna, let each of the kings You named become the husband of a woman whose ears have never heard Your glories, which are sung in the assemblies of Shiva and Brahma. After all, in the households of such women these kings live like asses, oxen, dogs, cats, and slaves."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Queen Rukmini.

Anuccheda 342

Shanka is worry that a calamity will befall one. Trasa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.53.24):

api mayy anavadyatma
drishöva kincij jugupsitam

"Perhaps the faultless Lord, even while preparing to come here, saw something contemptible in me and therefore has not come to take my hand."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Queen Rukmini.

Anuccheda 343

Trasa is a heart shaken by fear. Trasa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.34.27):

kroshantam krishna rameti
vilokya sva-parigraham

"Hearing Their devotees crying out `Krishna! Rama!, and seeing that they were just like cows being stolen by a thief, Krishna and Balarama began to run after the demon."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 344

Avega is haste created by agitation of the heart. Avega is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.5):

duhantyo 'bhiyayuh kashcid. . .

"Some of the gopis were milking cows when they heard Krishna's flute. They stopped milking and went off to meet Him. Some left milk curdling on the stove, and others left cakes burning in the oven."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 345

Unmada is bewilderment of the heart. Unmada is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.4):

gayantya uccair amum eva samhata. . .

"Singing loudly of Krishna, they searched for Him throughout the Vrindavana forest like a band of madwomen. They even asked the trees about Him, who as the Supersoul is present inside and outside of all created things, just like the sky."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 346 and 347

Apasmara is being overwhelmed at heart. Apasmara is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.5):

mayi tah preyasam preshöhe dura-sthe gokula-striyah smarantyo 'nga vimuhyanti virahautkanöhya-vihvalah

"My dear Uddhava, for those women of Gokula I am the most cherished object of love. Thus when they remember Me, who am so far away, they are overwhelmed by the anxiety of separation."

Vyadhi (disease) is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.6):

dharayanty ati-kricchrena
prayah pranah kathancana

"Simply because I have promised to return to them, My fully devoted cowherd girlfriends struggle to maintain their lives somehow or other."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead to Uddhava.

Anuccheda 348

Moha is being charmed at heart. Moha is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.16-17):

nija-padabja-dalaih. . .kuja-gatim gamitah. . .

"As Krishna strolls through Vraja with His lotus-petal-like feet, marking the ground with the distinctive emblems of flag, thunderbolt, lotus and elephant goad, He relieves the distress the ground feels from the cows' hooves. As He plays His renowned flute, His body moves with the grace of an elephant. Thus we gopis, who become agitated by Cupid when Krishna playfully glances at us, stand as still as trees, unaware that our hair and garments are slackening."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 349

Mriti is leaving the body. In this situation a devotee not situated in a spiritual body attains, at the moment of death, ecstatic love for Lord Krishna. Mriti is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.9-11):

antar-griha-gatah kashcit. . .

"Some of the gopis, however, could not manage to get out of their houses, and instead they remained home with eyes closed, meditating upon Him in pure love."

For those gopis who could not go to see Krishna, intolerable separation from their beloved caused an intense agony that burned away all impious karma. By meditating upon Him they realized His embrace, and the ecstasy they then felt exhausted their material piety. Although Lord Krishna is the Supreme Soul, these girls simply thought of Him as their male lover and associated with Him in that intimate mood. Thus their karmic bondage was nullified and they abandoned their gross material bodies."

Mriti was also discussed previously in Krishna-sandarbha (Anuccheda 177). Languor is described in these words:

anyatra krishna-krityebhyo balinah klesha-shankaya alasyam acikirshayam
kritrimam teshu ujjvale

"When faced with Lord Krishna's actions, the devotees in shringara-rasa sometimes manifest languor born from agitation. Sometimes the languor is only a pretense."

Languor caused by agitation that has its origin in Lord Krishna's actions is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.17):

tad-anga. . . keshan dukulam kuca-paöökam va nanjah prativyodhum alam vraja-striyah

"Their senses overwhelmed by the joy of having His physical association, the gopis could not prevent their hair, their dresses and the cloths covering their breasts from becoming disheveled. Their garlands and ornaments scattered, O hero of the Kuru dynasty."

In this verse the word "anjah" shows that the gopis became powerless because they were overwhelmed with joy. In situations like this there may be agitation. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 350

In the course of enjoying srngara-rasa pastimes with Lord Krishna the devotee may sometimes only pretend to be laguid. An example of this is seen in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.37):

na paraye 'ham calitum. . .

"As the two lovers passed through one part of the Vrindavana forest, the special gopi began feeling proud of Herself. She told Lord Keshava, ``I cannot walk any further. Please carry Me wherever You want to go."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shri Radha.

Anuccheda 351

Jadya means "becoming stunned and not knowing what to do". It is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.53.31):

tam agatam samajnaya
vaidarbhi hrishöa-manasa
na pashyanti brahmanaya
priyam anyan nanama sa

"Princess Vaidarbhi was overjoyed to learn of Krishna's arrival. Not finding at hand anything suitable to offer the brahmana, she simply bowed down to him."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 352

"Vrida" means "shyness". Vrida is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.54.4):

patyur balam sharasaraish channam vikshya su-madhyama sa-vridam aikshat tad-vaktram bhaya-vihvala-locana

"Slender-waisted Rumi, seeing her Lord's army covered by torrents of arrows, shyly looked at His face with fear-stricken eyes."

The shyness here is mixed with love. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 353

"Avahittha" means "concealing one's true feelings". Avahittha is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.15):

sabhajayitva tam ananga-dipanam. . .

"Shri Krishna had awakened romantic desires within the gopis, and they honored Him by glancing at Him with playful smiles, gesturing amorously with their eyebrows, and massaging His hands and feet as they held them in their laps. Even while worshiping Him, however, they felt somewhat angry, and thus they addressed Him as follows."

By worshiping Him and serving Him the gopis concealed the anger they felt toward Him. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 354

"Smriti" means "remembering past events". Smriti is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.43):

tah kim nishah smarati yasu tada priyabhir vrindavane kumuda-kunda-shashanka-ramye. . .

"Does He recall those nights in the Vrindavana forest, lovely with lotus, jasmine, and the bright moon? As we glorified His charming pastimes, He enjoyed with us, His beloved girlfriends, in the circle of the rasa dance, which resounded with the music of ankle bells."

"Uha" means "mental speculation". Uha is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.31):

na lakshyante padany atra. . .

"These footprints of that special gopi greatly disturb us. Of all the gopis, She alone was taken away to a secluded place, where She is enjoying the lips of Krishna. Look, we can't see Her footprints over here! It's obvious that the grass and sprouts were hurting the tender soles of Her feet, and so the lover lifted up His beloved."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 355

"Dhyana" means "meditation". Dhyana is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.29):

kritva mukhany ava shucah. . .

"Their heads hanging down and their heavy, sorrowful breathing drying up their reddened lips, the gopis scratched the ground with their toes. Tears flowed from their eyes, carrying their kajjala and washing away the vermilion smeared on their breasts. Thus they stood, silently bearing the burden of their unhappiness."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 356

"Mati" means "understanding the truth". Mati is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.39):

tvam nyasta-danda-munibhir gaditanubhava
atmatma-dash ca jagatam iti me vrito 'si

"Knowing that great sages who have renounced the sannyasi's danda proclaim Your glories, that You are the Supreme Soul of all the worlds, and that You are so gracious that You give away even Your own self, I chose You as my husband, rejecting Lord Brahma. Lord Shiva, and the rulers of heaven, whose aspirations are all frustrated by the force of time, which is born from Your eyebrows. What interest, then, could I have in any other suitors?"

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shri Rukmini.

Anuccheda 357

"Autsukya means "being impatient for the arrival of the appropriate time". Autsukya is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.4):

nishamya gitam tad ananga-vardhanam. . .

"When the young women of Vrindavana heard Krishna's flute song, which arouses romantic feelings, their minds were captivated by the Lord. They went to where their lover waited, each unknown to the others, moving so quickly that their earrings swung back and forth."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 358

"Augrya" means "anger". Augrya is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.39.21):

kruras tvam akrura. . .

"O Providence, though you come here with the name Akrura, you are indeed cruel, for like a fool you are taking away what you once gave us-those eyes with which we have seen, even in one feature of Lord Madhudvisha's form, the perfection of your entire creation."

Augrya is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.22.15):

dehi vasamsi dharma-jna
no ced rajne bruvama he

"O Shyamasundara, we are Your maidservants and must do whatever You say. But give us back our clothing. You know what the religious principles are, and if You don't give us our clothes we will have to tell the king."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by the girls of Vraja.

Anuccheda 359

"Amarsha" means "impatience". Amarsha is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.31.16):

pati-sutanvaya. . .kitava yoshitah kas tyajen nishi

"Dear Acyuta, You know very well why we have come here. Who but a cheater like You would abandon young women who come to see Him in the middle of the night, enchanted by the loud song of His flute? Just to see You, we have completely rejected our husbands, children, ancestors, brothers and other relatives."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 360

"Asuya" means "envy, or hating someone because of that person's good fortune". Asuya is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.30):

tasya amuni nah kshobham. . .

"These footprints of that special gopi greatly disturb us. Of all the gopis, She alone was taken away to a secluded place, where She is enjoying the lips of Krishna. Look, we can't see Her footprints over here! It's obvious that the grass and sprouts were hurting the tender soles of Her feet, and so the lover lifted up His beloved."

"Capala" means "restlessness of the mind". Capala is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.52.41):

shvo bhavini tvam ajitodvahane. . .mam rakshasena vidhinodvaha virya-shulkam

"O unconquerable one, tomorrow when my marriage ceremony is about to begin, You should arrive unseen in Vidarbha and surround Yourself with the leaders of Your army. Then crush the forces of Caidya and Magadhendra and marry me in the rakshasa style, winning me with Your valor."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Princess Rukmini.

Anuccheda 261 and 362

"Nidra" means "closing the eyes and becoming rapt in thought". Nidra is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.53.26):

evam cintayati bala
govinda-hrita-manasa nyamilayata kala-jna
netre cashru-kulakule

"As she thought in this way, the young maiden, whose mind had been stolen by Krishna, closed her tear-filled eyes, remembering that there was still time."

"Nidra" also means "sleep". Interpreted in this way, Rukmini's condition is like that of a person who awakens at dawn. In this way nidra is included among the 33 vyabharis. In the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.53.27) it is said:

evam vadhvah pratikshantya govindagamanam nripa vama urur bhujo netram
asphuran priya-bhashinah

"O king, as the bride thus awaited the arrival of Govinda, she felt a twitch in her left thigh, arm, and eye. This was a sign that something desirable would happen."

Trembling in this way, Rukmini acted as if awakening from sleep. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 363 and 364

The sthayi-bhava in shringara-rasa is thinking of Lord Krishna as the beloved. This sthayi-bhava has two causes: 1. Lord Krishna's nature, and 2. the nature of the girl who loves Him. The first of these causes is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.42):

kanyam shrayeta tava pada-saroja-gandham aghraya

"The aroma of Your lotus feet, which is glorified by great saints, awards people liberation and is the abode of Goddess Lakshmi. What woman would take shelter of any other man after savoring that aroma? Since You are the abode of transcendental qualities, what mortal woman with the insight to distinguish her own true interest would disregard that fragrance and depend instead on someone who is always subject to terrible fear?"

The second of these causes is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.47 and 48):

naivalikam aham manye
vacas te madhusudana
ambaya eva hi prayah
kanyayah syad ratih kvacit

"Actually, I don't consider Your words false, Madhusudana. Quite often an unmarried girl is attracted to a man, as in the case of Amba."

vyudhayash capi pumshcalya

mano 'bhyeti navam navam

"The mind of a promiscuous woman always hankers for new lovers, even if she is married."

Queen Rukmini spoke these words in reply to this joking suggestion spoken by Lord Krishna (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.60.17):

athatmano 'nurupam. . .

"Now you should definitely accept a more suitable husband, a first-class man of the royal order who can help you achieve everything you want, both in this life and the next."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.60.47 means: "I don't consider Your words false. Quite often an unmarried girl is attracted to a certain man, as in the case of Amba, who was attracted to Shalva." When an unmarried girl is attracted in this way, she cannot be restrained. The verse and the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.60.48) affirm: "An unmarried girl is attracted to only one man. In this way she is chaste. The example of Amba is given here. However, a promiscuous woman always seeks newer and newer lovers. Therefore a supremely chaste and saintly woman will be attracted only to You." These verses were spoken by Shri Rukmini.

Anuccheda 365

Sthayi-bhava in shnrigara-rasa is of two kinds: 1. sakshad-upabhogatmaka (directly enjoying amorous pastimes with Lord Krishna), and 2. tad-anumodanatmaka (being pleased that some other girl is enjoying amorous pastimes with Lord Krishna). The first of these is enjoyed by the girls (sakshan-nayika) who directly enjoy amorous pastimes with Lord Krishna, and the second of these is enjoyed by the girls who are the friends (sakhi) of these girls. Both kinds of girls will be described here. The girls who directly enjoy amorous pastimes with Lord Krishna are described in a general way in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.12): .

krishnam nirikshya vanitotsava-rupa-shilam. . .

"Krishna's beauty and character create a festival for all women. Indeed, when the demigods' wives flying in airplanes with their husbands catch sight of Him and hear His resonant flute-song, their hearts are shaken by Cupid, and they become so bewildered that the flowers fall out of their hair and their belts loosen."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 366

The desire to enjoy amorous pastimes directly with Lord Krishna is manifested in the gurl Kubja and in other girls like here. This desire is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.48.9):

sahoshyatam iha preshöha. . .

"O beloved, please stay here with me for a few days more and enjoy. I cannot give up Your association, O lotus-eyed one."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Kubja.

Anuccheda 367

The desire to enjoy amorous pastimes with Lord Krishna is also seen in the Lord's queens. This is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.61.4):

smayavaloka-lava-darshita. . .

"The arched eyebrows of these sixteen-thousand queens enchantingly expressed those ladies' secret intentions through coyly smiling sidelong glances. Thus their eyebrows boldly sent forth conjugal messages. Yet even with these arrows of Cupid, and with other means as well, they could not agitate Lord Krishna's senses."

The desire to enjoy amorous pastimes directly with Lord Krishna is also seen amongst the gopis, as described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.31.19):

yat te sujata-caranamburuham. . .

"O dearly beloved! Your lotus feet are so soft that we place them gently on our breasts, fearing that Your feet will be hurt. Our life rests only in You. Our minds, therefore, are filled with anxiety that Your tender feet might be wounded by pebbles as You roam about on the forest path."*

This kind of amorous desire is natural for the gopis. When Lord Krishna left them, the gopis became very angry. This anger is not a fault on their part. They were unable to tolerate Lord Krishna's absence. This anger of the gopis is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.17):

mrigayur iva kapindram. . .dustyajas tat-katharthah

"Like a hunter He cruelly shot the king of the monkeys with arrows. Because He was conquered by a woman, He disfigured another woman who came to Him with lusty desires. And even after consuming the gifts of Bali Maharaja, He bound him up with ropes as if he were a crow. So let us give up all friendship with this dark-complexioned boy, even if we can't give up talking about Him."

Among the gopis there are many different kinds of amorous love for Lord Krishna. For some gopis their relationship with Lord Krishna is that of two lovers' mutual adoration. These gopis think, "O Krishna, I am Yours." They possess a abundance of qualities like submissiveness, humbleness, speaking sweet words, and politeness. Other gopis have a different mood. These gopis think, "Krishna is mine". They possess an abundance of qualities like independence, knowing Krishna's heart, joking with Krishna, and dealing with Krishna in a crooked way. These different qualities are manifested in different ways. Sometimes these qualities in a large degree, in a lesser degree, or mixed with other qualities. In this way there are many different ways these qualities may be manifested in the gopis. Examples of how different gopis have different kinds of qualities in their amorous pastimes with Lord Krishna are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.4-9):

kacit karambujam shaurer
jagrihe 'njalina muda kacid dadhara tad-bahum
amse candana-bhushitam

"One gopi joyfully took Krishna's hand between her folded palms, and another placed His arm, anointed with sandalwood paste, on her shoulder.

kacid anjalinagrihnat

"One gopi, beside herself with loving anger, bit her lips and stared at Him with frowning eyebrows, as if to wound Him with her harsh glances.

aparanimishad-drighbhyam

santas tac-caranam yatha

"Another gopi looked with unblinking eyes upon His lotus face, but even after deeply relishing its sweetness She did not feel satiated, just as mystic saints are never satiated when meditating upon the Lord's feet.

tam kacin netra-randhrena
hrdi kritva nimilya ca

pulakangy upaguhyaste
yogivananda-sampluta

"One gopi took the Lord through the aperture of her eyes and placed Him within her heart. Then, with her eyes closed and her bodily hairs standing on end, she continuously embraced Him within. Thus immersed in transcendental ecstasy, she resembled a yogi meditating upon the Lord.

sarvas tah keshavaloka-

prajnam prapya yatha janah

"All the gopis enjoyed the greatest festivity when they saw their beloved Keshava again. They gave up the distress of separation, just as people in general forget their misery when they gain the association of a spiritually enlightened person."*

In the first of these verses (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.32.4) is seen an example of a gopis whose relationshuip with Lord Krishna is based on mutual adoration. That is the first relationship described here, therefore this gopi is considered very important. She meets Lord Krishna and He treats Him with great respect. Here it is said that she took Lord Krishna's hand in her folded palms. In this way she showed adoration for Him. She also showed submissiveness and other like qualities. This gopi is situated in the midst of the other gopis. She is very important, and therefore she is described first in this passage. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.32.6 is described another kind of gopi, a gopi who thinks, "Krishna is mine." This gopi is also situated in the midst of the gopis. Her position is very rare and exalted. She has a special kind of love for Lord Krishna. Thinking, "Krishna is my property, she stares at Him with frowning glances and enjoys other like pastimes with Him. This particular gopi is Shri Radha. Her exalted position is described in these words describing the month of Karttika in the Vraja-ratnakara-dhrita part of the Bhavishya Purana:

tasmin dine ca bhagavan
ratrau radha-griham yayau sa ca kruddha tam udare
kanci-damna babandha ha

"That evening Lord Krishna went to Radha's home. Angry, she bound His waist with Her own sash.

krishnas tu sarvam avedya nija-geha-mahotsavam priyam prasadayam asa tatah sa tam amocayat

"Telling Her about a great festival at His home, Lord Krishna pacified His beloved Radha and She set Him free."

The exalted position of Shri Radha is also seen in these words of Padma Purana:

yatha radha priya. . .

"Just as Shrimati Radharani is dear to the Supreme Lord Krishna (Vishnu), so Her bathing place (Radha-kunda) is equally dear to Krishna. Among all the gopis, She alone stands supreme as the Lord's most beloved."*

Shri Radha's great glory is also seen in these words (which refer to Her) in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.28):

anayaradhito nunam. . .

"Certainly this particular gopi has perfectly worshiped the all-powerful Personality of Godhead, Govinda, since He was so pleased with Her that He abandoned the rest of us and brought Her to a secluded place."*

When She went to Dvaraka, Shri Radha was known by the name Satyabhama. There She was the most glorious of Lord Krishna's queens. This is seen in the following words spoken to Her by Lord Krishna in the Shri Vishnu Purana (5.30.33):

yadi te tad-vacah satyam satyatartham priyeti me mad-geha-nishkuöarthaya
tadayam niyatam taruh

"O Satyabhama, if My words, 'You are most dear to Me', are true, then I will certainly bring the parijata tree to the pleasure garden in Your palace."

In the Karttika-mahatmya of the Padma Purana, Lord Krishna tells Shri Radha:

na me tvattah priyatama. . .

"No one is more dear to Me than You."

In Shri Hari-vamsha, Vaishampayana Muni says of Shri Radha:

saubhagye cadhikabhavat

"Shri Radha is the most fortunate of Lord Krishna's beloveds."

Shri Radha also has a rival. Her celebrated rival is named Candravali. This is described in the following words of Shri Bilvamangala Thakura:

radha-mohana-mandirad upagatash candravalim ucivan radhe kshemam iheti tasya vacanam shrutvaha candravali kamsa-kshemam aye vimugdha-hridaye kamsah kva drishöas tvaya radha kveti vilajjito nata-mukhah smero harih patu vah

"Bewildered by the ecstasy of thinking of Shri Radha, and walking alone, Lord Krishna suddenly met Candravali. He said: 'Radha, this is a beautiful place.' Hearing these words, Candravali said: 'This is Kamsa's place.' Then Krishna said: 'O girl with the bewildered heart, where do you see Kamsa?' Then Candravali replied: 'Where do You see Radha?' May Lord Krishna, who at that moment smiled and bowed His face with embarrassment, protect you all."

The gopis who are like Candravali are described in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.32.5. Candravali's dearest friends are Padma and Shaibya. The gopis who are like Shri Radha are described in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.32.7-8. Shri Radha thinks: "Krishna is My property. He follows Me. He is in My grip." Shri Radha's two dearest friends are said in the scriptures to be Vishakha and Anuradha. In the Bhavishya Purana, Uttara-khanda, it is said:

vishakha dhyana-nishöhika. . .radhanuradha

"Prominent among the gopis are Vishakha, Dhyana-nishöhika, Radha and Anuradha."

Radha's friend Anuradha is also known by the name Lalita. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.32.4 are described the activities of two gopis. The first gopi submissively and politely takes Lord Krishnas' arm, but the second gopi thinks, "Krishna is my property" as she takes Lord Krishna's arm. Shri Radha shows Her love for Lord Krishna in that way, by insistently thinking, "Krishna is My property". Another famous gopi is named Shyamala. She is the eighth gopi. She is described in these words of Vishnu Purana:

kacid ayantam alokya govinda-mati-harshita krishna krineti krishneti
praha nanyad udairayat

"When she saw Lord Krishna approach, her heart became joyful. She called out, 'Krishna! Krishna! Krishna!' She spoke no word but that."

Another famous gopi is named Bhadra. The gopis' blissful love for Lord Krishna is seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.32.9:

sarvah. . .

"All the gopis enjoyed the greatest festivity when they saw their beloved Keshava again. They gave up the distress of separation, just as people in general forget their misery when they gain the association of a spiritually enlightened person."

The verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.32.4-9 were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 368

Now will be described the situation were a devotee is pleased (anumodana) by another devotee's attainment of love for Lord Krishna in shringara-rasa. An example of this is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.53.37-39):

asyaiva bharya bhavitum rukminy arhati napara asav apy anavadyatma
bhaishmyah samucitah patih

"Rukmini, and no one else, deserves to become His wife, and He also, possessing such flawless beauty, is the only suitable husband for Princess Rukmini."

kincit su-caritam yan nas tena tushöas tri-loka-krit anugrihnatu grihnatu
vaidarbhyah panim acyutah

"May Acyuta, the creator of the three worlds, be satisfied with whatever pious work we may have done and show His mercy by taking the hand of Vaidarbhi."

evam prema-kala-baddha
vadanti sma puraukasah

"Bound by their swelling love, the city's residents spoke in this way."

In these verses it is seen that many different kinds of people, people with different thoughts and desires, people who have not even the slightest touch of the qualification to enjoy pastimes in srngara-rasa with Lord Krishna as their beloved, still feel delight (anumodana) in their hearts when Lord Krishna enjoys the pastime of wedding Princess Rukmini. Here the word "prema-kala-baddhah" means "their hearts bound with a little love, they were delighted". Even though it was only a small particle of love, and even though the people were not refined or sophisticated, they still felt delighted at heart. At the same time the most glorious kind of love took its birth within them. The regal full moon of ecstatic love rose within them. In this way the greatest kind of delight appeared in their hearts. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 369

An example of the devotees who directly enjoy amorous pastimes with Lord Krishna is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.11-12):

apy ena-patny upagatah priyayeha gatrais tanvan drisham sakhi su-nirvritim acyuto vah kantanga-sanga-kuca-kunkuma-ranjitayah kunda-srajah kula-pater iha vati gandhah

"O friend, wife of the deer, has Lord Acyuta been here with His beloved, bringing great joy to your eyes? Indeed, blowing this way is the fragrance of His garland of kunda flowers, which was smeared with the kunkuma from the breasts of His girlfriend when He embraced Her."

bahum priyamsa upadhaya grihita-padmo ramanujas tulasikali-kulair madandhaih anviyamana iha vas taravah pranamam kim vabhinandati caran pranayavalokaih

"O trees, we see that you are bowing down. When the younger brother of Rama walked by here, followed by intoxicated bees swarming around the tulasi manjaris decorating His garland, did He acknowledge your obeisances with His affectionate glances? He must have been resting His arm on the shoulder of His beloved and carrying a lotus flower in His free hand."

Here the word "ena-patni" means "O beautiful-eyed wife of the deer". Here the gopis imagine that the doe is like a human being, like the gopis themselves, and thus is the wife of a deer. The word "sakhi" means "you have attained my friendship because of your good fortune, which I will soon describe". "Priyaya acyutah" means "Shri Krishna accompanied by His beloved". "Gatraih" means "Their limbs entwined in an embrace". "Vah" means "of persons like yourselves", "drisham" means "of the eyes", "sunirvritim" means "the spiritual bliss born from seeing Lord Krishna", "tanvan" means "granting the best of all", and "upagatah" means "did He come near you?" Here the wives of the deer may ask: "How can you know if Lord Krishna was here?" Fearing the does might speak those words, the gopis speak the second half (beginning with the word kanta) of this verse, where, speaking words that indirectly praise the divine couple's amorous pastimes, they describe the symptoms of Lord Krishna's presence. Here the word "kula-pateh" means "the tilaka mark decorating the family of Vraja's king", "kunda-srajah gandhah" means "the fragrance of the jasmine garland", and "iha vati" means "is blown here by the breeze". What is the garland like? It is described here in the words "kantanga-sanga-kuca-kunkuma-ranjitayah", which mean "reddened with kunkuma from the limbs of His passionate and all-virtuous beloved". The gopis say: "We think that you, who perceive everything here, might have smelled this fragrance as you walked near Them."

Fearing this doe is concealing the joy she feels on seeing the divine couple and the grief she feels by separation from Them, and thinking the doe must certainly have seen the divine couple, the gopis joyfully describe a specific pastime the divine couple might have enjoyed at that time. Then, seeing the bent-down trees, and thinking them servants now bowing down before them, the gopis ask the trees if they had the good fortune of seeing the divine couple. In this way the gopis spoke Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.12. In that verse the word "anviyamanah" means "being followed", "caran pranayavalokaih" means "enjoying pastimes of mutual loving glances", "vah pranamam kim vabhinandati" means "did He respectfully acknowledge your obeisances?" Here the gopis mean to say: "Rapt in enjoying pastimes with His beloved, did Lord Krishna greet you? We do not think He did." These verses were spoken by Shri Radha's girlfriends.

Beginning with alambana and ending with sthayi-bhava, srngara-rasa has thus been described. Srngara-rasa has two divisions: 1. vipralambha (separation), and 2. sambhoga (enjoyment). Vipralambha means "attainment (lambha) of distance (vipra)". Vipralambha is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Shringara-prakarana, Texts 1-2:

yunor ayuktayor bhavo
yuktayor vatha yo mithah

abhishöalinganadinam anavaptau prakrishyate
sa vipralambho vijneyah sambhogonnati-karakah

"Vipralambha (love-in-separation) is of two kinds: 1. yunor ayuktayor bhava (love-in-separation of the youthful couple who have not yet directly met each other), and 2. yunor yuktayor bhava (love-in-separation of the youthful couple who have already met each other).

"The yearning to embrace and enjoy amorous pastimes on the part of the couple who have not yet met becomes the source of their intense pleasure."

The exalted nature of vipralambha is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Shringara-prakarana, Text 3:

na vina vipralambhena
sambhogah pushöim ashnute kashayite hi vastradau
bhuyan rago vivardhate

"Just as one cannot redden cloth or some other object without the use of red dye, in the same way the happiness of conjugal love cannot reach its fullness without there having been separation of the lovers."

This truth is confirmed by Lord Krishna Himself in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.20):

naham tu sakhyo bhajato 'pi jantun. . .

"But the reason I do not immediately reciprocate the affection of living beings even when they worship Me, O gopis, is that I want to intensify their loving devotion. They then become like a poor man who has gained some wealth and then lost it, and who thus becomes so anxious about it that he can think of nothing else."

Lord Krishna also confirms this truth in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.34-35):

yat tv aham bhavatinam vai
dure varte priyo drisham manasah sannikarshartham
mad-anudhyana-kamyaya

"But the actual reason why I, the beloved object of your sight, have stayed far away from you is that I wanted to intensify your meditation upon Me and thus draw your minds closer to Me.

yatha dura-care preshöhe
mana avishya vartate strinam ca na tatha cetah sannikrishöe 'kshi-gocare

"When her lover is far away, a woman thinksh of him more than when he is present before her."

Vipralambha has four divisions: 1. purva-raga (before the lovers have met), 2. mana (jealous anger), 3. prema-vaicittya (sorrow), and 4. pravasa (the beloved lives in a faraway place). Sambhoga is defined as the love when the two lovers enjoy (sambhoga) together. Sambhoga is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Sambhoga-prakarana, Text 1:

darisanalinganadinam
anukulyan nishavaya
yunor ullasam arohan
bhavah sambhoga iryate

"That state which, by glances, embraces, and other activities brings pleasure to the youthful divine couple is called sambhoga."

As was described before, vipralambha is divided into four parts, which begin with purva-raga. purva-raga is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Shringara-prakarana, Text 5:

ratir ya sangamat purvam darshana-shravanadi-ja
tayor unmilati prajñaih
purva-ragah sa ucyate

"That love born from seeing, hearing, or other kinds of contact before the couple have actually met is called purva-raga by the wise."

Purva-raga is seen in the following description of Queen Rukmini in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.52.23):

sopashrutya mukundasya

rupa-virya-guna-shriyah grihagatair giyamanas
tam mene sadrisham patim

"Hearing of the beauty, prowess, transcendental character, and opulencer of Mukunda from visitors to the palace who sang His praises, Rukmini decided that He would be the perfect husband for her."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 371

Now the purva-raga of the vraja-gopis will be considered. Although in some special circumstances sambhoga is manifest even in Lord Krishna's early childhood (balya), in general the pastimes where Lord Krishna is the gopis' paramour arwe manifested in Lord Krishna's kaishora (11-15 years) age. This is seen in the following words of Bhavishya Purana's description of Karttika-vrata:

balye 'pi bhagavan krishnah
kaishoram rupam ashritah

"Even in His early childhood Lord Krishna manifested the same enchanting handsome form He later manifested as a teenager (kaishora)."

This means that the form manifest in Lord Krishna's kaishora's age is also manifest, although hidden, in His other ages as well. Therefore the manifestation of sambhoga in these other ages is not inappropriate. By the Lord's great power His kaishora form may be manifested even in His childhood, even when He was only six-years old. In trhis way even at that young age purva-raga was manifest. Purva-raga is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.20.45):

ashlishya sama-shitosnam prasuna-vana-marutam janas tapam jahur gopyo
na krishna-hrita-cetasah

"Except for the gopis, whose hearts had been stolen by Krishna, the people could forget their suffering by embracing the wind coming from the flower-filled forest. This wind was neither hot nor cold."

Here the words "gopyo na jahuh" mean "the gopis did not leave". They did not leave because their hearts were stolen by Krishna (krishna-hrita-cetasah). In this way it is seen that they were tormented by separation from Krishna. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 372 and 373

The gopis' purva-raga love for Lord Krishna is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.1-19):

These things are certainly very wonderful.

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.21.1-19 the word "ittham" (thus) means "as was described in the previous chapter", and the words "kusumitam" (filled with flowers) and "vanam" (forest) also mean "as was described in the previous chapter". The word "vanam" means "the forest in that place", "shushmi" means "wild", "tad-vraja. . .venu-gitam asrutya" means "hearing the music of Lord Krishna's flute", "paeroksam anvavarnayan" means "in a secluded place they shyly described their love for Lord Krishna. It was not appropriate to describe these feelings in the presence of their elders. The gopis concealed all this from their elders' knowledge." We may note that here it is said they described their love for Lord Krishna, but they did not say that He had yet become their lover. The words "tad varnayitum nasakan" mean "they had no power to describe those confidential topics". The reason they had no power to describe them is given in the words "smarantyah" (remembering) and "smara-vegana" (by the power of Cupid). Then, in the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.21.5) the gopis describe the previously revealed activities of Lord Krishna. Here the words "adhara-sudhaya" (with the nectar of His lips) refers to Lord Krishna's playing the flute. By directly seeing Lord Krishna in this way the gopis became enchanted. Thus they had no power to speak (nasakan). They wildly embraced each other (abhirebhire).

Although they had no power to describe their love for Lord Krishna, the gopis still spoke (shri-gopya ucu).

There were two reasons they could not remain silent. The first reason is, even they did not understand that they were overcome by the great power of their ecstatic love for Lord Krishna. The second reason is they did not understand how they were overcome by their ecstatic love for Lord Krishna. The first of these reasons is seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.21.7. This verse has a second interpretation. Here the words It may also be interpreted to mean "The gopas drink the nectar of the face of Lord Krishna, the younger (anu) of the two princes of Vraja (vrajesa-sutayoh), a face where the flute is placed". The second reason is seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.21.8-9. Thus in the first part (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.21.7) of the gopis' explanation they attempted to keep their real feelings hidden, and in the second part (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.21.8-9) of their statement they found that they had no power to conceal their true feelings. In the passage beginning with Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.21.13 the gopis described their feelings in a more circumspet, a hidden way. Concluding this chapter of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami says (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.21.20):

evam-vidha bhagavato
ya vrindavana-carinah varnayantyo mitho gopyah
kridas tan-mayatam yayuh

"Thus narrating to one another the playful pastimes of the Supreme Personality of Godhead as He wandered about in the Vrindavana forest, the gopis became fully absorbed in thoughts of Him."

Here the word "tan-mayatam" means "they became rapt in thinking of Lord Krishna". This means they became like a rake who always thinks of women. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 374

The purva-raga of the unmarried gopi girls is also described in the Tenth Canto, 22nd chapter of Shrimad-Bhagavatam, which begins with these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.22.1):

hemante prathame masi
nanda-vraja-kumarikah
cerur havishyam bhunjanah
katyayani-arcana-vratam

"During the first month of the winter season, the young unmarried girls of Gokula observed the vow of worshiping goddess Katyayani. For the entire month they ate only unsiced khichri."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 375

Sending a love-letter (kama-lekha) is one of the activities of purva-raga. An example of a love-letter is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.52.37):

shrutva gunan bhuvana-sundara shrinvatam te. . .

"Shri Rukmini said (in her letter read by the brahmana): O beauty of the worlds, having heard of Your qualities, which enter the ears of those who hear and remove their bodily distress, and having also heard of Your beauty, which fulfills all the visual desires of those who see, I have fixed my shameless mind upon You, O Krishna."

After purva-raga comes sambhoga. Sambhoga has four parts: 1. sandarshana (gazing), 2. sanjalpa (conversation), 3. samsparsha (touching), and 4. samprayoga (union). Sandarshana means "gazing". An example of sambhoga characterized by gazing and touching is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.52.54-55):

saivam shanaish calayati cala-padma-koshau praptim tada bhagavatah prasamikshamana utsarya vama-karajair alakan apangaih praptan hriyaikshata nripan dadrishe 'cyutam ca tam raja-kanyam ratham arurukshatim jahara krishno dvishatam samikshatam

"On the pretext of the procession, Rukmini displayed her beauty for Krishna alone. Slowly she advanced the two moving lotus-whorls of her feet, awaiting the arrival of the Supreme Lord. With the fingernails of her left hand she pushed some strands of hair away from her face and shyly looked from the corners of her eyes at the kings standing before her. At that moment she saw Krishna. Then, while His enemies looked on, the Lord seized the princess, who was eager to mount His chariot."

These verses mean: "She shyly waited for the arrival of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. She looked at the kings standing before her. Then, with an agitated heart, she saw the infallible Supreme Lord." These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 376-378

An example in sambhoga of gazing and conversation in relation to the unmarried girls of Vraja is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.52.55):

tasam vasamsy upadaya
nipam aruhya satvarah
hasadbhih prahasan balaih
parihasam uvaca ha

"Taking the girls' garments, He (Krishna) quickly climbed to the top of the kadamba tree. Then, as He laughed loudly and His companions also laughed, He addressed the girls jokingly."

Here it may be said that although the gopis already had very exalted love for Lord Krishna, Lord Krishna still manifested this joking pastime to openly display that love and to enjoy a certain kind of loving pastime with them. Scholars learned in rasa-shastra yearn to relish this display of the gopis' love. In this pastime Lord Krishna does not touch the gopis or enjoy other kinds of sambhoga pastimes with them. This kind of purva-rasa is called "lajja-ccheda" (breaking the shyness). It is one of the different kinds of sambhoga. These different kinds of sambhoga are described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Shringara-bheda-prakarana, Text 66:

nayana-pritih prathamam
cinta-sangas tato 'tha sankalpah nidra-cchedas tanuta vishaya-nivrittis trapa-nashah unmado murcha mritir
ity etah smara-dasha dashaiva syuh

"Some other authorities list the stage of sambhoga in this way: 1. nayana-priti (falling in love by seeing the beloved), 2. cinta (thinking of the beloved), 3. sankalpa (deciding to pursue the beloved), 4. nidra-ccheda (loss of sleep), 5. tanuta (becoming emaciated), vishaya-nivritti (becoming oblivious to everything except the beloved), 7. trapa-nasha (destroying shyness), 8. unmada (becoming wild), 9. murcha (fainting), and 10. mriti (death)."

This condition of breaking shyness is the most exalted state in anuraga. Even when they accept death, the last of these ten states, the gopis do not abandon their shyness. To relish this kind of anuraga (breaking the gopis' shyness), Lord Krishna arranged these joking pastimes. In these pastimes Lord Krishna said to the gopis (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.22.11):

na mayodita-purvam va
anrtam tad ime viduh

"I have never before spoken a lie, and these boys know it. Therefore, O slender-waisted girls, please come forward, either one by one or all together, and pick out your clothes."

That the gopis' love for Lord Krishna is never broken and remained unchanged in every situation (even when Lord Krishna laughed at them) is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (01.229):

hasadbhih. . .

"Lord Krishna laughed loudly and His companions also laughed,"

Here the word "bala" indicated Lord Krishna's friends. Only persons who are Lord Krishna's friends may touch His body. Other's cannot. Lord Krishna friends are described in these words of Gautamiya Tantra, Prathamavarana-puja:

dama-sudama-vasudama-kinkinir gandha-pushpakaih antahkarana-rupas te krishnasya parikirtitah atmabhedena te puja yatha krishnas tathaiva te

"With fragrant flowers Dama, Sudama, Vasudama, and Kinkini worshiped Lord Krishna. These boys were all praised by Lord Krishna Himself. These boys all know Lord Krishna's heart. Their hearts are not different from Lord Krishna's heart. As Lord Krishna is worthy of worship, so are they."

Because these pastimes of Lord Krishna's relishing the gopis' anuraga love for Him are confidential, Lord Krishna pretended these activities were all a joke. This joking pretense is not incompatible with these pastimes. On the contrary, Lord Krishna joking enhances the bliss of the pastimes. The great sage Sukadeva Gosvami describes Lord Krishna's purpose in performing these activities. The sage explains (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.22.18):

bhagavan ahata vikshya
shuddha-bhava-prasaditah skandhe nidhaya vasamsi
pritah provaca sa-smitam

"When the Supreme Lord saw how the gopis were struck with embarrassment, He was satisfied by their pure loving affection. Putting their clothes on His shoulder, the Lord smiled and spoke to them with affection."

In this verse the word "ahatah" means "approached". Or, "ahaöah" may also mean "Although they had renounced almost all shyness, because of their feminine nature a small fragment of shyness remained. Because of this remaining shyness they gently bent their bodies." The word "shuddha-bhava-prasaditah" means "pleased at heart by relishing the gopis' splendid love, love that showed their longing to be with Him and their being enchanted by Him".

The next verse explains (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.22.19):

yuyam vivastra yad apo dhrita-vratah. . .

"(Lord Krishna said:) You girls bathed naked while executing your vow, and that is certainly an offense against the demigods. To counteract Your sin you should offer obeisances while placing your joined palms above your heads. Then you should take back your lower garments."

In order to see the last remnants of the gopis' shyness come to their final end Lord Krishna spoke these joking words. The next verse explains (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.22.20):

ity acyutena. . .

"Thus the young girls of Vrindavana, considering what Lord Acyuta had told them, accepted that they had suffered a falldown from their vow by bathing naked in the river. But they still desired to successfully complete their vow, and since Lord Krishna is Himself the ultimate result of all pious activities, they offered their obeisances to Him to cleanse away all their sins."

In this way Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami, the king of sages, reveals first the gopis'being enchanted by Lord Krishna and their longing to associate with Him, and then their obedience to His command. In the next verse Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami explains (Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.22.22):

dridham pralabdhah trapaya ca hapitah prastobhitah kridana-vac ca karitah vastrani caivapahritany athapy amumta nabhyasuyan priya-sanga-nirvrtah

"Although the gopis had been thoroughly cheated, deprived of their modesty, ridiculed and made to act just like toy dolls, and although their clothing had been stolen, they did not feel at all inimical toward Shri Krishna. Rather, they were simply joyful to have this opportunity to associate with their beloved."

In the verse the word "dridham" means "greatly", and "pralabdhah" means "cheated". The cheating of the gopis is described here in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.22.19. "Trapaya hapitah" means "deprived of their modesty". This is described in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.22.10. "Prastobhitah" here means "mocked". Lord Krishna mocked the gopis in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.22.10. Lord Krishna's making the gopis act like toy dolls is described in His making them stand with folded palms on the pretext of performing atonement. Even though Lord Krishna cheated them and teased them in many ways, the gopis did not find fault with Lord Krishna. On the contrary. It is said here that even though He had stolen their garments, the gopis did not feel eneimical toward Lord Krishna. On the contrary. They were plunged into bliss because they had an opportunity to associate with their beloved. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 379-382

Because they were brahmanis, the yajna-patnis were not qualified to associate with with Lord Krishna as the gopis did. Still, the yajna-patnis did have an ecstatic sentiment that was something like purva-raga. Gazing at Lord Krishna and conversing with Him, they experienced something in some ways like sambhoga. They experienced sambhogabhasa (the reflection of sambhoga). After the winter season had ended and summer had come, Lord Krishna's pastimes with the yajna-patnis became visible. The beginning of these pastimes is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.22.29):

atha gopaih parivrito
bhagavan devaki-sutah
vrndavanad gato duram
carayan gah sahagrajah

"Some time later Lord Krishna, the son of Devaki, surrounded by His cowherd friends and accompanied by His elder brother, Balarama, went a good distance away from Vrindavana, herding the cows."

This verse means: "After Lord Krishna had given His mercy to the unmarried girls of Vraja, a summer day came". That the day was a summer day distinguishes this pastime from the previous pastime (which occurred in the winter). On this day Lord Krishna was accompanied by Lord Balarama. That is indicated here by the word "sagrajah" (with His elder brother). Here the phrase "a good distance away from Vrindavana" indicates that Krishna and the boys were in the hilly part of Kamyavana. That they were in the hills is seen by the fact that they decorated their bodies with mineral pigments from the hills. That place is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.22.36):

tarunam namra-shakhanam
madhyato yamunam gatah

"Thus moving among the trees, whose branches were bent low by their abundance of twigs, fruits, flowers and leaves, Lord Krishna came to the Yamuna River."

With Vraja to their south and the Yamuna to the west, they entered a clearing to enjoy pastimes. To the south was Mathura City, and to the north was the place where some yajnika-brahmanas lived. The home of these brahmana's was near King Kamsa's palace. That is seen in these words describing the thoughts of these brahmanas (Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.52):

kamsad bhita na cacalan

"Thus reflecting on the sin they had committed by neglecting Lord Krishna, they (the yajnika-brahmanas) became very eager to see Him. But being afraid of King Kamsa, they did not dare go to Vraja."

In this way it is seen that those brahmanas did not go to meet Lord Krishna. The summer qualities of that day are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.22.30):

nidagharkatape tigme
chayabhih svabhir atmanah atapatravitan vikshya
druman aha vrajaukasah

"When the sun's heat became intense, Lord Krishna saw that the trees were acting as umbrellas by shading Him, and thus He spoke as follows to His boyfriends."

In this verse the phrase "nidagharkatape tigme" is a locative absolute. The yajna-patnis' sambhogabhasa (reflection of sambhoga) is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.21-23):

yamunopavane 'shokanava-pallava-mandite vicarantam vritam gopaih
sagrajam dadrishuh striyah

"Along the river Yamuna, within a garden decorated with buds of ashoka trees, they caught sight of Him strolling along in the company of the cowherd boys and His elder brother, Balarama.

dhatu-pravala-naöa-vesham anuvratamse
vinyasta-hastam itarena dhunanam abjam

"His complexion was dark blue and His garment golden. Wearing a peacock feather, colored minerals, sprigs of Mower buds, and a garland of forest flowers and leaves, He was dressed just like a dramatic dancer. He rested one hand upon the shoulder of a friend and with the other twirled a lotus. Lilies graced His ears, His hair hung down over His cheeks, and His lotuslike face was smiling."

prayah-shruta-priyatamodaya-karna-purair yasmin nimagna-manasas tam athakshi-randhrai antah praveshya su-ciram parirabhya tapam prajnam yathabhimatayo vijahur narendra

"O ruler of men, for a long time those brahmana ladies had heard about Krishna, their beloved, and His glories had become the constant ornaments of their ears. Indeed, their minds were always absorbed in Him. Through the apertures of their eyes they now forced Him to enter within their hearts, and then they embraced Him within for a long time. In this way they finally gave up the pain of separation from Him, just as sages give up the anxiety of false ego by embracing their innermost consciousness."

In this verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.23.23) the word "abhimatayah" means: "false ego", and the phrase "prajnam tapam vijahuh" means "as the sages, situated in spiritual trace, become free of all sufferings, so these women also became free of all sufferings".

One of those brahmanis, becoming free of their previous disqualifications, attained in her heart purva-raga love for Lord Krishna and then enjoyed sambhoga pastimes with Him, pastimes that begin with touching Him. This attainment of hers is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.35):

tatraika vidhrita bhartra
bhagavantam yatha-shrutam hridopaguhya vijahau
deham karmanubandhanam

"One of ther ladies had been forcibly kept back by her husband. When she heard the others describe the Supreme Lord Krishna, she embraced him within her heart and gave up her material body, the basis of bondage to material activity."

When she gave up the brahmana body she had attained by past karma, then he disqualification was destroyed and she was able to embrace Lord Krishna in her heart. In that way she attained Lord Krishna's association. This is described in these words of Bhagavad-gita (8.6):

yam yam vapi smana bhavam. . .

"Whatever state of being one remembers when he quits this body, O son of Kunti, that state he will attain without fail."*

The statement that she attained Lord Krishna's association means that she attained the form of a gopi. She did not attain the form of a brahmani and in that form associate with Lord Krishna. That Lord Krishna's close associates were all cowherd people is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.23.37):

evam lila-nara-vapuh. . .

"Thus the Supreme Lord, appearing like a human being to perform His pastimes, imitated the ways of human society. He enjoyed pleasing His cows, cowherd boyfriends and cowherd girlfriends with His beauty, words, and actions."

In this verse it is said that Lord Krishna enjoyed pleasing the cows and cowherd people. He did not enjoy pastimes with others, at least not in the land of Vraja. In Vraja that yajna-patni could not enjoy pastimes with Lord Krishna without becoming a gopi. She thus entered the Vraja that is not manifested in the material world. In that unmanifested Vraja Lord Krishna enjoys many different pastimes, pastimes without limit. This is explained in the Krishna-sandarbha. Therefore there is nothing wrong in her death. She yearned to attain Lord Krishna. With a great effort she struggled to attain Him. In that way she attained a very exalted relationship (rasa) with Him. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.23.35 quoted above was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 383

In the autumn after (Lord Shri Krishna's pastime of stealing the gopis' garments) all the vraja-gopis enjoyed sambhoga pastime with Lord Krishna, pastimes born of the gopis' purva-raga love for Him, pastimes that begin with gazing at Lord Krishna. These sambhoga pastimes are described (in the scriptures). Although the unmarried girls of Vraja had already attained Lord Krishna's association, they did not feel fulfilled. Their purva-raga love for Him had still not attained its full nature. Still, at least one gopis had enjoyed pastimes with Lord Krishna, as is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.21.17):

purnah pulindyah. . .

"The aborigine women of the Vrindavana area become disturbed by lust when they see the grass marked with reddish kunkuma powder. Endowed with the color of Krishna's lotus feet, this powder originally decorated the breasts of His beloveds, and when the aborigine women smear it on their faces and breasts, they give up all their anxiety."*

Still, many other gopis had not yet even touched Lord Krishna. This is seen in these words spoken by the gopis in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.36):

yarhy ambujaksha. . .

"O lotus-eyed one, the goddess of fortune considers it a festive occasion whenever she touches the soles of Your lotus feet. You are very dear to the residents of the forest, and therefore we will also touch those lotus feet. From that time on we will be unable even to stand in the presence of any other man, for we will have been fully satisfied by You."

When the gopis first heard Lord Krishna's flute-music they at first tried to suppress the ecstatic emotions that came to overwhelm them. From this it may be seen that they had not yet directly enjoyed sambhoga pastimes with Him. Also, because they had not yet enjoyed sambhoga pastimes with Him, Lord Krishna at first rejected them, and they then appealed to Him. These pastimes are seen in Shrimad-Bhagavatam, Canto 10, Chapter 29, in the passage that begins with these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.4):

nishamya gitam tad ananga-varadhanam vraja-striyah krishna-grihita-manasah ajagmur anyonyam alakshitodyamah sa yatra kanto java-lola-kundalah

"When the young women of Vrindavana heard Krishna's flute song, which arouses romantic feelings, their minds were captivated by the Lord. They went to where their lover waited, each unknown to the others, moving so quickly that their earrings swung back and forth."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 384

Jealous anger (mana) may bring separation (vipralambha) of Lord Krishna and His beloved. This is seen in the following words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Shringara-bheda-prakarana (Text 93):

aher iva gatih premna
sva-bhava-kuõila bhavet ato hetor ahetosh ca
yunor mana udancati

"The progress of loving affairs between young couples is by nature crooked, like the movement of a snake. Because of this, two types of anger arise between young couples-anger with cause and anger without cause."*

Jealous anger without a cause is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Shringara-bheda-prakarana (Text 70):

ahetur neti nety ukter
hetor yan mana ucyate
asya pranaya eva syan

manasya padam uttamam

"When without any cause the beloved says 'No. No.' and rejects the lover, this is called jealous anger (mana). This is the highest state of loving jealous anger."

Jealous anger is thus with a cause and without a cause. Jealous anger with a cause is described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Shringara-bheda-prakarana (Text 71):

hetur irshya-vipakshader
vishishöye preyasa krite bhavah pranaya-mukhyo 'yam irshya-manatvam ricchati

"When the lover gives special attention to a certain beloved, then all the rivals of the beloved become jealous. In this way what was once love becomes jealous anger. This is anger with cause."

Jealous anger is also described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Shringara-bheda-prakarana (Text 72):

sneham vina bhayam na syan nershya ca pranayam vina tasman mana-prakaro 'yam
dvayoh prema-prakashakah

"Without love there cannot be fear (for the loss of the beloved), and without love there cannot be jealousy. For this reason fear and jealousy may be manifestations of love."

Jealous anger is seen in the following words of Hari-vamsha, Vishnu-parva (66.4 and 65.50):

rushitam iva tam devim
snehat sankalpayann iva
bhita-bhito 'ti-shanakair vivesha yadu-nandanah

rupa-yauvana-sampanna
sva-saubhagyena garvita abhimnavati devi
shrutvaivershya-vasham gata

"As He slowly entered the palace, Lord Krishna, who is feared by fear itself, and who is the descendent of Maharaja Yadu, lovingly meditated on His angry queen Satyabhama."

"Meanwhile, hearing (how her rival Rukmini had attained a parijata flower from Indraloka), Queen Satyabhama, who was very proud of her opulent beauty and youthfulness, became overwhelmed with jealous anger."

When the beloved suspects the lover no longer loves her, then jealous anger with cause is manifest. Lord Krishna enjoys teasing His beloved in this way (to make her angry because she suspects He no longer loves her). An example of such teasing is seen in these words Lord Krishna spoke to Queen Rukmini (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.60.29):

tvad-vacah shrotu-kamena
kshvelyacaritam angane

"I only spoke in jest, dear lady, because I wanted to hear what you would say."

Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.30):

mukham ca prema-samrambha-
sphuritadharam ikshitum. . .

"I wanted to see your face with lips trembling in loving anger, the reddish corners of your eyes throwing sidelong glances and the line of your beautiful eyebrows knit in a frown."

Queen Rukmini refuted Lord Krishna's teasing arguments by speaking these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.60.40):

jadyam vacas tava gadagraja. . .

"My Lord, as a lion drives away lesser animals to claim his proper tribute, You drove off the assembled kings with the resounding twang of Your Sharnga bow and then claimed me, Your fair share. Thus it is sheer foolishness, my dear Gadagraja, for You to say You took shelter in the ocean out of fear of those kings."

Lord Krishna's teasing words in the pastime were proper, for they were meant only to increase His beloved's love for Him. Such words are approved by ancient and modern poets and philosophers. Now jealous anger in the mood of worship, which is called "adaraniya-mana", will be considered. When, during the rasa dance, at the time of their first intimate meeting, Lord Krishna abandoned all the gopis and remained hidden from their sight, the gopis became slightly angry with Him. This is seen in the passage beginning with these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.32.15):

sabhajayitva tam ananga-dipanam
sahasa-lilekshana-vibhrama-bhruva samsparshanenanka-kritanghri-hastayoh samstutya ishat kupita babhasire

"Shri Krishna had awakened romantic desires within the gopis, and they honored Him by glancing at Him with playful smiles, gesturing amorously with their eyebrows, and massaging His hands and feet as they held them in their laps. Even while worshiping Him, however, they felt somewhat angry, and thus they addressed Him as follows."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadwva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 385

By speaking words of praise the lover may pacify the beloved's anger. An example of this may be seen in these words of praise spoken by Lord Krishna to the gopis (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.32.21-22):

evam mad-arthojjhita-loka-vedasvanam hi vo mayy anuvrittaye 'balah mayaparoksham bhajata tirohitam masuyitum marhatha tat priyam priyah

"My dear girls, understanding that simply for My sake you had rejected the authority of worldly opinion, of the Vedas and of your relatives, I acted as I did only to increase your attachment to Me. Even when I removed Myself from your sight by suddenly disappearing, I never stopped loving you. Therefore, My beloved gopis, please do not harbor any bad feelings toward Me, your beloved.

na paraye 'ham niravadya-samyujam. . .

"I am not able to repay My debt for your spotless service, even within a lifetime of Brahma. Your connection with Me is beyond reproach. You have worshiped Me, cutting off all domestic ties, which are difficult to break. Therefore please let your own glorious deeds be your compensation.

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Anuccheda 386

Jealous anger or pride without a cause is called "pranaya-mana" (anger or pride caused by love). Such anger or pride has no external cause. Its only cause is the pastimes of love. The hero (Lord Krishna) also manifests this kind of pride or anger. In the rasa of love for the Supreme Personality of Godhead this kind of anger or pride is one of the uddipanas. An example of causeless anger or pride, pride born of love, is seen in the passage that begins with these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.48):

tasam tat-saubhaga-madam
vikshya manam ca keshavah

"Lord Keshava, seeing the gopis too proud of their good fortune, wanted to relieve them of this pride and show them further mercy. Thus He immediately disappeared.

Here the gopis had pride born from love (pranaya-mana). There was a cause of their pride. They were proud of their own good fortune. Therefore, to curb this pride and give them His mercy, Lord Krishna suddenly disappeared from the gopis' sight. Then it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.36):

yam gopim anayat krishno vihayanyah striyo vane. . .

"The particular gopi whom Krishna had led to a secluded forest when He had abandoned all the other girls began to think Herself the best of women. 'My beloved has rejected all the other gopis', She thought, 'even though they are driven by Cupid himself. He has chosen to reciprocate with Me alone.' "

This gopi also became proud with love (pranaya-mana). Filled with pride, She spoke these words to Lord Krishna (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.37):

na paraye 'ham calitum
naya mam yatra te manah

"I cannot walk any further. Please carry Me wherever You want to go."

As the other gopis were previously, this gopi also became proud with love. Then, with anger also born of love, Lord Krishna spoke to Her the following words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.38):

skandha aruhyatam. . .

"Lord Krishna replied: 'Just climb on My shoulder.' "

After speaking these words, Lord Krishna suddenly disappeared. The gopis have pride without cause (ahetu) and Lord Krishna has pride with a faint reflection of a cause (hetv-abhasa). Flowing through the great whirlpool of deceitful crookedness, the gopis' loving pride and anger become very intense. When they are separated from Lord Krishna, their anger becomes sublimely pure. Lord Krishna's other beloveds (other than the gopis) manifest grief, fear, and worry when they become angry with a cause. As example of this is seen in the Shrimad-Bhagavatam chapter when Lord Krishna teased Queen Rukmini with loving joking words. There Lord Krishna's intention was to make a playful joke. Queen Rukmini was very deep and her love very sincere. There Lord Krishna thought: "My wish is to enjoy pastimes of making My beloved angry. Her throat will be filled with emotional words that reveal her great love for Me. However, she may not clearly understand My intention. She will either become playfully angry, or she will say she does not understand My words. In this way I will try to joke with her. Even when I made her brother very ugly-looking she still did not become angry. It is not appropriate to continue in that direction. However, the happiness she feels by associating with Me is the be-all-and-end-all of her life. It is everything for her. Perhaps by mocking the pride she feels by being able to associate with Me I will make her angry. If she does not become angry in that way, then perhaps by making her afraid that she will be separated from Me she will speak many words revealing her love for Me." Thinking in this way, Lord Krishna spoke the loving joking words that begin in this verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.10):

raja-putripsita bhupaih. . .

"My dwear princess, you were sought after by many kings as powerful as the rulers of planets. They were all abundantly endowed with political influence, wealth, beauty, generosity, and physical strength."

That Lord Krishna was joking is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.9):

tam rupinim. . .pritah smayan

"As He contemplated her, the goddess of fortune herself, who desires only Him, Lord Krishna smiled."

In this way it is seen that Lord Krishna was only joking. The sincerity of Queen Rukmini's love is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.25):

tad drishöva bhagavan krishnah priyayah prema-bandhanam
hasya-praudhim ajanantyah karunah so 'nvakampata. . .

"Seeing that His beloved was so bound to Him in love that she could not understand the full meaning of His teasing, merciful Lord Krishna felt compassion for her."

"The Lord quickly got down from the bed. Manifesting four arms, He picked her up, gathered her hair, and caressed her face with His lotus hand."

In these verses the word "hasya-praudhim" means "the meaning of His joking words". Here Lord Krishna proudly thought: "Even though she is very wise and profound, and even though her love is very sincere, I will agitate her." The word "ajanantyah" means "because there was no crookedness or deceit in her sweet and sincere love, she did not understand the meaning of Lord Krishna's words". This is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.28):

hasya-praudhi-bhramac-cittam

"Rukmini's mind was bewildered by Lord Krishna's clever joking."

As a joke Lord Krishna had wished to see her playful anger. Thus He said to her in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.29-31):

ma ma vaidarbhy asuyetha
jane tvam mat-parayanam
tvad-vacah shrotu-kamena
kshvelyacaritam angane

"O Vaidarbhi, do not be displeased with Me. I know that you are fully devoted to Me. I only spoke in jest, dear lady, because I wanted to hear what you would say.

mukham ca prema-samrambha-
sphuritadharam ikshitum
kaöa-ksheparunapangam
sundara-bhru-kuöi-taöam

"I also wanted to see your face with lips trembling in loving anger, the reddish corners of your eyes throwing sidelong glances, and the line of your beautiful eyebrows knit in a frown.

ayam hi paramo labho griheshu griha-medhinam
yan narmair iyate yamah
priyaya bhiru bhamini

"The greatest pleasure worldly householders can enjoy at home is to spend time joking with their beloved wives, My dear timid and tempermental one."

Although at first she was frightened, now Rukmini may be displeased. That is why Lord Krishna now throws away the idea that Rukmini is meekly submissive to Him. Here the word "bhamini" is in the vocative case.

Lord Krishna, who had yearned to see Rukmini reveal Her love for Him, says in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.49):

sadhvy etac-chrotu-kamais tvam raja-putri pralambhita

"O saintly lady, O princess, We deceived you only because We wanted to hear you speak like this. Indeed, everything you said in reply to My words is most certainly true."

Wishing to refute Lord Krishna's assertion of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.60.49 and also wishing to reveal the truth about Lord Krishna, Queen Rukmini spoke these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.38):

tvam vai samasta-purushartha-mayah phalatma. . .

"You are the embodiment of all human goals and You are Yourself the final aim of life. Desiring to attain You, O all-powerful Lord, intelligent persons abandon everything else. It is they who are worthy of Your association, not men and women absorbed in the pleasure and grief resulting from their mutual lust."

After understanding that Lord Krishna was only joking, Queen Rukmini manifested a little of the anger that He had yearned to see. She said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.40):

jadyam vacas tava gadagraja. . .

"My Lord, as a lion drives away lesser animals to claim his proper tribute, You drove off the assembled kings with the resounding twang of Your Sharnga bow and then claimed me, Your fair share. Thus it is sheer foolishness, my dear Gadagraja, for You to say You took shelter in the ocean out of fear of those kings."

Here the word "jadyam" means "great foolishness" just as "madhuryam" means "great sweetness" in these words of Shrila Bilvamangala Thakura's Shri Krishna-karnamrita (Text 68):

madhuryam eva nu mano-nayanamritam nu

"Lord Krishna is the great nectar sweetness that fills the eyes and the heart."

In speaking these joking words, Lord Krishna's purpose was to agitate Queen Rukmini and destroy the pride she felt in always having His association. This is seen in these words spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.21):

etavad uktva bhagavan atmanam vallabham iva manyamanam avishleshat
tad-darpa-ghna uparamat

"Rukmini had thought herself especially beloved by the Lord because He never left her company. By saying these things to her He vanquished her pride, and then He stopped speaking."

Lord Krishna had another purpose also, a purpose seen in these words He personally spoke in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.60.56):

bhratur virupa-karanam yudhi nirjitasya prodvaha-parvani ca tad-vadham aksha-goshöhyam duhkham samuttham asaho 'smad-ayoga-bhitya naivabravi kim api tena vayam jitas te

"When your brother, who had been defeated in battle and then disfigured, was later killed during a gambling match on Aniruddha's wedding day, you felt unbearable grief, yet out of fear of losing Me you spoke not a word. By this silence you have conquered Me."

In this chapter of Shrimad-Bhagavatam are seen Queen Rukmini's great love for Lord Krishna and her natural absence of anger. From this it is seen that it certainly truthfully said that Lord Krishna's beloveds love Him very dearly. When the manifestation of pride and anger is concluded, then sambhoga is manifest. This is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.1):

ittham bhagavato gopyah
shrutva vacah su-peshalah
jahur viraha jam tapam-
tad-angopacitashishah

"When the cowherd girls heard the Supreme Personality of Godhead speak these most charming words, they forgot their distress caused by separation from Him. Touching His transcendental limbs, they felt all their desires fulfilled."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchadas 387 and 388

Now prema-vaicittiyam will be considered. Its qualities are described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Shringara-bheda-prakarana (Text 134):

priyasya sannikarshe 'pi premotkarsha-svabhavatah ya vishlesha-dhiyartis tat
prema-vaicittiyam ucyate

"When, even in the beloved's presence, the lover, out of intense love, is aggrieved with fears of separation in the future, such a state is called prema-vaicittiyam."

Prema-vaicittiyam is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.90.13-24):

krishnasyaivam viharato
gaty-alapekshita-smitaih narma-kshveli-parishvangaih
strinam kila hrita dhiyah

"Welcome, swan. Please sit here and drink some milk. Give us some news of the descendent of Shura, dear one. We know that you are His messenger. Is that invincible Lord doing well, and does that unreliable friend of ours still remember the words He spoke to us long ago? Why should we go and worship Him? O servant of a petty master, go tell Him who fulfills our desires to come here without the goddess of fortune. Is she the only woman exclusively devoted to Him?

Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.90.13 means: "With His gestures and other activities Lord captivated the hearts of His queens as He enjoyed pastimes with them." Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.90.14 means: "Rapt in meditation on Lord Krishna and thus momentarily speechless (agirah), and again and again maddened by their anuraga love, and meditating on playful lotus-eyed Krishna as if He were not present before them, the gopis spoke words devoid of common sense. Please hear these words as I relate them."

Maddened by the touch of separation from Lord Krishna, the queens speak Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.90.15-24. Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.90.15 means: "O Kurari bird, all alone, you lament at night somewhere in this world. Therefore you do not sleep. In some hidden place our master sleeps. Thinking, "Because of the similar sweetness of your lament and our lament, we think. . . ", the queens spoke the second half of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.90.15. In the following verses the queens think similar ideas in other ways. Then, thinking that, sent by the Lord, a swan has come as a messenger before them, the queens speak Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.90.24. In that verse they say: "Does Krishna remember what He spoke to us in private? or does He not remember it?" In that verse the word "ksaudra" means "O messenger of our fickle friend", "kamadam" means "who agitates young girls", and "alapaya" means "please call". Then the queens say: "We leave everything for Him. He should come without the goddess of fortune (shriyam rte). Here the queens sarcastically pretend to glorify the goddess of fortune. They say: "Of all women the goddess of fortune alone has true devotion to Lord Krishna. Therefore how is it possible that Lord Krishna will not be devoted to her." Speaking these words with voices choked with emotion, the queens sarcastically speak of the goddess of fortune and also reveal their own love and devotion for Lord Krishna. That is seen in this verse.

After this manifestation of love-in-separation, the queens enjoy eternal sambhoga pastimes with Lord Krishna. It is said of these queens (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.90.25):

itidrishena bhavena
krishne yogeshvareshvare kriyamanena madhavyo
lebhire paramam gatim

"By thus speaking and acting with such ecstatic love for Lord Krishna, the master of all masters of mystic yoga, His loving wives attained the ultimate goal of life."

In this verse the words "gatim lebhire" mean "they attained an eternal relationship with Lord Vishnu-Krishna." The reason they attained this relationship is given here in the word "madhavyah", which means "the eternal beloveds of Lord Krishna, who is called Madhava because He was born in the Madhu dynasty". This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchadas 389 and 390

Now pravasa (separation when the beloved has gone to a faraway place) will be considered. Pravasa is of many kinds. In the pravasa separation felt by the vraja-gopis, the gopis did meet Lord Krishna again. The qualities of pravasa are described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Shringara-bheda-prakarana (Text 139-140):

purva-sangatayor yunor
bhaved deshantaradibhih vyavadhanam tu yat prajnaih sa pravasa itiryate

taj-janya-vipralambho 'yam pravasatvena kathyate

"When the young couple, after meeting and establishing Their relationship become again separated by one of them moving to a foreign country or a distant place, such separation is called pravasa by the wise."

Pravasa is also described in these words of Ujjvala-nilamani, Shringara-bheda-prakarana (Text 153):

cintatra jagarodvegau

tanavam malinangata pralapo vyadhir unmado
moha-mrityur dasa dasa

"In Pravasa ten conditions are manifest: 1. cinta (meditation), 2. jagara (insomnia), 3. udvega (agitation), 4. tanavam (becoming thin and emaciated), 5. malinangata (withering of the body), 5. pralapa (abundant talking), 7. vyadhi (disease), 8. unmada (madness), 9. moha (bewilderment), and 10. mrityu (death)."

Pravasa is of two kinds: 1. kincid-dura-gamana-maya (where the beloved is separated by a short distance) and 2. su-dura-gamana-maya (where the beloved is separated by a great distance). The first of these is also of two kinds: 1. eka-lila-gata (in one pastime), and 2. paramparantarala-gata (within a series of pastimes). The first of these (kincid-dura-gamana-maya pravasa) is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.1):

antarhite bhagavati
sahasaiva vrajanganah
atapyams tam acaksanah
karinya iva yuthapam

"When Lord Krishna disappeared so suddenly, the gopis felt great sorrow at losing sight of Him, like a group of female elephants who have lost their mate."

This kind of pravasa is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.38):

tatash cantardadhe krishnah
sa vadhur anvatapyata

"But as soon as He said this, Lord Krishna disappeared. His beloved consort then immediately felt great remorse."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 391

The condition called pralapa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.39):

ha natha ramana preshöha. . .

"O master! My lover! O dearest, where are You? Where are You? Please, O mighty-armed one, O friend, show Yourself to Me, Your poor servant!"

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shri Radha.

"The gopis said: O beloved, Your birth in the land of Vraja has made it exceedingly glorious, and thus Indira, the goddess of fortune, always resides here. It is only for Your sake

"O greatest of personalities, You have repeatedly saved us from all kinds of danger--from poisoned water, from the terrible man-eater Agha, from the great rains, from the wind demon, from the fiery thunderbolt of Indra, from the bull demon and from the son of Maya Danava."

"You are not actually the son of the gopi Yashoda, O friend, but rather the indwelling witness in the hearts of all embodied souls. Because Lord Brahma prayed for You to come and protect the universe, You have now appeared in the Satvata dynasty."

"Your lotus feet destroy the past sins of all embodied souls who surrender to them. Those feet follow after the cows in the pastures and are the eternal abode of the goddess of fortune. Since You once put those feet on the hoods of the great serpent Kaliya, please place them upon our breasts and tear away the lust in our hearts."

calasi yad vrajat. . .

"Dear master, dear lover, when You leave the cowherd village to herd the cows, our minds are disturbed with the thought that Your feet, more beautiful than a lotus, will be pricked by the spiked husks of grain and the rough grass and plants."

dina-parikshaye. . .

"At the end of the day You repeatedly show us Your lotus face, covered with dark blue locks of hair and thickly powdered with dust. Thus, O hero, You arouse lusty desires in our minds."

pranata-kama-dam. . .

"Your lotus feet, which are worshiped by Lord Brahma, fulfill the desires of all who bow down to them. They are the ornament of the earth, and in times of danger they are the appropriate object of meditation. O destroyer of anxiety, please put those lotus feet upon our breasts."

surata-varadhanam. . .

"O hero, kindly distribute to us the nectar of Your lips, which enhances conjugal pleasure and vanquishes grief. That nectar is thoroughly relished by Your vibrating flute and makes people forget any other attachment."

aöati yad bhavan. . .

"When You go off to the forest during the day, a tiny fraction of a second becomes like a millennium for us because we cannot see You. And even when we can eagerly look upon Your beautiful face, so lovely with its adornment of curly locks, our pleasure is hindered by our eyelids, which were fashioned by the foolish creator."

pati-sutanvaya. . .

"Dear Acyuta, You know very well why we have come here. Who but a cheater like You would abandon young women who come to see Him in the middle of the night, enchanted by the loud song of His flute? Just to see You, we have completely rejected our husbands, children, ancestors, brothers and other relatives."

rahasi samvidam. . .

"Our minds are repeatedly bewildered as we think of the intimate conversations we had with You in secret, feel the rise of lust in our hearts and remember Your smiling face, Your loving glances and Your broad chest, the resting place of the goddess of fortune. Thus we experience the most severe hankering for You."

vraja-vanaukasam. . .

"O beloved, Your all-auspicious appearance vanquishes the distress of those living in Vraja's forests. our minds long for Your association. Please give to us just a bit of that medicine, which counteracts the disease in Your devotees' hearts."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.3 the gopis say: "As in the past You rescued everyone in Gokula, please now rescue us." The meaning is: "As You rescued the people from the bull's son Vatsasura, and from Maya Danava's son Vyomasura, please rescue us." In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.4-5 the gopis humbly pray: "You are the Supreme Personality of Godhead. As in the past with a single glance You protected all the worlds, in the same way please protect us now." In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.4 the words "satvatam kule" mean "You descended to this world in the family of Nanda Maharaja and other devotees". In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.5 the word "vrishni-dhurye" also refers to Nanda and the people of Gokula, for they were all born in the Yadu dynasty". This is seen in the following words of Skanda Purana, Mathura-mahatmya:

govardhanash ca bhagavan
yatra govardhano dhritah rakshita yadavah sarve
indra-vrishöi-nivaranat

"In that place Lord Krishna lifted Govardhaana Hill and thus rescued all the Yadavas from the torrential rains sent by Indra."

That the people of Gokula were members of the Yadu dynasty is also seen in these words of Skanda Purana, Shri Govinda-kunda-prastava:

yatrabhishikto bhagavan
maghono yadu-varinah

"In that place Lord Krishna was bathed by the demigod Indra, who had attempted to harm the Yadu dynasty.

After speaking Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.3, the gopis, with a mixture of love and anger, say in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.4: "You are not a true son of the gopi who is Vraja's queen, a gopi who always protected us when we were in distress. Rather, You are the Supersoul, the witness of the pure souls' actions, a witness who remains always untouched by the souls' sufferings and joys. Is it not so that on the demigod Brahma's request You descended to this world to protect all living beings? Therefore You should not ignore us." This the gopis humbly request in the second half of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.4. Then the gopis speak a similar prayer in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.5. Then in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.7 the gopis say: "Your feet are the abode of the goddess of fortune. They destroy the sins of the surrendered souls. Please very mercifully place Your feet on our breasts and tear away the lust in our hearts." Then the gopis say in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.8: "Is it not true that the sweetness of Your words, sweetness anointed with a very charming fragrance, has enchanted our hearts? The nectar of Your lips is the medicine that will revive us. How can we girls who have performed no pious deeds attain the nectar of Your lips? Even the nectar of Your words is very far way for us. Our elders and superiors stop us and imprison us in our homes. Therefore the nectar of Your pastimes is very difficult for us to attain." Thinking in this way, the gopis speak Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.9, where they say: "Persons who chant Your glories give a great gift to us." Then Lord Krishna might ask: "Why have you fallen in love (anuraga) with Me?" To answer this question the gopis speak Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.10. Lord Krishna may then ask: "How is it possible that My smiles and other actions and features could do such a thing to you?" To answer this question the gopis say: "kuhaka", (You are a great cheater). This word means: "You know that within You lies a great power to cheat and deceive others." The gopis then speak many other reasons also. Describing Lord Krishna's great, great attractiveness, the gopis then speak Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.31.19. These verses were spoken by the gopis.

Anuccheda 393

After these verses an example of sambhoga is given in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.3):

tam vilokyagatam preshöham. . .

"When the gopis saw that their dearest Krishna had returned to them, they all stood up at once, and out of their affection for Him their eyes bloomed wide. It was as if the air of life had reentered their bodies."

In this way the gopis' distress at being separated from Lord Krishna is gradually relieved. The first stage of this process is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.9):

sarvas tah keshavaloka-
paramotsava-nirvritah
jahur viraha jam tapam
prajnam prapya yatha janah

"All the gopis enjoyed the greatest festivity when they saw their beloved Keshava again. They gave up the distress of separation, just as people in general forget their misery when they gain the association of a spiritually enlightened person."

The second stage of this process is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.32.13):

tad-darshanahlada-vidhuta-hrid-rujah. . .

"Their heartache vanquished by the ecstasy of seeing Krishna, the gopis, like the personified Vedas before them, felt their desires completely fulfilled. For their dear friend Krishna they arranged a seat with their shawls, which were smeared with the kunkuma powder from their breasts."

The gopis relief from distress is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.1):

ittham bhagavato gopyah
shrutva vacah su-peshalah
jahur viraha jam tapam-
tad-angopacitashisah

"When the cowherd girls heard the Supreme Personality of Godhead speak these most charming words, they forgot their distress caused by separation from Him. Touching His transcendental limbs, they felt all their desires fulfilled."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 394-397

The second kind of pravasa, where the beloved is a short distance away (kincid-dura-pravasa) is also described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.1):

gopyah krishne vanam yate tam anudruta-cetasah krishna-lilah pragayantyo
ninyur duhkkena vasaran

"Whenever Krishna went to the forest, the minds of the gopis would run after Him, and thus the young girls sadly spent their days singing of His pastimes."

The gopis' condition of pralapa is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.2-21):

shri-gopya ucu

vama-bahu-krita-vama-kapolo
valgita-bhrur adharapita-venum komalangulibhir ashrita-margam gopya irayati yatra mukundah

vyoma-yana-vanitah saha siddhair vismitas tad upadharya sa-lajjah kama-margana-samarpita-cittah kashmalam yayur apasmrita-nivayah

"The gopis said: When Mukunda vibrates the flute He has placed to His lips, stopping its holes with His tender fingers, He rests His left cheek on His left arm and makes His eyebrows dance. At that time the demigoddesses traveling in the sky with their husbands, the Siddhas, become amazed. As those ladies listen, they are embarrassed to find their minds yielding to the pursuit of lusty desires, and in their distress they are unaware that the belts of their garments are loosening."

hanta citram abalah shrinutedam. . .
vrndasho vraja-vrisha. . .

"O girls! This son of Nanda, who gives joy to the distressed, bears steady lightning on His chest and has a smile like a jeweled necklace. Now please hear something wonderful. When He vibrates His flute, Vraja's buHs, deer and cows, standing in groups at a great distance, are all captivated by the sound, and they stop chewing the food in their mouths and cock their ears. Stunned, they appear as if asleep, or like figures in a painting."

barhina-stabaka. . .
tarhi bhagna-gatayah. . .

"My dear gopi, sometimes Mukunda imitates the appearance of a wrestler by decorating Himself with leaves, peacock feathers and colored minerals. Then, in the company of Balarama and the cowherd boys, He plays His flute to call the cows. At that time the rivers stop flowing, their water stunned by the ecstasy they feel as they eagerly wait for the wind to bring them the dust of His lotus feet. But like us, the rivers are not very pious, and thus they merely wait with their arms trembling out of love."

anucaraih. . .
vana-latah. . .
darshaniya-tilakah. . .
sarasi sarasa. . .

"Krishna moves about the forest in the company of His friends, who vividly chant the glories of His magnificent deeds. He thus appears just like the Supreme Personality of Godhead exhibiting His inexhaustible opulences. When the cows wander onto the mountainsides and Krishna calls out to them with the sound of His flute, the trees and creepers in the forest respond by becoming so luxuriant with fruits and flowers that they seem to be manifesting Lord Vishnu within their hearts. As their branches bend low with the weight, the filaments on their trunks and vines stand erect out of the ecstasy of love of God, and both the trees and the creepers pour down a rain of sweet sap."

"Maddened by the divine, honeylike aroma of the tulasi flowers on the garland Krishna wears, swarms of bees sing loudly for Him, and that most beautiful of all persons thankfully acknowledges and acclaims their song by taking His flute to His lips and playing it. The charming flute song then steals away the minds of the cranes, swans and other lake-dwelling birds. Indeed, they approach Krishna, close their eyes and, maintaining strict silence, worship Him by fixing their consciousness upon Him in deep meditation."

mahad-atikramana. . .

"O goddesses of Vraja, when Krishna is enjoying Himself with Balarama on the mountain slopes, playfully wearing a flower garland on the top of His head, He engladens all with the resonant vibrations of His flute. Thus He delights the entire world. At that time the nearby cloud, afraid of offending a great personality, thunders very gently in accompaniment. The cloud showers flowers onto his dear friend Krishna and shades Him from the sun like an umbrella."

vividha-gopa-caraneshu. . .
savanashah. . .

"O pious mother Yashoda, your son, who is expert in all the arts of herding cows, has invented many new styles of flute-playing. When He takes His flute to His bimba-red lips and sends forth the tones of the harmonic scale in variegated melodies, Brahma, Siva, Indra and other chief demigods become confused upon hearing the sound. Although they are the most learned authorities, they cannot ascertain the essence of that music, and thus they bow down their heads and hearts."

nija-padabja-dalaih. . .
vrajati tena vayam. . .

"As Krishna strolls through Vraja with His lotus-petal-like feet, marking the ground with the distinctive emblems of flag, thunderbolt, lotus and elephant goad, He relieves the distress the ground feels from the cows' hooves. As He plays His renowned flute, His body moves with the grace of an elephant. Thus we gopis, who become agitated by Cupid when Krishna playfully glances at us, stand as still as trees, unaware that our hair and garments are slackening."

mani-dharah. . .
kvanita-venu-rava. . .

"Now Krishna is standing somewhere counting His cows on a string of gems. He wears a garland of tulasi flowers that bear the fragrance of His beloved, and He has thrown His arm over the shoulder of an affectionate cowherd boyfriend. As Krishna plays His flute and sings, the music attracts the black deer's wives, who approach that ocean of transcendental qualities and sit down beside Him. Just like us cowherd girls, they have given up all hope for happiness in family life. ***

kunda-dama. . .
manda-vayuh. . .

"O sinless Yashoda, your darling child, the son of Maharaja Nanda, has festively enhanced His attire with a jasmine garland, and He is now playing along the Yamuna in the company of the cows and cowherd boys, amusing His dear companions. The gentle breeze honors Him with its soothing fragrance of sandalwood, while the various Upadevas, standing on all sides like panegyrists, offer their music, singing and gifts of tribute."

These verses are written in pairs (yugala). In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.35.3 the word "saha-siddhah" means "the goddesses and their husbands, the demigods, chanted the glories of Lord Krishna's flute music. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.35.8, in the words "adi-purushah ivacala-bhutih", the gopis, impelled by love, speculate: "Perhaps Krishna is the all-powerful and all-opulent Supreme Personality of Godhead, the greatest of all." This statement is like that of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.29.32. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.35.9 "Perhaps Krishna is Lord Vishnu, who is manifest everywhere". In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.35.16 the word "vraja-bhuvah" indicates the grass and other living entities manifest in the land of Vraja. Here the words "shayaman khura-todam" mean "the touch of Lord Krishna's feet is glorious because that touch relieves the distress of the ground. The newly sprouted grasses on the ground suffer when they are trampled by the cows' sets of four hooves." Gazing at Lord Krishna in sambhoga is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.22-23):

vatsalo vraja-gavam yad aga-dhro vandyamana-caranah pathi vriddhaih kritsna-go-dhanam upohya dinante gita-venur anugedita-kirtih

utsavam shrama-rucapi drshinam unnayan khura-rajash-churita-srak ditsayaiti suhrid-ashisha esha devaki-jaöhara-bhur udu-rajah

"Out of great affection for the cows of Vraja, Krishna became the lifter of Govardhana Hill. At the end of the day, having rounded up all His own cows, He plays a song on His flute, while exalted demigods standing along the path worship His lotus feet and the cowherd boys accompanying Him chant His glories. His garland is powdered by the dust raised by the cows hooves, and His beauty, enhanced by His fatigue, creates an ecstatic festival for everyone's eyes. Eager to fulfill His friends' desires, Krishna is the moon arisen from the womb of mother Yashoda."*

In this verse the word "devaki-jaöhara-bhuh" hints at Lord Krishna's name. The root of that hint of Lord Krishna's name is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.8.14):

prag ayam vasudevasya
kvacij jatas tavatmajah

"For many reasons, this beautiful son of yours sometimes appeared previously as the son of Vasudeva. Therefore, those who are learned sometimes call this child Vasudeva."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.35.23 the word "devaki" should be understood to mean "yashoda". Yashoda was also known by the name Devaki. That Lord Krishna's mother sometimes has more than one name is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.7.10):

nabher asav rishabha asa sudevi-sunuh

"The Lord appeared as the son of Sudevi, the wife of King Nabhi, and was known as Rishabhadeva."*

In this verse it is seen that Sudevi is another name for Queen Meru-devi. That Devaki is another name of Yashoda is seen in these words of Adi Purana:

dve namni nanda-bharyaya
yaaoda devakiti ca

"Maharaja Nanda's wife had two names: Yashoda and Devaki."

Gazing at Lord Krishna in sambhoga is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.24-25):

mada-vighurnita-locana isat. . .
yadu-patir dvirada-raja-viharah. . .

"As Krishna respectfully greets His well-wishing friends, His eyes roll slightly as if from intoxication. He wears a flower garland, and the beauty of His soft cheeks is accentuated by the brilliance of His golden earrings and the whiteness of His face, which has the color of a badara berry. With His cheerful face resembling the moon, lord of the night, the Lord of the Yadus moves with the grace of a regal elephant. Thus He returns in the evening, delivering the cows of Vraja from the heat of the day."

In this verse the word "vraja-gavam" refers to both the calves and the adult cows. It is then said in the next verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.35.26):

evam vraja-striyo rajan krishna-lilanugayatih remire 'hahsu tac-cittas
tan-manaska mahodayah

"O King, thus during the daytime the women of Vrindavana took pleasure in continuously singing about the pastimes of Krishna, and those ladies' minds and hearts, absorbed in Him, were filled with great festivity."

Here the words "mahodayah remire" mean "Joyful at Lord Krishna's return in the afternoon, they always celebrated a great festival". This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadwva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 398-400

Now dura-pravasa (separation when the beloved is far away) will be considered. This kind of separation is of three kinds: 1. bhavi (in the future), 2. bhavan (in the present), and 3. bhuta (in the past). This kind of separation in the future is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.39.13):

gopyas tas tad upashrutya babhuvur vyathita bhrisam rama-krishnau purim netum akruram vrajam agatam

"When the young gopis heard that Akrura had come to Vraja to take Krishna and Balarama to the city, they became extremely distressed."

In this situation the gopis lamented in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.39.19-30):

aho vidhata tava na kvacid daya samyojya maitrya pranayena dehinah tamsh cakritarthan viyunankshy aparthakam vikriditam te 'rbhaka-ceshõitam yatha

"O Providence, you have no mercy! You bring embodied creatures together in friendship and love and then senselessly separate them before they fulfill their desires. This whimsical play of yours is like a child's game."

yas tvam pradarshyasita-kuntalavritam. . .

"Having shown us Mukunda's face, framed by dark locks and beautified by His fine cheeks, raised nose and gentle smiles, which eradicate all misery, you are now making that face invisible. This behavior of yours is not at all good."

kruras tvam akrura. . .

"O Providence, though you come here with the name Akrura, you are indeed cruel, for like a fool you are taking away what you once gave us--those eyes with which we have seen, even in one feature of Lord Madhudvisha's form, the perfection of your entire creation."

na nanda-sunuh kshana-bhanga-sauhridah. . .

"Alas, Nanda's son, who breaks loving friendships in a second, will not even look directly at us. Forcibly brought under His control, we abandoned our homes, relatives, children and husbands just to serve Him, but He is always looking for new lovers."

sukham prabhata rajaniyam. . .

"The dawn following this night will certainly be auspicious for the women of Mathura. All their hopes will now be fulfilled, for as the Lord of Vraja enters their city, they will be able to drink from His lace the nectar of the smile emanating from the corners of His eyes."

tasam mukundah. . .

"O gopis, although our Mukunda is intelligent and very obedient to His parents, once He has fallen under the spell of the honeysweet words of the women of Mathura and been enchanted by their alluring, shy smiles, how will He ever return to us unsophisticated village girls?"

adya dhruvam tatra drisho bhavishyate. . .

"When the Dasharhas, Bhojas, Andhakas, Vrishnis and Satvatas see the son of Devaki in Mathura, they will certainly enjoy a great festival for their eyes, as will all those who see Him traveling along the road to the city. After all, He is the darling of the goddess of fortune and the reservoir of all transcendental qualities."

maitad-vidhasyakarunasya. . .

"He who is doing this merciless deed should not be called Akrura. He is so extremely cruel that without even trying to console the sorrowful residents of Vraja, he is taking away Krishna, who is more dear to us than life itself."

anardra-dhir eshah. . .

"Hard-hearted Krishna has already mounted the chariot, and now the foolish cowherds are hurrying after Him in their bullock carts. Even the elders are saying nothing to stop Him. Today fate is working against us."

nivarayamah. . .

"Let us directly approach Madhava and stop Him from going. What can our family elders and other relatives do to us? Now that fate is separating us from Mukunda, our hearts are already wretched, for we cannot bear to give up His association even for a fraction of a second."

yasyanuraga. . .

"When He brought us to the assembly of the rasa dance, where we enjoyed His affectionate and charming smiles, His delightful secret talks, His playful glances and His embraces, we passed many nights as if they were a single moment. O gopis, how can we possibly cross over the insurmountable darkness of His absence?"

yo 'hna kshaye vrajam ananta-sakhah. . .

"How can we exist without Ananta's friend Krishna, who in the evening would return to Vraja in the company of the cowherd boys, His hair and garland powdered with the dust raised by the cows' hooves? As He played His flute, He would captivate our minds with His smiling sidelong glances."

Then it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.39.34 and 37):

gopyash ca dayitam krishnam anuvrajanu ranjitah pratyadeshah bhagavatah
kanksantyash cavatasthire

"[With His glances] Lord Krishna somewhat pacified the gopis, and they also followed behind for some time. Then, hoping He would give them some instruction, they stood still."

ta nirasha nivavritur govinda-vinivartane vishoka ahani ninyur gayantyah priya-ceshõitam

"The gopis then turned back, without hope that Govinda would ever return to them. Full of sorrow, they began to spend their days and nights chanting about the pastimes of their beloved."

In this verse the word "vishokah" means "various kinds of sorrow". As they sang of Lord Krishna's pastimes, it was as if those pastimes were directly manifest before them and they saw those pastimes with their own eyes. Here the words "ahani ninyuh" means "in this way they passed the day and the night". These two verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 401

Dura-pravasha manifested in the past is seen in these words spoken by Lord Krishna in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.4):

ta man-manaska mat-prana
mad-arthe tyakta-daihikah. . .

"The minds of those gopis are always absorbed in Me, and their very lives are veer devoted to Me. For My sake they have abandoned everything related to their bodies."

In this kind of pravasa there are written letters between the lover and beloved and there are also messages orally repeated by a messenger. The messengers here may be Lord Balarama, Uddhava, or other friends of Lord Krishna. An example of such a messenger is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.3):

tam prashrayenavanatah su-sat-kritam sa-vrida-hasekshana-sunritadibhih

"Bowling their heads in humility, the gopis duly honored Uddhava with their shy, smiling glances and pleasing words. They took him to a quiet place, seated him, and comfortably began to question him, for they recognized him to be a messenger from Krishna, the master of the goddess of fortune."

Although in the past they had kept everything secret, when Uddhava arrived, the distraught gopis abandoned all shyness. This is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.40.9):

iti gopyo hi govinde
gata-vak-kaya-manasah krishna-dute samayate
uddhave tyakta-laukikah

"Thus speaking, the gopis, whose words, bodies, and minds were fully dedicated to Lord Govinda, put aside all their regular work now that Krishna's messenger, Uddhava, had arrived among them."

This is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.3):

apricchann

"Bowling their heads in humility, the gopis duly honored Uddhava with their shy, smiling glances and pleasing words. They took him to a quiet place, seated him, and comfortably began to question him, for they recognized him to be a messenger from Krishna, the master of the goddess of fortune."

In the sequence of verses in Shrimad-Bhagavatam this verse precedes Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.9 quoted above. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 402

Another example of the gopis greeting a messenger from Lord Krishna is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.65.9):

gopyo hasantyah papracchu
rama-sandarshanadritah kaccid aste sukham krishnah
pura-stri-jana-vallabhah

"Honored to have the personal audience of Lord Balarama, the young gopis smiled and asked Him: 'Is Krishna, the darling of city women, living happily.'

In this verse the word "hasantyah" means "with smiles mixed with love and anger, smiles that mock Lord Krishna". This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 403-413

In Uddhava's presence the gopis spoke wildly. This is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.11):

kacin madhukaram drishöva dhyayanti krishna-sangamam priya-prasthapitam dutam kalpayitvedam abavit

"One of the gopis, while meditating on Her previous association with Krishna, saw a honeybee before Her and imagined it to be a messenger sent by Her beloved. Thus She spoke as follows."

In this verse the word "kacit" (a certain gopi) refers to Shri Radha". This is explained in the Vasana-bhashya commentary. This truth is also seen in the Dashama-öippani commentary of Shrila Sanatana Gosvami. In the following eighth verses (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.12-19), angry Shri Radha speaks wildly. She says (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.12):

madhupa kitava-bandho. . .

"O honeybee, O friend of a cheater, don't touch My feet with your whiskers, which are smeared with the kunkuma that rubbed onto Krishna's garland when it was crushed by the breasts of a rival lover! Let Krishna satisfy the women of Mathura. One who sends a messenger like you will certainly be ridiculed in the Yadus' assembly."

Then She explains the reason for Her anger in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.13):

sakrid adhara-sudham. . .

"After making us drink the enchanting nectar of His lips only once, Krishna suddenly abandoned us, just as you might quickly abandon some flowers. How is, then, that Goddess Padma willingly serves His lotus feet? Alas! The answer must certainly be that her mind has been stolen away by His deceitful words."

In this verse Shri Radha criticizes Her rival, Goddess Padma. In the next verse She rejects the words of praise brought by the messenger. She says (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.14):

kim iha. . .

"O bee, why do you sing here so much about the Lord of the Yadus, in front of us homeless people? These topics are old news to us. Better you sing about that friend of Arjuna in front of His new girlfriends, the burning desire in whose breasts He has now relieved. Those ladies will surely give you the charity you are begging."

In this verse the word "vijaya" means "Lord Krishna, who brings all others under His control", "sakha" means "your friend", "sakhinam" means "of the women of Mathura", and "prasangah" means "songs that bring one under their control". The gopis here say: "These songs are faulty because they make us attached to Krishna. Even if you take that fault away, these topics still make us wretched and miserable. This proves that Krishna is completely merciless." The gopis say in the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.15):

divi bhuvi. . .

"In heaven, on earth, or in the subterranean sphere, what woman is unavailable to Him? He simply arches His eyebrows and smiles with deceptive charm, and they all become His. The supreme goddess herself worships the dust of His feet, so what is our position in comparison? But at least those who are wretched can chant His name, Uttamahsloka."

In this verse the word "api ca" means "nevertheless", "kripa-pakshe" means "wretched persons like us", and "uttama-shloka-shabdah" means the sound of Lord Krishna's name may be present". Here the gopis hint: "Because He will not allow us to see Him, He is not merciful, and because He is not merciful, He should not be called by the name Uttamahsloka".

Thinking the bee's gentle humming to be a host of flattering words from Lord Krishna, Shri Radha says in the next verse (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.16):

vishrija shirasi. . .

"Keep your head off My feet! I know what you're doing. You expertly learned diplomacy from Mukunda, and now you come as His messenger with flattering words. But he abandoned those who for His sake alone gave up their children, husbands, and all other relations. He's simply ungrateful. Why should I make up with Him now?"

With love and anger criticizing Lord Krishna, Shri Radha admits She cannot stop talking of Him. Then She finds fault with Him. She says (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.17):

mrigayur iva. . .

"Like a hunter He cruelly shot the king of the monkeys with arrows. Because He was conquered by a woman, He disfigured another woman who came to Him with lusty desires. And even after consuming the gifts of Bali Maharaja, He bound him up with ropes as if he were a crow. So let us give up all friendship with this dark-complexioned boy, even if we can't give up talking about Him."

Here the word "asita" means "Krishna, who is black because of all these misdeeds" and "sakhyai" means "with loving friendship". Again and again She affirms that Krishna should be rejected. She again finds fault with Krishna when She speaks the next verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.18):

yad-anucarita. . .

"To hear about the pastimes that Krishna regularly performs is nectar for the ears. For those who relish just a single drop of that nectar, even once, their dedication to material duality is ruined. Many such persons have suddenly given up their wretched homes and families and, themselves becoming wretched, traveled here to Vrindavana to wander about like birds, begging for their living."

In this verse the word "karna-piyusa" means "these topics may be nectar for the ears, but they are not nectar for the heart". They are sweet only in the beginning. The words "vidhuta-dvandva-dharma vinashöah" mean "at the end these topics make one almost unconscious". "Iha" means "in Vrindavana", "vihangah" means "parrots and other birds", "bhikshu-caryam caranti" means "they follow the activities of the sannyasis, which means they ignore their material bodies and other material things. It is seen that they act in this way". That is the meaning here.

Then Shri Radha laments in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.19):

vayam ritam iva. . .

"Faithfully taking His deceitful words as true, we became just like the black deer's foolish wives, who trust the cruel hunter's song. Thus we repeatedly felt the sharp pain of lust caused by the touch of His nails. O messenger, please talk about something besides Krishna."

Then, fearing that Her harsh and angry words spoken in these eight verses will chase the messenger away, Shri Radha tries to end Her quarrel with Lord Krishna. She says in the next verse of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.20):

priya-sakha. . .

"O friend of My dear one, has My beloved sent you here again? I should honor you, friend, so please choose whatever boon you wish. But why have you come back to take us to Him, whose conjugal love is so difficult to give up? After all, gentle bee, His consort is the goddess Shri, as she is always with Him, staying upon His chest."

With words of crooked irony Shri Radha speaks the second half of this verse. Here the word "dvandva" means "amorous pastimes". The reason amorous pastimes with Krishna are difficult to give up is given in the word "satatam" (Goddess Lakshmi always on Lord Krishna's chest). Here, speaking words of love and anger, Shri Radha imagines that the Shrivatsa line on Lord Krishna's chest is actually Goddess Lakshmi. At the end of this passage Shri Radha humbly speaks these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.21):

api bata. . .

"O Uddhava! It is indeed regrettable that Krishna resides in Mathura. Does He remember His father's household affairs and His friends, the cowherd boys? O great soul! Does He ever talk about us, His maidservants? When will He lay on our heads His aguru-scented hand? "

The messenger (Uddhava) sent by Lord Krishna consoled the gopis in two ways: 1. by praising them, and 2. by speaking Lord Krishna's message to them. He praised them in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.23):

aho yuyam sma purnarthah. . .

"Certainly you gopis are all-successful and are universally worshiped because you have dedicated your minds in this way to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Vasudeva."

Uddhava's repeating Lord Krishna's message is discussed in Krishna-sandarbha (Anuccheda 155) That message is given in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.29):

bhavatinam viyogo me. . .

"The Supreme Lord said: You are never actually separated from Me, for I am the soul of all creation. Just as the elements of nature-ether, air, fire, water, and earth-are present in every created thing, so I am present within everyone's mind, life-air, and senses, and also within the physical elements and the modes of material nature."

These words describe Lord Krishna's eternal pastimes with the people of Vraja in the eternal Vrindavana in another manifestation (in the spiritual sky). These words also describe the meditational process of jnana-yoga, by which the people of this world may obtain relief from material sufferings. However, the teaching of jnana-yoga do not bring peace to the gopis. Lord Krishna then explains in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.34):

yat tv aham bhavatinam vai. . .

"But the actual reason why I, the beloved object of your sight, have stayed far away from you is that I wanted to intensify your meditation upon Me and thus draw your minds closer to Me."

Lord Krishna also explains in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.37):

ya maya kridata ratryam. . .

"Although some gopis had to remain in the cowherd village and so could not join the rasa dance to sport with Me at night in the forest, they were nonetheless fortunate. Indeed, they attained Me by thinking of My glorious pastimes."

Further explaining the meaning of the words He spoke in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.34, Lord Krishna says in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.41):

api smaratha nah sakhyah
svanam artha-cikirshaya
gatan. . .

"My dear girlfriends, do you still remember Me? It was for My relatives' sake that I stayed away so long, intent on destroying my enemies."

By describing his purpose (in staying way) Lord Krishna's intention to increase the gopis' feelings of happiness and love for Him. This is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.47.53):

tatas tah krishna-sandeshair vyapeta-viraha-jvarah uddhavam pujayam cakrur
jnatvatmanam adhokshajam

"Lord Krishna's messages having relieved their fever of separation, the gopis then worshipped Uddhava, recognizing him as nondifferent from their Lord, Krishna."

In this verse the word "vyapeta-viraha-jvarah" means "by hearing of Lord Krishna's return and by hearing of other topics also, the gopis became pacified". In this context the gopis asked (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.40):

kaccid gadagrajah saumya. . .

"Gentle Uddhava, is the elder brother of Gada now bestowing on the city women the pleasure that actually belongs to us? We suppose those ladies worship Him with generous glances full of affectionate, shy smiles."

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.47.53 the word "atmanam" means "because he was a messenger sent by Krishna, Uddhava was able to know what was in Lord Krishna's heart", and "adhokshajam" means "the gopis thought Uddhava was Lord Krishna Himself". Because they thought he was Lord Krishna, the gopis worshiped Uddhava (uddhavam pujayam cakruh). The idea that Uddhava was Lord Krishna Himself is also seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.46.14):

tam agatam samagamya
krishnasyanucaram priyam nandah pritah parishvajya
vasudeva-dhiyarcayat

"As soon as Uddhava arrived in Nanda Maharaja's home, Nanda came forward to meet him. The cowherd king embraced him in great happiness and worshipped him as nondifferent from Lord Vasudeva."

This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 414-421

Lord Balarama's carrying a message from Lord Krishna in Dvaraka is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.65.16):

sankarshanas tah krishnasya sandeshair hridayangamaih santvayam asa bhagavan nananunaya-kovidah

"The Supreme Lord Balarama, the attractor of all, being expert at various kinds of conciliation, consoled the gopis by relaying to them the confidential messages Lord Krishna had sent with Him. These messages deeply touched the gopis' hearts."

After this message the gopis enjoyed sambhoga pastimes with Lord Krishna, directly seeing Him at Kurukshetra. Those pastimes are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.39):

gopyash ca krishnam upalabhya cirad abhishöam yat-prekshane drishishu pakshma-kritam shapanti drigbhir hridi-kritam alam parirabhya sarvas tad-bhavam apur api nitya-yujam durapam

"While gazing at their beloved Krishna, the young gopis used to condemn the creator of their eyelids (which would momentarily block their vision of Him). Now, seeing Krishna again after such a long separation, with their eyes they took Him into their hearts, and there they embraced Him to their full satisfaction. In this way they became totally absorbed in ecstatic meditation on Him, although those who constantly practice mystic yoga find such absorption difficult to achieve."

After in this way describing the condition of the gopis' hearts, Shrimad-Bhagavatam explains the gopis' ecstatic love for Lord Krishna in these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.82.40):

bhagavams tas tatha-bhuta vivikta upasangatah ashlishyanamayam prshöva
prahasann idam abravat

"The Supreme Lord approached the gopis in a secluded place as they stood in their ecstatic trance. After embracing each of them and inquiring about their well-being, He laughed and spoke as follows."

Agitating the gopis' hearts, Lord Krishna made the gopis forgive his offenses. His smile was glorious. Then He consoled the gopi with these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.41):

api smaratha nah sakhyah
svanam artha-cikirshaya
gatamsh cirayatan chatrupaksha-kshapana-cetasah

"My dear girlfriends, do you still remember Me? It was for My relatives' sake that I stayed away so long, intent on destroying my enemies."

In this verse Lord Krishna says: "Please do not remember Me with anger. Then, to show that He is indeed faultless, Lord Krishna says: "It was for My relatives' sake that I stayed away so long, intent on destroying my enemies." Here the word "svanam" means "of My father, the king of Vraja, and also of My kinsmen, the Yadavas". These words may also hint: "These two sides of the family (Krishna's kinsmen in Vraja and Dvaraka) were both part of the Yadava dynasty". Then Lord Krishna explains why He was so long in returning to Vraja. He says: "I was intent on destroying my enemies". These words hint: "From now only you will enjoy My company (sambhoga) without interruption".

Fearing the gopis may remain dissatisfied at heart, Lord Krishna comforted them by explaining that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the ultimate independent controller of everyone. He said (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.82.42):

apy avadhyayathasman svid akrita-jnavishankaya nunam bhutani bhagavan
yunakti vinuyakti ca

"Do you perhaps think I'm ungrateful and thus hold Me in contempt? After all, it is the Supreme Lord who brings living beings together and then separates them."

Fearing that the gopis might reply: "You are the Supreme Personality of Godhead", Lord Krishna explains: "Your separation from Me gave birth to great love for Me in your hearts. This is not against your actual desire." Lord Krishna told them in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.44):

mayi bhaktir hi bhutanam
amritatvaya kalpate
dishöya yad asin mat-sneho
bhavatinam mad-apanah

"Rendering devotional service to Me qualifies any living being for eternal life. But by your good fortune you have developed a special loving attitude toward Me, by which you have attained Me."

Shridhara Svami comments on this verse:

"This verse means: `Rendering devotional service to Me qualifies any living being for eternal life. But by your good fortune you have developed a special loving attitude toward Me.' The question may be asked:

`Why is this so?' The answer is given here in the words: `You have attained Me'."

Then, in order to console the gopis and reassure them they they indeed have attained His association, Lord Krishna explains to them that because He is the Supreme Personality of Godhead manifest in a humanlike form. He explains to the gopis that He is present everywhere and He is the shelter in which everything rests. He tells them in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.45-46):

aham hi sarva-bhutanam. . .

"Dear ladies, I am the beginning and end of all created beings and exist both within and without them, just as the elements ether, water, earth, air, and fire are the beginning and end of all material objects and exist both within and without them."*

"In this way all created beings reside within the basic elements of creation, while the spirit souls pervade the creation, remaining in their own true identity. You should see both of these-the material creation and the self-as manifest within Me, the imperishable Supreme Truth."

In the description of the Lord's Damodara pastimes it is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.9.13-14):

na cantar na bahir yasya. . .

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead has no beginning and no end, no exterior and no interior, no front and no rear. In other words, He is all-pervading. Because He is not under the influence of the element of time, for Him there is no difference between past, present and future. He exists in His own transcendental form at all times. Being absolute, beyond relativity, He is free from distinctions between cause and effect, although He is the cause and effect of everything. That unmanifested person, who is beyond the perception of the senses, had now appeared as a human child, and mother Yashoda, considering Him her own ordinary child, bound Him to the wooden mortar with a rope."*

In these two verses are described some of Lord Krishna's eternal pastimes in Vrindavana with the people of Vraja, pastimes also revealed in the Krishna-sandarbha, Anucchedas 174-175. Those pastimes are also considered here. The gopis were able to see Lord Krishna as the Supreme. That is described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.47):

adhyatma-shikshaya. . .

"Having thus been instructed by Krishna in spiritual matters, the gopis were freed from all tinges of false ego because of their incessant meditation upon Him. And with their deepening absorption in Him, they came to understand Him fully."

In this verse the word "atma" refers to Lord Krishna, and the word "siksaya" means "by His instruction". Their bodies old and worn by meditating on Lord Krishna in the mood of separation, the gopis then could see Lord Krishna in that way. Some thinkers interpret Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.82.45 in this way: "According to ordinary perception it seems that Lord Krishna is here preaching the philosophy of Brahman, but that philosophy is not the true meaning of His words here. When Rukmi was disfigured Lord Balarama preached to Shri Rukmini what also seemed to be the philosophy of Brahman. However, because Rukmini was directly enjoying pastimes with Lord Krishna, that preaching of Lord Balarama's was only a specific pastime meant to look like the activities of an ordinary person in this world. In the same way Lord Krishna's preaching of this philosophy to the gopis is also only a pastime. Actually the gopis yearned to enjoy pastimes with Lord Krishna directly in His spiritual form. This is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.82.48):

ahus ca te nalina-nabha padaravindam

"Dear Lord whose navel is just like a lotus flower, Your lotus feet are the only dhelter for those who have fallen into the deep well of material existence. Your feet are worshiped and meditated upon by great mystic yogis and highly learned philosophers. We wish that these lotus feet may also be awakened within our hearts, although we are ordinary persons engaged in household affairs."

In this verse the gopis say: "Dear Lord whose navel is just like a lotus flower, may Your lotus feet be awakened within the hearts of us, who are overcome by always meditating on You. Following Your instructions, the peaceful-hearted kings of yoga meditate on Your feet in their hearts." An explanation of this verse may be seen in the Krishna-sandarbha, Anuccheda 170. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 422

In this way the truth of sambhoga, which consists of seeing, touching, and conversing with Lord Krishna, is revealed. Lord Krishna stayed at Kurukshetra for three months. Then He and the gopis were again separated. After that there were not again separation between them. After that they enjoyed sambhoga pastimes together. The conclusion of these pastimes is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.83.1):

tathanugrihya bhagavan
gopinam sa gurur gatih

"Thus Lord Krishna, the spiritual master of the gopis and the very purpose of their life, showed them His mercy. He then met with Yudhishthira and all His other relatives and inquired from them about their welfare."

This verse explains that the gopis attained the desire they expressed in Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.82.48. This is seen in this verse, which explains that Lord Krishna gave His mercy (anugrihya) to them. This verse also affirms that they attained Lord Krishna, who is their eternal destination (gatih). This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 423

All of this is revealed in a passage from the Padma Purana, Uttara-khanda, a passage quoted in Krishna-sandarbha, Anuccheda 176. In that passage it is said that Lord Krishna left Dvaraka and returned to Vrindavana. There, visible to everyone, even the ordinary people of this world, He enjoyed pastimes for two months. After that Lord Krishna gave the people of Vrindavana eternal samyoga pastimes with Him, although those pastimes were not visible to ordinary people. Lord Krishna clearly explained all this to Uddhava in Shrimad-Bhagavatam's Eleventh Canto. There Lord Krishna says (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.12.10-11):

ramena sardham mathuram pranite. . .

"The residents of Vrindavana, headed by the gopis, were always completely attached to Me with deepest love. Therefore, when My uncle Akrura brought My brother Balarama and Me to the city of Mathura, the residents of Vrindavana suffered extreme mental distress because of separation from Me and could not find any other source of happiness."

tas tah kshapah. . .

"Dear Uddhava, all of those nights that the gopis spent with Me, their most dearly beloved, in the land of Vrindavana seemed to them to pass in less than a moment. Bereft of My association, however, the gopis felt that those same nights dragged on forever, as if each night were equal to a day of Brahma."

After that time there was no further separation of Lord Krishna and the people of Vrindavana. After that time the people of Vrindavana always enjoyed the bliss of Lord Krishna's association. Lord Krishna described this truth in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.12.12-13):

ta navidan mayy anushanga-baddha-dhiyah. . .

"My dear Uddhava, just as great sages in yoga trance merge into self realization like rivers merging into the ocean, and are thus not aware of material names and forms, similarly the gopis were so completely attached to Me within their minds that they could not think of their own bodies, or of this world, or of their future lives. Their entire consciousness was simply bound up in Me."

"All those hundreds of thousands of gopis, understanding Me to be their most charming lover and ardently desiring Me in that way, were unaware of my actual position. Yet by intimately associating with Me, the gopis attained Me, the Supreme Absolute Truth."

In these verses the word "anu" means "after the great separation", and "sanga-baddha-dhiyah" means "their hearts were overcome with bliss", and navidan" means "they were bewildered with joy". In that state it was as if they had become one with Lord Krishna. An example to explain that state is given here in the phrase beginning with the words "just as great sages in yoga trance". A different interpretation of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.12.13 has already been given in Krishna-sandarbhā, Anuccheda 177. What the gopis attained (prapuh) is described in this verse. It is briefly described there. There it is said: "The gopis attained Me, the Supreme Brahman, who am named Krishna." Here Lord Krishna hints: "Unaware of My true nature, that I am eternally the object of their love, the gopis attained Me as their paramour (jaram). Then, desiring Me as their husband, they eventually attained Me as their husband (ramanam)." In this way it is seen that the gopis' relationship with Lord Krishna after some time becomes parakiyabhasa (the faint reflection of the love a girl has for her paramour). All this is explained in that passage of Krishna-sandarbhā, Anuccheda 177. My glorious master, Shрила Rupa Gosvami explains in Ujjvala-nilamani (Nayika-bheda-prakarana, Text 3):

neshōa yad angini rase kavibhih parodha

tad gokulambuja-drisham kulam antarena
ashamsaya rasa-vidher avitaritanam
kamsarina rasika-mandala-shekharena

"The lotus-eyed gopis of Gokula descended to this material world to enjoy amorous pastimes with Krishna, the crest jewel of those expert at relishing transcendental mellows, and the enemy of King Kamsa. Except for those gopis, learned scholars and philosophers do not consider amorous affairs between a married woman and a paramour to be good or auspicious."

The scriptures explain that this was the activity at the time of Lord Krishna's descent to this world. The conclusion of all this is found in Shrila Rupa Gosvami's Lalita-Madhava (7.18), where it is said:

dagdham hanta dadhanaya vapuh. . .

"O moon-faced one, My dear friend ahs again come to Me. My desire to see Him scorched My body and wounded My heart with a monsoohn of pain. My life-breeath yearns to meet Him in Vrindavana and enjoy pastimes with Him in a cottage by the Yamuna's shore."

When the mistaken idea that He is their paramour is destroyed, then the gopis enjoy the full bliss of perfect sambhoga pastimes with Lord Krishna. In this way vipralambha is divided into four parts and sambhoga is also divided into four parts. In sambhoga are many different pastimes, such as lila-cauryam (playful theft), sanganam (singing and music), rasa (the rasa dance), jala-krida (water pastimes), and vrindavana-vihara (pastimes in Vrindavana forest). An example of playful theft is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.22.9):

tasam vasamsy upadaya
nipam aruhya satvarah. . .

"Taking the girls' garments, He quickly climbed to the top of a kadamba tree. Then, as He laughed loudly and His companions also laughed, He addressed the girls jokingly."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 424

An example of singing and music is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.9):

kacit samam mukundena. . .

"One gopi, joining Lord Mukunda in His singing, sang pure melodious tones that rose harmoniously above His. Krishna was pleased and showed great appreciation for her performance, saying 'Excellent! Excellent!' Then another gopi repeated the same melody, but in a special metrical pattern, and Krishna praised her also.

Another example of singing and music is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.34.20-21):

kadacid atha govindo
ramash cadbhuta-vikramah vijahratur vraje ratryam
madhya-gau vraja-yoshitam

"Once Lord Govinda and Lord Rama, the performers of wonderful feats, were playing in the forest at night with the young girls of Vraja.

upagiyamanau lalitam stri janair baddha-sauhridaih sv-alankritanuliptangau
sragvinau virajo-'mbarau

"Krishna and Balarama wore flower garlands and spotless garments, and Their limbs were beautifully decorated and anointed. The women sang Their glories in a charming way, bound to Them by affection.

In general the Holi festival is celebrated in this way. Thus, to celebrate the Holi festival, Lord Krishna and His brother, Lord Balarama, enjoyed singing and many other pastimes with a host of girls in Vraja. This pastime is also described in the Bhavishya Purana, Uttara-khanda. Even today, the people of India celebrate the Holi festival in this way. It is said in that passage of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.34.22):

nisha-mukham manayantav
uditodupa-tarakam. . .

"The two Lords praised the nightfall, signaled by the rising of the moon and the appearance of stars, a lotus-scented breeze and bees intoxicated by the fragrance of jasmine flowers.

The bliss of this festival, which occurs on the full-moon day of the month of Phalguna, after the winter has ended, is described in this verse. Lord Krishna enjoyed this festival with His joyful friend Lord Balarama. In some texts of Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.34.20 the passage reads "vane ratryam" instead of "vraje ratryam". In this reading the forest is described as the forest of Vraja. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anucchedas 425-427

The rasa dance pastime is seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.2):

tatrarabhata govindo

rasa-kridam anuvrataih. . .

"There on the Yamuna's banks Lord Govinda then began the pastime of the rasa dance in the company of those jewels among women, the faithful gopis, who joyfully linked their arms together."

The Lord's water-pastimes are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.23):

so 'mbhasy alam yuvatibhih parishicyamanah. . .

"My dear King, in the water Krishna found Himself being splashed on all sides by the laughing gopis, who looked at Him with love. As the demigods worshiped Him by showering flowers from their airplanes, the self-satisfied Lord took pleasure in playing like the king of the elephants."

Lord Krishna's pastimes in Vrindavana forest are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.24):

tatash ca krishnopavane jala-sthalaprasuna-gandhanila jushöa-dik-tate. . .

"Then the Lord strolled through a small forest on the bank of the Yamuna. This forest was filled to its limits with breezes carrying the fragrances of all the flowers growing on the land and in the water. Followed by His entourage of bees and beautiful women, Lord Krishna appeared like an intoxicated elephant with his she-elephants."

The meaning of these verses is clear. These verses were spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 428

The Lord's amorous pastimes with the gopis are seen in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.29.46):

bahu-prasara-parirambha-karalakoru-nivi. . .

"There Krishna threw His arms around the gopis and embraced them. He aroused Cupid in the beautiful young ladies of Vraja by touching their hands, hair, thighs, belts, and breasts, by playfully scratching them with His fingernails, and also by joking with them, glancing at them, and laughing with them. In this way the Lord enjoyed pastimes."

The meaning of this verse is clear. This verse was spoken by Shrila Shukadeva Gosvami.

Anuccheda 429

At the conclusion of the description of Lord Krishna's amorous pastimes in the rasa dance it is said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.33.25):

evam shashankamshu-virajita nishah. . .

"Although the gopis were firmly attached to Lord Krishna, whose desires are always fulfilled, the Lord was not internally affected by any mundane sex desire. Still, to perform His pastimes the Lord took advantage of all those moonlit autumn nights, which inspire poetic descriptions of transcendental affairs."

Lord Krishna's pastimes with Shri Radha, who is the crest jewel of all fortunate girls, are described in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.27-34):

kasyah padani caitani yataya nanda-sununa
amsa-nyasta-prakoshohayah
karenoh karina yatha

"Here we see the footprints of some gopi who must have been walking along with the son of Nanda Maharaja. He must have put His arm on Her shoulder, just as an elephant rests His trunk on the shoulder of an accompanying she-elephant."

Look, we can't see Her footprints over here! It's obvious that the grass and sprouts were hurting the tender soles of Her feet, and so the lover lifted up His beloved."

"Certainly Krishna sat down here with His girlfriend to arrange Her hair. The lusty boy must have made a crown for that Iusty girl out of the flowers He had collected."

In this passage Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.27 is spoken by all the gopis, 10.30.28 is spoken by Shri Radha's friends, 10.30.29 is spoken by the gopis who are neither friends nor enemies, 10.30.30 is spoken by Shri Radha's rivals, the second stanza (beginning with the words "na lakshyate) of 10.30.30 is spoken by Shri Radha's friends, who speak these words to torment Shri Radha's rivals, 10.30.31 is spoken by the rivals who cannot bear Shri Radha's good fortune, the last two lines (beginning with the word "atravaropita) of 10.30.31 and 10.30.32 are spoken by Shri Radha's friends, the first two lines of 10.30.33 are spoken by Shri Radha's rivals, and the last two lines of 10.30.33 are spoken by Shri Radha's friends. In this way Shri Radha's friends and rivals describe the pastimes of Shri Shri Radha-Krishna. It is also said in Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.26):

vilokyartah samabruvan

"The gopis began following Krishna's path, as shown by His many footprints, but when they saw that these prints were thoroughly intermixed with those of His dearest consort, they became perturbed and spoke as follows."

All the gopis spoke these words. Filled with longings, all the gopis wandered (in the forest). The passage quoted above (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 10.30.27-34) was spoken by the vraja-gopis.

The pastimes of Shri Radha had already been hinted at in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.30.11-12):

apy ena-patni. . .

"O friend, wife of the deer, has Lord Acyuta been here with His beloved, bringing great joy to your eyes? Indeed, blowing this way is the fragrance of His garland of kunda flowers, which was smeared with the kunkuma from the breasts of His girlfriend when He embraced Her."

"O trees, we see that you are bowing down. When the younger brother of Rama walked by here, followed by the intoxicated bees swarming around the tulasi manjaris decorating His garland, did He acknowledge your obeisances with His affectionate glances? He must have been resting His arm on the shoulder of His beloved and carrying a lotus flower in His free hand."

The reader may study these verses to see the pastimes of Shri Shri Radha-Krishna.

Epilogue

Many verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam's Tenth Canto we have not elaborately explained here. The devotees who yearn to taste the nectar of the rasas may study the explanations Shрила Shridhara Svami has given in His Dashama-öippani commentary. Following his explanations, we have explained the verses of Shrimad-Bhagavatam.

Now the Supersoul will be described. Although the Lord's Supersoul feature is also manifested in the spiritual world of Vaikunöha, it is generally said to that the Supreme Lord's Supersoul expansion is present primarily in the material world. The individual spirit souls and the Supersoul, both present in the material world, are described in the following two verses (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 5.11.12-13):

kshetrajna-the individual soul; eta-all these; manasa-of the mind; vibhutih-different activities; jivasya-of the living entity; maya-racitasya-created by the external material energy; nityah-from time immemorial; avirhitah-sometimes manifested; kvapi-somewhere; tirohitah ca-and not manifested; shuddhah-purified; vicashöe-sees this; hi-certainly; avishuddha-unpurified; kartuh--of the doer.

"The individual soul bereft of Krishna consciousness has many ideas and activities created in the mind by the external energy. They have been existing from time immemorial. Sometimes they are manifest in the wakening state and in the dream state, but during deep sleep (unconsciousness) or trance, they disappear. A person who is liberated in this life (jivan-mukta) can see all these things vividly.*

"There are two kinds of kshetrajna: the living entity, as explained above, and the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is explained as follows. He is the all-pervading cause of creation. He is full in Himself and is not dependent on others. He is perceived by hearing and direct perception. He is self-effulgent and does not experience birth, death, old-age, or disease. He is the controller of all the demigods, beginning with Lord Brahma. He is called Narayana and He is the shelter of living entities after the annihilation of the material world. He is full of all opulences and He is the resting place of everything material. He is therefore known as Vasudeva, the Supreme Personality of Godhead."*

This verse means: "Even though he is by nature pure (shuddhah), that is to say beyond the touch of the illusory potency maya, the individual spirit soul sees (vicashöe) the (etah) activities (vibhutir) of the mind (manasah), the mind having been created by the illusory potency maya (maya-racitasya). The mind sees all fields of activity. The mind will be further described later in this book. By seeing these activities, the individual soul, who is called the 'jiva', enters into them. Because he thus has knowledge of two different material bodies, the soul is thus called 'kshetrajna' (the knower of the field of action)."

Here someone may ask: "How does the illusory energy maya create (maya-racitasya) the material mind (manasah)?" The answer is given in the word "jivasya", which means "by making the individual soul think that the external material body is his true identity".

Then someone may ask: "What happens then?" The answer is that the soul then engages in impure material activities that have no relation to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Then someone may ask: "What are these material activities (vibhutih) like?" The answer is given in the word "nityah", which means "they have been existing from time immemorial".

Then someone may ask: "When are these material activities manifested?" The answer is given that they are manifest in the waking state and in the dream state, but during deep sleep (unconsciousness) or trance, they disappear (tirohitash ca).

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the creator of the waking state is explained in these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (2.6.42):

"Karanarnavashayi Vishnu is the first incarnation of the Supreme Lord, and He is the master of eternal time, space, cause and effects, mind, the elements, the material ego, the modes of nature, the senses, the universal form of the Lord, Garbhodakashayi Vishnu, and the sum total of all living beings, both moving and nonmoving."*

sakshat-directly; eva-indeed; svayam-jyotih-self-manifest; sva-prakashah.-self-manifest; na-not; tu-but; jiva-vat-like the individual soul; anya-on others; apekshaya-dependent; ajah-unborn; janmadi-shunayh.-free from birth and other material changes; paresham-of others; brahmadinam-beginning with the demigod Brahma; api-also; ishah-the master; naram-naram; jiva-samuhah-the aggregate of all spirit souls; sva-niyamyatvena-by controlling; ayanam-the resting place; yasya-of whom; sah.-He; bhagavan-the Supreme Personality of Godhead; aishvarya-opulences; adi-beginning; amsha-parts; van-possessing; bhagavad-amshatvat-because of being a part and parcel of the Supreme Personality of Godhead; vasudevah-Vasudeva; sarva-bhutanam-of all living entities; ashrayah-the shelter.

Here (in the verse quoted in text 3) the word "svayam-jyotih" means "The Supreme Personality of Godhead is manifested according to His own wish". This means that the Supreme Lord is not like the individual souls, who are dependent on others. The word "ajah" means that the Lord is free of material birth and other material transformations. The word "pareshah" means that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is master of Brahma and all other living beings. The word "narayanah" means that because He is the supreme controller, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is also the resting place (ayana) of all living entities (nara). The word "bhagavan" means that the Lord is the master of all opulences. The word "vasudevah" means that the Lord is the shelter of all living entities.

sva-mayaya-sva-mayaya; sva-rupa-shaktya-by His internal potency; atmani-atmani; sva-svarupe-in His own transcendental form; avadhiyamanah-avadhiyamanah; avasthapyamanah-being established; karma-kartri-prayogah-the instrumental case; mayayam-in maya; mayike-in the world created by maya; api-also; antaryamitvena-as the Supersoul; pravishöah-entered; api-also; svarupa-shaktya-by His internal potency; svarupa-stha-situated in Himself; eva.-indeed; na-not; tu-but; tat-samshakta-attached to that; iti-thus; arthah.-the meaning; vasudevatvena-as Vasudeva; sarva-kshetra-jnatritvat-because of being the knower of all fields; sah-He; aparah-without superior; maya-mohitah-bewildered by maya; jivah-the individual spirit soul; maya-rahitah-without maya; shuddhah-pure; kshetrajna-knower of the field; atma-the Soul; paramatma-the Supersoul; iti-thus.

The words "sva-mayaya atmani avadhiyamanah" mean "by His own internal potency (sva-mayaya) He has manifested (avadhiyamanah) the world within Himself (atmani)". Therefore in this passage the Lord is in the instrumental case. Thus the Lord enters the world created by the illusory potency maya and, by the power of His own internal potency, there He manifests His spiritual form of the Supersoul. However, He never becomes attached to that world of maya. That is the meaning. Here the Lord is called "vasudevah" because He is the knower of all fields of activities, and therefore no one is superior to Him. The individual spirit soul is bewildered by the illusory potency maya, but the Supersoul (kshetrajna atma) is never bewildered by maya.

He is always pure.

Thus the primary meaning here is that the Supersoul is the knower of all fields of activity. This is described in the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.4.25):

"Nevertheless, the living being is unable to see the Supreme Being, who is omniscient and unlimited. I therefore offer my respectful obeisances unto Him."*

Here the words "kshetrajnam capi mam viddhi", which in prose order become "mam ca kshetrajnam viddhi", mean "I am also the knower in all bodies". Thus the Supreme Personality of Godhead is not at all like the individual spirit soul, for the individual soul knows his own body only. That is the meaning. Therefore one should not accept the impersonalist theory, which states that the individual soul and the Supreme Personality of Godhead are equal. The impersonalist interpretation of the words "sarva-kshetreshu" here is complete nonsense.

Text 14

This is so because the personalist idea, that the individual soul and the Supersoul are different, will be affirmed in these words of Bhagavad-gita (13.12-13):

"I shall now explain the knowable. knowing which you will taste the eternal. This is beginningless and it is subordinate to Me. It is called Brahman, the spirit, and it lies beyond the cause and effect of this material world.*

"Everywhere are His hands and legs, His eyes and faces, and He hears everything. In this way the Supersoul exists."*

Further evidence that the personalist idea is correct is given by the Supreme Lord Himself when He defines the true meaning of knowledge in these words (Bhagavad-gita 13.8-12):

"Humility, pridelessness, non-violence, tolerance, simplicity, approaching a bona fide spiritual master, cleanliness, steadiness and self-control, renunciation of the objects of sense gratification, absence of false ego, the perception of the evil of birth, death, old-age, and disease, non-attachment to children, wife, home, and the rest, and evenmindedness amid pleasant and unpleasant events, constant and unalloyed devotion to Me, resorting to solitary places, detachment from the general mass of people, accepting the importance of self-realization, and philosophical search for the Absolute Truth-all these I thus declare to be knowledge, and what is contrary to these is ignorance."*

However, if in Bhagavad-gita 13.3 the Supreme Lord had wished to teach that the individual souls are not different from Him, and if this Gita passage were then like the Chandogya Upanishad's (6.8.7) declaration "tat tvam asi" (You are that), then the Lord would have said "kshetrajneshvaraya jnanam" (to understand the two knowers of this body, who are both the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is called knowledge). He would not have said what He actually did say: "kshetrajnaya jnanam" (to understand this body and its owner is called knowledge).

kintu-however; kshetra-kshetrajnaya-of the field and the knower of the field; iti-thus; asya-of this; ayam-this; arthah.-the meaning; dvi-vidhayor-of two kinds; api-also; kshetra-kshetrajnaya-of the field and the knower of the field; yaj-jnanam-which knowledge; tat-that; mama-of Me; eva-indeed; jnanam-knowledge; matam.-the opinion; anyarthash ca paramarshah iti nyayena-by Vedanta-sutra 1.3.20; maj-jnana-knowledge of Me; eka-only; tatparyakam-the meaning; iti-thus; arthah-the meaning; jneyasya-of the object of knowledge; ekatvena-by being one; eva-indeed; nirdishöatvad-because of being taught; yogyatvac-because of the propriety; ca.-also.

Here is the true meaning of the words "kshetra-kshetrajnaya": "To understand the two different persons who know this body is called knowledge. That is My opinion." This is also confirmed in the following words of Shri Vedanta-sutra (1.3.21):

anyarthash ca paramarshah

"The meaning here is that the individual soul is different from the Supreme."

Thus, ultimately, the Supreme Lord says here: "True knowledge is knowledge of Me". This is so because here a single object of knowledge is described. That is the proper understanding.

The knowledge here is not like the atheistic sankhya theory, which accepts only the individual soul and the field of the soul's perception. The reason is given here in the word "mam" (Me). With this word the Supreme Personality of Godhead affirms that He Himself is the proper object of knowledge. Nor is the knowledge described here like the impersonalists' theory that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is an illusion and only foolish people believe that the Supreme Personality of Godhead really exists. This idea of the impersonalists is not supported by the Vedas, Bhagavad-gita, and other scriptures, for this idea is the same as the idea of the Buddhists. The impersonalists and the Buddhists actually share the same philosophy, a philosophy that is wildly illogical.

Many quotes may be gathered from the scriptures to prove that the impersonalist idea of the Supreme Personality of Godhead does not lead to final liberation. For example, in the previous chapter of Bhagavad-gita it is said that the impersonalist theory should be rejected. There it is said (Bhagavad-gita 12.1-2):

"Arjuna inquired: Which is considered to be more perfect: those who are properly engaged in Your devotional service, or those who worship the impersonal Brahman, the unmanifested?*

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead said: He whose mind is fixed on My personal form, always engaged in worshipping Me with great and transcendental faith, is considered by Me to be most perfect."*

The impersonalist theory is also criticized in these words spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself (Bhagavad-gita 12.6-7):

"For one who worships Me, giving up all his activities unto Me and being devoted to Me without deviation, engaged in devotional service and always meditating upon Me, who has fixed his mind upon Me, O son of Pritha, for him I am the swift deliverer from the ocean of birth and death."*

tad uktam ekadashe svayam-bhagavata yat karmabhir yat tapasa ity adi-Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.20.32-33.

The Supreme Personality of Godhead again criticizes it in these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 11.20.32-33):

"Everything that can be achieved by fruitive activities, penance, knowledge, detachment, mystic yoga, charity, religious duties, and all other means of perfecting life is easily achieved by My devotee through loving service unto Me. If somehow or other My devotee desires promotion to heaven, liberation, or residence in My abode, he easily achieves such benedictions."

This is also confirmed by the following words of Shri Moksha-dharma:

"A person who takes shelter of Lord Narayana attains the four goals of life. He does not need to perform any other spiritual activities other than taking shelter of the Lord."

So the previous chapter's (Chapter 12 of Bhagavad-gita) praise of the personal conception of God shall not go in vain, the Supreme Personality of Godhead again praises the personalist idea in these words (Bhagavad-gita 13.8):

Text 24

Thus it is explained that by engaging in devotional service one may easily understand all this. The knower of one field of activities (body) is the individual soul, the devotee of the Lord. The knower of all fields of activities (bodies) is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is the object of knowledge for the individual souls. The truth about the field of activities (the body) and the knower of the field (the spirit soul) should be understood by studying the scriptures. The individual spirit soul is thus one person and the Supreme Personality of Godhead is a different person. The scriptures reveal that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is never fallible.

The fallible individual spirit soul who resides in the material world is described in these words of Bhagavad-gita (13.22):

"The living entity in material nature thus follows the ways of life, enjoying the three modes of nature. This is due to his association with the material nature. Thus he meets with good and evil amongst various species."*

In this way the individual soul in the material world is described. To reveal the truth about the world beyond the realm of matter, the eternal and infallible Supreme Lord is described in these words (Bhagavad-gita 13.23):

Text 28

Superior to the individual soul is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who appears here in a form called "Paramatma" (the Supersoul). How much is the Supersoul superior to the individual soul? The Bhagavad-gita (15.16-17) reveals:

In these words the Lord Himself declares that the individual spirit soul is also infallible. In Bhagavad-gita 13.23, "upadrashöa" means "the supreme witness", "anumanta" means "the permitter of various activities", "bharta" means "the maintainer", "bhokta" means "the protector", "maheshvarah" means "the ruler of all", "paramatma" means "the Supersoul who resides in the hearts of all".

In the following two verses (Bhagavad-gita 15.16-17) the word "kuöasthah" is defined by the Amara-kosha dictionary in these words:

"The word `kuöasthah' means `He whose form does not change in the course of time'."

The "kuöasthah" is thus the pure, liberated individual soul. The Lord then says "uttamah purushas tv anyah" (Above even the liberated soul is the greatest living personality, the Lord Himself).

In this way the field of activities (the body), the knower of that field, and the knower of all fields (all bodies) are described. In the following two verses (Bhagavad-gita 15.16-17) the word "anyah" (another) indicates that there are two distinct infallible beings. Thus in liberation the individual soul does not become formless. Thus it is revealed that the Supreme and the individual soul are never formless.

tasmat mad-bhavayopapadyate iti yad uktam. tad api tat-sarishöi-prapti-tatparyakam. tad evam dvayor aksharatvena samye 'pi jivasya hina-shaktitvat prakrity-avishöasya tan-nivrittty-artham ishvara eva bhajaniyatvena jneya iti bhavah.

tasmat-therefore; mad-bhavayopapadyate-"mad-bhavayopapadyate"; iti-thus; yat-which; uktam.-said; tat-that; api-also; tat-of Him; sarishöi-the liberation of possessing opulences like those of the Supreme Personality of Godhead; prapti-attainment; tatparyakam-the meaning; tat-that; evam-thus; dvayoh-of both; aksharatvena-with infallibility; samye-in equality; api-even; jivasya-of the individual spirit soul; hina-without; shaktitvat-because of the nature of potency; prakriti-into matter; avishöasya-entered; tan-nivrittty-artham-for the sake of renouncing that; ishvara-the Supreme Personality of Godhead; eva-indeed; bhajaniyatvena-because of being the object of worship; jneya-to be known; iti-thus; bhavah-the meaning.

Although the Lord clearly says (Bhagavad-gita 13.19) "mad-bhavayopapadyate" (the devotees attain to My nature), the meaning here is that the devotees attain transcendental opulences like those of the Lord Himself, not that they become the Lord. Although the Lord and the individual soul are both equally infallible, the individual soul is not as powerful as the Lord. That is why the individual soul is trapped in the material world and why, in order to become free of that trap of material existence, the individual soul must worship the Supreme Lord. That is the meaning.

tasmat-therefore; idam shariram ity adikam-Bhagavad-gita 13.2; punah-again; ittham-thus; vivecaniyam-to be considered; idam-idam; iti-thus; sva-svaparoksham-visible; iti-thus; arthah.-the meaning; sharira-of the body; kshetrayoh-of the two fields; ekaikatvena-with oneness; grahanam-to be accepted; atra-here; vyakti-manifestation; paryavasana-with the determination; jati-birth; puraskarena-placing first; eva-indeed; iti-thus; gamyate-is attained; sarva-kshetreshu-in all fields; iti-thus; bahu-vacanena-by the plural number; anuvadat-from the statement.

Let us now consider again the statement of Bhagavad-gita 13.2 ("This body, O son of Kunti, is called the field, and one who knows this body is called the knower of the field.*"). The word "idam" (this) means "this thing that is directly perceived". The word "sarva-kshetreshu" (in all bodies) in Bhagavad-gita 13.3 is plural because the conditioned soul in the material accepts many sets of two material bodies, one after another.

Note: The conditioned soul has two material bodies: 1. the subtle body of mind, intelligence and false ego, and 2. the gross body of senses and limbs.

These statements of Bhagavad-gita 13.2 are confirmed by the following words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (6.4.25):

"Because they are only matter, the body, the life airs, the external and internal senses, the five gross elements, and the subtle sense objects (form, taste, smell, sound, and touch) cannot know their own nature, the nature of the other senses, or the nature of their controllers. But the living being, because of his spiritual nature, can know his body, the life airs, the senses, the elements, and the sense objects, and he can also know the three qualities that form their roots. Nevertheless, although the living being is completely aware of them, he is unable to see the Supreme Being, who is omniscient and unlimited. I therefore offer my respectful obeisances unto Him."*

These statements are again confirmed by these words of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.11.12-13):

"The individual soul bereft of Krishna consciousness has many ideas and activities created in the mind by the external energy. They have been existing from time immemorial. Sometimes they are manifest in the waking state and in the dream state, but during deep sleep (unconsciousness) or trance, they disappear. A person who is liberated in this life (jivan-mukta) can see all these things vividly.*

"There are two kinds of kshetrajna: the living entity, as explained above, and the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is explained as follows. He is the all-pervading cause of creation. He is full in Himself and is not dependent on others. He is perceived by hearing and direct perception. He is self-effulgent and does not experience birth, death, old-age, or disease. He is the controller of all the demigods, beginning with Lord Brahma. He is called Narayana and He is the shelter of living entities after the annihilation of the material world. He is full of all opulences and He is the resting place of everything material. He is therefore known as Vasudeva, the Supreme Personality of Godhead."*

In Bhagavad-gita 13.3 the Supreme Lord's declaration "kshetrajnam capi mam viddhi" (You should understand that I am also the knower in all bodies) means that the Supreme Personality of Godhead knows what is happening in every body and in the entire universe as a whole. In this way He is not like the individual spirit souls, who each know only what his happening within his own limited sphere of perception.

In this passage (Bhagavad-gita 13.3) there is no object other than "mam" (Me). Therefore here it is difficult to reject the direct, literal interpretation and accept instead a secondary, allegorical, round-about interpretation of these words. If one insists on trying to interpret these words in such a way that they may affirm that the individual soul is identical with the Supreme, the only way he can do it is by re-writing the clear statement "kshetrajnam capi mam viddhi" (You should understand that I am also the knower in all bodies) so that it reads instead "kshetrajnam tam capi mam viddhi" (You should understand that the individual soul and I are the knowers in all bodies). However, it is not possible to thus re-write the words of scripture, and thus it is not possible to say that anyone but the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the knower in all bodies, as the words "sarva-kshetreshu bharata" declare. Therefore it must be said that two different persons are knowers of the field of activities This is confirmed by Shrimad-Bhagavatam 5.11.12-13 (quoted here in text 37) and it is also confirmed by these words of Vedanta-sutra (1.2.11):

guham pravishöav atmanau hi tad-darshanat iti.

"Two persons reside in the heart, for that is the conclusion of scripture."

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the individual spirit soul are different persons may be inferred by this description of the conditioned soul (Bhagavad-gita 13.22):

"The living entity in material nature thus follows the ways of life, enjoying the three modes of nature. This is due to his association with that material nature. Thus he meets with good and evil amongst various species."*

That the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the individual spirit soul are different persons is explained again and again in all the scriptures, from the beginning to the end. For example, the author of Vedanta-sutra (Vedanta-sutra 2.1.17) declares:

"If someone says that the individual soul and the Supreme are not different, then I reply: No. That cannot be so, for all the scriptures declare that they have very different natures."

The field of activities described in Bhagavad-gita 13.3 is the part of the world that is perceived by the knowledge-acquiring senses. The knowledge thus obtained will be further described later in this book. As was previously explained, each individual soul has direct knowledge only of his own small field of perception. Thus the knowledge obtained by the individual soul is only a shadow of the knowledge obtained by the Lord. The individual soul has only a very small part of a part of the knowledge possessed by the Supreme Lord. Therefore it is truly said that the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the primary, the most important knower of the field of action.

The Supersoul described here is a direct manifestation of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The individual spirit souls are potencies of the Lord. They are parts and parcels of the Lord. This is described in the following prayer of Shrimad-Bhagavatam (10.87.30):

"O Supreme eternal! If the embodied living entities were eternal and all-pervading like You, then they would not be under Your control. But if the living entities are accepted as minute energies of Your Lordship, then they are at once subject to Your supreme control. Therefore, real liberation entails surrender by the living entities to Your control, and that surrender will make them happy. In that constitutional position only can they be controllers. Therefore, men with limited knowledge who advocate the monistic theory that God and the living entities are equal in all respects are actually misleading themselves and others."*

"With a single fragment of Myself I pervade and support this entire universe."*

Manifesting His form of Lord Pradyumna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead becomes the Supersoul of Brahma and others. Manifesting His form of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Personality of Godhead becomes the Supersoul of Manu and others. Manifesting His form of Lord Sankarshana, the Supreme Personality of Godhead becomes the Supersoul of Shiva and others. This is confirmed by the words of the scriptures. Thus descending to the material world in His different partial forms, the Lord becomes the Supersoul residing in the hearts of all living beings.

That Lord Shiva is manifested from the purusha-avatara Lord Sankarshana is confirmed by the following two quotes from scripture. In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (5.17.16) it is said:

"Lord Shiva knows that Lord Sankarshana is the original cause of his own existence, and thus he always meditates upon Him in trance."*

In Shrimad-Bhagavatam (11.4.5) it is also said:

"In the beginning, the original Supreme Personality manifested the form of Brahma through the material mode of passion in order to create this universe. The Lord manifested His form as Vishnu, the Lord of sacrifice and protector of the \square twice-born brahmanas and their religious duties to maintain the universe. And when the universe is to be annihilated the same Supreme Lord employs the material mode of ignorance and manifests the form of Rudra. The created living beings are thus always subject to the forces of creation, maintenance, and destruction."

The first purusha-avatara is described in these words of the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (2.1.20):

yathagneh kshudra visphulinga vyuccaranti

"As many tiny sparks are manifested from a great fire, so many individual spirit souls are manifested from the Supreme."

In the Brihad-aranyaka Upanishad (1.2.5) it is also said:
sa aikshata

"The Supreme Lord glanced and the material creation became manifested."

In this way it is explained that with His glance the first purusha-avatara manifested the material nature and the conditioned state of the individual spirit souls.

The first purusha-avatara is known as Lord Sankarshana and Lord Maha-Vishnu. He is described in the following words of Brahma-samhita (5.8, 5.10, and 5.11):

"The divine plenary portion of Krishna creates the mundane world. At creation there appears a divine halo of the nature of His own subjective portion (svamsha). This halo is divine Shambhu, the masculine symbol or manifested emblem of the Supreme Lord. This halo is the dim twilight reflection of the supreme eternal effulgence. This masculine symbol is the subjective portion of divinity who functions as progenitor of the mundane world, subject to the supreme regulatrix (niyati)."

"The Lord of the world, Maha-Vishnu, is manifest in Shambhu by His subjective portion in the form of His glance."

"The Lord of the mundane world, Maha-Vishnu, possesses thousands of thousands of heads, eyes, and hands. He is the source of thousands of thousands of avatars in His thousands of thousands of subjective portions. He is the creator of thousands of thousands of individual souls."

The first purusha-avatara is also described in these words of Brahma-samhita (5.13 and 5.14):

"The same Maha-Vishnu is spoken of by the name of `Narayana' in this mundane world. From that eternal portion has sprung the vast expanse of water of the spiritual Causal Ocean. The subjective portion of Sankarshana who abides in Paravyoma, above the supreme purusha with thousands of subjective portions, reposes in the state of divine sleep (yoga-nidra) in the waters of the spiritual causal ocean.

lingam-lingam; iti-thus; yasya-of whom; ayuta-ten thousand; ayuta-ten thousand amsha-part; amse-of a part; vishva-shaktih-the potency of the universe; iyam-this; sthita-situated; iti-thus; anusarena-following; tasya-of Him; maha-bhagavatah-the Supreme Personality of Godhead; shri-govindasya-Lord Govinda; purusha-the purusa; utpadakatval-from the manifestation; lingam-linga; iva-like; lingam-linga; yah-which; khalv-indeed; amsha-vishesha-a specific part; tat-that; eva-indeed; shambhuh.-Shiva; shambhu-shabdasya-of the word Sambhu; mukhyaya-primary meaning; vritteh-of the action; ashraya-the shelter; iti-thus; arthah-the meaning; linge-in the linga; bhagavata-of the Supreme Personality of Godhead; eva-indeed; anga-part; vishesha-specific; iti-thus; tat-prakarana-labdham-the explanation.

The word "linga" (masculine symbol) described in the passage from Brahma-samhita (5.8) quoted here in text 4, is explained in the following words of Shri Vishnu Purana (1.9.52, quoted in this book in anucceda 1, text 45):

"I bow down before the eternal and changeless Supreme Personality of Godhead, whose form is spiritual. By a million-millionth part of His power the material world is manifested."

The "linga" is thus manifested from Lord Govinda, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Thus Lord Shiva is a partial manifestation of Lord Govinda. The word "shambhu" here means "the resting place of activities". Thus it is explained that the "linga" is a partial manifestation of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Now the second purusha-avatara will be described. In the Taittiriya Upanishad (2.6.2) it is said:

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead creates the material world and then enters it."

These words describe the Supreme Lord's becoming the Supersoul present in the hearts of all living entities. There are many different material universes, and the Lord enters all of them to become the Supersoul.

The third purusha-avatara is also described in these words of Shvetashvatara Upanishad (4.6-7):

"In the individual spirit soul and the Supersoul, Supreme Personality of Godhead, are like two friendly birds sitting on the same tree. One of the birds (the individual atomic soul) is eating the fruit of the tree (the sense gratification afforded by the material body), and the other bird (the Supersoul) is not trying to eat these fruits, but is simply watching His friend.*

Shrila Shridhara Svami comments:

"Here the word 'parasya' means 'of the Bhuma-purusha' and 'purushah' means 'He who puts the material energy in motion'. This pastime form of the Lord, who is described here by the words 'adyo 'vataarah', is also described in these words of the Rig Veda (10.90.1):

"In His form of the purusha-avatara, a form with thousands of heads, thousands of eyes, and thousands of feet, the Lord filled the universe and went ten fingers beyond it."

dvitiyasya-of the second; yatha-as; kalena-in due course of time; sah-he; ajah-the self born Brahma; purushayusha-by the duration of his age; abhipravritta-being engaged; yogena-in meditation; virudha-developed; bodhah-intelligence; svayam-automatically; tad antar hridaye-in the heart; avabhatam-manifested; apashyata-saw; apasyata-did see; yat-which; na-not; purvam-before; mrinala-lotus flower; gaura-white all over; ayata-gigantic; shesha-bhoga-body of Shesha-naga; paryanka-on the bed; ekam-alone; purusham-the Supreme Person; shayanam-was lying; iti-thus; adi.-beginning.

The second purusha-avatara is described in these words (Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.8.22-30):

"At the end of Brahma's one hundred years, when his meditation was complete, he developed the required knowledge, and as a result he could see in his heart the Supreme within himself, whom he could not see before with the greatest endeavor.*

"Brahma could see that on the water there was a gigantic lotuslike white bedstead, the body of Shesha-naga, on which the Personality of Godhead was lying alone. The whole atmosphere was illuminated by the rays of the jewels bedecking the hood of Shesha-naga, and that illumination dissipated all the darkness of those regions.*

"The luster of the transcendental body of the Lord mocked the beauty of the coral mountain. The coral mountain is very beautifully dressed by the evening sky, but the yellow dress of the Lord mocked its beauty. There is gold on the summit of the mountain, but the Lord's helmet, bedecked with jewels, mocked it. The mountain's waterfalls, herbs, etc., with a panorama of flowers, seem like garlands, but the Lord's gigantic body, and His hands and legs, decorated with jewels, pearls, tulasi leaves, and flower garlands, mocked the scene on the mountain.*

"His transcendental body, unlimited in length and breadth, occupied the three planetary systems, upper, middle, and lower. His body was self-illuminated by unparalleled dress and variegatedness and was properly ornamented.*

"The Lord showed His lotus feet by raising them. His lotus feet are the source of all awards achieved by devotional service free from material contamination. Such awards are for those who worship Him in pure devotion. The splendor of the transcendental rays from His moonlike toenails and fingernails appeared like the petals of a flower.*

"He also acknowledged the service of the devotees and vanquished their distress by His beautiful smile. The reflection of His face, decorated with earrings, was so pleasing because it dazzled with the rays from His lips and the beauty of His nose and eyebrows.*

"My dear Vidura, the Lord's waist was covered with yellow cloth resembling the saffron dust of the kadamba flower, and it was encircled by a well-decorated belt. His chest was decorated with the shrivatsa marking and a necklace of unlimited value.*

"As a sandalwood tree is decorated with fragrant flowers and branches, the Lord's body was decorated with valuable jewels and pearls. He was the self-situated tree, the Lord of all others in the universe. And as a sandalwood tree is covered with many snakes, so the Lord's body was covered by the hoods of Ananta.*

"Like a great mountain, the Lord stands as the abode for all moving and nonmoving living entities. He is the friend of the snakes because Lord Ananta is His friend. As a mountain has thousands of golden peaks, so the Lord was seen with the thousands of golden-helmeted hoods of Ananta-naga. And as a mountain is sometimes filled with jewels, so His transcendental body was fully decorated with valuable jewels. As a mountain is sometimes submerged in the ocean water, so the Lord is sometimes submerged in the water of devastation."*

ayam-He; garbhodaka-sthah-staying on the Garbha ocean; sahasra-shirsha-with a thousand heads; pradyumna-Pradyumna; eva.-indeed; purushayusha-purushayusha; vatsara-shatena-with a hundred years; yogah-yoga; bhakti-yogah.-devotional yoga; etad-this; agre-before; api-aslo; avyakta-mulam ity atra-Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.8.29; avyaktam-avyakta; pradhanam-pradhana; mulam-root; adho-bhagah-below; yasya-of whom; iti-thus; arthah.-the meaning; bhuvananghripendram-bhuvananghripendram; iti-thus; bhuvanani-worlds; caturdasha-fourteen; tad-rupa-the forms; anghripah-trees; tesham-of them; indram-Indra; tan-niyantritvena-as the controller; vartamanam-being so; iti-thus; arthah.-the meaning; shri-maitreya-Shri Maitreya; viduram-to Vidura.

These verses describe the thousand-headed Lord Pradyumna who resides on the Garbha Ocean. The word "purushayusha" means "for a hundred years", "and "yogena" means "by practicing the yoga of devotional service". In Shrimad-Bhagavatam 3.8.29 the word "avyakta-mulam" means "the root of pradhana, the unmanifested origin of matter", and "bhuvananghripendram" means "because He is the Supreme Controller, He is like the king of the trees that are the fourteen material worlds". This verse was spoken by Shri Maitreya to Vidura.
